He says, "In the excitatory state that the Beatles place these youngsters into, these young people will do anything they are told to do . . . One day when the revolution is ripe, they (the Communists) could put the Beatles on TV and (they) could mass hypnotize the American youth. This scares the wits out of me." Not to mention how much Rev. Noebel scares the wits out of us.

Noebel also is quoted as saying that "The Beatles are completely anti-Christ. They are preparing our teenagers for riot and ultimate revolution against our Christian Republic."

Before we start worrying about the Beatles storming up the Capitol lawn leading swarms of teenagers, we must realize that the Beatles could never launch the revolt without the aid of a hardy lot of folk singers to bring up the rear of the musical brigade. Once again we turn to our authority, Rev. Noebel, who says this about folk singers: "(they) are beating these Marxist ditties at the same pulse rate of our college students and making them mentally ill."

Marxist Ditties

As if it were not enough for our college students to be overwhelmed by "Marxist ditties," we learn that even the children have been exposed to the musical plot. A children's song that Rev. Noebel mentions is called "The Little Puppet" which of course teaches the child "that he has to have his strings pulled in order to act."

Those of us who think that Rev. Noebel outdid himself on this last quote are put in a rather awkward position. Are we to sit back and let a younger in Butler Springs, Alabama, or Albany, New York, lose faith in himself because he feels he must have his "strings pulled in order to act?"

"Or, are we to put more emphasis on "capitalist records? Such songs as "My Dog is Better Than Your Dog" would serve to teach a child that there is no substitute for success, and that, whether it be in the appearance of a dog or a man's economic and social independence, there can be no feeling of achievement without putting out a certain effort in dog-grooming or employment.

Generalization

Unfortunately, there will be many Americans who will hear of Rev. Noebel, and, recognizing him as a member of the so-called "right-wing," they will make a generalization and say that most anti-Communists are a little crazy. This is the problem. A man may put an entire group of people in an unfavorable light because of his actions or words.

The minority of anti-Communist thought in this country has been very much responsible for the entire group being labeled so unfairly as "crackpots" or "extremists." Not to imply that anyone does not have the right to freedom of speech, people who say "too much" against Communism in this country should not be confused with the majority of anti-Communists who are level-headed and sincere.

On Second Thought

By Eugene FitzMaurice

All too often, the Villanova fraternity system stands beneath the Three Ring Sign, claiming justification.

They do need desperately to be justified.

For any number of reasons not to be explained here, the Villanova frat member suffers from a sense of social inferiority and seeks to overcome this with an all-out party system.

If anything, the Villanova fratman should feel a sense of accomplishment in holding membership in a group of students related by interest and achievement, banded together for combined social, educational, and moral enrichment.

Occasionally

Occasionally, the Villanova frat member will disguise himself in the role of friend to children; tutor to fraternity brothers, and float painter.

Only rarely, however, is this the case.

Now the underclassmen of Villanova are being asked to choose a fraternity. In each they will no doubt find a minority seeking to lift the frat by its own boot straps. More than likely, though, this group will have little or no effect on the new pledges.

They are offered no choice but to conform.

Exception

There is, however, one exception to prove the rule. On the Villanova campus the exception is Pi Sigma Epsilon. This fraternity should be driven from the campus. It violates all the rules of local fraternity behavior.

Rather than carry on an extensive party policy, it feels that it should offer curricular advantages to its members. This it accomplishes by frequent guest lecturers from all fields in our economic society, for this is a fraternity of men dedicated to the management sciences.

The fraternity's constant refusal to hold an increasing number of parties may be traced to the fact that is nationally affiliated, and apparently believes that the assistance available from its professional members offsets any losses in party time.

While other frats offer their members a warm room and a place to go on Thursday mornings at 10:30 A.M., PSE engages its members in practical, profit-making business ventures.

It co-ordinates guest lecturers with supplemental intra-members discussions, and then turns to the business of social accomplishment.

Stupor Joys

As the new pledges file into their fraternity halls to be initiated into the joys of life in a stupor, it is hoped that some of the new members will seek to make their fraternities into places of accomplishment, where more than inconsequentials are considered.

Until now, when the student sought membership in a fraternity, he was forced to choose between a party-giving group whose purposes and affiliations would die at graduation or nothing.

In one division at least, C&F, the choice is now broader and the picture brighter. The social-function-only group still exists, and serves its, of necessity, limited purpose. The choice of no social life also exists. Then there is the choice of the best compromise yet found on this campus.

It is hoped that other fraternities will follow the lead of the newest frat on campus and do more than simply justify their existence.

An Essential Morality

By Jeff Radowich

The Great Society is galloping along on its primrose path to socialism with seemingly little trouble — except for South Viet Nam.

The mar and the debate about the war continue to wage. Governments change more often than the national basketball rankings. Frustration abounds in the Administration, in Congress, and, increasingly, across the land: everyone considers the indecisiveness of our present postion very un-American.

We are admonished to either get both feet drenched with blood or exit the tropical shores.

Though the war may never end, the debate about the war resolves itself thusly: an essential morality versus a supposed practicality.

Domino Theory

The pragmatists espouse the Domino Theory; a neat phrase by which its adherents are pleased to demonstrate that as South Viet Nam goes, so goes Cambodia, Thailand, Burma, the Philipines, Malaysia and, eventually, Omaha.

Led by the normally reliable Joseph Alsop, several pundits and similiar experts are quick to point out other disasterous consequences of losing South Viet Nam.

DeGaulle (who has already called for a vague "neutralization" of South Viet Nam) will elevate his nose even farther, and this monumental feat of engineering will have horrendous implications for the Common Market, NATO and the entire western alliance.

The United Nations will be under increased pressure to admit the Crimson Cancer, thereby spelling the demise of that organization as an effective(?) peace-keeper. (Incidentally, Nationalist China will also be undated by the Chinese flood).

Australia

The Sino-Soviet alliance will be enhanced by China's controlling all of southeastern Asia, as will the purported "working agreement" between Indonesia and the Scarlet Scourge.

Austrlia will fall, as its commitment of combat troops to defend Malaysian Borneo will provide ample justification for retaliatory action by the Vermilion Vomit.

Nationally, our own prestige would fall accordingly with these developments, and, remember, the late President Kennedy was elected in 1960 partly because of a very effective, bludgeoning attack on our bad image abroad.

M. Goldwater

The pragmatists conclude therefore, with a gleam in their eye that there's no sense allowing Red China to become extremely powerful and then forcing a showdown. Reminiscent of the great defoliator, Mr. Goldwater and his "get-tough" policy, they insist a little hysterically that the time for confrontation is now.

For further substantiation, they gesticulate wildly towards the once strife-torn, now "neutralized" Laos, which was the victim of an attempted military coup last month.

Even if all these appalling events would materialize upon our vacating neutralizing or negotiating South Viet Nam, they do not justify our current position.

One month ago, Sukarno flatly advised the United States to quit South Viet Nam and let it turn Communist if it wants to. This statement expresses the essence of the situation.

Guerilla War

Although there is considerable evidence of North Vietnamese assistance and participation, and although some battalion size movements have been encountered, the conflict remains essentially a guerilla war.

Guerilla warfare cannot be successful unless the people support it. And the people support the war in South Viet Nam because a large percentage of the Viet Cong are farmers one day and soldiers the next.

Most of the people of South Viet Nam are Buddhists, a religious persuasion fairly common in the Orient. The Buddhist leaders are firmly against any United States-backed government, a fact they have demonstrated many times.

It is rather obvious that the Communists have more popular support than does the United States.

Land and Rice

And why? The Vietnamese are tired of poverty ,hunger and war. They want peace and land and rice. The Communists have convinced them that they will have these things after a Communist victory.

Of course, this is not true. The people have been duped. They are ignorant, exhausted and politically naive.

Here is where the practical American jumps and screams: "We must protect the South Vietnamese from themselves. We must increase our 'aid,' secure the country for the west, educate the people to see the pure white way of Democracy. We will sponsor free elections and the grateful populace of South Viet Nam will choose the obvious and remain pro-western."

This is not a justification for interference; this is colonialism.

It is a gloomy hour when the United States must violate her own principles. As has been said so often and so correctly, the end does not justify the means, except in a totalitarian government.

The choice is clear: we have twenty or fifty or one hundred years of relative peace with our principles intact and our heads high. There will probably be an ultimate and final showdown, which, God willing we will win.

Or we can violate our heritage and futily attempt to stave off the inevitability of China's dominating her own land mass.

Let us make the right choice Let us hold our heads high. And let us leave South Viet Nam.

few weeks from Westinghouse Broadcasting's Group "W" outlet in Pittsburgh, KDKA. CBS has also expressed interest in supplying equipment to the operation.

At this time there are three persons connected with the Office of Instructional Television. Father John F. O'Rourke, OSA is the producer and will be responsible for setting up assignments and scheduling. Raymond Wilke will take over the position of Director and be in charge of rehearsing and finally broadcasting the sessions to the selected rooms. Senior Bill Madden of Rochester, New York has served as engineering consultant to the office.

New Jobs

When the network goes on the air in September it is contemplated that some students may be hired to act as floor managers, audio mixers, camera operators, scenery men, and switchers. One student will also be trained as a director. All will be paid for their efforts beginning in September.

Wilke says that the only way the system can be a complete success is if it is "used as much as possible as often as possible. Other members of the faculty immediately saw the great potential of Educational TV at Villanova in presenting visual aids to a class.

Most of the courses offered initially will be three credit ones with original plans calling for two TV lectures and one recitation with the teacher in the classroom a week.

Advantages

Students were quick to point out advantages of the system. One Junior commented, "if used properly, this could eliminate the problem caused when a departmental examination asks a question not covered by one or two professors. Now all students will have the same chance."

The main effect on faculty members will be to eliminate the necessity of teaching basic courses several times a day to non-major students. This will leave the teacher more available to his advisees and major-students for conferences.

'Cat Pistol Team Splits Pair; Ready For National Tourney

By Jerry Bruderle

Villanova's Pistol team divided two matches this past week in preparation for the National championships coming up in early March.

On Thursday, the 'Cats defeated Mark-Sharp, and Dhome Pistol Club in Philadelphia by a 1069-1050 count in a Delaware Valley Pistol League match. Tony Mascia led the way with a 273 total, while Jim Durborow had 269, Jim Bushong had 266 and Ted Laven had 261.

This was a case of a good team having an off night and coming out on top. The 'Cats are now 4-0 in league competition with the .38 pistol.

On Friday night at West Chester, Villanova lost to the Rams 1103-1090. Gary Leidecker was high man for Villanova with a 276 score. Richard Hunter was close behind with a 275 tally, while Jim Bushong had a 271 and Marty Bronnan had a 268. High man for the match, however, was West Chester's John Lees with a 283 count.

Eliminations for the Nationals start this weekend when the 'Cats entertain Timberton in the Naval Science Building on March 4.

In other action the Rifle team garnered their fourth victory in five decisions by defeating the University of Delaware in overtime. The match ended 1381-1381 and was decided by the scores of the standing round of shots. Villanova came out ahead in this 439-431.

Captain Joe Smith was high man with a 282 score. Mike Wilhelm scored 280, Ed Millison had 278, Andy Wofford had 271 and Ted Lewendowski had 270.

Intramural Department Has New Softball League System

By Frank Miller

Intramural softball will have a new look this year. Instead of the customary leagues, this year's season will be composed of one large tournament. The reason for this is because of spring's unpredictable weather and scheduling difficulties.

All teams must be able to play any day from Monday through Friday. Because of this each team will be allowed to have an eighteen man roster. This will be 10 man softball, but a team can still play if it has only nine men.

The elimination will be run like this. If 32 teams or more sign up then there will be a single loss elimination. If less than 32 teams enter there will be a two loss elimination. Also the teams must be able to play at either 3:20 p.m. or 4:30 p.m.

The deadline for submitting rosters is March 19. Entry blanks may be picked up in Alumni Gym.

There will be a very important meeting for all members of the intramurals staff Thursday, March 4. It will be held in Room 210. Vasey Hall at 7:15 p.m. Any freshman interested in joining must attend. This will be the last opportunity for freshmen.

Applications for Red Cross Life Saving may be picked up at the pool. There will be a qualifying test. The program will start April 5.

Villanova Skaters Drop 3-0 Decision To Undefeated F&M

By Don Kerr

Villanova's Hockey team dropped its second league game in a row as an undefeated Franklin and Marshall sextet scored three goals in the first period and then coasted to an easy 3-0 victory. The game was played in Hershey, Pa.

With three starters out, including Brian O'Shea, the team's leading scorer, the Wildcats were never able to put together a serious scoring threat.

The first F and M goal, scored at 8:49 of the first period, proved to be the margin needed for victory. Two insurance goals were added, one on a two-man break followed by a rebound shot, both of which were tallied with Villanova men in the penalty box.

After the first period, the Wildcat defense tightened up, but the Diplomats still managed to shell the VU goalie, Paul Viano, who turned back 40 shots with tremendous poise. Fine second efforts were also turned in by defensemen Bob Birmingham and Dean Goodwin in covering the close net play of F and M.

Villanova's next ice clash comes this Saturday in Allentown when the squad meets Lafayette in a league encounter. The 'Cats should be at full strength for this battle, supplying a badly needed scoring punch lacking in previous games.

champion in Tommy Sullivan, who has been running the best in his career recently. Sullivan captured the mile last year in 4:11.8, and did better than that last week.

Villanova should also score heavily in other running events with Noel Carroll and Al Adams in the 1,000, Larry Livers and Ken Coniglio in the hurdles, Marshall Uzzle and Earl Horner in the dashes, in addition to the relays.

Two Mile Relay A Cinch

The two mile relay appears to be a cinch even if they run in individual events to pick up much-needed points. The mile relay team, anchored by Stan Kozlowski should also pick up at least a few points.

Harvard hasn't won this meet since 1926-27. The Crimson will count on Aggrey Awori of Uganda and Wayne Anderson in the Dashes, Awori and Tony in the hurdles, Keith Chiappa in the 600 or the 1000, Walter Hewlett in the two-mile, Chris Pardee in the highjump and Art Poasdale in the shotput and weight throw.

Maryland has never won the meet, but have two favorites in Mike Cole in the broad jump and Frank Costello in the high jump. Other potential scorers are Dick Sheer in the hurdles, Steve Lamb in the 600, Stu Markley and Pete Kowzun in the pole vault and Ed Heron in the shot put.

Navy's best men are Courtland Gray, the hurdlers defender; Bill Wright (not from WIBG) in the 1000, Buzz Lawler in the mile, Greg Williams in the two-mile, and Mike Brown in the pole vault.

Also John Uelses of LaSalle will defend his pole vault title. Villanova could receive a real boost if sophomore Augie Zilincar can place in the shot put. The newcomer has improved greatly in recent weeks.

Two Mile Relay

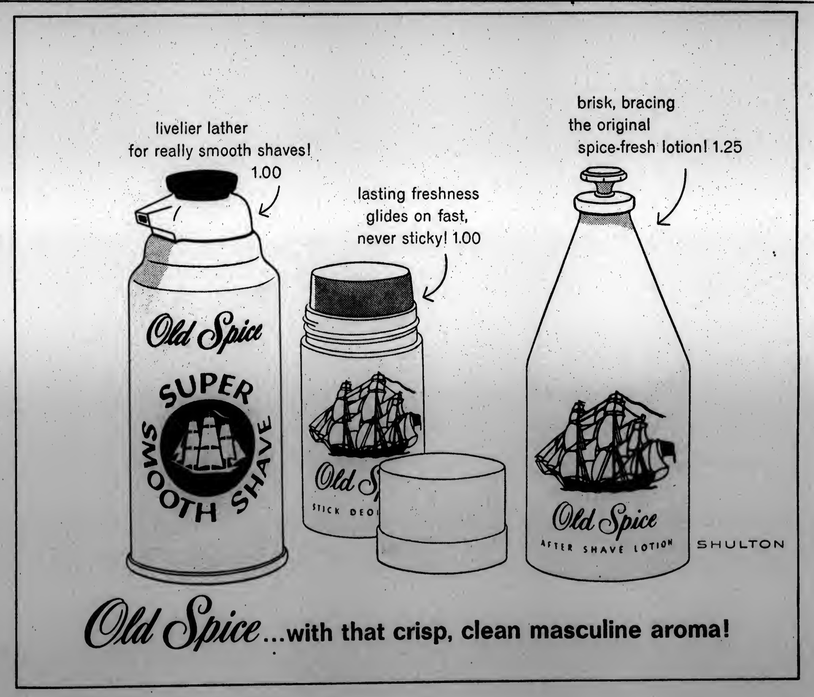
Jim Tuppeny though the team would break the record because of the showing they gave in Madison Square Garden last weekend. There on the very difficult 11-lap Garden track the four ½ milers set a new National AAU Championship Record (only college team to break a National Record), by running 7:28.2.

Frosh Set Record

Along with the varsity, the fast coming freshmen have produced their own two mile relay team, who ran the same night in the same race, and finished third. By running 7:39.2 they also broke a record, the National AAU Freshmen Record, the old record being 7:46.

The team which should take over next year for this year's graduating varsity is composed of Jack O'Leary, Charlie Messenger, Dave Patrick, and Dan Hamilton.



In the K of C Meet (February 26), Tommy Sullivan ran the fastest mile of his indoor career. He finished a close second to Wiltold Baran of Poland in the time of 4:03.7.

The mile relay team, anchored by Noel Carroll, (49.0), ran their fastest time of the indoor season by turning in a 3:17.2 clocking. The other mile splitters were Bill Heidelberger (50.9), Larry Livers (48.9), and Stan Zozlowski (49.0).

Augie Zilincar, a 240 lb. sophomore, unleashed the finest throw of his career, 54-8 for a second place medal. He also finished second in th Baltimore meet held Saturday night.

IC4A's

The smooth running 'Cats seem to be ready for the IC4A's which take place this weekend. Villanova will be seeking its fourth consecutive championship and according to assistant coach Tuppeny should face stiff competition from Harvard, Maryland, and Georgetown. However, Mr. Elliott thinks the Wildcats have their perennial outside chance of taking the crown again.

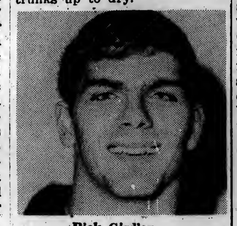
WATER WIZARD

By John DiGennaro

Bang! Splash! The stolid water separates and spatters aside to make room for the 200 pound invader. Muscled arms churning, and powerful legs slicing, the lithe natator skims across the pool. Another day, another race, and he heads for the showers. He pushes away the greasy kid stuff, sprinkles Vitalis in his hair, and begins his sixty second message. Now there is no doubt, he has arrived as a star.



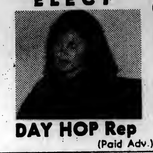
Rick Girdler wasn't always a Vitalis man, but if anybody should be it's him. In the four years since he left Mountain Lake, New Jersey to enter the Wildcat's lair he has established himself as one of the all-time great Villanova mermen, and a genuine All-American. His teammates, when talking about this year's captain, readily refer to him not only as a talented swimmer, but as one of the finest leaders, morale boosters, and psyche-up men they have ever been associated with.

Rick possesses that rare packet containing speed and strength, which enables him to compete in free-style events ranging from 50 to 500 yards. This year in a dual meet with Navy he captured the 100, 200, and 500 free-style, a feat comparible to the runner who sweeps the 220, quarter, and half, or the basketball player who hits a sixty point night.

While swimming at the "Field House" he has splashed his name into the record books on several occasions. He sank the old pool record for the hundred, floating past it in a brisk .48:7. Steve Clark, four-time gold medal winner in the Rome Olympics, saw his Villanova pool record in the 200 swept away by the current mark, a 1.48:7 by Rick. The versatile senior is also co-author, with the great Dick McDonough, of the school's 200 yard individual medly record.

Leaving the singular competition, Rick has also excelled in the relays. He was a member of the 200 yard free style team which broke, and now holds, the American record, and also of the 400 yard team which last year kicked in at 3.10:4 for the second fastest time ever recorded in this event. The only big names he hasn't swam with or against are Moby Dick and Charlie Tuna, and that's because they have retired.

Unlike football, baseball, and basketball players, the collegiate swimmer, like the college runner, can find remuneration for his efforts only in medals and name. With this in mind Rick has set up one more personal goal before he hangs his racing trunks up to dry.



Rick Girdler

The Eastern Inter-Collegiate Championships, at Yale, wil be coming up on March 11-12-13. Soon after come the NCAA's, at Iowa State, on March 25 thru the 27. If he is successful in one or both of these meets he can qualify for the swimming team that will be touring Europe and Russia this coming summer. If not, a brilliant competiter will throw in the towel on April 3.

His sixty second workout over, he turns and laughs good-naturedly at the freshman with the dirty comb. Returing to the dressing room, he slips into his Botany 500, sips a Pepsi, and picks up the latest issue of Esquire. Finally he gets up, and lighting up a Marlboro, takes another look at the pool that made it possible.

Rubgy Club Begins Spring Campaign; Coghlan Is Optimistic About Team

By Clark Kent

The Villanova Rugby Football Club held their spring meeting on February 19, 1965. Coach Francis Coghlan, of the Department of History, discoursed briefly on the prospects for the coming spring season, which includes games with some of the strongest clubs on the east coast: Old Blues, Navy, Yale, Brown, Columbia, Penn and others.

In spite of this demanding schedule, he thought Villanova would have a promising record, considering the fact that Villanova had won four games in a row at the end of the fall season. New members were welcomed to the club, and every Villanovan was invited to try out. It was pointed out that there was a full schedule for the 'B' team and a schedule was being set up for a third team, so that every player would have a chance to participate in intercollegiate athletics.

No experience was necessary for those who wished to play, because all aspects of the game would be covered in practice, which would take place every afternoon at 3:35 either on the Rugby field or behind Sheehan Hall.

Then Coghlan presented insignia in the form of blazer badges to those who had represented the 1st XV in the past year. There were: Richard Gove (Captain), Bert Lombino (Vice-Captain), Dennis La Hiff, Jim Brant, Bill Blavelt, and George Tongring. Others incude Jim McCusker, Larry Rosintoski, Kevin Fidgeon, Jim Campbell, John Scott, Brian Carty, Ross Donoghue, Al Doody, all Seniors; Rich Ward and Haller La Rue, Juniors and Vic Sarkissian, Sophomore.

These awards were presented courtesy of Father Appicci, Dean of Extra-Curricular Activities, who talked to the club, congratulating them on their past performances, assuring them of the University interest and promising that he would do all he could to help such clubs in the future. The meeting ended on this happy note, with a strong sentiment in favor of extra effort to get fit for the season ahead.

Cage Kittens Fall To Hawks; Face Pirate Frosh In Finale

By Jim Proud

The Villanova freshmen basketball team evened their season log at 5-5 with their recent loss to the freshmen from St. Joe's. In their game played previous to the varsity game with Providence the 'Kittens lost their first game in two meetings with the Hawks.

Despite high scoring by three of the 'Kittens players they were unable to duplicate the results of their first meeting. The 'Kittens high scorers were: Jim Stinger, Mike Baines and Mike Glaza.

Stinger High

Jim Stinger contributed a team for the game with 16 points. Stinger, hitting on most of his points with shots from outside the key. Jim also aided with a fine night of passing.

His passes were picked up by two people in particular. Either Mike Baines or Mike Glaza was usually on the receiving end of his assists. Glaza, aided by these passes, was able to turn in 13 points. Mike also drew his points from underneath on taps. While playing around the boards he turned some missed shots into two pointers.

Baines, also hitting on shots from close in, turned in a total of 15 points. In helping Glaza under the boards he caused the Hawks to fall back and leave the foul area open.

Crews Out

In their second meeting with the Hawks the 'Kittens were shy one starter from the first five. Joe Crews was unable to play because of a broken foot. Crews was one of the teams highest scorers and his loss figured highly in the Hawks victory.

The next and final game will be played at Seton Hall on the 3rd of March. If they are able to win this last game they will have brought home another winning season for the 'Kittens coach Jack Devine.

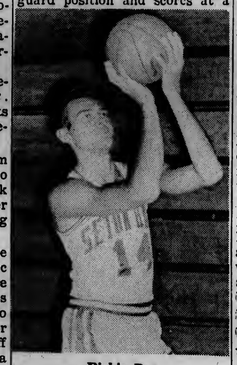
REGULAR SEASON NEARS END

'CATS FACE PIRATES, WARRIORS

By Jerry Bruderle



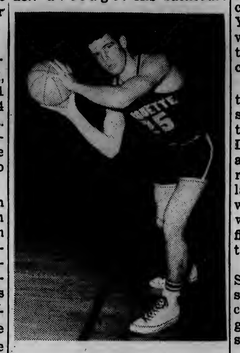
Villanova plays Seton Hall tonight at South Orange, N.J., before winding up the regular season against Marquette on Saturday night at Milwaukee.

Last season, Villanova defeated both teams handily. Richie Moore scored 40 points last year to lead the 'Cats in defeating Seton Hall, 109-73.

This year's Seton Hall team has a new look due simply to the absence of high-scoring Nick Werkman. Werkman tallied over 2,000 points before graudating last year.

Two forwards take over the scoring this year. Richie Dec and Tony Cuccolo, both 6-5, are the high scorers. Dec averages 17.5 a game, while Cuccolo scores at a 16.4 rate. Center Harry Slaton can be trouble off the boards and averages 10.7 a game.

Charlie Mitchell, a 6-2 guard, gives the Pirates some outside age. Hoot Evers mans the other guard position and scorcs at a 6.0 rate.



Richie Dec

Senton Hall is now 11-12 and the boys from South Orange would certainly like to finish at .500 and perhaps make up for last year's runaway.

Marquette sports a 7-16 record (as of Saturday). Not bad, considering that they were 5-21 last season, including a 87-64 loss to the 'Cats at the Palestra. But the Warriors have a 6-5 record at home and could be trouble for a team looking ahead to tournament time.

The Warriors are led by Tom Flynn, a 6-5 forward. Flynn leads the team in scoring with a 16.1 average. The other forward, 6-3 Roger Buxton averages only 6.2. Six-six Paul Karbins is a center who rebounds better then he scores. His rebounding average of 11.6 is close to Jim Washington's 14.7, but he only averages 7.8 points per game.

Bob Wolf, a 6-2 guard holds his own in the backcourt with a 13.7 average. His backcourt mate, 6-0 Rocky Caldelli scores 8.8 per game.

Geisz Mermen Tackle Yale And St. John's Before ECAC Clash

By Joe Maffongelli

The Villanova swimming team faces two more foes before anchoring at home. St. John's and Yale will provide the 'Cat-fish with their last tune ups before they compete in the eastern championship this month.

St. John's only composed a tank team two years ago. Consequently they are not yet up to the Blue and White class. In Dave Phillips the Redmen have a capable breastroker, but the remainder of the club must be labeled poor to mediocre. In the words of the unforgettable whale, "the Wildcats will definitely hammer it out over them-m-m."

However, before travelling to St. John's the mermen must splash at Yale University. Yale currently the perennial Ivy League champs, has no less than seven All Americans in its fold.

Having reigned as eastern champs last season, the Yale team was picked to repeat its third place finish of last year in the NCAA finals. Only Southern California and Michigan were expected to be stronger according to the Coaches pre-season poll.

In Steve Clark, Ed Townsend, and Dick Lyons, the Bulldogs have three Olympic performers. Clark is the modest holder of four world records, three NCAA records, and three olympic gold medals.

Under coach Phil Moriarity the New Englanders have cruised to over sixty straight victories. The 'Cats picked up forty points against them last season. This represented their biggest point allowance in some time.

To go along with the strength already mentioned is a sophomore contingent which last season composed the best freshman squad in the nation. The power of the Bulldog has drawn the likes of Don Schollander to the Massachusetts school this year.

Eastern Championships

The eastern championships will also be held at the Yale pool. The event will take place March 11 through 13. The 'Cats are hoping to equal last year's fourth place finish, or better it.

Hoping to equal their past performances are captain Rick Girdler, fourth in the 100 yd. freestyle, and Ray Donnelly, fifth in the 50 yd. edition of the same event. The 400 yd. freestyle relay will be out to defend its first place mark in their event.

Also expected to fare well are Bob Biese in the diving, Herr in the 200 yd. breast, Ancona in the 200 yd. breast, Guthrie in the 200 yd. fly, and Livingood in the 100 yd. backstroke. Biese is a strong contender off the board as his performances have become consistently excellent as the season has matured.

Season at 7-3

Two weeks ago the finmen frowned an inferior club from New York University. The victory brought the 'Cats season record to 7-3. The final score of the meet was 63-31 at the 'Cats took seven of the eleven events.

Highlighting the submersion of the Violets were the performances of Rick Girdler. The senior captain smashed the pool record of former olympian Steve Clark with a time of 1:47.8 in the 200 yd. freestyle. He also smashed another pool mark in thes first leg f the 400 yd. free-style relay.

Jumbo's Boys Shine In Louisville; World Two Mile Relay Mark Falls

By Bob McIntyre

On Saturday night, Villanova's spectacular Two-Mile Relay team proved lightning can strike twice in the same place, as they again broke the World's Two-Mile Record at the Mason Dixon Pames in Louisville, Ky. for the second straight year.

Last year in these same games, the same team cracked the then existing world record by scorching the boards with a time of 7:24.9. This year "Jumbo" Jim's boys were out to prove they could do it again and with the help of Tommy Sullivan they couldn't have been any happier with the results.

Sullivan Shines

Sullivan, who is proving many wrong, who thought he would never make it as a star, because he had done nothing for almost three years after running a 4:03 mile in high school, ran the fastest indoor half-mile of his career 1:49 flat as he led his teammates to the new record of 7:24.6.

Jimmy Orr, and Al Adams (both ever consistent), ran the first and second legs in the times of 1:53 and 1:52.5 respectively.

Sullivan, a 5'8", 140 pounder, then took the baton from his 6'2" cohort, Adams and found himself two yards behind the leader Charlie Buchta of the Quantico Marines. When he had finished his leg he handed the baton and a 12 yard lead to the flying Irishman, Noel Carroll.

Carroll, then proceeded to spin out a 1:50.1 clocking, his finest of the season and finished 15 yards in front of Quantico's Frank Tomeo.

Along with breaking the World's record, Jumbo Elliott's crew were most satisfied with the revenge they struck by beating the only team to beat them after winning seven straight, the Quantico Marines. It happened in New York two weeks ago when lead-off man, Jimmy Orr dropped the baton.

Even with this, the "never say die" 'Cats, fought back to the howls of the screaming fans, but only could make up 23 of the 25 yards lost during the dropping of the baton.

Villanova Defends IC4A Title This Saturday Night At Garden

By Jerry Bruderle

As The New York Times said last week, "Villanova faces an uphill fight," if they are to retain the Inter-Collegiate Amateur Athletic Association of America championship this Saturday in Madison Square Garden.

Villanova has won the IC4A indoor title the last three years, as well as six of the past eight years. Last year Manhattan finished only a point behind Villanova in the IC4A meet, but this time the Jaspers don't shape up as contenders. This time Harvard, Maryland, Army and Navy do.

Freindly Foolishness

Grand Larcency

By Steve Freind

You have to admit that the NCAA is a talented organization. Only a gifted group could pull off so many sterling achievements with such dexterity. Just look at the record. Along with the AAU, they've been butchering the indoor track scene for years. But their crowning moment came last week when they enacted the greatest heist since the Brink's Robbery.

It's history now that a great Villanova basketball team was deprived of a berth in the NCAA Tourney because of the narrow-mindedness of a fw back room judges. Sure, the 'Cats got a bid, but to the Mid-Eastern Regionals. If Villanova accepted, all the team would have to do, starting with the season finale at Marquette, would be to travel about 2000 miles in three days and miss six straight days of class. From Milwaukee on March 6, they would proceed to Bowling Green, Kenaucky, for the opening round the follwing Mnday and then mve to Lexington, Kentucky, for the Regional finals that weekend.

And who gets the two Eastern Reyional bids? Providence, of course ,truly deserved the invitation in spite of their defeat at ahe 'Cats paws. They have a great team and their record shows it. But the selection ofPenn State instead of Villanova is out and out larceny!

True, Penn State has a 19-3 log, but true also, they have notched wins over absolutely no one. The Nittany Lions have been excluded from the Top Twenty almost the entire season and even now are only 18 while the 'Cats enjoy spot number 12. This isn't sour grapes, but let's be realistir. The 'Cats already received a superb shaft jjob this year as Alex Bell's gridders were deprived of the Liberty Bowl when Bud "Born to Lose" Dudley kept his streak unblemished by matching West Virginia against Utah before a dense throng that could be counted on one hand. That was bad enough but two back stabbings in one year is too much.

Naturally, the NCAA came up with astute lgic to defend their decision. Penn State hadn't had a good team in years and they may not be a power again for some time, so it would be nice to have them in the tourney. Sorta gets you, doesn't it?

Another factor in the NCAA's decision was a complaint that the 'Cats would enjoy a decided home court advantage in the first round at the Palestra. This objection was forwarded by Cornell, Princeton and Davidson. Princeton and Cornell's action can be shrugged as typical IVY League but Davidson exhibited real gall: Davidson is located in North Carolina and the Regional finals have usually been held in such "neutral" locations as Charlotte and Raleigh. Poetic justice was served though as Davidson was knocked out of NCAA contention in their ridiculous post-season league tournament. Tough break, boys.

The NCAA's decision was a real tragedy. The 'Cats were counted out early in the season, but Jack Kraft pulled a coaching masterpiece and his boys played their hearts out. They were wounded by St. Joe's but they didn't die. The 'Cats were ready for a College Park rematch but the NCAA boys blew the whole thing. The only thing that can be asked of these men who deprived a greatteam of a crack at the national title is, How did Pearl Harbor look from the air?

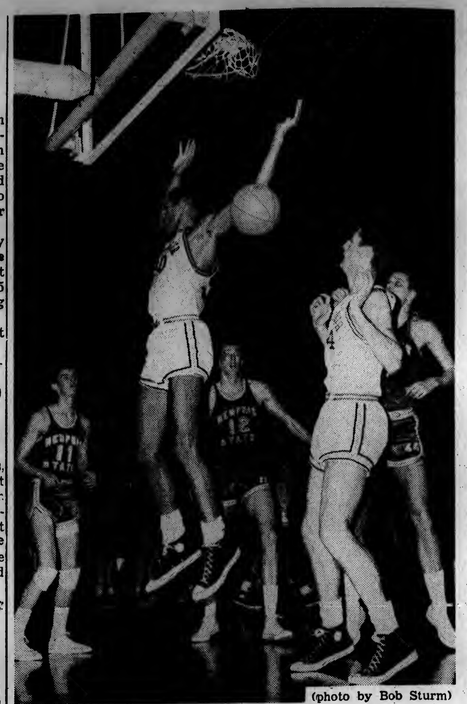
Wildcats Roll Over Memphis St., 91-58; Record Stands At 19-4

Warming up for their appearance in the NIT, Villanova's tourney-bound Wildcats raced to an easy 91-58 win over Memphis State last Saturday at the Palestra. In spite of the triumph, the night was twinged with a note of sadness as Jim Washington, Eric Erickson and George Leftwich made their last appearance before a Philadelphia crowd.

Melchionni, Washington Star

The game itself was decided early as the 'Cats took a quick 10 point lead and increased it to 16 by the half. Unable to figure out the 'Cats octopus zone, Memphis State was never really able to mount an offensive as the Kraftmen breezed home in a walk.

Top point producer for the 'Cats was Bill Melchionni. The junior hotshot ripped off his second best career scoring effort with 31 markers, connecting on 14 of 22 attempts from the floor.



Washington made his last Palestra game a memorable one with a 17 point, 17 rebound rebond performance while playing defense like a one man zone. When the only man in Villanova history to attain 1000 points and 1000 rebounds in a 3 year career left the court for the last time, he received a richly deserved standing ovation.

Joining Melchionni and Washington in double figures were Leftwich and reserve Joe Turk. Turk entered the game with less than 10 minutes remaining and put on a brilliant offensive showing with 5-for-8 shooting.

NIT

Erickson scored 6 points, taking only 6 shots but the 6-3 senior turned in another outstanding all-aroud performance feeding off 5 assists and playing rugged defense.

The victory pushed the 'Cats record to 19-4 and should assure them of top seeding in the NIT, which would result in a first round bye, moving them directly into the quarter-finals.

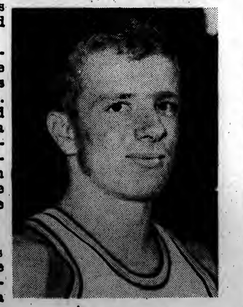
The net tells the story as Jim Washington has just slammed ball through for two points. Wash turned in great performance in his final Palestra appearance as 'Cats rolled to east 91-58 victory over Memphis State in NIT warmup.



Cyclops Strikes At Palestra

By Rusty Miller

An unwary Memphis State five visited the Palestra last Saturday night intent on a friendly game of basketball. Instead they were welcomed by a little of Philadelphia's northern hospitality, better known as "brotherly hate." They were literally attacked by a gang of local Wildcats. These Wildcats were a rather ferocious bunch and tore into the defenseless southerners with a furor no less than savage.

Threw In A Ringer

To add insult to injury the local bunch threw in a ringer, a cyclops. He was even disguised to throw the southerners off guard. To the unsuspecting strangers he looked just like an innocent kid. The cyclop's name was "Billy the Kid," and before the end of the night the boys from Tennessee had figured it out without a formal introduction. The Kid's eye was in rare form that night as he riddled the Memphis State defense for 31 points and 6 assists.

Bill Melchionni

The visitor's coach was considering complaining to the NCAA about the unfair tactics employed by the local bunch. Besides their ringer, he claimed that the Palestra gave Villanova an unfair "home court advantage." On remembering, however, that the NCAA takes such good care of Villanova, he thought better of such a course of action.

Wally's Successor

The cyclops took over this season the spot vacated by the incomparable Wally Jones. Earlier in the season he had had a little trouble in his role as floor director for the Cats.

If he missed several successive shots or made defensive mistake, he became angry at himlf and withdrew into a shell that hampered team co-operation. With not too much effort however, the problem was overcome. Though he lacks the magical mastry that the 'Cats knew under Jones he has done a commendable job at the helm.

Billy scoring average (19.7) is not as high as had been expected of him but he is still the team leader in that category. His greatest asset is his all around ability. He can shoot. He can drive (withnessed in the 'Cats new offene). He averages 6 assists per game and is extremely quick on defense. Watch for coming attractions — "Cyclop to invade Madison Square Garden."

Villanova Jazz Festival Opens Friday

Campus Play Halted; Spring Drama Planned

By Bill Westman

The Belle Masque Society of Villanova was forced to cancel its planned production of the Birthday Party by Harold Pinter. The English play was supposed to have run on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday nights, March 12, 13 and 14 in the Villanova Playbox.

Pinter's decision to hold the amateur right of the Birthday Party was the reason given for the cancellation. The urgent need for the rights was not realized until after four weeks of rehearsal because in the past Pinter has permitted the use of his plays by amateur companies.

The people most disheartened at the news of complete cancellation were the play's leading actors — Victoria Lee Blunt of Narberth, Vic Ferante, Greg Tigani, Joe Linsalata, and Jerry Bober of Villanova University, and Ellen Fitzpatrick from Rosemont College, and the play's director, Jackson G. Barry of the Villanova University Graduate Theatre Department.

The cancellation of the play means the loss of a great deal of money spent for costumes, sets, and the loss of hours of time spent in rehearsal by the aforementioned actors and the staff.

The Belle Masque players will start production next week on another play or a symposium, which has not yet been chosen. This new production is planned for late spring.

Summer Program To Utilize New Instructional Television

By Bill McCloskey

The office of Instructional Television hopes to offer its first course this summer, according to Raymond Wilke, director for the new TV outlet.

The administration has been approached with the idea of televising a non- credit class for anyone who would be interested, so that the "bugs could be ironed out of the system."

Theology Course

The course offered would probably be in Theology and the nuns that come to Villanova would make the most ideal students. After the TV class sessions, the "student" would be asked to critique the system.

The main objective of operating during the summer session, according to Wilke is "trying to find out the capabilities and limitations of the equipment."

The offering would also serve as a workshop for those who will be operating the system starting in September. Wilke says that the summer has the advantage of the "availability of critics who could evaluate the system for its educational value." It could very well be that there would be a new set of "students" every day during the session.

Plan Three Courses

Wilke has also reported that Father Joseph Flaherty, vice-president for Academic Affairs has told him that the system can go on the air in September with as few as three courses.

Members of the Theology, Chemistry, Mathematics, and Engineering Departments have expressed keen interest in the system and these would make the nucleus of the initial activities.

With three people teaching TV courses, only 1 per cent of the faculty will be involved in the operation. Nevertheless there remains a small but vocal group of faculty members who refuse to co-operate with the system for reasons that they prefer not to explain.

Kenton Appearance Definite; Fifteen Schools Represented

By Bob Fennel

The fifth annual Intercollegiate Jazz Festival opens this Friday at 8:30 p.m. in the Field House. Stan Kenton will be on hand and the festival may be honored by the appearance of Govenor William Scranton.

This year's festival will encompass for the first time the entire weekend. It will feature three semi-final rounds, a cilinic and jam session and the final competition.

Attesting to IJF's rapid growth is the fact that the American Broadcasting Company plans nationwide and partially world-wide coverage of the events. Also there is a possibility of television coverage locally.

NIT 'Competition'

Stan Kenton has expressed concern that the festival will be in "competition" itself — with the National Invitation Tournament. Villanova's Wildcats are top rates in the tournament, but this is not expected to hurt attendance drastically.

Governor Scranton has declared the week of March 14-21 as "Jazz Week in Pennsylvania."

Part of the Governor's prepared statement read:

"Pennsylvania is proud of the innumerable contributions made by Pennsylvania jazz artists to this important segment of truly American music." The Chief Executive preceded his message with, "Jazz enthusiasts throughout the land, particularly in Pennsylvania, will be forcusing their attention on Villanova University during the Fifth Annual Inter-University on March 19 and 20 collegiate Jazz Festival." He added, "it is a pleasure to designate the week of March 14-21 as JAZZ WEEK in Pennsylvania."

It is believed that this declaration is the first of its kind, and comes just as the Festival's committees begin their final promotional stages for the two-day affair.

Best Represented

Fifteen schools will be represented in the two-day competition. They represent the best of more than 30 entrants who submitted tapes which were selected by a panel of judges.

The Keystone State is well-represented in this edition of the Intercollegiate Jazz Festival. Friday afternoon's semi-final session will see the Vince Trombetta Quintet, of the Philadelphia Music Academy, the Johnny Freedman Trio of Cheyney State, and the Jazz Moderns of Lehigh University, all in competition with other groups. The afternoon session begins at 2 p.m.

On Friday evening (7:30), "local" participants will include Trudy Desmond, a vocalist from Temple, the West Chester State "Criterions," The Mansfield State "Esquires," and the Bruce Cameron Quartet, from Bucknell.

On Saturday afternoon, groups with local concern will include the Lou Palena Quartet from Penn, and the Jazz Spokesmen, a quintet from Penn State.

Novel NROTC Program Permits Commission After Two Years

The Navy has proposed a new NROTC Program which will permit commissioning upon graduation from the University after completing a six week summer course plus two years of advanced Naval Science. Commissions will be awarded in the Reserve of the Navy or Marine Corps. The Chief of Naval Personnel has made the above proposal to determine the interest level at Villanova. The summer course may or may not be given on this campus depending on a number of factors.

The six week course will be taken during the summer preceding commencement of the Junior year of the University curriculum, and will be presented on an NROTC University campus. The course will include Naval Orientation, Naval History, and Naval Weapons. It is estimated that a minimum of six classroom hours per day, five days a week, will be required. Successful completion of this course will permit entry into the NROTC Unit as a Contract Student for completion of the last two years of advanced Naval Science during the Junior and Senior years of the University curriculum. Students attending the summer session will be paid $78.00 per month. Books, uniforms and equipment will be provided by the NROTC Unit. Travel, board and medical expenses must be borne by the individual.

To determine the level of interest, all students desiring the program are required to inquire at the Main Office of the NROTC Unit in John Barry Hall between the hours of 9 a.m. and 4 p.m., prior to Friday, March 19. Applicants must be physically fit with visual acuity of not less than 20/40 each eye, correctable to 20/20 with glasses.

Library Committee Slates March 31 Final Entry Date

By Walt Baginsky

The Villanova Faculty Library Committee, which is sponsoring a contest to select the best personal library of a student enrolled in one of the undergraduate colleges of the University, has announced that March 31, will be the final day for submitting entries.

The contest is in collaboration with the Amy Loveland National Award of $1,000 to be given annually to one student of a four-year college or university in the United States for collecting the best personal library.

Regional Rules

The regional award rules will coincide with those of the national award: first, the contestant must be a student enrolled in one of the undergraduate colleges of the University. Second, the collection must be personal property of the contestant. A statement to this effect must accompany the entry. A photograph of the collection would be desirable and may be required by the judges.

Third, a minimum of thirty-five books in the collection is required. No upper limit is set, but numbers are secondary to discriminating selection. Fourth, the contestant shall submit a list of the collection describing each volume and its special value or interest to the contestant. These are a few of the rules for the contest.

Criteria

Libraries will be judged on the basis of knowledge, scope, intelligent interest and imagination, as shown in creating the collection. The local judges are Rev. Louis A Rongione, OSA, Dr. Wilson L. Frescoln and others yet to be named. Students interested in further and in participation should contact Father Rongione, Dr. Frescoln or Professor Rice, March 31, at 5 p.m. All contestants should submit their entries to either Prof. William J. Rice, 206, Ch. E. Bldg., or Dr. Wilson L. Frescoln, Chairman, Modern Languages Dept., Vasey Hall.

Final Moot Court Argument Won By Haddad And Silverman

The Final Argument in the Annual Reimel Moot Court Competition was held in the courtroom of Garey Hall at 3 p.m. on Saturday, March 13 1965.

Charles Haddad and Eugene Silverman, attorneys for the plaintiffappellant won the competition.

The Final Argument matched two teams, survivors from a series of moot court arguments between teams entered by the eight law clubs at the School of Law. The Finalists this year were Andrew J. Hailstine of Scranton, Pennsylvania State University '63 and Robert G. Kelly of Wynnewood, University of Pennsylvania '62 representing the Chief Justice Waren Law Club; and Charles A. Haddad of Boyertown, University of Pennsylvania '58 representing the Chief Justice Hughes Law Club and Eugene D. Silverman of Atlantic City, Temple '63 representing the Chief Justice Taney Law Club.

The bench sitting to hear this year's culminating argument was a distinguished one, presided over by the Honorable Potter Stewart of the Supreme Court of the United States. Sitting associate judges were the Honorable Michael J. Eagen of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania and the Honorable William F. Smith of the United States Court of Appeals.

This year's case involved a hospital seeking to escape liability for negligently causing death by relying on its immunity as a charity. Also involved were issues if whether a woman may recover for intentional infliction of mental distress and for interfering with the dead body of her husband.

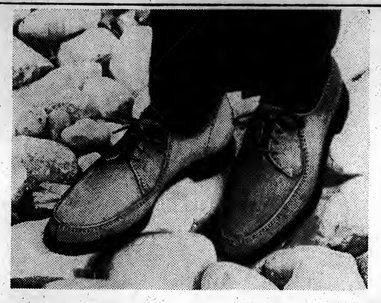
Shamokinaki Mixer Features 'Villanovans' And 'Revelers'

By Steve Buck

The annual Shamokinaki dance, held for the benefit of the Augustinian missions in Japan, will be staged on Friday night, March 26, in the Field House.

Steve Freind, general chairman of the event, announced that the dance will be changed to a mixer this year. The change in format is in hopes of raising additional money by increased attendence. All area girls' colleges will bo notified and invited.

Music will be provided by the "Revelers" and the "Villanovans" in continuous dancing from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. Tickets are one dollar per person. In accordance with the theme, an imported Japanese tea set will be awarded as a door prize.



Expect Record Amount

Last year the Shamokinaki affair raised a record $6300. The entire proceeds were donated to the missions. Freind said his committee expected to break this record and possibly attain the $7000 mark.

Most of the amount raised comes from ads and patrons in the dance program. $3500 has already been raised this year for the book. More ads are being sought, and anyone interested in contributing is asked to contact Father Riley. Freind added that collections will be taken up in all Theology classes in the near future in connection with Shamokinaki .

Committee Chairman

In addition to Friend, the individual chairmen for the event are; Betsy Grabowski, general co-chairman; Carol Egan and Faith Connor, programs; Sue Quinn and Lorraine Farino, patrons; Jim Morgan and John O'Loughlin, tickets; Jack Cooney, Paul McGrath, and Bob McIntyre, refreshments; Jim Griffin and Tim Coyle, finance; Bill McCloskey and Jim Morgan, publicity; Bob Cowan, coats, Tom Fitzgerald and Bob Pacifico, decorations; and Betty Kelly and Tom Krause, collections.

Senate Recommends Motions For Debate Tonight At 6:30

By Steve Buck

Seven motions were recommended for passage at the Student Senate meeting of March 8, with four of them concerning amendments to the Student Government Association Constitution. The motions will be discussed at the SGA meeting tonight at 6:30 p.m. in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

The first motion was introduced by Tim Coyle and Jim Griffin, and it asked that the Administration be requested to publish, in booklet form, all information regarding course schedules and classroom assignments for the following semester, which is to be made available to the individual student at each period of pre-registration and/or registration. It was unanimously recommended for passage by the senate.

The next motion asked that the Alpha Zeta Chapter of the Pi Sigma Fraternity be seated on the Student Congress. The bill was introduced by John Casey, and it also was unanimously recommended for passage.

The third motion of the evening, introduced by Tom Furst and Bob Dean, was that the SGA Constitution be amended to read as follows: Each of the Executive Vice-Presidents, by virtue of their office, be entitled to a full vote in the Student Congress.

The fourth motion, which was the most heatedly discussed issue of the evening, asked that Article VI, Section 3, Paragraphs, 1, 2, 3, and 4 be amended. The paragraphs concern student representatives to the SGA, and the Senate wants the wording to be changed from "men," to "people". This would allow girls to run for student representatives. The motion, introduced by Dave Moore and Frank Eck, was recommended for passage.

John Smock, Jack Ryan, and Bob Dean introduced the next bill, which asked that the President of the Blue Key Society be given a full vote in the Student Congress. This also would require an amendment to the Constitution, and was unanimously recommended for passage.

The Senate continued its motions on the Constitution by asking for a fourth amendment. This one would read as follows: The SGA President may appoint from the Student Body an Executive Secretary who, shall serve primarily as an administrative assistant to the President and shall be entitled to one-half vote on the Student Congress.

The last motion was brought up by Ernie Abate and Charlie Zacarria. They asked that the day-hop cafeteria be opened at 10:30 a.m. on Thursdays during the Student Activities Period. This would be to alleviate the present overcrowded conditions in the Pie Shoppe during this period.

Mary Jane Bradley, chief librarian of radio station WWVU, has asked Villanova students to contribute all empty cigarette packages of any type in order to buy two wheelchairs for crippled children

Employees of the Pennsylvania Hospital have been trying to raise the amount and they asked Miss Bradley to help.

A donation box will be set up in the Pie Shoppe and will remain there until the goal has been reached. A wastebasket has also been placed in the radio station of the second floor of Dougherty Hall.

The goal for the drive is two million packages. "Considering this large sum, students should avoid throwing away empty cigarette packs; please leave them in the Pie Shoppe or WWVU boxes," said Miss Bradley commenting on the drive.

Who Is Guilty?

The recent incident in the Philadelphia subway station in which several juvenile delinquents savagely attacked a young girl, while several fully grown men stood by and watched bears a striking resemblance to the current situation in the South. The parallel exists in the passivity and fear of the citizens to assert their own beliefs.

The savage attacks of vigilante mobs and state police are similar in their aims, while their tactics resemble those of the Philadelphia teenagers in getting their point across. Their aim is, through force, to prevent the change and to perpetuate a racial elitism that went out of style with Hitler and especially here in this country over one hundred years ago.

Yet the southerners through various clandestine instruments manage to let seep out their indignation about these doings. They all claim to be non-participants and non-supporters of this violence, however, when the time comes to quell the uprisings of the southern white mobs the only cries come from the integrationists who have been beaten and jailed.

They all fear to talk out against the mobs of illiterate rabble rousers, andallow them to speak for them in blod shed. They continue to strike together in their clannish, out-moded social and moral standards. Their does not seem now to be any relief in store for the Negro or the reputation of the country from these injustices.

Anyone who sanctions these actions and inequalities is just as guilty as the thugs who carry them out. The most amazing and ironical things is that these southern Christians call the Negro savages, but it is the Negro who patiently intone with each blow . . . "as we forgive those who trespass against us . . ."

LETTERS . . . . WE GET LETTERS!

To The Editor:

At the Associated Student's film-presentation of Halmet on March 2, Vasey Auditorium was partially filled with eager, happy university students. The film sound reproduction rasped distortedly, cigarette and pipe smoke mushroomed to the ceiling, cans . . . clinked intermittently and rolled crazily down the sloping concrete floor, guffaws resounded vulgarly when the Queen kissed Hamlet (but not when Polonius kissed Laertes), the chatter from the audience and projectionists filled the auditorium almost constantly, and the general boredom of Shakespeare was relieved by the report of a bursting paper bag, punctuating one of the pauses in Hamlet's solilоquy, "To be or not to be." A good time was had by all.

To The Editor,

This is in response to Mr. Fitzmaurice's interesting and thought-provoking column of March 3. He is certainly entitled to his opinion, but I think he owes himself and his readers an unbiased treatment of the facts.

I represent that "minority seeking to lift the frat by its own boot straps." Fortunately for Villanova and its fraternity system that "minority" is growing. I resent the implication that we have no effect on pledging or other fraternity activities. The fraternity system at Villanova is improving, not by verbal attacks from excited outsiders, but from within through the slow but continual efforts of concerned brothers, the Interfraternity Council, and the administration of Villanova.

Social-function-only activity is a poor justification for the existence of any fraternity, least of all on a Catholic campus. But the activities of Villanova's fraternities are considerably broader. You mention, but discount, our charitable activities, our intrafraternity tutoring programs, and our school spirit. You fail to mention our concern for the education of our fellow Brother, our encouragement of his participation in school affairs, and our efforts to organize alumni groups. All these activities, together with social functions, do accomplish the goal of the fraternity — brotherhood between individuals with similar interests in social, educational, and moral enrichment.

Pi Sigma Epsilon should be congratulated for its fine activities; all efforts in this direction are sincerely welcome.

But, I would ask Mr. Fitzmaurice if it is necessary to degrade the fraternity system at Villanova to make PSE appear as a shining star on the horizon. Are you really interested in fraternal improvement? Or do you have an ax to grind?

To The Editor,

Your editorial criticizing the SGA for spending a disproportionate amount of time arguing the questions of preferential seating for the Basketball Club, as compared with that spent concerning course-changing, overlooked, I feel, some very important points.

The Basketball Club is an institution of the Spirit Committee, and a body over which the SGA exercised nearly independent authority. The motion required the SGA to make a determination of policy in regard to it.

The latter motion, on the other hand, concerned an area in which the SGA already has a definite policy, but over which the Administration — not the SGA — exercises ultimate authority. The Student Congress has considered and passed countless recommendations, this vear and for student body a greater degree of selectivity in determining their courses and their profesors; but to little avail.

It is difficult to become enthusiastic over a proposal which most of us realize will go unheeded and, worse yet, unnoticed by the University.

To The Editor,

You could say that the cloud of the St. Joe's game had a silver lining for Villanova's females. The cause of happiness on a not so happy occasion was a banner held by some of our "fellow" Villanovans. The simple sentence read, " We Appreciate Our Women." We would like to give those who were in any way connected with the sign an idea of how much it meant to us.

As a minority of three hundred on a campus of five thousand, we have sometimes felt like intruders in a man's world. Individual relationship between us and the rest of the student body have always been warm, but never have we felt so close to our Alma Mater as we did when that banner was displayed.

This letter is, then, a note of thanks for the thought behind the sign. In all sincerity "We're Proud Of Our Men".

To The Editor,

My dad once told me, "Son, read a book first before you begin talking about it." This advice I would pass on to Eugene Fitzmaurice. His article "On Second Thought" contains pertinent facts about Pi Sigma Epsilon, but it also contains numerous misguided, biased judgements on a system he can not possibly know anything about. I once had a preconceived notion of fraternities, but weighing my dad's advice, I pledged, became a member, evaluated the system, and am now doing something about our fraternity's short-comings.

Mr. Fitzmaurice apparently has a rare gift for becoming a social critic and reporter without dirtying his hands with social contact.

The following letter was written by President of Eugene Fitzmaurice's Fraternity in order to clarify the present controversy in the Frats. (Ed. Note)

To The Editor:

As president of Alpha Zeta Chapter, Pi Sigma Epsilon, I would appreciate the opportunity to express my views on the article "Second Thought," which appeared in the March 3 issue of the Villanovan. I would like to make it known at this time that my opinion, or for that matter the opinion of my fraternity as a group, was not fully expressed. An article which appears in any publication is the sole responsibility of the author, if not the editor of that publication. I feel that any organization club, or fraternity is to be commended if they are fulfilling predetermined objectives and are holding all associates in a postition that demands nothing but respect. Pi Sigma Epsilon, as a professional fraternity, is fulfilling its objectives and is giving the University community something of which to be proud.

There are social fraternities on the Villanova campus. These are to be commended, for their goals are being accomplished We are not a social fraternity — we, again, are professional with professional ties. To compare the two, either with good points to good or bad points to bad would accomplish nothing whatsoever.

GREETINGS TO THE FUTURE NIT CHAMPS —THE WILDCATS!

On Campus with Max Shulman

(By the author of "Rally Round the Flag, Boys!", "Dobie Gillis," etc.)

THE BEARD OF AVON

Topic for today is that perennial favorite of English majors, that ever-popular crowd pleaser, that good sport and great American—William Shakespeare (or "The Swedish Nightingale" as he is better known as).

First let us examine the persistent theory that Shakespeare (or "The Pearl of the Pacific" as he is jocularly called) is not the real author of his plays. Advocates of this theory insist the plays are so full of classical allusions and learned references that they couldn't possibly have been written by the son of an illiterate country butcher.

To which I reply "Faugh!" Was not the great Spinoza's father a humble woodcutter? Was not the immortal Isaac Newton's father a simple second baseman? (The elder Newton, incidentally, is one of history's truly pathetic figures. He was, by all accounts, the greatest second baseman of his time, but baseball, alas, had not yet been invented. It used to break young Isaac's heart to see his father get up every morning, put on uniform, spikes, glove, and cap, and stand alertly behind second base, bent forward, eyes narrowed, waiting, waiting, waiting. That's all—waiting. Isaac loyally sat in the bleachers and yelled "Good show, Dad!" and stuff like that, but everyone else in town sniggered derisively, made coarse gestures, and pelted the Newtons with overripe fruit—figs for the elder Newton, apples for the younger. Thus, as we all know, the famous moment came when Isaac Newton, struck in the head with an apple, leapt to his feet, shouted "Europa!" and announced the third law of motion: "For every action there is an opposite and equal reaction!"

Figs for the elder Newton, apples for the younger.

(How profoundly true these simple words are! Take, for example, Personna Stainless Steel Razor Blades. Shave with a Personna. That's the action. Now what is the reaction? Pleasure, delight, contentment, cheer, and facial felicity. Why such a happy reaction? Because you have started with the sharpest, most durable blade ever honed—a blade that gives you more shaves, closer shaves, comfortabler shaves than any other brand on the market. If, by chance, you don't agree, simply return your unused Personnas to the manufacturer and he will send you absolutely free a package of Beep-Beep or any other blade you think is better.)

But I digress. Back to Shakespeare (or "The Gem of the Ocean" as he was ribaldly appelated).

Shakespeare's most important play is, of course, Hamlet (or, as it is frequently called, Macbeth). This play tells in living color the story of Hamlet, Prince of Denmark, who one night sees a ghost upon the battlements. (Possibly it is a goat he sees; I have a first folio that is frankly not too legible.) Anyhow, Hamlet is so upset by seeing this ghost (or goat) that he stabs Polonius and Brer Bodkin. He is thereupon banished to a leather factory by the king, who hollers, "Get thee to a tannery!" Thereupon Ophelia refuses her food until Laertes shouts, "Get thee to a beanery!" Ophelia is so cross that she chases her little dog out of the room, crying, "Out, damned Spot!" She is fined fifty shillings for cussing, but Portia, in an eloquent plea, gets the sentence commuted to life imprisonment. Thereupon King Lear and Queen Mab proclaim a festival—complete with kissing games and a pie-eating contest. Everybody has a perfectly splendid time until Banquo's ghost (or goat) shows up. This so unhinges Richard III that he drowns his cousin, Butt Malmsey. This leads to a lively discussion, during which everyone is killed. The little dog Spot returns to utter the immortal curtain lines:

Our hero now has croaked,
And so's our prima donna.
But be of cheer, my friends.
You'll always have Personna.

©1965, Max Shulman

'65 CHEVROLET

These great performers are the lowest priced models at our One-Stop Shopping Center

Top to bottom: Chevy II 100, Corvair 500, Chevelle 300, Chevrolet Biscayne. All 2-door models.

Each of these beauties is the lowest priced in its line. But the ride doesn't show it. Or the interior. Or the performance.

That luxurious Biscayne is as roomy as many expensive cars, has color-keyed interiors, plush vinyls, fine fabrics, full deep-twist carpeting.

Chevelle, America's favorite intermediate-size car, has clean new styling, wide doors, roomy, tasteful interiors and Chevrolet easy-care features.

Chevy II got a lot smarter for '65—but stayed sensible! Still family-size, easy to handle, economical, and the lowest priced Chevrolet you can buy.

Or get a sporty rear-engine hardtop in a Corvair Sport Coupe or Sport Sedan for fun in the months ahead.

Chevrolet, Chevelle and Chevy II are available with the Turbo-Thrift Six for fuel economy, quick warmups, quiet idling. It's light, efficient, smooth and spirited.

The Real Danger . . .

By Jim Mitchell

One of the great American myths is now being punctured in Vietnam. The situation there has become obviously hopeless. It is in this light that we should re-evaluate the entry basis of our foreign policy. At the present time, we have a President whose only "response" has been frantic action — that is, the bombing of the cities of the Democratic Republic of North Vietnam.

Granted that the North Vietnamese are giving aid to the Vietcong; are we not also giving aid to the South Vietnamese military leadership (a group that we can conclude has not the support of the Vietnamese people)? Both actions are contrary to the international agreements of the Geneva Accords.

The Truth

The true reason why Lyndon Johnson has acted in this manner is he finds himself in a dilemma in which any action, in his thinking, is better than no action at all — especially, if it is supported by majority of public opinion. Being basically a domestic political leader instead of a man adept in international affairs, he fears that any withdrawal or any sort of negotiations with other involved powers would rally the opposition, and thus become an important political issue.

In other words, LBJ is afraid of the loss of votes. His theory of "broad consensus" prevents a course of action which, he believes, might bring upon himself the wrath of any segment of our society. He finds himself in a complex problem of which he had no part in the making; rather it is the end result of the mistakes and misguided diplomacy of John Foster Dullas.

Sophisticated Diplomacy

Our State Department, which has never excelled in sophisticated diplomacy throughout our Republic's history, has in respect to Vietnam, "made a mess of things." What we must do is call for an international conference and settle the internal Vietnamese problem, saving face as much as possible. We should do this now before he completely drives the Russians and Chinese back together. In order to arrive at this policy, I believe, we should evaluate some of the myths of the 'cold war" in light of the vast changes which have taken place in Western and Eastern Europe.

Main Points

The first point is to realize that behind the so-called "iron curtain," we do not find the solid Communist bloc now which we had under Stalin. What we see today is the beginnings of national states whose economy is based on the socialistic writtings of Karl Marx. Each year brings more independent status to the countries of Eastern Europe under the control of Russia. The State of Yugoslavia has become the example of nationalistic communism.

Secondly, the Sino-Soviet split should not be based on the principles of divergence on ideological grounds alone, but rather on the more hidden reasons of historical, economic, and biological factors. We fail to realize the common Judeo-Christian heritage of Western Civilzation between the United States and Russia. We have more in common psychologically and phyletically speaking with the Russians, than the Russians have with the Chinese.

Focal Point

We should also see the point that ecomically speaking, both the United States and Russia are moving to the same focal point — that is moderate socialism (however slow that progress may be). We should not view the Soviet Republic in foreign affairs as a new monolithic monster which arose in 1917, but rather as a continuator of Imperial Russia in international involvements. It is a fact that there have been relatively few essential changes in Russian patterns of life since the Revolution. We should regard Soviet foreign affairs as the continuation of Imperial Russia's foreign affairs. This is especially true when we view Russian's relations with China. In the same respect we should regard Chinese foreign policy as also continuous. No greater example can be alluded to than the request by the Chinese for territory included within the Soviet Union, which, they believe, is historically Chinese. Is this not Chinese nationalism versus Russian nationalism?

Today's Policy

We find today that the bungling policy of President Johnson and the State Department will force the rapprochement of the Russians and Chinese in order to save face in the eyes of the Communist bloc and the neutral nations of the world.

American Commitment

In Vietnam itself, it is obvious that the Vietcong have the support of a large segment of the society; for the American commitment to that area far exceeds that of the North Vietnamese, yet the Vietcong are winning the ugly war against an apathetic and puerile South Vietnamese military group. We should also realize that before we stepped up our commitments to the South Vietnamese military, Ho Chi Minh was regarded in Asia as a Vietnamese Tito. But our actions have forced him to look towards China rather than Russia for support. This has forced him to make stipulations which have destroyed his neutrality among the Communist bloc and the neutralist countries.

Negotiate

But if we could negotiate a settlement now before it is too late, we might be able to neutralize South Vietnam, prevent the complete aligment of North Vietnam with China, and stop the realigment of Russia with China. We fail to realize that historically speaking the Vietnamese (especially in the North) have been bitter enemies with the Chinese who controlled Vietnam for many centuries before the advent of the French. I am sure that the political leaders of the Democratic Republic of North Vietnam are skeptical and fearful of their closer ties with China.

In conclusion, I call upon the administration to stop its senseless bombing of the North Vietnamese, and to negotiate a settlement for all of Vietnam. In this way we can continue the rapprochement with Russia in order to be prepared for the real danger which is rising the Far East — that of nuclear power China.

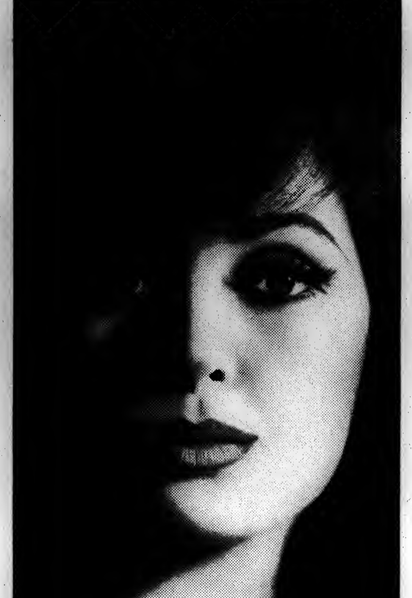
"From The Second City"

By Tom Krause

From the Second City, one of the funniest things to nit Philadelphia since Barry Goldwater, arrived last week to the delayed laughter of area audiences.



The Second City is a satirical revue now in its second week at the Walnut Street Theatre. The "play" is a series of unrelated skits, satirizing myriad aspects of social, political, and religious life in America.

The were some dull moments during the performances but the overall impression was a good one. Among the targets of the Second City company were: the Republican Party, the University of Chicago football team, astronauts, the movies, and suburban living.

Besides the topical satire and jokes, the show included dramatic vignettes on the theme of non-communication and one improvisation. The vignettes manifested pungent comments on mankind's inability to relate to one another as seen in scences between a father and a daughter and between two protesting lovers.

In a symposium held at the Walnut Street Theatre on March 9, the troupe mentioned that they originally dealt in improvisations while at the Compass, a cabaret theatre in Chicago, but the economic pressure and physical impossibility of nightly improvisations forced the company to have a set program or at least a semi-set program.

From the Second City should appeal to a college audience, especially one of sardonic bent.

Ford Motor Company is:

responsibility

Stephen Jaeger
B.B.A., Univ. of Pittsburgh

A key dimension of any job is the responsibility involved. Graduates who join Ford Motor Company find the opportunity to accept responsibility early in their careers. The earlier the better. However, we know the transition from the academic world to the business world requires training. Scholastic achievements must be complemented by a solid understanding of the practical, day-to-day aspects of the business. That is the most direct route to accomplishment.

Stephen Jaeger, of the Ford Division's Milwaukee District Sales Office, is a good example of how it works. His first assignment, in January, 1963, was in the Administrative Department where he had the opportunity to become familiar with procedures and communications between dealerships and the District Office. In four months he moved ahead to the Sales Planning and Analysis Department as an analyst. He studied dealerships in terms of sales history, market penetration and potentials, and model mix. This information was then incorporated into master plans for the District. In March, 1964, he was promoted to Zone Manager—working directly with 19 dealers as a consultant on all phases of their complex operations. This involves such areas as sales, finance, advertising, customer relations and business management. Responsible job? You bet it is—especially for a man not yet 25 years old. Over one million dollars in retail sales, annually, are involved in just one dealership Steve contacts.

As a growth company in a growth industry, Ford Motor Company offers an exceptionally wide spectrum of job opportunities. The chances are good that openings exist in your field of interest. See our representative when he visits your campus. We are looking for men who want responsibility—and will be ready for it when it comes.

THERE'S A FUTURE FOR YOU WITH... Ford MOTOR COMPANY

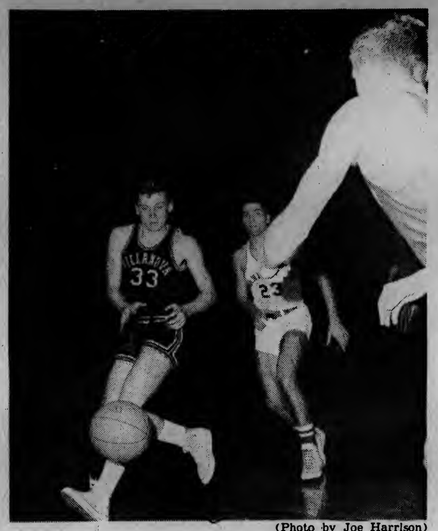
Ho Hum! The Yanks Again!

By Joe Maffongelli

About a year ago an article appeared here entitled, "Businesmen in Pinstripes." The theme foretold an expected resurging on the market charts in Yankee stock. Well, though the boards favored two other brands until early September, the inferior products did succumb to quality of the established name. Once again these "Businessmen in Pinstripes" were at the top of the heap on the American exchange. Such hopefuls as Chicago and Baltimore just could not survive the onslaught of an organization under the entrepreneuership of an executive such as Yogi Berra.

When this organization matched wits, along with gloves and bats, with a National League unit the results were discouraging for a second straight year. Will these businessmen be conservative in their next campaign finale? Such is the material for doubtful stuff.

All smart investors will realize that though the Bronx Bombers were outdone in the final reading of 4-3 the chief asset, Whitey Ford brand, could have made a big difference. A mere youngster and not ever seasoned rookie showed his worth while posting a 1-1 mark; and a maturing type — Jim Bouton — placed the other two victories his series lodger.



However, doubtful speculators may expect the inhabitants of the so-called "Home of Champions" to finally collapse with the bat of Mickey Mantle and the arm of Whitey. I personally feel that none of the three calamities will occur and the the first should should be practically beyond the competitors' dreams.

The operation which Ford underwent seems to have been a complete success according to reports to date; and Mickey has already dipped into budget with the number of balls he has sent to the winds of Fort Lauderdale. This pair has always been great, and, we expect, will continue to be so for a least a few years.

Slumps and Jumps

Facing facts will expose the poor productions, in batting averages that is, for Boyer, Richardson, Tresh and Pepitone last season. But, did not Roger Maris hit the heights with a .281 mark, and did not Howard hit .313 and Mantle .303 with 111 runs batted in? In such a solid organization the slack will always be taken up.

The mound situation should brighten up an already glowing picture. The big question is how many can Stottlemeyer win in a full season? Bouton won nineteen last season as he finished near the top of the heap in innings pitched. Al Downing netted seventeen wins while leading the circuit in strikeouts. Certainly these men cannot be called "old." Another bright spot could be Bill Stafford who was undefeated with a 2.8 earned run average in limited duty. With a rejuvenated Pedro Ramos in the bullpen keeping warm with fire fighting brigade also boasting Rollie Sheldon and Tom Metcalf, the pinstripes could be dominant again without any stretch of the imagination whatsoever.

If your roommate says the Bell System helped invent hi-fi, stereo and talking movies, don't bet. You'll lose.

In the course of their studies of the nature of sound, Bell System scientists have been able to make significant contributions to all three forms of entertainment.

You might say that it was because the discoveries were there to be discovered by the first explorers to come down the trail.

When the century was still young, we realized that if the telephone were to come up to its potential, the nature of sound had to be much better understood than it was then.

This led to the largest, most comprehensive study of sound ever undertaken by anyone.

To capture sound for study, Bell Telephone Laboratories developed the first electronic recorder for phonograph discs. For the first time, performers recorded into microphones.

Then, in 1925, Bell Labs perfected an electronic system that synchronized sound and action on movie film. The talkies were born.

To get better sound reproduction, they started experimenting in 1933 with ways to separate high and low frequencies to prevent distortion. The result was a single-groove, multi-channel disc—the basis of today's stereophonic industry.

Nevertheless, these contributions were by-products of the real effort, which was to make telephone service better. We are proud, of course, that they helped build and improve whole industries.

But we're prouder of the sound qualities in the telephone of today.

If you'd like to do business or engineering work you're really proud of, we'd like to talk to you.

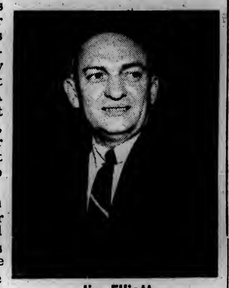
'Mumbo-Jumbo'

By John DiGennaro



YANKS TRADE MANTLE FOR WINE; BRADLEY ARRESTED ON NARCOTICS RAP; MOE MENTOR COPS 100 IN NATIONALALS. Ridiculous? Not compared to the next one. ELLIOTT PREDICTS VILLANOVA WIN IN IC4A's.

Year after year, the belabored scapegoat, the lowly underdog, the title. This is Jim Elliott's plight according to Jim Elliott, but the only part his coaching colleagues around the country agree with is the last.

Alma Mater Calls

Thirty years ago "Jumbo" Jim folded his blue and white shorts, cleaned his track spikes for the last time, then promptly accepted the head coaching job at his Alma Mater. Since that time he has passed from one of the better runners of his day into one of the best coaches of our day. Combining his own experience with an uncanny ability both to know and to teach others, he has sprinted on the path ofsuccess. The path went due north.

Many people believe that "Jumbo' received his Masters in Alchemy, since everything he touches turns to gold (medals that is). Others point to the runners he has had as the reason for his success. Possibly, but he was the one who developed three runners, transforming the potency to act, and the high school hot shots into the college greats. A further tribute is the very fact that he does get the good ones, the boys who could write their ticket practically anywhere, but choose to lend their services to Villanova and to Jim Elliott.

Jim Elliott

Perhaps his greatest honor in an illustrious career was four years ago when he was selected to coach the United States A.A.U team that toured Europe for the State Department. He led his charges to a complete sweep, including victories against Russia, Great Britain, Germany, and Poland.

The greatest of the great was the team "Jumbo" outfitted for the '57-'58 season. His star studded thinclads of that year included: Ron Delaney, Charlie Jenkins, Phil Reavis, Ed Collymore, Don Bragg, and George Sydnor, and he brought out the best in all of them bringing home four national titles to Villanova. His greatness as a coach in mirrored in each of the above names, not only because they came to Villanova to run for him, but in the way he molded them individually and collectively into one of the most devastating collegiate track teams ever assembled.

Relay Teams

Coach Elliott has also become famous for his teams within a team. Under his tutelage Villanova has turned out as many winning relay teams as the Yankees have pennant winners. The school's mile relay, although the personnel varied, captured seven straight Penn Relay titles through 1961, and the current two mile relay team not only set a world mark, but have lowered it twice on subsequent outings.

Many times during the clamor ow competion "Jumbo' has been seen storming up and down ,and yelling menacingly at his boys, but they all agree that his bark is worse than his bite. Besides, what could be more suitable than a bark capable of producing a Wildcat's growl.

Recently, he added the 1965 IC4A crown to his myriad of achievements. Typically, he spent weeks saying Villanova was at most the third best team. Typically for an Elliott coached team, they won a "Jumbo" victory, and further imprinted a "Jumbo"' "V" across the sports pages and in the minds of track buffs throughout the country.

Villanova 'Icemen' Lose To Engineers As Late Rally Fails

By Don Kerr

The "Icemen" of Villanova's hockey team fought hard in a loss to Lehigh University Saturday as Lehigh staved off a last minute rally by the Wildcats in a bid for a tie. The 'Cats lost by the score of 5-4.

With four minutes gone in the first period, a Lehigh rocket was deflected off the leg of a Villanova defensemen for a fluke goal. Villanova entered the scoring column in the first period as hotshot Marc Clement scored the first of his three goals in garnering a hat trick for the night.

Lehigh's Engineers wasted no time in the second period as they quickly netted two goals before the Wildcat defense could recover. Lehigh added another and things looked bad for the 'Cats before Marc Clement took a pass from Captain John Clement to bang home his second goal of the night. At the end of the second period, the Wildcat stickmen trailed by 4-2.

In the final period, Clement tallied his third and final goal to bolster the 'Cats' chances for victory. However, with only five minutes left in the game, Lehigh took a rebound and slipped a shot post goalie Paul Viano to make the score 5-3.

The 'Cats still had plenty of fight left as Warren Gabaree, a freshman from Massachusetts, took a pass from Mike Loscalzo with only 1:59 on the clock to make the tally 5-4. Seconds after the face-off, the Engineers were charged with a tripping penalty and strengthened the 'Cats final bid. But fine defensive play by Lehigh held off the Wildcat "Icemen" in their final surge and a sudden-death overtime was averted.

Villanova Mermen Tenth In 41 Team 1965 ECAC Swimming Championships

By Bob McIntyre

In the ECAC meet held over the weekned, powerful Yale University, one of the best teams if not best in the country, won the team Championship over 41 other Eastern schools.

Villanova placed a very respectable 10th behind such teams as Yale, Army, and Navy, who were 1-2-3. Co-captain and All-American Rick Girdler broke a Villanova School Record when he place first in the 100 yard freestyle in the fast time of 47.2.

Girdler

Girdler came back a while later in the 200 yard freestyle and finished in fifth place, in the second fastest time in Villanova's history, 1:46.6. The fastest time is held by Dick McDonough, last year's Captain and All America of 1:46.4.

The 400 yard Medley Relay team (Bill Livingood, Ken Herr, Ray Donnelly, and Rick Girdler), also set a new School Record 3:42.5 as they finished 5th. The old record, 3.43.1 was held by Livingood, Herr, Donnelly, and McDonough .

Sprinter Ray Donnelly placed 12th in the stiff competition of the 50 yard freestyle in the time of 22.3 Roger Guthrie placed 12th in the 20 yard butterfly in 2:08.3. Bill Livingood, finished 11 in the 200 yards backstrock in 2:09.1.

400 Yard — 4th

The 400 yard freestyle relay came in 4th among the best on the Eastern seaboard by swimming 3:15.1 The team was Girdler, Reback, Fisher, and Parell. Bob Biese ended the meet by finishing 12th in 1 meter diving event.

In two meets last week Villanova swamped St. John's 78-15 but ran into the Cleveland Browns of inter-collegiate swimming when they lost to Yale 65-28. In this meet Girdler gathered two 1sts, 50 yard freestyle (22 flat), and the 100 yard freestyle (47.4).

Girdler will represent Villanova in the NCAA Championships on March 25, 26, and 27, in the 50, 100, and 200 yard freestyle events.

National AAU Meet

In the National AAU meet in April the Wildcat mermen will go with the 400 yard freestyle team of Donnelly, Girdler, Parell, and Reback. Bill Livingood in the backstroke and Bob Bise in the diving event.

Mike Fitzmaurice, an outstanding freshman from Malvern Prep, will also represent the 'Cats. He holds two Freshmen NCAA records in the 200 yard Individual Medley, (2:01.3) and the 200 yard freestyle, (1:47.2).

The outgoing seniors who have paced Villanova to its present 8-4 record are Chris Fisher, Rick Girdler, Doug Reback, Roger Guthrie, and Diving Coach, Dick Ferin.

The Rest Of The Way

The offensive punch of this club is demonstrated by the fact that four of the five starters hit for over thirteen points per contest throughout the season. The 'Cats beter watch out for this one.

Army

Army surprised everyone last year when they finished third in the NIT. This time around they would provide no shock by a repeat performance. Led by Mike Silliman, 18 points and 12 rebounds per game, the Cadets chalked up eighteen victories against seven setbacks through the regular season.

Of the four New York entrants, the West Pointers defeated all but Fordham during the season.

With big John Ritch and Dick Murphy, averaging fifteen and ten points respectively, the Cadets can always find scoring punch. The big question in this semi-final battle will be whether or not the Army can retrieve enough rebounds.

Being the most successful coach at the Point in years, "Tates" Locke would definitely like to plant the NIT on his lapel with his other ribbons. Now that he has won twenty games twenty-one looks even better.

New Mexico

Although jumping beans originated in Mexico the American delegation of that society, New Mexico, has a few of their own. It seems that the University of New Mexico features them at every meal on their training table meau. This is as logical any reason for Mel Daniels to complete a season averaging over 11 rebounds per game. This and Daniels' seventeen points per contest has gained a second place finish for the southern seniors in the Western Athletic Conference.

New Mexico's point allowance, 55 per game, kept them in the national lead in that department for most of the season. Of course, having four out of five starters in double figures for the season, this club is always capable of offensive strength also.

Coach Bob King is overjoyed by the fact that his club does not boast a single senior, and Daniels is but one of his three sophomore starters.

St. John's

It seems as though St. John's University is the guardian of the great city, as they insist on retaining all basketball prowess. After beating kingpin Michigan to take the ECAC Holiday Festival, the Redmen just kept moving. They now face the semi-finals of the star studded NIT.

When Kenny McIntyre scored 42 points to knock Boston College out of the field he was warning foreigners of the fact that perhaps the Redmen realize that 26 dollars was not ample payment for Manhattan, and that the teritory wil remain with its rightful owners and Joe Lapchick will remain its chief.

If the Redmen and the 'Cats should again tangle it may turn out to be the game of the year. The 'Cats badly wounded St. John's in their Field House in their regular season meeting.

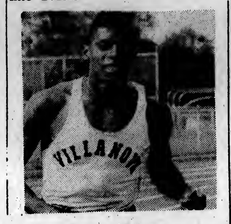
'CATS WIN IC4A TITLE

By Jerry Bruderle

Villanova just missed carrying off its second national title in two weeks, as the 'Cats world record holding two-mile relay team was upset in the first annual NCAA indoor Track and Field Championships held in Detroit last Friday and Saturday nights.



Just one week before Villanova had rallied to defeat Maryland in the IC4A Championships in New York, 24 to 21½.

This time Maryland trailed Villanova in the NCAA meet by only one point in fourth place. Missouri captured the championship with 14 points, Oklahoma State, who won the two-mile relay placed second with 12, and Villanova was third with 11.

The 'Cats points came on Tommy Sullivan's third place in the 880, and second place finishes in the mile relay, as well as the two-mile relay.

Carroll Passed

Oklahoma State passed Villanova anchorman Noel Carroll in the last lap-and-a-half of the two-mile to gain the triumph. Noel, who became a father last week, just didn't have it as lack of sleep finally caught up with him. His time of 1:54 was the slowest of the 'Cat foursome, Jimmy Or did 1:53.4, Al Adams 1:50, and Sullivan turned in a fine 1:49.5

Larry Livers

On Friday, Sullivan was outdistanced by Tom Bon Ruden of Oklahoma State and Tom Baur of St. John's in placing third. The winner's time was 1:51.8.

The mile relay was run in two sections, and Villanova won the first section in a fast 3:16.4 turned in by Bill Heidelberger, Marshall Uzzle, Stan Kolowski and Larry Livers. However, Morgan State promptly went out and beat it with an 11 lap record of 3:15.6, erasing the 1957 mark of 3:16 hung up by a Charley Jenkins-achored Villanova quartet.

In the IC4A, Villanova had to fight and scrounge for points after Maryland opened up a 9-0 lead by taking 1-2 in the broad jump. The 'Cats spent the whole night trying to catch up and finally did on the last event, the mile relay.

Trailing 21½ to 20 the Main Liners needed a third place to take the meet, and did it by finishing second behind Morgan State's 3:20.6.

Villanova garnered two firsts, two seconds and three fourths thanks to some clutch performances and some fancy maneuvering by coach Jim Elliott and his assistant, Jim Tuppeney.

Shot-put First

The first battle was in the shot-put where Soph Augie Zilincar was throwing long but out of bounds in the small throwing area. Elliott and Tuppeney were over ruled in trying to have the area widened, so Zilincar decided to have the 53'11¼" to take fourth place.

Placement officials of the 60 yard hurdles and the 60 yard dash were next on Elliott's list. He twice got decisions reversed to put Lary Livers in the hurdle finals, where he finished fourth, and Earl Horner was moved from fifth to fourth in the 60 yard dash.

Then Carroll and Sullivan both came through with much-needed victories in the 1,000 adn the mile, respectively. Carroll won by inches in the 1,000 in fact it was so close that the first three finishers were all timed in 2.11.5.

Sullivan, enjoying his finest indoor season, fought off Seton Hall's Herb Germann for a two yard victory in 4:09.2 The time was excellent considering Tommy had to run a 4:14.8 mile earlier in the heats.

The 'Cats entered a patchwork 2-mile relay team which placed second and left the outcome up to the mile relay.

Elliott inserted Uzzle as a last second replacement and he responded with the fastest quarter in 48.9. Then Livers, who had already run heats and finals in the hurdles where he took a spill at the tape, plus a qualifying quarter mile, held on to give Villanova its fourth straight IC4A title and its seventh in the last nine years.

There will be a bus trip to the NIT tomorrow check in the Student Government Office for details.

Melchionni, Washington, Leftwich Spark 73-71 Triumph Over Manhattan

By Tom Bruderle

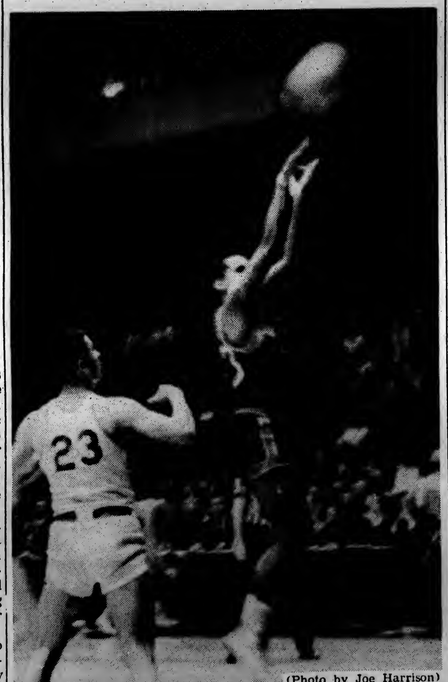
First impressions are often lasting ones. The first and lasting one from Monday night's 73-71 nail-biter over a stubborn Manhattan five can be summed up in one word—w-h-e-w.

Behind nearly the entire second half, Villanova's tournament hopes were in the process of taking a nasty beating. With 8:12 remaining, the Jaspers Larry Lembo and Matt Link had broken a 56-56 tie with nine straight, telling points.

Refusing to fold, key jumpers by Bill Melchionni and George Leftwich, coupled with timely foul shots by Jim Washington brought the 'Cats to within one, 70-69, with 3:27 showing.

'Cats Never Behind

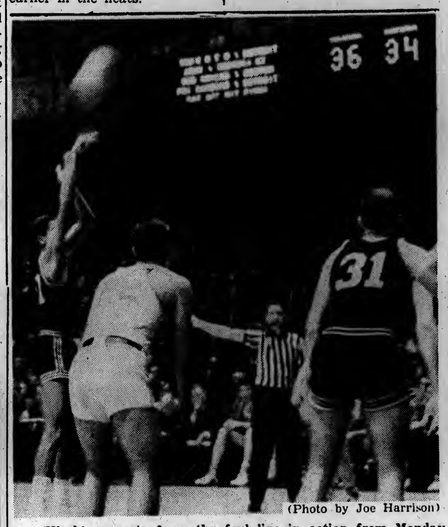
Exactly one minute later, another Melchionni jumper gave Villanova a never-to-be-lost lead at 71-70, but the Jaspers never believed it.



Dribbling the clock away Melchionni was fouled but converted only one in the one-and-one situation with 1:35 left to play. Melchionni, in turn, fouled Bob Chlupsa and, with one-and-one, he too, could connect on only the first shot, making the score an uncomfortable 72-71.

With 34 seconds left, Melchionni was again on the line only this time he missed that all-important first shot.

Twenty three seconds later, Chlupsa was again fouled, this time by Bernie Schaffer. Like the rest, he also missed and in th ensuing melee for the rebound, Eric Erickson was fouled. Although missing four free throws in a row in the first half, Erickson sank the first and missed the second sending the Cats home free.



The first half ended with a 38-38 tie, thanks to a 35-foot shot by Link at the buzzer. In the opening minutes of the second stanza, the 'Cats played catch-up ball, eventually doing so at 56, seeting the stage for the pandamonium to follow.

Washington had 19 points to go with an equal number of rebounds while Melchionni, Billy Soens and Leftwich tallied 16, 14, and 13, respectively. Scoring honors, however, went to Lembo who racked up 31 points.

Detroit

Tomorrow night the Titans of Detroit University will attempt to justify their nickname with the NIT fold. They will clash with the Villanova cagers in what promises to be one of the better contests of the tournament.

Having encountered the 'Cats at a bad time during the season, immediately after their loss to Temple, the Michigan club will be out to even the score.

After handling LaSalle the Titans knocked off NYU to gain their semi-final spot with the 'Cats.

Being one of the highest scoring clubs in the nation, the Titans closed out their season at a 12-2 clip after starting off at a mediocre 6-5 pace Behind John Schramn, Lou Hyatt, and Terry Page, the Titans have convincingly outdone the combined point efforts of their opponents. At the same time Schramn and Dorie Murey, 6-6 and 6-8, have provided strong rebounding.

Western Kentucky State

Western Kentucky State came east to compete in the NIT and proceeded to raise havoc with clubs which had doubted their calibre. Having compiled their seventeen season wins against teams unknown to many eastern fans, the staters tore through Fordham and Army to gain their semi-final berth.

Led by Clem Haskins' 24 points average, the Staters outscored their regular season opponents by an average count of 86-77. Clem the "Gem," who has proved that he's worthy of the name, smashed two records against Middle Tennessee State when he poured 55 points through the hoops while hitting 25 of 38 field shots.

Kraftmen Place Second In NIT; Highest Finish Ever For 'Cat Cagers

By Steve Freind

Jack Kraft's hustling Wildcats finished out a glittering 23-5 campaign with a second place finish in the NIT last week. After toppling NYU in the semi-finals on Thursday, the 'Cats bowed to St. John's 55-51 as Redmen coach Joe Lapchick closed his brilliant career with an unprecedented fourth NIT championship. Nevertheless, the 'Cat's second place showing was the highest finish a Villanova team has ever enjoyed in a post-season tournament.

NYU

It's amazing how a team that has a defense like the Grand Canyon can beat a New York team by 22 point, in Madison Square Garden but that's exactly what happened last Thursday as the 'Cats romped NYU's loudmouth Violets 91-62 in tourney semi-finals. Somewhat perturbed by the printed remarks of several NYU players before the game that Villanova played poor defense and had lost to the Violets by 17 points in a preseason scrimmage the 'Cats wasted little time in demolishing the New Yorkers.

There was little doubt that Lou Rossini's boys had stepped out of their league as Kraft's cagers raced to a 46-35 halftime lead. The 'Cats broke the game wide open early in the second stanza and Kraft began to clear his bench with over eight minutes remaining. Shrugging off the effects of a severe case of virus, Bill Melchionni led the 'Cat attack with a sizzling 28

'Concept' Magazine Probes Villanovans For Spring Articles

By Tara Siegal

Concept magazine is planning the Spring issue with greater emphasis on student opinion. If this experiment is successful it will mold a new format for next year's Concept.

This is a student publication and it needs active student support to order to succeed. Steve Webb, the editor, welcomes the contributions of any interested students. Short articles may be 300-500 words, or longer and more academic articles may be submitted. Also sophomores and juniors are needed to form the nucleus of next year's staff.

Those interested in further details are asked to leave a note in the Concept mailbox in the Student Council office, or to contact Steve Webb or Mike Oslac at LA 5-9191, Delurey Hall.

The Student Government Association is attempting to compile a consensus of student opinion regarding the Villanova Forum.

This information is to be used in conjunction with scheduling speakers for next year's Forum program. There is a blank on page three for those interested in giving their opinion.

Shamokinaki Mixer Whirls Into Field House Friday

By Steve Buck

The Thirteenth Annual Shamokinaki Dance, held for the benefit of the Augustinian missions in Japan, will be staged this Friday night in the Field House from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. Tickets for the event will be on sale this week in the Pie Shoppe and Bartley caferia at a cost of one dollar.

In hopes of raising additional money by increased attendance, the dance will be changed to a mixer this year. All area girl's colleges have been notified and invited.

Steve Freind, general chairman of the event, said that last year's record total of $6300 will probably be broken this year. Over four thousand dollars has already been raised from ads and patrons in the program book, and Freind hopes that the dance will show a profit of at least $6500 for the missions.

Japanese Missions

The Augustinians presently run five parishes in Japan, and they also conduct schools and hospitals. The Fathers are trying to bring the Faith to the Japanese people and help them recover from the devastation of World War II. One of the missions, Our Mother of Consolation, in Nagasaki, is built on the site of an anti-aircraft battery, and is located one-half mile from the center of the atom bomb's blast.

Help Required

Music for the dance will be provided by the Revelers and the Villanovans. The Revelers are a five piece combo which has been popular on the campus circuit for the past five years. The Villanovans are a ten piece band. Because of the nature of the event, both bands have agreed to work for half of their normal price, and they will provide continous dancing throughout the night.

More help is required in order

ICG Prepares For Harrisburg; Regional Held At Immaculata

Sam Cucinotta

The Intercollegiate Conference on Government held its annual south-eastern regional meeting at Immaculata College on Saturday, March 13, in preparation for the State-wide Congress to be held in Harrisburg on April 1, 2, and 3.

Villanova, Rosemont, Immaculata, Temple, Drexel, Pennsylvania Military College, University of Pennsylvania and West Chester were represented.

The organization stimulates Washingtonian politics through mock committees where students defend their submitted bills, and a mock Congress where the passed bills are reported, debated, and voted on. Strict parliamentary procedure is used in all of the events.

The purpose of the organization is to give the college student a knowledge of governmental procedures and, hopefully, to produce an interest in politics. It also represents the views of the Pennsylvania college student since the passed bill the Harrisburg convention are sent to Washington.

At Immaculata College, committeeman Sam Cucinotta, '66 sat as a Villanova delegate to the Foreign Affairs Committee where criticism was offered to strengthen the proposed bills for passage at Harisburg. Vince Acompora, '65, acted as chairman of the Taxation and Finance Committee. Frank Burke, '65, President of the Villanova chapter on ICG, acted as temporary chairman and sat on the Executive Rules Committee.

John Snowdon, from P.M.C. was elected as permanent chairman to represent the southeastern region at Harrisburg. Joan Norton, Immaculata College, was appointed Parliamentarian.

The afternoon meeting was followed by a successful party at the Catholic Philopatrian Literary Society of Philadelphia.

SGA Constitution Amended At Student Congress Session

By Walt Baginsky

The Student Congress meeting of March 17 involved the general discussion of 10 motions — six attained passage while four motions concerning amendments to the SGA constitution were explained and considered. Final voting on these latter four measures will be held next Wednesday evening at the regular Congress meeting.

Three of the six motions passed were concerned with amending the SGA constitution. Two were passed unanimously, A motion proposed by Tim Coyle and Dick Behrens read: that Article III, Section 1 of the SGA By-laws be amended by the addition of subheading E which would read: "Upon appeal to the Student Congress and a two-thirds vote of that body, any judicial decision of the Student Senate may be reversed," received a hair — splitting debate and a single 'nay' vote.

Amendments

The other two unanimously passed, included: one proposed by Coyle which amended Article III, Section I (b) to read: "The vote of at least two-thirds of the total Student Senate is necessary in order to find an organization or individual guilty of charges against it."

The other also proposed by Coyle and Dick Behrens concerned the amending of Article III, Section I with the inclusion of subheading F which would read: "The Student Senate when

C&F Organizations Combine For Discussion On April 8

The Rev. Philip F. Barrett, OSA, Dean of the Commerce and Finance College, has announced that Bill Blauvelt, president of the Pre-Law Society, has been appointed chairman of a committee of presidents of all the C & F organizations. This committe will present a program on April 8 in 209 Bartley Hall under the aegis of the Americans For The Competitive Enterprise System which will include a panel discussion.

The AFTECS is a group of Philadelphia business leaders. There will be a dinner in the East Lounge of Dougherty before the affair at which 30 guests will be entertained. The panel discussion will take place in the evening and the topic will be "The Ethical Aspects of Profit Making."

The four panel members are: Harleston Wood, President of the Alan Wood Steel Company of Conshohocken; George Barnard, vice-president of Aitkin-Kynett, Incorporated (advertising; P. Paul Goggi, of Goggi and Race, Incorporated, New York City Management Consultant; and possibly John Wanamaker president of Wanamaker's Department Store.

One of the by-products of this program will be, hopefully according to Blauvelt, a fusion of the C&F students' organizations and cooperation among the clubs has been good so far. Blauvelt hopes that the rest of the students will pick up this enthusiasm.

The committee members of the commerce and finance organizations are: Louis Berlingo, Accounting Society; Timothy Driscoll, Delta Phi Epsilon; Gerald Franceski, Finance Society; Robert Spellmeyer, the Marketing Society; James Whalen, the Society for the Advancement of Management; Joseph O'Brien, Gamma Phi (Honor Fraternity); Timothy Flannagan, Pi Sigma Epsilon (Professional Marketing Society).

Others representing C&F organizations are William S. Bates, Finance Society; and representing Gamma Phi Anthony Giachetti, James Giardino and Walter Spath.

Young Republicans Chairman Addresses Political Union

The National Chairman of the Young Republicans will oppose negotiations on Vietnam in next Monday evening's Political Union debate. D. E. "Buzz" Lukens, a former Air Force captain, will urge Union members to oppose "negotiations in Vietnam at this time." Open to the public, the debate will be held at 7:30 p.m. in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

Oppose Resolution

In the fall Union members opposed a resolution which would have had the U.S. interdict supplies from North Vietnam. Since that time the U.S. has begun to play a much more active role in the war, and bombing of North Vietnam by American planes is occuring with increasing frequency.

While a substantial portion of public opinion appears to back this policy many people have called on the President to begin negotiations with the Communist powers on the Vietnam conflict. It is expected that Conservative Party members will support Mr. Lukens has been to Vietnam.

BUZZ LUKENS

Six Years in Japan

Lukens' six years in the Air Force included service in Japan and other countries. He received a B.S. degree in criminology at Ohio State University and is a graduate of the Japanese Police Academy where he took courses in Judo and Karate. Lukens served as Republican Clerk of the House Rules Committee. He was twice elected President of the District of Columbia Young Republican Club.

As an undergraduate he helped to found a Young Republican Club on the Ohio State campus. He has also served as a Congressional Campaign Manager and is a member of the 9999th Air Reserve Squadron. Lukens is 34.

Support Dilworth

In their most recent debate Union members supported former Philadelphia Mayor Dilworth's plea to back President Johnson's Aid-to-Education Bill. Dilworth said that he favored the bill's features which permit limited aid to non-public schools.

He added that it would be unfortunate if such aid became so large that it would undercut the public schools. He stressed his belief that the cities do not have to tax resources to adequately handle public education of their citizens.

Future Speakers

Future speakers of the Villanova Political Union include the Press Attache of the Portuguese Embassy in Washington appearing on April 12 and Rashaud Mourad, the new Director of the Arab Information Center in the United States and permanent Observer of the Arab League to the United Nations.

Informed sources in the Political Union have declared that, in future debates, the guest speaker will be subject to questions from the floor during his opening address, and will be able to question Union speakers as well.

Elections of officers for next year will be held tomorrow.

Entrance Exams For Seminary Slated On March 25 And 26

Rev. Joseph A. Duffy, OSA, Augustinian Vocation Director, has announced that the Order of St. Augustine will conduct its annual Seminary Entrance Examination Friday evening and Saturday morning March 26 and 27, on the Villanova Campus.

These tests are open to high school seniors and graduates who have decided to apply to the Augustinians.

Fr. Duffy stated that there is no charge for these tests and no special preparation is necessary. "The tests are mostly standardized ones that are administered to applicants to the service academies and, to some extent, in business and industry," said Fr. Duffy.

For further information, Fr. Duffy may be contacted in 108 Corr Hall, or write Rev. Joseph A. Duffy, OSA, Box 404 Villanova, Pa.

Help is also needed in soliciting and billing those who contributed to the program book with ads or patrons. Freind said that anyone interested in doing such is asked to contact him or Father Riley.

In addition to Freind, the other individual chairmen for the event are: Betsy Grabowski, general co-chairman; Carol Egan and Faith Connor, programs; Sue Quinn and Lorraine Farino, patrons: Jim Morgan and John O'Loughlin, tickets; Jack Cooney, Paul McGrath, and Bob McIntyre, refreshments; Jim Griffin and Tim Coyle, finance; Bill McCloskey and Jim Morgan, publicity; Bob Cowan, coats; Tom Fitzgerald and Bob Pacifico, decorations; and Betty Kelly and Tom Krause, collections.

Freind said that he and Betsy Grabowski were very happy with the work of the chairmen, especially in publicity and decorations. Freind added, "I'm extremely pleased with the progres on Shamokinaki so far. The committees have done a fine job, and for this reason we are going to break the record for the second straight year."

Blue Key Applications

During the five day period from March 29 to April 2, application forms for admission to The Blue Key Society of Villanova University will be made available to the student body. Selection is by means of the application and a series of interviews, the first to be held April 5-7, before the officers, moderator and members of the Key. The first meeting for this year's applicants will be at 4:30 p.m. in 110 Bartley on Friday, April 2.

The Blue Key Society provides service to the University and to the student body, principally in the area of public relations. The activities of the Society are many and varied, ranging from giving tours to prospective students or distinguished visitors, to planning and implementing a major social activity such as Parents' Weekend. The Society works closely with the Office of Admissions and the Office of Development in achieving its goals.

30 Members

There are 30 members of The Blue Key Society: fifteen seniors, ten juniors, and five sophomores. Of these 30 members two (by constitutional provision) can be female undergraduates. Membership is lifetime and is limited to this small number in order to provide a close, harmonious unit more equipped to carry out the functions of the Key.

Because the general aim of the Society is to "promote, develop and manifest the ideals and objectives of Villanova University," applicants must, of necessity, possess the qualities which facilitate this goal Among the more important: a sincere interest in, and appreciation of Villanova University; the ability to communicate and to create a good first impression; intelligence; leadership potential; a willingness to serve.

It is a privilege to be accepted into The Blue Key Society. It is a position of honor, trust and responsibility. Last year more than 120 students applied for membership. This year the Key will accept 15 new members: fourteen male and one female.

Anyone possessing the aforementioned qualities (this is not a time for false humility) is invited and urged to obtain an application form and attend the first meeting.

James T. Farrell To Address Literary Society In April

By Matt Roche

James T. Farrell, novelist, critic, and poet, will be the guest speaker of the Villanova Literary Society on April 26. The lecture will be held in Vasey Hall Auditorium.

Mr. Farrell is the author of 38 books among which are the Studs Lonigan trilogy, the Danny O'Neill series, short stories such as Can All This Grandeur Perish and literary criticism such as The League of Frightened Philistines. Recently he just published a new book The Collected Poems of James T. Farrell, which contains his poetical development from 1927 to the present as revealed in such poems as "Protest" and "Sunday Afternoon."

What Time Collects, his last novel is the second volume of a 27-volume series entitled The Universe of Time. The author commented on the theme, "The theme is the relation of time. I'm concerned with the creative imagination and the will of man and the morality of man. Time figures in all my work."

The 61-year old writer was born and reared in Chicago where he attended the University of Chicago for three years. Then he tried a variety of jobs including clerk for the Railway Express and a salesman in a cigar store. From 1936-37 he was a Guggenheim Fellow in Creative Writing. His novel Studs Lonigan, published in 1937, was a result of this venture. The novelist now is a Fellow of the American Institute of Arts and Letters and a Writer-in-Residence at St. Peter's College in Jersey City.

A prolific writer, he claims to write from four to 24 hours a day since "I don't believe in sleep. You live longer no matter when you die if you sleep less. Life is interesting, sleep is not.

The Literary Society plans a symposium on "The Index" for Thursday, April 8, in 204 Vasey Hall.

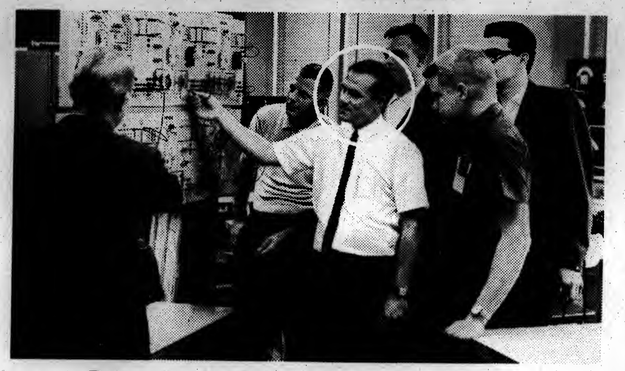
meeting in order to exercise its judicial powers shall first duly apprise the offending organization or individual of the charges against him or it and shall permit and formally request the offending party to be present."

The remaining three motions passed were concerned with University matters. The first, proposed by Coyle and Jim Griffin involved a request that the Administration publish, in booklet form, all information regarding course schedules.



The second, proposed by John Casey, provided that the Alpha Zeta Chapter of Pi Sigma Epsilon Fraternity be seated on the SGA. The last of the motions passed was proposed by Ernie Abate and Charlie Zacarria which held that the day-hop Cafeteria be open at 10:30 a.m. on Thursdays.

This was passed in the hope of alleviating the present overcrowded conditions in the Pie Shoppe during the period.

In closing the meeting, president Tom Furst announced that election of SGA officers would be held at the regular April 7, meeting of the SGA.

Graduation was only the beginning of Jim Brown's education

Because he joined Western Electric

Jim Brown, Northwestern University, '62, came with Western Electric because he had heard about the Company's concern for the continued development of its engineers after college graduation.

Jim has his degree in industrial engineering and is continuing to learn and grow in professional stature through Western Electric's Graduate Engineering Training Program. The objectives and educational philosophy of this Program are in the best of academic traditions, designed for both experienced and new engineers.

Like other Western Electric engineers, Jim started out in this Program with a six-week course to help in the transition from the classroom to industry. Since then, Jim Brown has continued to take courses that will help him keep up with the newest engineering techniques in communications.

This training, together with formal college engineering studies, has given Jim the ability to develop his talents to the fullest extent. His present responsibilities include the solution of engineering problems in the manufacture of moly-permalloy core rings, a component used to improve the quality of voice transmission.

If you set the highest standards for yourself, enjoy a challenge, and have the qualifications we're looking for — we want to talk to you! Opportunities exist now for electrical, mechanical and industrial engineers, and for physical science, liberal arts and business majors. For more information, get your copy of the Western Electric Career Opportunities booklet from your Placement Officer. And be sure to arrange for an interview when the Bell System recruiting team visits your campus.

Letters To The Editor

To the Editor,

After reading in last week's issue, "Final Picks" by Tom Kelly of your sports staff, I find it necssary to comment, in my opinion, on his fine perception and choice, and also his unbiased and frank choosing. Mr. Kelly seemed to show no favoritism toward Villanova and paid some well-deserved compliments to some of our staunchest rivals Finally, although the entire selection is a matter of opinion, I was pleased to see that I am not alone in choosing Princeton's Butch Van Breda Kolff as the game's most obnoxious personality.

Jack Moscardelli

To the Editor,

In his "article" entitled "The Real Danger," Jim Mitchell has called the bombings of American fighter planes "frantic action." When numerous American fighting men, not to mention Vietnamese soldiers, have died at the hands of the North Vietnamese, I wonder how Mr. Mitchell is able to call purely defensive bomb runs "frantic action."

Moreover, Mr. Mitchell has stated that these bomb runs are the result of a dilemma in which Lyndon Johnson has found himself, because some form of decided action is better than no action at all. He goes on to say that "LBJ is afraid of loss of votes" if he negotiates or withdraws American forces and assistance from South Vietnam. I do not think this personal insult towards LBJ could be stated more clearly. Even though I am not basically a supporter of Lyndon Johnson, when Mr. Mitchell accuses the President of the United States of being more concerned with his own political well-being than with the state of the nation and the lives of the American fighting forces in South Vietnam, I feel strongly that Mr. Mitchell ought to prove a statement as the one above, or else hold his tongue.

Mr. Mitchell calls for negotiation in hopes that South Vietnam might be neutralized. Can Mr. Mitchell be so naive as to think that North Vietnam or Red China herself would respect the neutrality of South Vietnam?

South Vietnam then, has become the battleground on which the entire world has focused its eyes. It is here then that the United States must protect South Vietnam from the ruthles drive towards World Communism. Protect South Vietnam and the Free World will deliver a serious blow to Asian Communism; desert her and we have failed.

Gregory W. Gingery

To the Editor,

On Monday, March 15, I decided to improve my cultural status and attended a meeting of the Villanova Political Union in the East Lounge of Dougherty. Upon arriving at the assigned place, I was surprised to find a virtual kaleidoscope of people — educated and un-, couth and un- . . . but these latter were in the majority only in the Moderate Party.

The resolution "That the House Support the Administration's Federal Aid to Education Bill" was ably and intelligently presented to the audience by the Honorable Richardson Dilworth. This was followed by a spirited if not so intelligent display by members of the Conservative Party.

Next on the agenda was a whirlwind (and I might emphasize this last word) of quotations and gyrations by a Moderate Party speaker.

The function of the Liberal Party seemed to be one of trying to muster what dignity they could for Villanova, Mr. and Mrs. Dilworth, and other guests while members of the Conservative Party stammered and one of the Moderates spat and smoked a pipe simultaneously.

The meeting closed with a sincere welcome to the Villanova nurses present by the inimitable Eugene Fitzmaurice in the way that only he can. I can only say that after such enthusiasm, I could not in conscience neglect a future meeting of the Political Union if only to hear what MrFitzmaurice has to say about my being there.

Carol Egan
Class of 1966

To the Editor,

For the first time in my eighteen years of teaching at Villanova I am moved to write a note of protest regarding an article in your publication.

I refer to the item in your March 17 issue which, in discussing the proposed "Instructional Television" program, asserts that "there remains a small but vocal group of faculty members who refuse to cooperate with the system for reasons that they prefer not to explain."

This statement is not only false but gratuitously insulting. If the purported author of the article in question will exercise the courtesy and trouble to get in touch with me, I shall be glad to give him precise reasons for my own objections to the method by which this program is being introduced at Villanova. Furthermore, I shall be happy to acquaint him with many more than" I per cent of the faculty" who have "reasons" which they are only too willing to explain.

Ed. Note: The Villanovan stands behind its "purported" reporter Mr. McCloskey.

To the Editor,

I have been greatly edified by the quality of feature material which has appeared in The Villanovan over the past several issues. I would like to especially congratulate you for the articles which have dealt with the question of South-east Asia in general and Vietnam in particular.

Having some experience with the problems of collegiate journalism I have noticed that many college newspapers have tended to shy away from controversial national and international issues. Some say that such topics are outside the realm of the college newspaper while others contend that, if the national press can have only a limited effect on American policies, the effect of the college newspaper must, of necessity, be almost nil.

Perhaps this is to be the case. But it shows an encouraging sign for the future when the college press can take such stands in an age of growing indifference.

Again congratulations on a fine job and keep up the good work.

In the past few weeks The Villanovan has received an unusually large number of letters to the editor. While they are to be encouraged in the future, one request is made. Please limit all letters to 350 words. Each week, a certain amount of space is allocated on the editorial page for these letters, and every attempt will be made to publish as many as possible but it should be remembered that limitations must be maintained.

. . . IN A WORLD OF HIS OWN . . .

The Apathetic Villanovan

The concept of the college student is one of the most misconstrued notions today, Many diversified views have been given. American journalism has managed to comport a rather shattering and distasteful image of bearded, reactionary students who campaign for free speecsh and end up broadcasting filth. On the other extreme, we find the all-college conservative who campaigns for nothing and cares about nothing, except to get that diploma and get out.

Some Villanovans normally have no concept of what is occuring across the nation, or for that matter what is happening on the campus. In short they are apathetic. Their spirit is confined to athletics and as they suport the winner they do so only in a limited nature anyway. Interest in their courses goes no further than getting a mark and they could care less whether the nation goes to pot tomorrow.

One of the interesting sidelights of this apathy is that one of the most crucial tests of American Democracy is now taking place. Many students show little interest in whether the Negro does or does not finally gain his true rights as an American citizen. Many Villanovans have no desire to make their feelings known, whether pro or con; anything is better than the stupified silence that now prevails on the campus

If the apathetic Villanovan is any indication of what our future leaders will be like, the country is definitely headed for a very sad future. This the problem of the present generation of leaders who procrastinated too long. They now face a reckoning not only for lost time, but also in lives and national character degradation. Unless this younger generation begins to accept the simple responsibility of being full-time citizens, we will be headed for even more serious and crucial problems than already confront us. A good example of what can be done was shown to us by a man who prefered to be known as the Servant of the Servant of God; he wrote a work, Pacem in Tecris, whih has every mark of being the basis upon which the future of the world will be molded.

Is It All Over?

"It's all o-ver! It's all o-ver!" These words have been used at the close of many games at the Palestra during the recently completed basketball season. These chants signified the end of one game, according to the fans anyway, but there was always the next game to look forward to.

About three weeks ago Villanova helped Marquette end its eason with a sound thrashing of the Musketeers. The defeat marked the mid-westerners thirty-eighth loss in fifty-one games over a two year period, but the student body was undaunted. At a post-game mixer, the spirit committee distributed awards to the team's most valuable player, highest scorer and rebounder.

But now it is all over and there is no "next game" only next season. In a year that was supposed to be lack-lustre due to the absence of Wally Jones and Richie Moore, Jack Kraft's boys turned in a very enviable 23-5 mark and a second place finisn in the NIT.

This year's cagers have been honored by the wire services and newspapers throughout the country but they have yet to hear praise from where it should be the loudest and longest —the student body.

Under the auspices of the SGA, could not a similar ceremony be held with appropriate awards? The presentation could be made at the basketball dinner early next month or at the next SGA meeting. If the coach of Villanova's arch rival can be justly honored, can not the Villanova basketball team be as well?

West Chester "Criterions" Win IJF Competition

By Bill McCloskey

Groups from around the country performed before a world wide radio audience, but when Villanova's Fifth Annual Intercollegiate Jazz Festival was over it was a local group, the Criterions from West Chester State Teachers College, who walked off with the honors.

Another local, 19-year-old Trudy Desmond, from Temple University, held the Field House audience and the judges spellbound, to be named the best vocalist of the Festival.

The Brian Trentham Quartet, from New York's Columbia University, rounded out the winners, by taking the combo section of the competition.

Bucking the elements and the National Invitation Tourney in New York, the Festival came off a complete success in every way as 4000 people crowded into the Field House for the two-day affair.

Recognized as "one of the great jazz festivals of the United States" by ABC Radio, the competition began on Friday afternoon with semi-final competition and continued with first-round sessions on Friday evening and again Saturday afternoon From the 16 groups in these performances came the 8 presented to the judges on Saturday night in the finals.

The 18 piece band from West Chester played right before the intermission and it was obvious from the half-time chatter of the audience that they were the early favorites.

Never, throughout the night, did the applause top that which the Criterions drew.

In their repitoir the "Crites" played "Half Nelson" as a tribute to the late Charlie "Bird" Parker, to whom the Festival was dedicated. Each group in the competition was required to play at least one tune by Parker.

The arrangement for Half Nelson was by Herb Pomeroy, the leader of another band in the finals, the Massachussets Institute of Technology Concert Band.

Solos by trumpeteer Joel White and tenor Charlie Blum brought the house down, with applause for West Chester.

This was the second winning venture for the Criterions. They took all of the honors at IJF '63.

Crowd Erupts

The audience went wild when Eddie Bride, general Chairman for the Festival announced the winners of the competition. Leader James D. Sullivan, a junior at West Chester, literally sprinted from the rear of the auditorium, followed by the 17 other members of his ecstatic crew to receive the award from Stan Kenton, one of the Festival's biggest backers.

No sooner did Sullivan leave the stage from accepting the Band trophy than the crowd erupted again as it was announced that the Criterions had been selected by the judges as the best of the Festival.

Sixteen of the band members are music majors at the school and have taken their training well. Sullivan, in addition to leading the group plays the piano.

Jazz fans can find the Crites this coming Saturday at St. Joseph's Jazz and Folk Festival

Other Bands Swing

Also in the finals were the M.I.T. Concert Jazz Band and the Phi Mu Alpha Jazz Workshop Band No. 2 from Ohio State University.

There were 16 members in each of these two organizations. Phil Weinacht, played solo trumpet as the Ohio State band drew applause with "With Our Tongues In Our Cheek." Weinacht is also the leader fo the band. "Tongues" was arranged and written by Ladd McIntosh who arranges all of the material for the group.

The MIT band also played Half Nelson as their Parker tribute tune.

Writes Own Lyrics

Trudy Desmond, the junior at Temple's Tyler School of Fine Arts, wrote lyrics to Charlie Parker's 'Bloomdido' and sang it as her tribute the "The Yardbird."

Trudy, in an attractive black dress, trimmed top and bottom with black fur also performed "I'll Remember April," "Old Devil Moon," "Bornto Be Blue" and "Just You, Just Me" for the jazz adicts and interested nonadicts in the audience.

Her work received one of the best ovations of the night topped only by the Criterions.

Had the paying customers decided the winner in the Vocal been a toss up. Red dressed Mrya Brown was called back on stage by the audience for the only real curtain call of the evening.

Miss Brown, a senior at Hampton Institute in Hampton, Virginia, showed her talents as singer and actress well in performing crowd pleasers "You'd Be So Nice To Come Home To," "Lonely" and George Gershwyn's" "Summertime." She was accompanied by the trio of Weldon Irvine. "Lonely" was arranged by Irvine, also a student at Hampton. His trio, which did not make the combo finals backed Miss Brown. Irvine's piano playing contributed strongly to the overall effort of the entry. The performance was frequently interupted by applause.

In the Combo classification, it was the Columbia University entry, the Brian Trentham Quartet, that led off the evening and they were never topped in the judge's book.

Treutham opened their performance with a low key trombone solo. In each case the horn led to a swinging crescendo by the entire four man combo.

Cymbal work, toe-taping drummer Don Parillo is sure to have had a lot to do with the judge's decision. Parillo, a 20-year-old junior music major at Columbia further added to his point gathering percussion work by playing a small wooded clapper during one of Leader Trentham's solo.

The fiery and fast building crescendos were always punctuated by Jim Johnson on piano and bass man Cameron Brown. Brown is a 19-year-old freshmar at Columbia.

There were two other finalists in the competition for the combo award. The Vince Trombetta Quintet, from the Philadelphia Musical Academy, played modern progressive renditions of such tunes as "Softly As In A Morning Sunshine" which was well received and interupted by applause twice during its performance.

Defenders Come Close

The other organization to make the finals was the defending champion group The Bill Barnwell Quintet from Hampton Institue in Virgina.

Saxman Barnwell was as good as ever on the Alto Sax and flute. Barnwell's arrangement of Charlie Parker's "Now's The Time' brought down the house.

The always popular quintet played Barnwell's compositions exclusively for the remainder of their presentation.

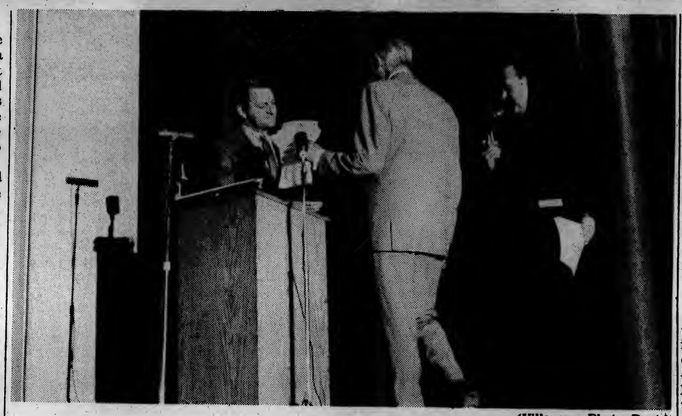
"Roadrunner" was written, as a tribute to Parker, especially for IJF '65. Other originals were "Soul Stroll" and "Trouble In Mind."

Weldon Irvine who backed Myra Brown earlier in the evening came back to add his flashy piano work to the Barnwell offerings. The group was rounded out by the drums of Hayward Thompson and fleugel horn player Preston Williams and Bill Skinner on bass.

Students Superb

Rick Berry was in charge of the excellent stage work. Lighting direction was by the moderator of the Festival Ray Wilke — of the Speech Department. Backstage fading and raising the lights, to Wilke's direction, was junior Jerry Iby.

Others working on the stage crew on the final evening were Larry Krupa, and fellow sophomore Dave Buscher. Freshman Bob Dougherty and junior Phila. Malarkey were also on the stage crew. The sound, from the ABC microphones, was fed to the Field House sound system by freshman engineer Fred Landau, who worked the console backstage.



There were actually hundreds of other students who contributed to the success of IJF '65 under the direction of Bride, Barry Allen Bornstein and John Calabria who were members of the Execrtive Committee.

World-Wide Audience

A world-wide audience joined the thousands in the Field House for the Intercollegiate Jazz Festival. Through the facilities of the American Broadcasting Company's radio network and its affiliated stations, the Festival proceedings were broadcast nationwide from 8:30 to 10:55 p.m. Saturday.

Armed Forces Radio, Radio Free Europe, Radio New York World Wide, and the Voice of America tapped the ABC Line to transmit the show to the world-wide audience.

Plans began Monday for IJF '66.

A Foolish Consistency--The U.S. In Viet Nam

By Jeff Radowich

Three weeks ago an article entitled "An Essential Morality" appeared in the Villanovan. Stating that the policy of colonialism which the United States is following in South Viet Nam is more morally detrimental to America than would be the results of the Domino Theory (if it were indeed valid), the article concluded by advocating the withdrawal of the United States from South Viet Nam.

Since that writing grave events have taken place which warrant further comment: the escalation of the war by both sides with its attendant policy revamping and the recent appearance of the apologist of conservatism, Dr. Russell Kirk, in Vasey Hall Auditorium.

Dr. Kirk had some very interesting and some very general things to say about the world situation. Naturally, the conservative philosophy (presupposing existence of same) came out on top, but he at least retained a modicum of objectivity when pressed in the questioning period which followed his lecture.

His Answers

Yes, the United States is backing a "puppet government with little popular support" in South Viet Nam.

Yes, we are following a policy of "unconscious colonialism."

Yes," Walter Lippman is essentially correct" when he says we shouldn't act as the poilceman of planet earth.

Yes, it is apparent that "aerial retaliation is not enough; the Viet Cong are increasing their attacks to the same extent as the United States bombing missions."

Yes, "we shouldn't have gotten involved at all, "but, now that we're there, we can't withdraw: "withdrawal would be the greatest blow the United States has ever suffered; China would take over all of that area of the world."

The Great Wall

"Well, sir," some astute questioner asked, "What do you advocate?"

At this point, the learned and eminent speaker returned to the nebulosity of his lecture, rambling on about Chester Bowles Macedonia, the doctrine of national self-interest, the popular liberal misconceptions, and, finally, timidly remarked (two questions later): we could "erect a huge fortified wall across all of South East Asia, built with American materials and American advisors, and man it with the armies of the countries of that area of the world. In five to seven years, a defensive war such as this could have some success."

For one who harped on the "Art of the Possible" as the summation of the conservative philosophy, he surely labeled himself the most radical dreamer the American scene has witnessed in recent years with this scheme of the "Big Wall."

To return to reality: despite the Johnson Administration's refusal to articulate the answers or even the questions, in South Viet Nam, a number of chilling facts have become more apparent in the last month.

Land War

We are escalating the war and seem to be aproaching the threshold of a full-scale land engagement in southeastern Asia;

The Viet Cong, though they don't possess the sympathies of the majority of South Vietnamese, most assuredly have more popular support than does the United States. A good percentage of South Vietnamese are indfferent to both and desire only peace at any price;

The Viet Cong have not been intimidated by the bombings or the presence of our marines at all, but offer clear evidence that they are eager for escalation. They continue to be successful in their drive to isolate the northern third of the country, this, military strategists predict would be the beginning of the end in South Viet Nam.

It is apparent that the participation of North Vietnam is becoming more significant as time progresses. This may indicate that the actual populace will be shoved aside as the two foreign agressors continue to trespass on South Vietnamee soil in the increasingly devestating war.

The western tradition and civilization cannot be applied to either the circumstances of the area, or the mentality of the people, in South Viet Nam.

Position of Strength

Our present policy seems to be to gain the uper hand and then negotiate from a position of strength. But, it this achieving of the upper leverage consumes many American lives, money and material, if this policy can lead to global war, if, in actuality, we may not ever gain this cherished advantage, and if the pursuit of this policy drives the communist giants into a unit, is it worth it?

This strategy is supposedly justified by the Domino Theory. But there is someting basically illogical about this vindication by racticality.

You see, we shouldn't have gotten involved, but we can't get out now because it would enable China to take over all that half of the globe. True, if we hadn't gotten entangled, the Communists would be following essentially the same policy as they are now: they would be taking control of Southeastern Asia. But, now that we're there,

Toby Y. Kahr
B.S., Columbia University

The road to management is a two-way street at Ford Motor Company. On one side of the street, the college graduate brings to us his talents, abilities and ambitions. Then it is up to us to ensure that he realizes his full potential.

There are several methods we use in guiding his development. One method is periodic evaluations. These reviews measure performance and—more importantly—chart the best route for an employe to pursue in developing his capabilities. These performance reviews are prepared at least once a year by the employe's immediate supervisor, reviewed by higher management and discussed with the employe.

In addition, there are frequent reviews and analyses of individual performance in which promotions, salary increases and developmental moves are planned. These programs are so important that each division and staff has a special section responsible for administering them. One of the people who helps oversee these programs is Toby Kahr. His experience is also an example of how a college graduate benefits from these programs.

In 1963, Toby completed our College Graduate Program. During these first two years, he gained a depth of experience in Company policies involving all aspects of employe relations. Currently he supervises the Personnel Planning and Training Section of our Steel Division. In essence, Toby is helping to implement the program that led to his own career development.

Programs such as these are intended to make certain that your performance at Ford Motor Company will be recognized and will determine how fast you'll move ahead. The development of future managerial material is one of our fundamental goals. See our representative when he visits your campus. Something good may develop for you.

Youth Orchestra Conquers Campus

By Matt Roche

The Youth Orchestra of Greater Philadelphia and Joan Dolgonos were the joint guests of the Villanova Concert Series on Friday, March 12. William S. Gross, director of the concert series, in conjunction with the Arts Forum Committee and the Concert co-chairmen, presented the activity in the Villanova Field House.

The program consisted of Borodin's "Polovetsian Dances" and Rachmaninoff's "Concerto No. 2" in the first half, and Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherezade" in the second.

Musical Unity

The first selection "Polovetsian Dances" from Prince Igor by A. Borodin was played by the full orchestral under Joseph Primavera's direction. From the tambourine's introduction, the rich, raphsodic melody was advanced by the strong preponderance of strings-lending a Viennese "never-never" atmosphere to the tent-enveloped Field House.

From a lilting "stranger-in-paradise" air to a mad, whirling frenzy of song, the compostition showed the influenece of the Steppes. It was interpreted with a beyond-their-years maturity of the orchestra. The musical unity was apparent from the harp to the violins.

This was followed by the "Concerto No. 2 in C minor" by Sergei Rachmaninoff. Joan Dolgonos, a fragile figure of combustible energy, dressed in a white beaded evening gown, was the guest pianist. A graduate of Curtis Institute and a former pupil of Rudolph Serkin, she followed the controlled lead of Joseph Primavera.

The concerto is one of the foremost traditional pieces played by soloists. It was a fine vehicle to demonstrate the extent and depth of Miss Dolgonos's talent. The piece might have easily become hackneyed and cliche-ridden, but thanks to the soloist's interpretation, the freshness of the standard theme was able to be accented.

From the light touch of the cymbals to the omnipresent, but not overbearing strings, the whole orchestra combined to give a fitting background to the pianissimo fingerings of the guest sololst. She brought back some familiar twists and turns, as well as some surprise notes that this fan had forgotten.

Scheherezade

After a brief intermission the orchestra came back to give their rendition of "Scheherezade" (Opus 35) by Nicholas Rimsky-Korsakoff. Under the coaxing, seductive fingers of the conductor the sensuous musical potential emerged. Mr. Paul Ginsburg evoked the plaintive sound of the harem-maiden by the oriental quality of the stringed undulations. Alternated with this was the gypsy-like incuenece accented by the castenets and the tapping drums.

In summary, this reviewer would like to thank Mr. Primavera for his choice selection of a program suitable both for the audience and the musicians. Unlike Mr. Stokowski who aimed above the audience, Mr. Primavera aimed to the audience — and scored — in its heart.

Mrs. Gross

Miss Dolgonos, now Mrs. Gross — the wife of a Villanvo graduate, was superb. Her timing was surpassed only by her interpretive intonations. A beauty herself, she extracted the beauty out of the piece. Paul Ginsburg's fingerings produced the exotic from the normal: the beautiful product of his bow is ample evidence why he was chosen concertmaster.

After the concert Joseph Primavera made the comic understatement to this critic, "Not bad for a 'bunch of children,' hmm?" His sence of humor underscored the achievement of a group of youths whose musical potential is beyond their years.

"Misguided Youth"—?

By Ron Javers

Once again youth has shown evidence of its historically uncanny ability to seek out and give unflinching support to the most ridiculous of causes.

he refer to the recent "demonstrations" at the Berkeley campus of the University of California.

We refer to the "Freedom of Filth Campaign' being waged by some members of that university's student body. It seems that the enchantment youth finds in advocating the illicit has run rampant in California.

During these demonstrations five "students" have already been arrested for shouting an obscene four letter word (unpublishable) into microphones, and displaying in on placards in a public square.

Apparently, these misguided martyrs believe that obscenity is in the eyes of the beholder. They are making sure that as many people as possible behold it. It seems to be sort of a spread the weath type of saturation campaign to make certain of our Anglo-Saxon idioms into household words.

Laughable

The whole matter at first glance is almost laughable. However, looking more deeply deeply into the situation, the resignation of at least two prominent administrators at the Berkeley campus.

The "quitters" claimed a desire to publicize the events taking place at Berkeley. This is just about the worst thing that could happen. The faculty could at least keep their appearent wishy-washy indecisiveness to themselves. Now the adminstrators are back at Berkeley, nothing having been accomplished by their resignations in the first place.

We are sickened by the depths to which some of the young people in our country will sink, merely to be" different."

These so called demonstrations in California are immoral, immature, and illconceived. Their illegality and idiocy should be obvious to the perpetrators.

Free Speech Movement

The curent vibrations at Berkeley have their roots in September's orgaization on campus of a Free Speech Movement, by a minority of more enlightened" undergraduates.

The Movement at first seemed an innocent, even admirable attempt to acheive for the students a right to actively verbalize their political sentiments. The Movement however, quickly degenerated into a nation-wide stage on which certain ultra-non-conformist factions have been strutting and shouting their hebetic lunacies. Now it has run even further amuck. With the new batch of demonstrations, the beared wonders of Berkely, in their supposed attempt to gain individual freedoms, have completely suceeded in trampling in the dust the freedom of everyone who happens to be on or near the "riot torn' campus. They not only illustrate their own open armed acceptance of obscenity, but they force it into the eyes and ears of all those other unfortunates who happen to be in close proximity.

The attitude of the administration is as disquieting as that of the students is disgusting. These demonstrators are vertibly begging to be disciplined. Immediate implemenatation of a firm policy is a necessity. And what do the men who are supposed to be in responsible positions do? They resign.

Heads Roll

Indeed, a few heads should have rolled at Berkeley this semester, but certainly not those of the administration. A few "demonstrators" should have found themselves out on the street, shorn of the comforting sanctuary of the quadrangle.

One more thought now strikes us. For any of you bedradgled Psuedo, intellectuals who may read this: You that march with signs, and you that rant That Word from microphones. Go home son, and scream it in your mother's ear. But not in mine.

YOUTH ISN'T WASTED ON THE YOUNG

And to prove it—this album—"THE DICK WILLIAMS' KIDS SING FOR BIG PEOPLE." Twelve great standards sung by kids and supported by lush strings and drivin' brass. It swings! It's exciting! It's unlike any album you've ever heard. And chances are, you'll write us a love letter about it!

A Ride On The P&W

By Bill McCloskey

Villanovans assign funny names to things. The Forrest is "Kelly's." A blazer is called "the class rag." And, the Red Arrow trolley that runs between Norristown and 69th Street Terminal is called the P&W or another less printable name.

The P&W, like the other names, has a basis in history. The old Philadelphia and Western Railway used to operate the line. Now the Red Arrow does and a trip from Villanova to 69th street costs you 40 cents.

With the fare increase that went into effect on Lincoln's Birthday, we decided it was time for an "Honest Abe" report on another Villanova tradition, the P&W.

Odd, Happenings

Our report is less than a good one. The day that we rode the rails we had two trains pass us by on the Stadium platform. We had set the little signal light that proports to be a notification to the driver to stop for passenger. Unfortunately, one of the trains was not scheduled to stop at the Stadium and the other apparently passed the station when its driver decided eight passengers weren't worth stopping for. After all, by our calculations, he was already some eight minutes late. The Red Arrow does funny things like that.

As, a few weeks ago, when there was a motion in the Student Government Association calling for a sidewalk to the Stadium stop, an SGA researcher called the Red Arrow to ask how many passengers used the station. The man on the other end didn't know, but he was sure that it had dropped lately because of the high proportion of students driving cars. It must be the spacious parking lots or the traffic jams that incite the drivers to ignore the P&W.

They have a funny way of scheduling departures too. During rush hours trains run on an eratic timeable. (That's the regular table, before the drivers make their little changes.) During rush hour (4:30 p.m. to 6 p.m.) trains stop at intervals that vary between three minutes and almost 15 minutes.

Liberty Liner

If you happen to miss the Liberty Liner, (its not hard, only some of them stop at Villanova Stadium) you lose all hope of anything more than a cement mixer-type ride along the banks and turns of the course between Villanova and 69th Street. At least on the Liberty Liners (that's the fancy names their retread Milwaukee-Chicago trains have) you have a chance to put your age card to the test.

But, bar-car or not, the ride to Upper Darby is still 40 cents which the operator audits on his handy-dandy portable, "look Mom it works from either end of the car," fare register. (This is truly a slice of Americana.)

We were treated with the delight of riding in the oldest cars on the line, probably circa 1930.

Drafty and Bumpy

The cars are drafty and bumpy, besides being late. We must admit at this point that the trains are not always late. The motormen make up for their rush hour folly by making the cars early during the daylight hours. This little trick really fools the paying customer.

We arrived after a breezy, bumpy, ride through the backlands of Delaware County

It doesn't matter though, the Red Arrow will probably continue to run the drafty cars, expensive fares, and requests for public assistance up the same flagpole.

This commuter is not inclined to salute.

we can't withdraw, because then the Communists would take over, which is what woul have happened if we hadn't interferred. And, remember, we should not have intervened in the first place.

Emerson

It appears the United States is treading ponderously down the dogmatic road of a foolish consistencey, which emersn appropriately labeled "the hobgoblin of little minds."

The policy of "unconscious colonialism" is anathema to the peoples of any newly-emergent country, including South Viet Nam.

In fact, this is precisely why the French were forced to vacate southeastern Asia more than ten years ago. This is precisely what the English were trying to accomplish in America prior to 1776, when the residents threw off the yoke of foreign oppression.

This is the complete antithsis of that policy upon which this country has prospered and grown: the principle of self-determination, that every man, whether he agrees with me or not, has the God given right to profess his own belief.

Paradox

And, in what is the greatest paradox of all, our present tactics, based on practicality, are, themselves, impractical.

Even if the United States were able to win a ground war in Asia (recall Douglas MacArthur's admonition), there is little hope that the people would sympathize with our form of tyranny. It is indeed unlikely that, were we to save the South Vietnamese from themselves, we would be appreciated.

In conclusion, our present policy is only vaguely legal, certainly immoral, definitely contrary to our most basic beliefs, and, in the ultimate irony, impractical in the long run.

Wildcat Ruggers Drop Opener; Columbia Grads Prevail, 5-3

By Bob McIntyre

On March 13, Villanova's Rugby Club opened their spring campaign on a sad note. After playing one of the best defensive games in the club's history against a bigger and more experience team of Columbia University Graduates, they lost out after a late goal by the score of 5-3.

The ruggers led by Bert Lombino's early first period score kept the Old Blue's down 3-0 till the last minutes of the game. Then Columbia scored on what turned out to be a very disputed score. They added the conversion after the argument over the goal and took the lead by a slim two points.

Bad Call

The Wildcats couldn't get in another score and consequently lost their first match of the season. The backfield members played outstandingly as they constantly turned back the attackers even in the face of a 10-15 lb. advantage in weight per man.

The club's A and C teams were supposed to play Navy on Saturday and the B team Penn but all three matches were cancelled because of the snowstorm.

Those still interested in trying out for the squad are asked to report to the Rugby Field across from the Field House at 3:30 Monday through Friday.

This year's schedule includes:

March 27-Temple and Fordham(H).

Apr. 3 Drew University
4 Phila. Rugby Club
10 Yale
24 Brown

May 1 Temple Tourn. Columbia, Virgina,, Holy Cross
2-7 Aside Tourn. (H)
8 Manhattan Rugby Club
15 Jefferson Medical School (Tentative)

'Cats Lacrosse Club Open Season Against 'The Fighting Irish'

The Villanova University Lacrosse Club will launch its '65 season against Notre Dame University on Thursday, March 25. The Wildcats will host the fighting Irish at 2:00 p.m. behind the North stadium stands.

Rookie Coach Gene Melcher '63, a former V.U. stickman himself, is anxiously looking forward to a victory against the green from South Bend to set the momentum for the fifth lacrosse season at Villanova. Coach Melcher has been working with the team since the second week of ebruary and hopes are bright and high that this six week preparation will pay off in a sucess ful season.

The club, co-captained by Bill White and Jim Rantanen, primarily supports itself by members paying dues at the start of the season. The funds then go to pay for game referees and equipment needed by the team, such as helmets and protective gloves. The players buy their own sticks.

On the following Saturday, March 27, the club will play C. W. Post College of Long Island, N.Y. This game wil be played behind the stadium at 2:00 p.m. Post College comes from one of America's Lacrosse Centers. It is expected to be a good match for the Blue and White.

Captain John Murphy Suffers Heart Attack

Captain John T. Murphy, head of the Villanova Security Force suffered "a slight heart attack" Saturday.

He was stricken at home while watching the Villanova-St. John's game on television. He was taken to Memorial Hospital in the Roxborough section of Philadelphia where he is reported to be responding well to treatment.

The captain missed several months of work last spring when he was stricken with a similar attack.

Baseball Team Loaded With Talent; 'Cats Ready For Successful Season

By Joe Maffongelli

"Get it over the plate" has become a familiar cry in the area of the VU ield House and Stadium. The Wildcat baseball team has no put in a solid three weeks of practice in preparation for the 100th campaign in the school's history. In hope of celebrating this centennial appropriately coach Mahan, who is himself embarking on his sixteenth stint at the helm, is looking forward to a good season.

Season Opens

The diamond men will open their 19 game slate with Bowdoin on March 26. This promises to be the acid test as any first appearance usually is, and it will give the team a fair picture of just where they stand and how far they have to go.

Although inclment weather has been a retarding factor, the fine 'Cat coach has seen enough of his club to be pretty sure of its strengths and weaknesses.

One major disappointment to date has been the hampered performance of George Pond. It sees as though the big catcher has not yet been able to shake the effects of the broken arm which he suffered last summer. Mahan is still looking forward to having Pond come around; and he is rather optimistic that he will do just that. In the meantime Andy Camilio is still around to do the sparkling job which has characterized his play in the past. He has always been adept at handling the trickier pitches.

Outfield Sparkles

The second base position has been tossed into a scramble due to the injury suffered by Aartie Mahan, Jr. His .300 bat will be missed for at least the first few games. Paul Peccorara and Johnnie Stevens are leading the pack of keystone candidates at the present, but Tom Marzias, a valuable utility man, is trailing close behind the pair.

At first base Bill Bergold seems to stick out performance wise. Being big and agile, he has looked extremely well in the four intra-squad games in which the club has engaged so far. Dion Vonderleth enjoys the same status at shortstop where his glove ability is a factor of such importance.

In Bob Hall coach Mahan has a valuable cooler for the "hot corner," but Art feels that the boy might perhaps be more useful on the mound.

The outfield problem of overabundance has been narrowed down. It seems as though John Rheisen, Sam Greenwood, and Tommy Edwards hold the inside track at the present. Their hitting and fielding have been very satisfactory to Mahan's eyes. Paul Pucalik has not hit up to par as of yet, but the coach is very high on the boy and believes that his bat will find the range sooner or later, and the sooner the better for the 'Cats.

Jack Emery and Mike Zaia are capable hitters but their fielding has left something to be desired. If they do not see steady action in the garden for a while they will definitely be called on for pinch hitting chores.

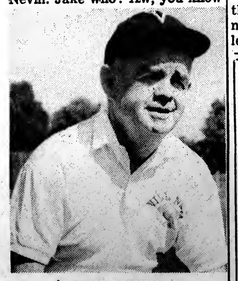
Mound Philosophy



Mahan's philosophy calls for a strong outfield to back up the pitching. He seems to have both. The starting hurlers appear to be Vic Majuski, Jack Grasing, and Gene Rampone. The team stil waits for the coming around of Tony Candelmo; but Bob Kramer, Ed Parella, and Tom Sofield have been impressive and could alter the mound situation on their own.

Watchdog Of The 'Cats

By John DiGennaro

A marvelous thing an athlete. If cared for he has the precision of a Swiss watch, and the grace and power of a diesel. Like a piano, with constant check-ups and tuning, he plays better. Above all he is an intricate part of the team machine, and must be properly oiled lest the machine break down. Fortunately, the athletes at Villanova, can be compared to an engine full of well-lubricated Swiss watches.

They owe all this to a condensed package of multi-purpose conditioner called Jake Nevin. Jake who? Aw, you know — the gnome — the fellow with the twinkling eyes, the wide-part collegiate haircut, the big smile, and the even bigger cigar.

JAKE NEVIN

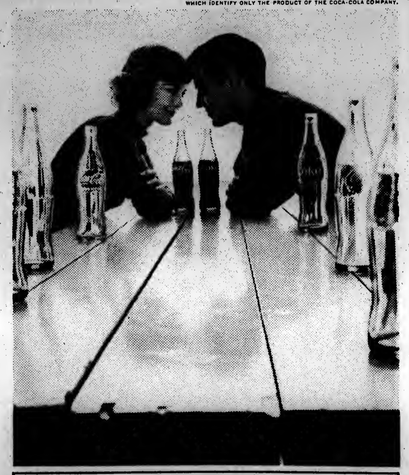
I'm sure you have all seen him, whethr it was popping out from behind a tackle's leg, straightening his tie in Jim Washington's belt buckle, or just sipping a coffee over at the Pie Shop. Unfortunately, however, aside from an esoteric minority, not many of us realize his true value.

I think they had him in mind when they coined the phrase, "good things come in small packages." All those connected with Villanova sports start describing him as "great" and continue on past " the greatest."



Every time a "Wildcat" suits up, another debt is owed to the man who makes it possible. To the sworn combattant of the athlete's plague, disabling injury. The players and coaches have offered their "Thank you's" often, but it is about time we all paid just tribute to the "unsung hero," to the man behind the men who have made Villanova famous as an inter-collegiate powerhouse.

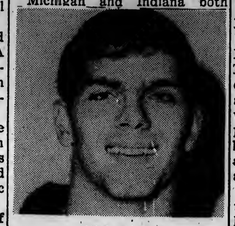
VU's Girdler To Be One Man Team At NCAA Swimming Championships

By Jerry Bruderlo

Senior Rick Girdler will lead the Villanova delegation in the NCAA Swimming and Divnig Championship this weekend at Ames, Iowa. Actually, he can't help leading them because he'll be the only one there.



The 'Cat mermen, who finished eighth in last year's NCAA meet, are literall sending a one-man team. Girdler is entered in the 50, 100 and 200 yard freestyle events.

The best the 'Cats have done in the NCAA meet was a seventh place finish two year ago. This year's competition is well spread out and loaded with Olympic medalists.

Yale is certainly the clas of the East, and they are the favorites for top honors. The Bulldogs are led by freestyler Steve Clark, who was a triple medal winner in Tokyo. He could win two or three events himself, (plus a relay), which would put Yale already ahead of half of the competing schools.

Blond Don Schollander, who won four gold medals in Tokyo is only a freshman and will not compete, but the Elis have top-flight personnel in almost every event and will be tough to beat.

Michigan and Indiana both

have strong teams and can't be counted out. The Wolverines, especially would like the championship trophy. At Ann Arbor it's tough to tell which sport they emphasize most, and the swimmers dont want to be left out after the Rose Bowl triumph Michigan, who won the Big Ten swimming title, is led by former Monsignor Bonner star Carl Robie. Robie, who lives in nearby Drexel Hill, was a silver medalist in Tokyo, and he is the man to beat in the butterfly.

Indiana, who finished behind Michigan in the Big Ten, is led by another Tokyo butterfly ace, Fred Schmidt. This year's Hoosier squad however, is not quite up to the Indiana teams of a few years ago, before they were slapped with an NCAA probation. The ban has since been lifted but it hurt recruiting and the Hoosiers are not as deep as they would like to be.

Southern California is again the best that the West Coast has to offer. The Trojans are mostly blond, mostly tan and mostly talented, and rate as darkhorse contenders.

The big meet for future Villanova swim hopes will be the National A.A.U. meet April 3 at Yale where the Elis' Schollander will face Villanova's record-breaking Mike Fitzmaurice.

Hot Shooting Pistol Team Scores Meet Bullseyes

By Jim Proud

The Villanova pistol team in two meets sponsored by the National Rifle Association was able to come away with two victories. In meets held on February 28 and March 7 the 'Cats defeated second place finisher Valley Forge by substantial margins.

In the February 28 shooting Villanova won the two award positions by sizeable point spreads. Winning the trophy place by 66 points over the 'Cats second team they finished well ahead of the third place Valley Forgers'.

Villanova top shooters were: James Bushong, Ted Laven, and Gary Leidecker. Bushong was the top shooter of the meet and finished with a total point score of 288. His finest shooting was in the Timed event in which he shot a near perfect score of 99. His second best effort came in the Rapid Fire in which he shot a 97.

Individual

In the individual events Villanova shooters took the top three places. Ted Laven took the first place trophy position with a score of 827. In second place was Jim Bushong who was a close second with 825 points and third place went to Richard Hunter with a fine total of 812.

The ROTC competition was won by Martin Brennan of Villanova with 812 points which completed the 'Cats sweep of the meet.

In the meet held on March 7 the 'Cats also took a complete sweep of the events. Again led by Bushong and Laven, Villanova swept aside Valley Forge for the second time in as many meets.

In the individual events, Villanova again took the top three positions. This time, however, the first place was captured by Jim Bushong and his teammate Ted Laven finished a close second.

Girls

In this meet the NRA conducted a meet for female entrees. In this competition Miss Susan James won the first place medal with a score of 20.

In winning the two meets the Pistol Team won two trophies which they presented to Father President on Monday the 15th.

In a meet at Dickinson College the team rolled to its third straight victory. In the meet, held on the 19th the 'Cats won by the margain of 1273 to 1220.

Led by top shooter Joe Smith the Villanova shooters won the shoulder to shoulder meet in fine style. Smith, who shot a total of 272, missed the national record of 280 for an individual shoooter.

St. John's Nip 'Cats In NIT Finals; Finish Campaign With 23-5 Record

point performance. Playing his usual flawless floor game, the deadeye guard connected on 11 of 20 attempts from the floor.

Close behind Melchionni in the scoring parade was Bill "weak link" Soens. Tagged by the Violets as the weak sister of the 'Cats starting five, Soens poured in 23 points while grabbing off 13 rebounds. The hustling soph shot 10 for 13 to bring his two game shooting total to 17 for 22.

Co-captain Jim Washington had an off night offensively with a 5 for 17, 11 point showing but the leaping 'Cat hauled down 19 rebounds and bottled up the NYU big men with his savage defensive play. The Violets' highly-touted Ray Bennett was entirely unable to cope with Washington under the boards and fouled out with over 11 minutes left.

St. John's hopped-up Redmen gave Joe Lapchich a going away present, edging Villanova 55-51 for their fourth NIT Championship, a tourney record. The Redmen started out as if they were going to blow the 'Cats out of the Garden, jumping off to a quick 10 point lead. Villanova was only able to narow the gap by 2 as St. John's took a 36-28 lead to the locker room at the intermission.

The second half was a different story as Kraft's scrappers twice cut the Johnnies advantage to a field goal. With 2 minutes remaining the count was 53-51 and the 'Cats had three chances to even the score, but the Redmen held on to take the tilt and the tourney.

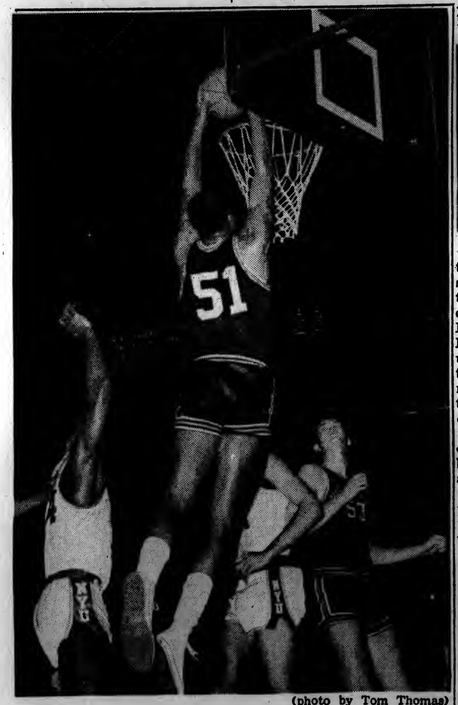
Playing his last game in Blue and White togs, Jim Washington turned in the type of performance that his typified his entire career. Jumping Jimmy notched 18 markers on 6 for 9 markmanship and hauled down 17 rebounds. Washington also turned in a great defensive effort, clearly outshining soph star Sonny Dove. It will be a long time before the 'Cats come up with another Jim Washington.

Following Washington in scoring was George Leftwich, flashing signs of his sophomore form en route to a 16 point output. A major factor in the 'Cats defeat was the absence of scoring leader Bill Melchionni. Saddled with a virus, the game guard just couldn't keep up with the pace, playing only 8 minutes.

Freindly Foolishness

It's All Over

By Steve Freind



It's all over for another year. Things are different around Villanova now. The cheering has suddenly stopped, the frenzy is over, Kraft's 'Cats are gone. Some of the 'Cats will never return. For the incomparable Jim Washington, it's off to a greater career in the NBA. It won't seem the same next year without Wash leaping into the air to grab a rebound or slam the ball through the nets. A lot of time will pass on the Main Line before another Jim Washington comes along.

When you think about it, the 'Cats 23-5 record was really amazing. Not many people gave Villanova a chance to match last year's 24-4 log. With Wally Jones leading the show, that team was considered the finest in the 'Cats court history. Jones was gone this year along with Richie Moore and storm warnings were up along the Main Line.

When Kraft's boys dropped two straight in the Quaker City title the handwriting seemed to be on the wall. This wasn't the year for Villanova. The 'Cats were in trouble.

The reason for the 'Cats trouble was obvious. Wally Jones was gone. The loss of Moore was keenly felt, but this paled beside the absence of the backcourt wizard from Overbrook. The 'Cats were without a leader. There was no one to direct the offense, to slow the team down when things got sloppy. The Jones ability to inspire his teammates and bestow poise, that take-charge greatness, was missing. The magic was gone.

How then did the 'Cats stun the experts and race to a great season and a final berth in the top ten The answer is quite simple: Jack Kraft. This year the 'Cat coach has pulled off a classic master-piece of coaching. It was the defensive genius of Kraft that carried the team to unforeseen heights. At no time this year did the 'Cats display a really consistent offense. Every time they took a lead, they became sloppy and the game tightened up again. Kraft was criticized for ignoring offense, but credentials like his cannot be argued with.

Jumping Jim Washington goes over two NYU defenders to register two points. Washington was great throughout entire tourney as 'Cats garnered second place.

Jack Kraft

Countless times during the past campaign the only thing that carried the 'Cats through was the Kraft octopus zone. And when the year was over, the 'Cat coach had hiked his record to fantatic 87-26 mark and four post-season tourneys in as many years. Strack, von Breda Kolff, Ramsay, Wooden — take them. From this corner Kraft gets the nod as the nation's finest. Bleak things are predicted for next year's 'Cats. Don't believe it. Look what happened this year. The magic was gone, but the witch-Kraft remained. It'll be around for a long time.

Villanova's Best

By Rusty Miller

The buzzer sounded and the Redmen reveled in sweet revenge. The oldest Redman of them all accepted his going-away present. From the other side of the court as the immediate disappointment wore off, thoughts turned to other things (besides Andy Murphy's). This was the final appearance for some of the Cats. Faces would be missed in the locker-room, talents found hard to replace on the court.

It was the last time the Honey Bear would psyche up the team for a contest on an alien court. It was the last time Eric would be hustling for the 'Cats. The game was also the finale for one of the greatest natural athletes ever to come out of Villanova.

Jim Washington, All Tournament selection, All Big Five, honorable mention All American, had come through with an outstanding tournament performance. He had a three game total of 55 rebounds and 46 points—raising some question as to just who should have been named MVP.

Jim Washington

Of the loss, Wash explained, "we just didn't get off to a quick start and they did. When we switched to our man-to-man defense, that helped," he commented. "I like the man-to-man better. I feel better when I'm responsible for one man. I knew Dove played out of the low post, so every time he'd drive on me and turn around, I knew just what he was going to do."

For three years the Villanova fans have delighted in the "silky smoothness" and agility of this athlete who had played only one year of high school ball. Now his college career was at an end—but a new phase of his basketball career is about to begin.

A trip to the pros is a sure bet for Wash. He has been approached by most of the pro clubs. Has he had any serious talks with any of them yet? No. Where would he like to play? That goes without saying. Unfortunately though, the 76ers abound in big men. With names like Chamberlin, Kerr and Walker ahead of him the 76ers might feel confident enough in their height to go for a guard on the first round. On the other hand, Wilt could retire at any time and an aging Kerr "can't play til he's 40," said Wash.

Four Amendment Proposals Slated For SGA Tonight

By Walt Baginsky

Eight measures are slated to be discussed and voted upon at the Student Congress meeting this evening — four concern amendments to the SGA Constitution while the others involve university matters.

The first of the four proposed amendments was introduced by Tom Furst and Bob Dean calling for the constitution to be amended to read as follows: each of the executive vice-presidents shall, by virtue of his office, be entitled to a full vote in the Student Congress.

The second, proposed by the same individuals, held that the constitution be amended as follows: the SGA President may appoint from the student body an Executive Secretary who shall serve as an administrative assistant to the President and shall be entitled to a half vote on the Student Congress.

Third Bill

The third bill proposed by Dave Moore and Frank Eck asked that the word "men" be changed to "people" in Article VI, Section 3A, Paragraphs 1, 2, 3, and 4. This would allow girls to run as student representatives.

The final amendment was introduced by John Smock, Jack Ryan, and Bob Dean asking that the president of the Blue Key Service Society shall, by virtue of his office, be entitled to a single full vote on the Student Congress.

The first of the four bills concerning University matters was proposed by Jeff DeLuca and called for the SGA to request the Administration to extend the hours at the Falvey Memorial Library.

The second, also introduced by DeLuca, requested that it be the responsibility of the Academic Affairs committee

Academy Of Sciences To Meet At University On April 2-3

Villanova University will serve as host to nearly 200 educators, scientists and public health officials for the Forty-First Annual meeting of the Pennsylvania Academy of Science on Friday, and Saturday, April 2 and 3.

Mendel, Dougherty

Sessions and meetings will be held in Mendel Hall and Dougherty Hall. Rev. J. Bernard Hubbert, OSA, Assistant to the Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences at Villanovc, is local Chairman.

It marks the first time in ten years that the Pennsylvania Scientists have met in the Philadelphia area. The 1955 parley was held at the Philadelphia Academy of Natural Sciences.

Registration for the Villanova meeting will begin at 8:30 Friday morning in Mendel Center. Representatives of more than 20 Pennsylvania Colleges and members of the United States Public Health Service will participate in the program itself.

Seventy-three talks or scientific papers will be delivered on various sciences such as physics, biology, physiology, geography and chemistry during the two day meeting. Presentations will vary from ten to forty-five minutes in length. Exhibits and films will be part of the two-day session.

Schools Participating

Among the Pennsylvania institutions participating in the program are: Lafayette, Penn State, Duquesne, Susquehanna, Bucknell, Franklin & Marshall, Shippensburg, Eastern Baptist College, Dickinson, LaSalle Immaculata College, University of Pittsburgh, University of Pennsylvania, West Chester and the University of Scranton.

A reception for members of the Academy and Friends will be held in Dougherty Hall at 6:30 p.m. The annual banquet will follow. Among the guests will be the Very. John. A. Klekotka, OSA, Villanova's President, who holds the Master of Science Degree in Physics.

Dr. Sayre To Speak At Forum; Topic 'Four Against Everest'

Woodrow Wilson Sayre, author, lecturer, and philosopher, will be the second guest speaker of the Villanova Forum in Vasey Hall at 8 p.m. on Wednesday, April 7. The title of Dr. Sayre's talk will be "Four Against Everest."

Dr. Sayre until recently was a philosophy teacher at Tufts University and figured prominenty in the publish-or-perish scandal. His contract was not renewed when he failed to "publish a sufficent body of scholarly work." Dr. Sayre believes that the action "was a downgrading of the teaching profession" and that "too much emphasis is placed on publication."

Dr. Sayre was the leader of the 1962 climb up the North Face of Mount Everest and was accompanied by three others — a Swiss school teacher, a lawyer, and a geology student. The attempt was planned without oxygen, guides, or porters, with the barest minimum of money, food, and equipment.

The expedition had to dash through Tibet to reach the North Face, risked capture, imprisonment, and even execution by the Chinese Communists who patrol the Tibet-Nepal border. Without medical aid, the slightest accident or misjudgment could have brought immediate blocks. Before the end of the journey, there was nothing left to eat and the expedition faced starvation.

They never reached the summit, but they didn't really fail. "Men climb mountains because they are not satisfied simply to exist, they want to live-climbing the heights is one way."

History Department Features Lecturer Dr. Donn C. Riley

The History Department of Villanova will hold the second lecture of its annual Series, on Wednesday March 31, at 8 p.m. in 110 Bartley Hall.

The speaker, Dr. Donn C. Riley, will discuss, "The Development of Sectionalism and the Problems of the Federalist Era." Dr. Riley received his B.A., M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from the University of St. Louis and was a member of the Villanova faculty in the summer of 1960.

Rev. Philip F. Barrett OSA, dean of the College of Commerce and Finance, will serve as moderator for the lecture tonight.

Thomas Mentzer, professor of history and moderator of the club, was the first speaker in the History Department Lecture Series. The History Club, in a search for historical knowledge, made a field trip to Gettysburg, Thursday March 25.

Palmieri Letter Discovered By Researcher Rev. J. Papin

By Tom Bruderle

A valuable letter written 50 years ago next month by Rev. Aurelius Palmieri, OSA, an internationally recognized scholar in oriental studies, and addressed to Villanova, was found recently and donated to the Falvey Memorial Library.

Rev. Joseph Papin, OSA who found the letter, said that he discovered it protruding from the cover of a book as he was doing research. Not only is the letter valued for its antiquity but also because it is one of the few letters written by Dr. Palmieri in English, who had command of nine languages.

Dated April 13, 1915, the letter was written on stationery of the Harvard Theological Library in Cambridge, Massachusetts. Although the addressee was not immediately known, Dr. Papin theorized that it was written to a scholar on campus.

After consulting with Rev. Henry Roland, OSA, archivist of the St. Thomas of Villanova Monastery on campus, Dr. Papin concluded that the letter was addressed to either Rev. Thomas Middleton, OSA, or Rev. Joseph Locke, OSA, both of whom were fluent in Italian and familiar with Oriental Theology

Bessarione Editor

Fr. Palimieri died on October 18, 1926 in Rome. He was Director of the Institute of Oriental Studies and his principle works include Polemics of Islam, Dogmatic Orthodox Theology, and Dositeus: Patriarch of Jerusalem. He also served as editor of the review Bessarione, which dealt with Oriental studies.

Contribution

The third motion proposed that the president of the SGA should appoint a committee in the spring of each year to select the university — recognized organization that has contributed the most to Villanova in the community; however, no award would be made if the committee felt there is no justification.

The final bill, introduced by Jim Whalen and John Casey, proposed that Gamma Phi, an honor fraternity of the C&F school, be seated on the Student Congress with half-vote privileges.

Plans Are Discussed For Honor Society

A student-faculty preliminary committee has been formed to initiate the establishment of Sigma Theta Tau at Villanova University. This is the only National Honor Society of Nursing in the United States. It is professional rather than social in nature, and its purposes and functions may be compared to other honor societies. It is a society which rewards distinguished effort and also increases spirit in the field of nursing.

The purposes of this society are: to foster high professional standards, to encourage creative work, to promote the maximum development of the individual. And to promote an interest in the advancement of nursing.

Dinner Dance, Tours Planned By Ryan, O'Hara Of Blue Key

lic relations arm of the Admisions Office, the Blue Key has organized the day around the theme of outlining postive reasons why Villanova is the school to attend.

Hopefully, the various special events presented will convince many hitherto unconvinced applicants to take their four years of undergraduate study on the Main Line.

Chairman of the event, Jack Ryan, vice-president of the Blue Key, announced yesterday that Father President will speak to the applicants, as will Mr. Edward V. Murray, assistant professor of Economics at Villanova.

Other events in the program include tours, films, lunch and conference with faculty members.

Scheduled for April 10, Candidates' Day will postdate the annual Dinner Dance by one week.

This year, Social Chairman Denis O'Hara has engaged the Peacock Inn and the Fat City Four, to provide, respectively, an exquisite surrounding and the musical magic necessary to make the evening a success.

President John Smock reminds all interested individuals that application forms for admission to the Blue Key are available now in the Student Council office. The first meeting for all those interested (male and female) will be at 4:30 in 110 Bartley Hall on April 2.

Time For An Evaluation

Midst the headlines and horror emitting from Selma last week, another occurrence was taking place which is as important on the international level as the struggle for equal rights is on the national level.

This week Maxwell Taylor, U.S. ambassador to South Vietnam, arrived in Washington for what have been typically and safely termed as "consultations." Before leaving Saigon last week General Taylor said that there was no need for alarm because of his departure, reassuring those who were fearful of an unknown upheaval within the present coalition government.

Other than to serve as a means to the end of possible negotiations in Vietnam, the American and South Vietnamese air raids have as their purpose to discourage North Vietnam, and ostensibly China, from sending men and materiel into the South. The raids have entered their ninth week and with the General's arrival, the time has evidently come for some high level evaluation of their effects.

While they may not have significantly halted the flow from North to South they have apparantly placed a moderate strain on Ho-Chi-minh which, in turn, is having repercussions in Red China.

During the first few weeks of the raids, the Chinese were content to issue vehement criticism of the "imperialist" Americans and their "lackeys" in Saigon for going north of the 17th parallel, yet promising only vague threats in return.

Of late, however, the Chinese comments, as well as those originating in Moscow, have assumed a more militant stance and both have promised to send "volunteers" if necessary.

Thus a change has subtlely come about. The raids have apparantly so wounded North Vietnam and possibly the entire war effort, that Ho's regime cannot maintain it's role as the aggressor without stepped up assistance from China and elsewhere.

North Vietnam has been hurt and, although the seriousness cannot be adequately measured, China's recent statements seems to provide a clue. By recalling for the U.S. the supposedly dreaded "volunteers" used in Korea, Peking hopes to dissuade future American-South Vietnamese air strikes.

The question now is whether China is bluffing or not. The air strikes may not have slowed the flow of guerillas and materiel into the South, but they have apparantly created some consternation in the North and uneasiness even farther north.

The situation in South Vietnam now requires the utmost of care, discretion and awareness — as well as the continuation of air strikes when and where necessary.

Letters To The Editor

To the Editor,

Mr. Radowich in his column last week said that the Viet Cong have more popular support than the U.S. does. I'm sure the Viet Cong terrorist tactics such as machine-gunning innocent people on a bus has generated loads of popular support.

He also calls the policy of the U.S. immoral and brands the U.S. as aggressors just like the Communists. Is he throwing the truth out the window? What are his ideas of rights and wrong like if he sees both as being equally evil? In practice the foreign policy of the U.S. is subject to abuse but it certainly is not intrinsically evil like that of the Communists as Mr. Radowich would have us believe. Equating us with the Communists is ridiculous.

Also we are not trespassers as Mr. Radowich states. Only the Communits are. We were asked by the South Vietnamese to help them stop the Communist aggression.

He also says that the Vietnamese do not care enough to fight to save their country and that therefore we should forget about them. Yet the Vietnamese have 200,000 ground troops, an air force, and a PT boat navy all involved in the war to save their country.

Mr. Radowich also implies that we should leave, and then the South Vietnamese will be able to decide for themselves whether or not to go Communist. Who is he kidding?

Mr. Radowich implies that the U.S. can't win a war in Southeast Asia. However, we and the British drove the Japanese out of there during World War II. We can win again in Southeast Asia. It just depends on how much we want to win.

In his article Mr. Radowich ignores the real question. It is not should we have gotten involved. It is this: Should we let the Communists take over another country?

If we let them take South Vietnam then we will have merely postponed the war. They, with more people and more resources now under their domination, will be hungry for more and more and, knowing that we had backed down to their bluff before, they will be strengthened in their belief that they can get away with it again. And thus the chance of global war eventually will become greater with each country the Communists take over just as it was with Hitler, Japan, and Italy before World War II.

However, if we decide to keep our promise to South Vietnam, we will have to fight a war because the Communists have become very well entrenched while the Administration was stalling during the campaign. The chance of eventual nuclear war will be lessened because we have called the Communists' bluff and have decided to put up a fight as Churchill said should have been done to Nazi Germany. The Communists will then know that we intend to fight to protect our freedom and that of other countries, and they will think twice before attacking more free countries.

If we don't stop them in Vietnam, where are we going to stop them? Sooner or later we are going to have to stop them by the only thing that the Communists understand — military force—and the sooner we do it the easier and less risky it will be.

I would like to bring to the attention of your reading public, the activities of some "unsung" heroes on our campus. They have engaged themselves in projects and works in which students all over our nation are also involved.

We have more than twenty men and women now serving in the Peace Corps. Some graduates are members or will be members of the Extension Volunteers. Twelve students, supported by many students on campus who pledged an hour of their summer's wage, went to work in Mexico last summer on projects. They also were sponsored by large amounts of money from the Student Government and the Knights of Columbus on campus. More students intend to work in Mexico and Peru this summer.

NFCCS members on our campus have been working very hard each week with the orphans at St. John's. These members also travel on work camp projects each Saturday helping to fix up homes for large low income families in Philadelphia. Some members work weekly with the Puerto Rican people in Philadelphia at Casa del Carmen.

The K. of C. Council on campus, besides supporting the summer projects, has also involved itself in many charitable projects. The fraternities and sorority, as well as the classes on campus have done likewise.

The Villanova chapter of the C.C.D. goes out once a week to teach in institutions, and also assists in many parish programs for public school students.

A large group of about fifty students goes once a week to Philadelphia, to help solve the drop out problem by giving remedial reading courses and tutoring in various subjects.

All of the students engaged in this project are to be saluted They know the meaning of "giving," "love," and "committment." They also know that learning some things cannot be achieved solely by reading the written word or hearing a lecture but by witnessing the reality.

College students no longer have to prove their worth to society. The community surrounding the campus needs the students. Thank God we are responding, but I think our response should echo in its fullness.

To the Editor,

From my limited experiences here at Villanova, I seriously challenge the integrity of some of the students. I was naive enough to think that money in my locked room was safe. The first time thirty dollars was taken from my closet and the second time my roommate had a few dollars in change taken from the room when he stepped out for a few minutes. It certainly doesn't take a locksmith to break into some of the rooms, but it's not the quality of the locks I challenge.

You shouldn't have to bolt your door every time you step into the hall, but that's what the situation is coming to. Anything that isn't tied to your person is potential missing property, and you begin to wonder just who you can trust. I hope that something happens to change my opinion before I leave here.

To the Editor,

Concerning your article on the hapless P&W, allow me to be the first (and perhaps the only) person to come to its aid.

Firstly, concerning the drafty and bumpy conditions of travel, there should really be no complaint on the part of the average Villanova student. I cannot see where the typical student is so accustomed to luxury that the cars on the P&W are so unhabitable. Living in dormitories is no pleasure, as many will attest (this is no reflection on the people in the dormitories as neighbors — they are all excellent). Complaining about the facilities on the P&W seems to be something to do when someone feels like complaining.

With regard to the admittedly inconsistent schedule, consider the situation that would exist if the P&W did not. The majority of the students who regularly commute on the P&W would be forced to ride the Pennsylvania Railroad trains, which may be comfortable, but are at the same time costly. Which is more important — sitting in a comfortable seat for a few minutes or saving the precious metal so near and dear to our pocket books? Neil Sheehan

By Tom Gillespie

Recent developments have aroused considerable controversy over United States participation in the South Vietnamese crisis. One author suggests that the United States agree to negotiate a settlement of that war and pull out without too much loss of face. Such a contention is unwarranted for several reasons.

First, we are not confronted with a hopeless situation in South Vietnam. Indeed, that situation is so fluid, defeat and victory follow one another in quick succession and such a condition advises against quick and easy generalizations.

Negotiated?

Second, a negotiated settlement of the South Vietnamese trouble at this time is neither possible nor desirable. Secretary of State Dean Rusk has pointed out that . . . "there is no point in negotiating if there is no one to negotiate with . . ." By their insistent demands that the United States make a complete withdrawal from Southeast Asia, the Red Chinese and North Vietnamese have eliminated any chance for U.S. participation in a peace conference.

Third, it has been asserted that the U.S. should pull out of Southeast Asia in order to save the "rapprochement" with the Soviet Union and deal with the "real danger" of a nuclear-armed Red China. Obviously, it must be admitted that a Red China equipped with nuclear weapons is a threat to world security. But withdrawal from Vietnam as a means of dealing with that threat is an obvious absurdity.

Real Split

Fourth, the split between Moscow and Peking is a real one although it may not be permanent. However, the present condition of Sino-Soviet relations is such that Moscow will not come to the aid of the Red Chinese in their "War of Liberation." Indeed, it can be reliably reported that Soviet Premier Alexei Kosygin was outraged by the North Vietnamese attack on the American installation at Pleiku.

Further, the United States and the Soviet Union have agreed there will be no major confrontation between the superpowers in Southeast Asia. Thus, Washington has a virtually free hand in that area—an opportunity no diplomat can sensibly overlook (and negotiation now would be an oversight).

Stability

Fifth, the internal stability of the South Vietnamese government has been strengthened by new reforms and the inclusion within the government of interest groups previously discriminated against. Moreover, the presence of five-thousand U.S. Marines has given encouragement to the people that the war can be won. The land and sea supply routes of the Viet Cong are gradually being sealed off, and, as an added inducement, North Vietnamese industrial centers and ammunition supply depots are being destroyed.

While one could not say that victory is in sight for South Vietnam, it can now be said that victory is at least possible. Moreover, the chances for an acceptable and enforceable settlement through negotiation have increased. But negotiation at this time, under the present conditions, is neither desirable nor possible.

We can't wait to see the reaction to the "Letkiss" craze sweeping Europe. The new dance is likened to the Bunny Hop only instead of hop, hop, hop its kiss, kiss, kiss. And, your partner changes once every three kisses. Should be a blast at mixer.

"The Class of '65" is the new programming theme of WRCV radio as they further demonstrate lack of ability to keep its finger on the pulse of the local music taste. Now it's album music they'll feature. Lotsa luck, WJMJ has been doing that for years and they're only one step above WRCV on the rating chart. (Both are rated just under the local police radio system.)

Bill Wright, Sr.'s "This Boy I Call Son" has sold enough copies locally to become a regional Breakout in Billboard. Bill has also been selected to narrate a 30-minute film for the city describing the operations of the District Attorney's office.

Jim Stagg, formerly at WIBG and now at KYW/Cleveland has quit that station.

M.S.M.E., Wayne State Univ.

At Ford Motor Company, perspective results from the necessary training, background and further education a college graduate needs to obtain the advancement he wants. Perspective, in a painting, is the illusion of depth. With us there's no illusion.

Perspective at our Company often starts with the two-year College Graduate Program. While in the Program, a graduate progresses through a series of developmental moves. He becomes familiar with our business. Takes on ever-increasing amounts of responsibility. And accelerates according to his own application and ability. We want him to succeed. Because the greater his success, the greater ours will be. One recent graduate, Carl Marcucci, typifies this success story.

Since joining us in 1960, Carl has gained wide experience in our Quality Control Office. For example: He put together a coordinated program to test a new engine . . . served as a liaison between one of our foundries and our manufacturing plants . . . and represented us with vendors who supply our manufacturing plants. In addition, through our Employe Continuing Education Plan, Carl furthered his academic accomplishments by earning his Master's Degree. Carl presently is taking a seminar course to qualify as a registered professional engineer. This added knowledge and the many work situations he encountered have greatly enlarged Carl's perspective. Make him better able to reach the right decisions in his current job—Section Supervisor of a Quality Control Department with 52 people under him.

This is not an isolated case. Many college graduates have grown just as rapidly. If you want a future as big as you'd like it to be, see our representative when he visits your campus.

An' All That Jazz!

By Barry Bornstein

A man for all seasons . . . The recent Verve album entitled The Oscar Peterson Trio Plus One is a further indication that often in the creative fields, the spotlight fails to fall on those who really merit its illumination, by virtue of their own brilliance.

The "Plus One" of this album is Clark "Mumbles" Terry. Clark, better known lately for his solo trumpet stints on NBC's Johnny Carson show, is a multi-talented musician who never seems to get the plugs and praise that he deserves.

The feature track on the album is a tune called Mumbles, to which Terry renders a vocal technique similar to the old-type scat-singing popularized by Louis Armstrong, a parody of jazz musicians. It's a scale-tipper and good creative Terry however for the best Terry, give an ear to either the Lambert Hendricks & Ross at Newport 63' or Joe Williams at Newport albums.

In these albums Clark, complemented by the great Coleman Hawkins on sax, plus the lead vocals, blows probably the most exciting and direct trumpet around. It's a shame he doesn't get a chance to take more bows, for kudos or not, Clark Terry is a musicians' musician. By the way, he served as a judge for the '65 Villanova Jazz Festival.

Winning the Hot Horn Award for the week that this has been is a noble feat. One had such competition as the Russian Professor from LaSalle who finally gave America credit for inventing something-rock n'roll-and in a "jealous" fit attempted to invent the first transistorized skull-cap, on top of an unwilling lady's head (word had it that his lawyer was going to base his plea on the fact that the woman was listening to WIBG-excellent grounds for acquital).

Also in this week's competition was Governor Pat Brown of California who invented that new dance craze called "The California Drag." It's a simple little step; all you need are 800 students lying on the floor, some free speech music, and 400 police to drag them off. It's a swinger.

Also right up there in the balloting was that new duo from Brotherly Love, Mississippi, the Neshoba Sheriff Sisters, who sang their new two-sided hit: "Jailhouse Rock" and "Down by The Old Mill Stream, Under the Dam." This follows up their last hit "FBI," Find 'em, Bind 'em, Inter them.

But in the final computing a long-shot came through. And so to the administration of Notre Dame University, who blew the sourest note by filling suit against producers of the new film, John Goldfarb, Won't You Please Come Home, goes the Hot Horn Award. The premise of this action is that the flick is detrimental to the name and image of Notre Dame. From what we can gather, the plot of the film revolves around an Arabian Shah whose son is rejected admittance to Notre Dame and who decides to field a football team that will soundly defeat Notre Dame.

To further carry out this task, the Shah employs a blackmailed Jew to recruit and coach professionals for the team. Eventually the Notre Dame team while sojourning in a harem, is exposed as an aggregation of morons and liquor — lovers. Thus, for Notre Dame's precise blowing of the tune, "Those apples you're throwing don't fall far from our tree," the award goes to Notre Dame.

Villanova Crew Club Now A Reality

By Paul McGrail

A damp morning breeze swells a small rise in the murky water while to the south pre-dawn commuters rabble into a foggy Philadelphia. Overhead, a drowsy sea gull is seen flying westward in hopes of an early meal. The sun has not yet risen from behind drab clouds overhanging East Falls when, without warning, a slim wooden scull appears rounding the river's bend. As a somber voice barks commands, eight figures clad in sweat suits dip, heave, and return oars to a steady, co-ordinate rhythm. Before long, beads of sweat form on their foreheads only to be blown away by the constant river gust. Bridge after bridge passes overhead until finally the boat is turned and headed back towards the Penn A.C. boathouse. After docking and returning the craft to the shelter, the exhausted rowers shower and dress. All have 8:30 classes.

These eight scullers and their coxswain constitute the core of the recently conceived Villanova Crew Club. Trained and coached by John R. Galloway and his assistant, John T. Lyons, the Club will this year represent the Blue and White in several local and eastern regettae. Its schedule wil be climaxed on May 8 when it vies against the best of American crews in the Dad Vale Regatta. Leading up to this competition will be races with U of P Light-Weight (April 3), St. Joseph and Drexel (April 10), various New York teams at New York (April 17 and 24), and the Phila. Championship Regatta (May 1).

The recently established Villanova crew team goes through an early morning workout on the Schuylkill River.

Beginning

The idea of a Villanova crew became reality through the perseverance of Clem Kopf and Greg Liscio. The two, both graduates of nearby Monsignor Bonner High School, realized the wealth of rowing potential walking about on the campus. They soon acquired permission from the Admnistration to organize such an activity. The pair then recruited interested students who were willing to accept the strenuous morning and weekend practises. They also drafted a Constitution written along the lines of that of Georgetown University Crew team.

Kopf and Liscio were then faced with their two most difficult obstacles: to obtain a place from which to row and to secure a first-class coach. In both endeavors the Club was more than successful. They were told that if each Club member would join Penn Athletic Club, the boathouse and its facilities would be available to them.

As for procuring a mentor, aspirations of the group were greatly lifed when Jack Galloway, former headsman at crew-minded Georgetown agreed to supervise the young organization. Each morning Jack can be seen in a motor launch pacing and timing the first year "eight." The "eight" is composed of Clem Kopf, Greg Liscio, Lou Sonziongi, Bob Galli, Mike Shields, Kelvin O'Malley, Chuck Tomphins, Drew McKinley, and coxswain John Federnchek. All are resident or day-hop freshmen. The Club itself is moderated by the Rev. J. Haffron.

Recognition Hopes

It is hoped that initial sucess this year will mean varsity status as a school-supported athletic organization. This season the group, similar to the Soccer and Rugby Clubs is without formal recognition by the Athletic Department. To achieve this goal, student interest must be evidenced.

When one realizes the extent of rowing popularity and the type of schools that excel in this sport, it can only be hoped that a university the size and caliber of Villanova will, in the near future, be among the field of college crew powers.

Anyone wishing to participate as a member of the Crew Club, please contact Clem Kopf or Greg Liscio. All home races will be held on the Schuylkill River below Strawberry Mansion Bridge.

'Cat Stickmen Overpowered By Post; Irish Match Cancelled By Snow

By Jim Proud

The thorn remains in the 'Cat's paw after Saturday's 15-6 defeat of the Villanova Laroossе Club by C. W. Post College. The Long Islander's continued as the nemesis of the 'Cats as they won for the third time in as many years. The green and gold from New York proved overpowering in the second half.

The first half went moderately well for Villanova which scored a goal early in the first quarter to break the ice. Post caught up and went ahead 4-2 by the end of the first fifteen minutes. The second quarter showed the 'Cats in reach of the green shirts, but the half ended with an 8-4 Post lead, after a Villanova goal was disallowed on conflicting rulings of the officials with one second remaining. Much to the dismay of spectators and players alike, the gap in score was 4 instead of 3 at the halftime intermission.

The loss of VU's veteran goalie, Jack Wehrum, due to a dislocated shoulder and fractured collarbone sustained early in the second quarter, was a severe handicap to the club for the remainder of the game.

The second half saw the 'Cats outrun with Post scoring 7 goals to just 2 by the blue and white. Even so, the Villanova stickmen were in the game until about midpoint of the third quarter.

Scoring leaders for Post were Miller and Posetel with 4 goals apiece, and Duyer with 3. For the Wildcats, Hook had 3 Bonifauto, Meyer, and Ryan, 1 each.

The next game will be Saturday, April 3, at 2 p.m. against Georgetown University, on the field behind the stadium. The club expects to fare much better against the Hoyas. They should come out on top of the team from the nation's capital.

The originally scheduled opener with Notre Dame on Thursday, March 25, was cancelled because a 3-inch snow covered the playing field. It is unlikely that game will be rescheduled because of prior commitments and the distance between the Main Line and South Bend.

One week from Saturday, on April 10, the 'Cats host the N.Y. Maritime Academy lacrosse team.

'Cat Baseball Encounter Cancelled; Sophs Get First Test Against Bowdin

By Jerry Bruderle

The Villanova nine had their first game of the season cancelled Saturday, postponing the varsity debut of a number of promising sophomores, who could be the finest crop the Wildcats have had in years.

Saturday's game with Maine, who finished third in the NCAA playoffs last year, was not played due to the lingering cold and snow.

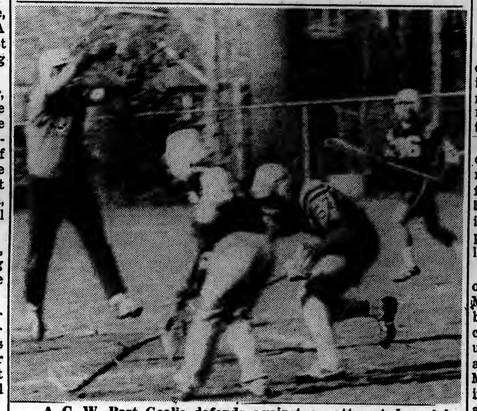
This past Monday, however, the 'Cats (hopefully) opened the season against Bowdin, and the sophs got their first test of collegiate competition. Many of them are virtually untested due to the cold weather and the fact that there is no freshmen team, so in these early games they'll have to produce or step aside.

There are two good outfielders, a catcher and three promising pitchers on the roster from the class of 1967.

Sam Greenwood, a tough ballhawk and a line drive type hitter, will be in center. He has good speed and a strong arm for the position and coach Art Mahan has hopes that he will develop into a fine hitter.

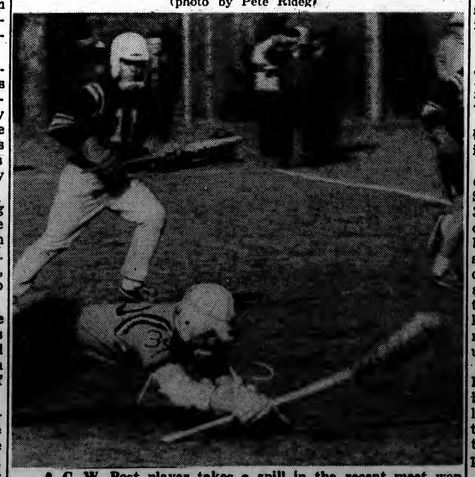
Mahan feels that the team needs defense and in left field Jack Theisen should give him plenty of that. Jack is a right-hander and has hit well in practice.

On the mound the loss of graduated Billy Smith, last year's ace, will be strongly felt. If seniors Vic Majewski and Tony Candelmo don't pick up the slack, Mahan can reach into his bullpen and pull out candidates for a starting berth, one a lefty and one a righty.



Diminutive lefty Jack Grazing throws as hard as anyone on the staff, and will be a big help in relief facing lefthanded hitters.

Jack is a pretty good hitter, and could be a big addition to the staff.



Righthander Gene Rampone has looked very impressive this spring and is a much improved hurler. Another southpaw, Jim Johnson is available for relief work.

Behind the plate, Andy Camelio is a solid fixture, but if Mike Yantis continues to deliver the long ball which the 'Cats need, he may have to take a back seat. Mike is not the defensive ace that Andy is but he may provide the big bat in the lineup. In any case he'll be a valuable pinch hitter in the late innings.

Coach Mahan is going with pitching and defense this year and he hopes to have one of his finest teams. However, the 'Cats will have to score to win and the hitting could use a little boost. If one of these sophomores can step in and show some consistent hitting, there's room in the lineup for him.

Rick Girdler Ties NCAA Mark For 200 Yard Free Style

By Bob McIntyre

Rick Girdler, Villanova's one man swimming team at the NCAA Championship, proved why he is ranked among the best in the world this past weekend at Ames, Iowa.

On Friday afternoon, before a packed house of swimming buffs, Girdler in this qualifying heat tied the NCAA record for the 200 yard freestyle, by equaling the time of 1:44.4, set last year by Steve Clark of Yale.

As a result of this spectacular showing, Girdler also broke Villanova's record for the 200 yard freestyle, held by Dick McDonough by a full two seconds. At night he placed fifth in the finals with a time of 1:45.4.

3rd In 100

On Saturday morning, Girdler was ready for more. He opened up his qualifying heat in the 100 yard freestyle, by reeling off a time of 47.4. At night he garnered a third in the finals by shurning through the water in 46.8.

After completing his iron man stint, Girdler, was called by his coach Ed Geize, the fastest swimmer in Villanova's history. By his showing in the NCAA Championships he not only showed he is ready for the onslought of such swimmers as Don Schollander, etc. at the Nat. A.A.U. Champ. this weekend, but he now has the distinction of becoming an All-American in two events, the 100 and 200 freestyle events as well as the 400 yd. freestyle relay team.

400 Relay and Fitzmaurice

In the Nat. A.A.U.'s this weekend, besides Girdler, who is swimming the 100, 50, and 200 freestyle events, will be the 400 yard freestyle relay team and freshman Mike Fitzmaurice. The 400 yd. relay team is made up of Doug Reback, Say Donnelly, Joe Parell, and is anchored by you guessed it, Rick Girdler.

Mike Fitzmaurice, a spectactular freshman, according to Geize, is fast approaching his peak, which to coach Geize means, "Look Out."

He feels he could beat anybody in the meet that includes Don Schollander of Yalein his specialties. He holds the Freshmen NCAA records in both the 200 yd. freestyle and the 200 yd. Individual Medley.

Intramural Officers Elected; Pipers Win Basketball Crown

By Joe Maffongelli

Mr. James Moran, assistant dean of men and co-ordinator of intramural activities, has announced the officers who will next carry on with the work of the organization.

John Fenlon was elected to the office of president. Fenlon, a commerce and finance junior, hails from New York City. Having been an active member of the intramural organization for the past three years, he was the logical choice of his cohorts.

The vice-presidential selection of the organization fell to Michael Mulvey Mike, who may be seen behind the pie shoppe counter on occasion, is a native up-state New York. Having been a member of various activities Mike has also been very active in the turf 'n tinsel. Mulvey also served on this year's orientation committee. The sophomore history major previously served the intra-class group as its secrtary. He did a commendable job while in that position.

James Doubek will serve the department as it secretary next year. He is a freshman from Bergen County, New Jersey.

The position of treasurer will be filled by John Bergin '67. He is from New York.

In last week's semi-final action of the basketball league the Sams defeated the Gunners 39-30. These same Gunners had carried off the title last season, but they didn't have the offensive strength necessary to over come the sharp Sams this time around. Although the score of the game was low, it must be kept in mind that the intramural rules call for two sixteen minute halves of running time.

In the another prefinal tilt the Pipers were awarded a victory by Jim Moran. The club was leading the Manner Men by some three points when Moran stopped the action with ten minutes to play.

Softball

There will be 56 teams competing in this year's softball program. Action has already started in the Mendel Stadium without stands.

The handball volleyball and tennis activities will also be getting under way in a short period of time.

All students are reminded that the Senior Red Cross Life Saving and Water Safety Program will begin April 1. Anyone interested should stop down at the Field House pool for information or see John Fenlor or Barry Clifford at the Intramural office in Alumni Gym.

The life saving course is given annually by the Intramural Department and there is no charge. Any student of Villanova University who can meet the required tests is invited to take this course. The course will be conducted this Thursday and Friday.

Dr. Woodrow Wilson Sayre To Speak Tonight In Vasey Hall Auditorium

By Bob Wall

The Villanova Forum will have as its guest speaker tonight at 8 p.m. in Vasey Hall Auditorium the scholar, philosopher, and climber Dr. Woodrow Wilson Sayre. Dr. Sayre will give a lecture, which will be illustrated with a color film, entitled, "Four Against Everest."

Grandson of the late President, son of Francis B. Sayre (former professor at Harvard Law School, Asst. Secretary of State and U.S. Representative to the U.N.), Sayre holds a M.A. and Ph.D. from Harvard. As an outstanding teacher of philosophy, he has taught at Pomona College in Claremont, Calif., and until recently at Tufts University. He made headlines when his contract was not renewed at Tufts because he failed to "publish a sufficient body of scholarly work." Dr. Sayre's belief that the action "was downgrading of the teaching profession" and that "too much emphasis is placed on publication" has been greatly supported by educators across the country.

Capt. John Murphy Dies Head Of Campus Security

Captain was swept away with the victory of then Mayor now Sen. Joseph S. Clark.

The Captain came to Villanova in 1955 at the request of the Rev. Joseph Curran, OSA, to take over the Security Force.

With the rapid growth of the campus in the 1950's the job of security that fell on Captain Murphy's shoulders was increasngly difficult. The staff has been expanding in the 10 years since he joined the Villanova staff.

In Philadelphia, John Murphy joined the Philadelphia police as a patrolman in the 1920's and was promoted to plainclothes detective in near-record time of 18 months.

As a Detective he was quickly promoted to head of the Vice Squad in the city and was known as the city's top cop in term of successful raids on illegal establishments of all sorts.

After helping to clean up the city under two mayors he resigned the force when he sought political office.

No successor for Captain Murphy has been apointed but officer Joseph Flanagan, a veteran with the force, has been in charge for the last two weeks in the Captain's absence and will be in charge of the office until there is an appointment.

SGA Elects Officers Tonight; One Amendment Survives

The Student Congress session of March 31 commenced with an address by the Rev. Francis X. Kelly OSA, director of the Augustinian Seminary Guild, who announced the inception of the 1965 Guild campaign at Villanova.

In the body of the meeting, new business on the agenda involved the final discussion and voting upon eight measures — four concerned amendments to the SGA constitution while the others involved university affairs.

Soundly Defeated

Two of the proposed amendments were soundly defeated; one was unable to receive the two-third's majority and the other introduced by Dave Moore and Frank Eck asking that the word "men" be changed to "people" in Article VI, Section 3A, Paragraphas 1, 2, 3, and 4 received a unanimous 'aye.' Dave Moore emphasized that this amendment will, once and for all, clarify the semantic content of this passage of the constitution. This would allow girls to run as student representatives.

The two proposed amendments soundly defeated were both introduced by Tom Furst and Bob Dean. The first, asked that each of the Executive Vice-Presidents shall, by virtue of ther office, be entitled to a full vote on the Student Congress. The second, proposed that the SGA President may appoint from the Student Body an Executive Secretary who shall serve as an administrative assistant to the President and shall be entitled to a half vote on the Student Congress.

Blue Key Vote

The one unable to receive the two-third's majority was the much debated motion proposed by John Smock, Jack Ryan, and Bob Dean asking that the President of the Blue Key Service Society shall, by virtue of his office, be entitled to a single full vote on the Student Congress.

Three of the four amendments involving university affairs were unanimously passed. However, one initiated by Dan Vasti, Sue Quinn, Abe Hobson and Don Casey asking that the President of the SGA appoint a committee in the spring of each year to select the University-recognized organization which has contributed the most to Villanova in

Knights Of Columbus To Host Panel On 'Racial Prejudice'

By Esa Abed

Knights of Columbus will host a "Panel of Philadelphians" at a Communion Breakfast on April 11, at the 10 a.m. in the Bartley Hall cafeteria.

The statement, "We fight prejudice by talking about it," succinctly describes the purpose of the "Panel of Philadelphians." The group is comprised of about seven Philadelphia area mothers and diverse religious and ethnic groups. It's origin can be traced back to Mrs. Paul Brown of Kansas City. Mrs. Brown organized a panel for "just one club meeting" and it became so popular that it was soon appearing in other states.

Panel

The panel moderator, Mrs. Lois Stalvey, quickly formed a Philadelphia chapter on April 10, 1963. Mrs. Stalvey is a Protestant mother as is Mrs. Pat Mallory, a Bryn Mawr College almuna. The Catholic panelist is Winifred Feledick, a graduate of Alverno College of Milwaukee whose point of pride is that she lives on an intergrated block Joyce Neff is a Temple University graduate and the Jewish panelist. Mrs. Edna Smalls is another Temple University graduate and a Negro. Judy Cohen, another Jewish mother, and Marge Duckery, a Negro Bryn Mawr graduate, act as alternate panelists.

The panel has appeared before college groups, men's clubs, and women's social gatherings for no fees. However, the panel has had many controversial questions levelled at it. Joyce Nec answers the question about Jews cheating in business.

The Augustinian Seminary Guild will be open for membership on April 26. Membership is opened each year for the benefit of prospective guild members and the Augustinian seminarians, who will work together for their mutual advancement.

Campus Campaign

In announcing the 1965 campaign, the Rev. Francis X. Kelly, OSA, director of the Guild, and that Charles Zaccaria, '65, and James Proud,' 67, will co-chairman the campus campaign. Zaccria will direct the campaign on campus, and Proud will be in charge of the drive to enroll day students. Both Zaccaria and Proud will be assisted by groups of volunteer workers in soliciting memberships.

One purpose of the campus campaign is to enroll parents of Villanova students as members of the Seminary Guild. Each student who enrolls his parents will receive a spiritual gift card to send to them on either Mother's Day or Father's Day. All Guild members enjoy spiritual benefits including special Masses and prayers offered in the Augustinian Seminary for one year.

Contributions

"The customary offering for a one-year membership in the Guild is one dollar," Fr. Kelly said "All contributions are used to help support the more than 200 young men who are currently studying for the priesthood in our Seminary."

Faculty members and other University employees and their families are also eligible to join the Guild. If they are interested, they are requested to contact the Seminary Guild House on the west end of campus at 816 Lancaster Ave., or they may call Fr. Kelly at LAwrence 5-9962.

Nurse Hope To Establish Honor Sorority At Villanova

A student-faculty preliminary committee has been formd to initiate the establishment of Sigma Theta Tau at Villanova University. This is the only National Honor Society of Nursing in the United States. It is professional rather than social in nature, and its purposes and functions may be compared to other honor societies. It is a society which rewards distinguished effort and also increases spirit in the field of nursing.

The purposes of this society are: to foster high professional standards, to encourage creative work, to promote the maximum development of the individual, to promote the spirit fellowship, to develop an abiding interest in the advancement of nursing and to promote continuous participation as responsible members of the profession. Candidates for Sigma Theta Tau are selected on the basis of scholastic achievement (3.0 grade point average), evidence of professional leadership potential, and personal characteristics.

Mary Anne Rooney, a senior, is Chairman of the Preliminary Committee. Barbara Park, a junior, is Secretary, and Miss Mary Alice Holland is the faculty advisor. This Committee has applied to the National Vice President for a Charter. Alumnae, present juniors and seniors in the upper one-third of their class, and interested members of the faculty have been invited to become members of Sigma Theta Tau. The number of replies received is indicative of the great interest Villanova nurses have in establishing this society.

A Positive Approach

The season of Lent is now rapidly drawing to a close and one might ask himself — what have I given up for Lent? — that third pack of cigarettes perhaps?; that luscious looking piece of devil's food cake in the Pie Shoppe?; that good looking date in the Pie Shoppe? If the individual answers that he has deprived himself of none of these delicacies then possibly a new approach should be tried in these waning days.

A positive approach could be the answer. Instead of depriving oneself of something one enjoys, one should try doing something on the side such as: making a daily visit to the Chapel; attending Mass daily; reciting the rosary regularly; making private stations of the Cross.

All these acts are simple and not very time consuming. They require no harsh physical strain, but possibly a spiritual one. They require a spiritual and moral discipline which is not easy to accomplish if one has been lax in the past. They require true moral fortitute — a true test of the will. A positive response is needed rather than a negative one as well as zeal and perseverance rather than avoidance and luke-warmness.

Yes, they require all this and more, for they are positive acts — ones which require a 'doing' rather than a 'giving up'. Acts of this kind may be more difficult in the present, but in the long-run the more profitable and perfect. The words — "Unless you do penance, you shall persish," should not go unheeded.

Quo Vadis SGA

The future very often becomes important because of the past and present. So it is this evening as the Student Government Association is faced with one of its most crucial presidential elections in years.

In addition to dealing almost unceasingly with the Constitution, this year's Congress has successfully maintained the high quality of the lecture and cultural affairs series, initiated the Student Book Exchange and "recognized" the existence of the University's females by permitting their presence on the cheerleading squad.

These and many other accomplishments have been achieved in cooperation with the University Administration as well as by the SGA itself, and they must not be allowed to stop. But there is still room for improvement and their always will be.

The student's world does not run from Ithan avenue to Sproul road, it encircles the globe. As the song goes, "The times they are a-changing," and this applies to everything from civil rights to education to Vietnam. Once graduated, the student will have to live in this changing, and eventually changed world, whether he likes it or not.

The burden of this election rests not so much on the candidates as it does on the members of Congress themselves. It is they who decide the future advancement of Villanova and its students.

To paraphrase Dickens, "It (can be) the best of times, (it can) be the worst of times." SGA members: its your vote and your choice — use it wisely!

ON SECOND THOUGHT

The Loyal Opposition

By Eugene Fitzmaurice

Democracy, the recurring suspicion that more than half of the people are right more than half the time, has once again worked its will upon the country.

With the election of Lyndon B. Johnson to the White House, a whole new attitude toward loyal opposition responsibilities must be assumed by the G.O.P.

To this point in the century, both parties have held the White House for an equal number of years. As Mr. Johnson moves to consolidate his government behind him, the Republican party has begun to marshall its forces for the legislative session and the Congressional elections to be held in two years

Congress

In Congress, the Party must move to block those measures which Mr. Johnson sends which they find too liberal. Indeed, his conservative opponents have missed his support in the past four years as they fought what they considered to be the harms of big government. Since his one minute conversion, based on political grounds only, the President has appeared to be a rice-Christian. When his rice stops, so too does his faith. If the results continue to pour in for his programs he will no doubt remain loyal to Lippman.

The party of Lincoln must also seek to recognize the fact that the rejection of Mr. Goldwater at the Polls must be interpreted in two ways. First, the legitmate mandate which the President now feels that he holds must be recognized as an existing political fact, and the opposition must seek to temper the heights to which the President may seek to go.

Repudiation

Secondly, it should realize that the acceptance of Mr. Johnson is in large measure as great a repudiation of Mr. Goldwater as it is an acceptance of Mr. Johnson. It is now apparent that any Republican would have been defeated this year and so only part of the choice must be levelled against the Arizonan and his principles. The two must be distinguished. The upcoming Congressional elections will furnish furthr, if not final, clues as to what the public wishes in its governmental philosophy.

Finally, the party must now look to some of the new leaders who have emerged as victors. George Romney's stunning defeat of Neil Staebler in Michigan, while bucking a strong tide must make him a strong contender for leadership in the Republican Party. The election of a conservative like Robert A. Taft, Jr. in Ohio also mark- him for leadership in the party which has provided us with Roosevelt and Eisenhower, and which his own family has provided with such distinguished leadership in all fields of government.

Our Own

Our own Sen. Hugh Scott who overcame early downstate deficits to buck the Johnson tide must also be marked for positions of ever increasing leadership in the Senate.

Charles Percy, who managed to run very strongly against Otto Kerner in Illinois cannot be denied a place as Republicans must find their true path as the temporary loyal opposition of the government. They must go on to bring new and dynamic leadership to the party's councils, and seek out new and young men for the contests which lie ahead.

Formula Found

They must finally determine the position of the philosophy of Barry Goldwater as distinguished from the scare value of the former Senator and seek to this into the forward looking philsophy of the party.

We have found in this country a formula for government which alloys the most extreme force to meld in accomplishments for the common good. The party system still stands as a dual one and must continue to do so. In the philosophy of government which we have formed, the overriding consideration must always be, divided we stand.

LEO GOODREAU

From The President's Desk

By Tom Furst
President, SGA

Tonight the Student Congress members will cast their most important vote of the year. Tonight the future success of student government will be, to a great degree, set.

The pace, the drive, the energy of any organization is determined by the ability, interest, and dedication of its president. The sense of purpose must emanate from him. If the wrong person is selected, the success will, to a greater or lesser degree, drop. In an organization, such as the Student Government Association, which is so vitally connected with the success of a large number of important issues and important functions, this drop cannot be tolerated.

In retrospect, the classes should be well pleased with the heavy turnouts at last Thursday's election. While short of the ideal they are, on the whole, far above usual levels of participation.

Nearing the end of a successful year, we should not just look back on our achievements, but project them. This year's failures should be next year's successes and this year's successes should be next year's highlights. This concept is difficult to work with under the high rate of turnover experienced by most Villanova clubs but only by living with lessons will lasting improvement be realized.

Letters To The Editor

To the Editor,

One of the more preposterous policies of the Resident's Dining Hall is the practice of allotting only one small glass of milk for lunch, and but two glasses for breakfast and dinner. This quantity is hardly sufficient for many Villanova students. It is indeed a sad state of affairs when a person must ration his milk in order to have at least some left over to go with his dessert.

Fully realizing the financial and distributive problems that would be involved in increasing the individual milk allotment for all students, I offer the following suggestion. If the proper authorities, whether it be the SGA, the Administration, or the dining room manager himself, would have milk and/or soda machines placed in the Resident's Dining Hall, the problem could be easily and perhaps profitably solved.

The placement of the machines inside the dinning hall itself is necessary because the length of the cafeteria line often makes it impractical to bring in liquids from the outside. The use of vending machines within the cafeteria would offer the students a greater quantity and variety of liquids and, what's more, would have no adverse effect on the cafeteria service.

I certainly hope that some possible action will be taken to rectify this situation and I offer the above suggestion as at least one possible solution.

How Could I Lose?

By Ted Laven

Having attended Villanova Mixers in the past, I have developed a complex because I have never had any success.

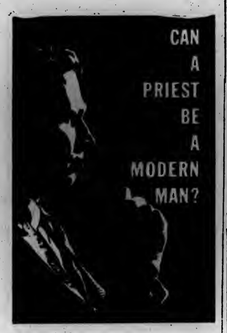
For the Shamokinaki Mixer I decided that I would be successful regardless of what I had to do.

I embarked on a campaign to guarantee myself the most suoght-after man at the dance. I practised the Frug, Slop, Monkey, Jerk, Watusi, and Box Step-for the slow dances. I studied the various techniques of each dance by watching Lloyd Thaxton every day for a month.

Impressions

I decided that since first impressions are most important at such function, that good grooming would be eessential. I washed with Dial for 24 hour protection. I shampooed with Head and Shoulders. I brushed my teeth with Macleans because although it doesn't reduce cavities, 'you can see the difference." I then used my spare can of Right Guard deodorant, (Susie, my room-mate had used up my first can). I applied Burma Shave to my face and smoothly cleared away my whiskers with Wilkinson Sword Blades which are "stropped with costly Swiss oxide." Since I am on the pistol team, my face takes a real beating, so I used Noxema After Shave lotion. I then took to my hair. Earlier in the week I procured a hair cut at the Villanova Barber Shop from a genuine Italian barber. I exorcized my 'greasy kid's stuff" and used invisible Score. I then looked so perfect that I felt a statue could be modeled of me as I looked then.

Preparation



I then prepared to dress. Since I was going to partake in a strenuous activity I used some Desenex foot powder. I cloathed myself with a B.V.D. undershirt, Jockey shorts, and Esquire socks.

I bought a complete new wardrobe. It consisted of an Arrow tab-colored, tapered-fit convertible-cuffed shirt; a pair of H.I.S. tapered, no pleat, no cuff slacks; and, a Brooks Brothers Cashmere jacket. I polished my new Ballu Swiss shoes with cordovan Kiwi shoe polish and black Esquire polish to trim te soles and heels.

I tormented myself over a decision between Canoe and Jade East. I chose the former.

With all this, is it possible to lose at a mixer?

Not ONE girl asked me to dance! ! !

'Oliver' Opens Soon; 'How To Succeed . . .' Continues At Shubert

By Joe Linsalata

Direct from two capacity years on Broadway and 23 weeks in Chicago, Lionel Bart's musical Oliver will open at the Forrest Theatre on Tuesday night, April 20. This free-and-happy adaption of Charles Dickens' immortal Oliver Twist will stay in Philadelphia for three weeks.

Starring in the production are Robin Ramsay and Maura Wedge of the New York Company, and it features Allan Crofort, Danny Sewal and Little Ronnie Kroll as Oliver.

Lionel Bart is accredited with the book, music and lyrics of the play. His work marks the first time that one of Dicken's novels has been adapted for a musical.

The Pultzer Prize winning play How To Succed in Business Without Really Trying opened at the Shubert Theatre on Monday night. The plans are for the show to remain in Philadelphia for two weeks.

During its three and a half years on Broadway, the affluent musical parody of big business and the amours of its flannel-suited denizens has piled up enormous profits, collected a full pack of awards, entertained millions of pleasure seekers, contributed a hefty chunk towards balancing the budget, and successfully purloined the "American Way" on several continents.

In Paris it was the first American musical to be kissed on both cheeks by the critics, and in London it became one of the very few American musicals to survive the transatlantic transfer. While on Broadway the play won the Pulitzer and the Drama Critics Awards and seven Tony's, a feat which no other musical in history has equalled.

Eugene Ionesco's Amedee, which was originally scheduled as the fifth production at the Philadelphia Threatre of the Living Arts has been cancelled. In its place will be Samuel Beckett's Endgame which will be the final play of the inaugural season. It will be presented on May 25.

The next play to be staged at the theatre is Eugene O'Neill's Desire Under the Elms, which opens on April 20.

Music Survey

By Bill McCloskey

A survey shows that while Frank Sinatra is listed as the favorite male vocalist by 62% of the residents at Villanova, some 70% listen to what they consider popular music on Philadelphia Radio Station WIBG.

These seemingly conflicting figures were reflected in a recent poll on campus conducted by Billboard Magazine, the international music business weekly. National figures as compiled by campus correspondents at almost every major college and university in the country were reported in Billboard's Second Annual Music on Campus issue in late March.

Out of the 50 students polled, 35 listed WIBG as their first choice in popular music. WIP finished second with 12% of the respondents listing it as their first choice. Campus station WWVU was listed by 10% of those polled. WRCV and WHAT were listed by 3 students each. Others mentioned were WPBS-FM, WPEN, WCAU and WFIL.

WFLN First

The answers to the question asking "what station do you listen to for classical music?" showed a gross misunderstanding concerning the meaning of classical music. Apparently some students feel that anything that isn't the Beatles is classical.

For instance, WFLN finished first, as well it should, but they were tied for first with campus station WWVU which airs only a few hours of classical music a week. WPEN was also listed even though they broadcast only the Metropolitan opera in the classical vein. WPBS, WIP and WPBS-FM each garnered 8% of the student vote as did WFIL. The people at WIP and WFIL, both of whom have just instituted music format changes, would be displeased to know that collegians feel their music policy is now classical.

Others listed in classical stations were WXUR (Media), WHAT-FM (Philadelphia), WCAU, WABC (New York), and WKDN (Camden).

The poll also delved into the students' taste in individual artists. It was generally agreed that Peter, Paul and Mary had put on the best show of those artists who had been seen in person by the respondents. Sammy Davis, Jr., and the Chad Mitchell Trio also scored well.

Purchasing Power

The average Villanovan, according to the survey, spends some 22.6 hours a week listening to music. He buys between four and five singles during the school year and is liable to buy close to nine LP's during that period.

With all of this purchasing power, there is a lot of money to be made by some record stores and record artists. The poll showed that the plurality of the students purchase their discs at downtown record stores. Eighteen per cent of the residents wait until they go home on vacation to buy their records while 6% purchase through record clubs. One poor soul reports that he buys his records at the campus book store, which should amuse John Bauman who runs the operation. Bauman doesn't sell records. He says that he is afraid of getting into a price war with the discount stores in the area.

J. Jones—Favorite

After Sinatra in the balloting for favorite male vocalist came Jack Jones (24%); Tony Bennett (20%); Ray Charles (20%), and Robert Goulet (18%). Students could vote for as many as five choices.

Female popularity is led by a newcomer Barbra Streisand (42%). Connie Francis is still popular, with 28% of the residents listing her. Another newcomer on the pop scene, Nancy Wilson, doubled Ella FitzGerald's percentage. Nancy scored 28%, Miss FitzGerald 14%. Julie London and Dionne Warwick each polled 10% of the respondents.

Peter, Paul and Mary won the biggest majority with 66% of the students listing them as one of their favorite folk groups. The popularity of the trio is good news for the Junior class which has booked the folksters for the annual Junior Week Concert.

The Kingston Trio has maintained its popularity with 46%. Others with sizable representation:

The Chad Mitchell Trio	(24%)
New Christy Minstrels	(22%)
Serindipity Singers	(18%)
Smothers Brothers	(14%)

Dylan, Baez

Bob Dylan (30%) and Joan Baez (48%) were the individuals with the most recognition on the poll. Judy Collins was the only other female that showed up with any regularity on questionnaires. She had 12%. Pete Seeger had 14%. Folk fans seemed more willing to give recognition to local talent. Tom Paxon was listed on 6% of the ballots. He frequently entertains at the Main Point in Bryn Mawr. Jim Croce who sings with the Haveners and The Coventry Lads on campus was listed by 2% of the respondents.

Part of the huge crowd that attended the Shamokiraki Mixer on March 26. Over $8,000 was realized through the various fund-raising activities of the Shamokinaki committee under the leadership of Fr. George Riley. (photo by Pete Rideg)

'The Approachable Priest'

The Shamokinaki Mixer was over. But the Rev. George F. Riley, OSA, relaxed only slightly. He would soon have to go back over the lists of patrons appearing in the program in an attempt to round up all the money not yet collected.

Shamokinaki, a dance which benefits Augustinian missions in Japan, is only one of Fr. Riley's activities on the Villanova campus. In addition to his duties as a freshmen theology teacher, he oversees the Peace Corps Recruiting program at Villanova together with "VISTA" (Volunteers In Service To America), a new 'domestic peace corps,' and he is also moderator of the Radio Club.

Similar to other younger priests on campus, Fr. Riley has a natural knack for establishing rapport with the students. As a prefect in Sullivan Hall, he comes into contact with many students, and he is well-liked for his quick wit, approachability, and big Irish smile.

Born in Lawrence, Mass., Father attended Merrimac College before entering the seminary. He came to Villanova in 1962, after obtaining his Master's degree.

Among his many athletic interests, Father especially enjoys playing a good game of baseball or basketball, as well as an occasional golf match. Since he played basketball in college, Father mentioned it was rough getting competition. "Fr. William Ryan is still afraid to play me one-on-one (pivots)," said Fr. Riley.

Last year, he took over as moderator of the Shamokinaki Mission Dance. This year, over $8,000 was sent to the Japanese missions while close to $15,000 has been collected in the two years that Fr. Riley has been in charge.

The dance was converted into a mixer this year in order to raise more money.

To what does Fr. Riley attribue the success of Shamokinaki? — "The kids — the way the students contributed their time and efforts in a charitable cause is a compliment to their generosity and selflessness."

Grad Production Of 'Bonaparte' Unique, But It Lacks Potential

When you walk into the theatre and sit down, there seated on your right is one of the actors. To your left are four more, clad in sweatsuits and buckskin boots. They laugh and talk to each other; maybe even to you. They shout at a figure on stage—that is a stage of two bare platforms, one encircling the other. Nothing else except blue, white, and red streaks painted on a wall.

The lights go down and a movie is projected on the same wall. Nothing spectacular, just a rocky sea coast with smooth beautiful water. An isloated aim as Robinson Crusoe. The movie dies. Bonaparte is on the stage talking with a young boy catching minnows.

The play is William Long's Bonaparte now being performed on the playbox. It is the second of Mr. Long's plays that have been presented at the Playbox while he has been working for his Master's.

Based on the historic figure of Napoleon, it is the story of his rise to power after his exile to the island of Elba and concluding with his eventful downfall and return to Elba.

The play is pieced together by a combination of quickly-paced scenes without a continuous flow. Each scene offers a new torment to Napoleon. Each reveals the falseness of the morale of his army, his inhuman tactics to gain power, his deceitfulness in controlling his men, and the inner conflict of an honest and moral Savalle (Jim Hicks), who can't reconcile himself to the demands of the war.

Louis Lempo's portrayal of Napoleon shows the insane drive he possessed for power. In defense of the title he once held, he relentlessly gathers an army and attempts to recapture his European Empire.

Theo (Leslie Lee), his second in command, tries in vain to discourage him in his goal. But driven on by his reveries of how great an emperor he once was, Napoleon leads his army through unsurpassable offenses.

Much of the play is an outward conflict between his army, who regard him as a lunatic and Theo, who attempts to reconcile these men to Napoleon. There are some very expressive moments between the belligerent attacks of Broderick and Jim Mason upon Napoleon and Jim Hicks and Leslie Lee on behalf of his defense. Jim Hicks especially adds immeasurably to the scene.

Regardless of the pathos expelled by Napoleon in his character in the internal strife between his soldiers, the scenes move at such a rate so as to keep any emotional purgation or attachment of the audience completely confined. All battle scenes and advancements of the army are projected by semi-animated movies on the blue, white, and red wall. Their functions seem to unify the scope of the play and the scenes while keeping the audience detached from each scene. We are constantly aware that we are observing a play and thus are kept aloof from the characters.

Mr. Richard Dupre directed the performance with aid from Mr. Thomas Nevins doing the setdesign and Dr. Jackson Barry in charge of the film sequences.

Bonaparte will continue its run this weekend, April 9, 10, and 11.

Overall the play is unique in its presentation but yet it never gives to the script the potential that it has.

'The Jazz Scene'

By Eddie Bride

The Philadelphia Jazz scene is is still on its year-long upward swing.

It really all began last September, when Herbie Spivak bought the Showboat Lounge in Philadelphia, and expanded it (it's now the "Showboat Jazz Theatr', and features some of the best in Jazz today).

It continued with a Fall show at the Academy of Music, and got into full swing with "Jazz Week" in Pennsylvania.

Opening Jazz week was a concert at the Academy, featuring the two major big bands in the art today . . . Count Basie and Duke Ellington.

Sellout Approval

Ellington opened the show, and played almost twice his alloted time. The audience approved, however, and the show continued to run overtime.

The outstanding groups were Basie and Lee Morgan, Art Blakey and the Jazz Messengers and then Ellington. Basie played in his newly-found "pop" groove, but with tenorist Eddie "Lock jaw" Davis featured on solos, never really left the Jazz scene.

Clark Terry and a trio, billed as the "All-Stars," came and did three numbers, the most memorable of which was his popular "Mumbles."

Also on the bill was vocalist Arthur Prysock, comedian Slappy White, and jazz pop organist Jimmy McGriff.

The turnout? Sellout . . . both shows.

Closing out Jazz Week was the Intercollegiate Jazz Festival, reviewed two issues ago.

Attractions

The following weekend offered two significant attractions. Saturday evening, March 27, at St. Joseph's College, there was a "Folk and Jazz Festival," featuring collegiate groups of both these idioms. The folk left a little to be desired, but the Jazz, since it was all taken from top contestants of IJF, was the hit of the evening.

Trudy Desmond followed (and was backed by) the Mike Michaels Trio, her own group, as well as the outstanding trio at the IJF two years ago.

Michaels has matured musically, and when he returns to Penn next September, one can expect him to return also to the Intercollegiate Jazz Festival. The best Jazz number for the whole evening was probably Michaels' original, "Life Cycle," even if it was a little too far-out for the audience.

Miss Desmond performed most of the the tunes she did at the Villanova fete, but appeared more relaxed. Again, her ballad "Born To Be Blue" was given excellent treatment.

The West Chester "Criterions," this year's Best Big Band, and also the Best Overall Jazz Group at the Festival, ended the Jazz portion with the same tunes they did at Villanova.

"Half Nelson"

Gary Gauger's solo on Charlie Parker's "Half Nelson" was again the highlight of the evening. In the case of St Joseph's performance, the solo was longer, and the drummer received an ovation that lasted throughout the rest of the song. The Criterions re-played part of their "Procession of the Slaves" as an encore.

The following evening, a Philadelphia big band made its debut at the Norristown David McDonald Labor Lyceum. It was billed as the "Billy Root and His Jazz Giants" band. Root was a former baritone-saxist with Stan Kenton, and he assembled some of the best has-beens in Jazz for this performance.

On the bill were female trombonist Melba Liston, vocalist "the legendary" Kid Haffey, tenorist Al Steel, and, most important, altoist Phil Woods.

Alas, Kansas

Woods saved what might have been a mediocre, if not poor, concert, with his wild Parker-like solos, and received the best recognition from the audience. The affair, unfortunately but not unexpectedly, was not an overwhelming success, with only half of the 800 seats filled.

Also last weekend, but not in the area, was the Kansas-City world tucked close under the sky. Only then does a person turn deeply inward. Loneliness is not enough." That is why Dr. Sayre, leader of the 1962 climb up Mount Everest, wanted to climb the highest peak in the World in the heart of the Himalayas.

Though an "amateur" assault was considered impossible by experts, Dr. Sayre and three others — a Swiss school teacher, a lawyer, and a geology student —planned the attempts without oxygen, guides or porters, and with the barest minimum of money, food, and equipment. Further, they planned what had been tried eight times but unsuccessfully, by the best — to scale the great unclimbed North Face of Everest.

Communist Hazard

To make the trip even more hazardous, the expedition had to make a secret dash through Tibet to reach the North Face, riskng capture, imprisonment, or even execution by the Chinese Communists who patrol the Tibet-Nepal border. Without medical aid, the slightest accident or misjudgment could rave brought immediate disaster. Sayre himself tumbled an incredible 1,000 feet down the glacier's ice blocks. Before the end of the journey, there was nothing left to eat and the expedition faced starvation.

They never reached the summit, but they didn't really fail. Says Dr. Sayre, "Men climb mountains because they are not satisfied simply to exist, they want to live — climbing the heights is one way."

Fr. Burns Speaks At PSEA Lecture; New Officers Elected

"What the Catholic Teacher Should Know, Look For, and Do!" is the topic of a lecture to be given by Rev. Joseph J. Burns, OSA, tomorrow morning at 10:30 a.m. in 215 Tolentine Hall.

The lecture is being sponsored by the Villanova University Chapter of the Pennsylvania Student Educational Association. Robert A. Garawski was elected President of the Regional Office for the 1965-66 school year on March 6, at the Southeastern Regional Convention held at Immaculata College.

extended at this time.

An interesting element is the "interrupting question." Any member of the Political Union, may stop a speech and question the speaker. The question is either serious or rhetorical. Members are encouraged to voice their approval or disapproval after or during a speech.

Purpose

The purpose of the organization is stated in the Union's motto "E discipulis tribune" which, freely translated, means "We make statesmen out of students." The organization hopes to accomplish this. Among the budding statesmen are women. Rosemont and Villanova undergraduates.

The political Union publishes its own magazine Politico for the expresion of student opinion on current affairs. Edited by R. Gregory Leonard, '66, the next issue is scheduled for distribution later this month.

The Union, moderate by Professor Logue of the Political Science Department, has recently elected its officers for next year. They are : Gregory Leonard, president; Dick Behrens, vice-president; Bill D'Orsaneo, Treasurer, and Joe Buera, secretary.

This is the sixth Practical Lecture in a series being spnsored by the class of 1966 under the chairmanship of Jim Griffin.

Dr. Stanley is a graduate of George Washington University. At present, he is vice-president of the staff at Crozer-Chester Medical Center and is also on the staff at Riddle Memorial Hospital and at Sacred Heart Hospital.

He is the official lecturer of Delaware County's unit of the American Cancer Society and has been on many different panels around the Philadelphia area. A question and answer period will follow tomorrow's lecture.

Tom Huck sought scientific excitement

He's finding it at Western Electric

Ohio University conferred a B.S.E.E. degree on C. T. Huck in 1956. Tom knew of Western Electric's history of manufacturing development. He realized, too, that our personnel development program was expanding to meet tomorrow's demands.

After graduation, Tom immediately began to work on the development of electronic switching systems. Then, in 1958, Tom went to the Bell Telephone Laboratories on a temporary assignment to help in the advancement of our national military capabilities. At their Whippany, New Jersey, labs, Tom worked with the W.E. development team on computer circuitry for the Nike Zeus guidance system. Tom then moved on to a new assignment at W.E.'s Columbus, Ohio, Works. There, Tom is working on the development of testing circuitry for the memory phase of electronic switching systems.

This constant challenge of the totally new, combined with advanced training and education opportunities, make a Western Electric career enjoyable, stimulating and fruitful. Thousands of young men will realize this in the next few years. How about you?

If responsibility and the challenge of the future appeal to you, and you have the qualifications we are looking for, talk with us. Opportunities for fast-moving careers exist now for electrical, mechanical and industrial engineers, and also for physical science, liberal arts and business majors. For more detailed information, get your copy of the Western Electric Career Opportunities booklet from your Placement Officer. And be sure to arrange for an interview when the Bell System recruiting team visits your campus.

Boylan Crumbles Tradition; First Female Yearbook Chief

The forthcoming editor anticipates no trouble, at least from the staff. She said, "I wouldn't have accepted the position if I had foreseen any trouble." The yearbook staff is composed of 60 persons, and approv.mately 30 are girls.

The Belle Air moderator, Thomas Linahan, assistant professor in the Math Department, concurred with Williams' appointment. Concerning female discrimination, Williams said, "The anti-woman atitude should end with this year's graduating class."

Questioned about her reaction to her selection, Boylan said. "I was really shocked . . . and I had no idea that I would be next year's ed tor . . . But I do realize the tremendous responsibility placed upon my shoulders and the almost impossible task of attempting to please all facets of the University in publishing a yearbook."

The 1965 editor of the Belle Air will be on campus on or about May 13 and seniors will receive their copies on the first two delivery days. Underclassmen will receive the books after the seniors. The Belle Air publisher said that the 1965 edition will be the best yearbook to come out of Villanova.

In the summer of 1964, 45 students from Cornell University, members of the Cornell-Tompkins Committee for Free and Fair Elections lived and worked in Fayette County, Tennessee, encouraging and helping the cause of Negro registration, fighting segregation in the South.

In Step by Step, (to be published by Norton, on April 26—$3.95 cloth, $1.45 paper) Douglas Dowd and Mary Nichols have put together a series of accounts of the struggle from some of those involved in the project. The book is illustrated by the photographs of Nick Lawrence, who was also helping in Tennessee.

The hostile and often violent reception the volunteers met with from the white population of Fayette County, and the ultimate failure of the election—but not of the project—are recorded simply and objectively. It is not the editors' intention that they should merely retell the civil right tale for they hope to be able to point the way to others who would like to join in or form similar projects.

At the end of the book is a comprehensive list of civil rights organizations who desperately need help, whether it be money or volunteers.

Both authors and publisher are contributing their income from Step by Step to the project.

Lost — One Bat . . . !

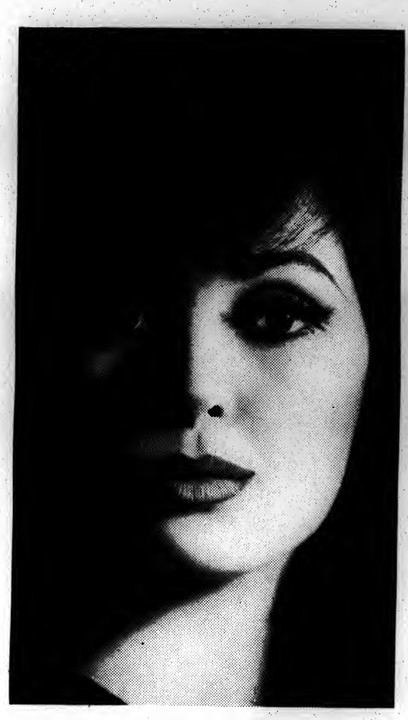
By Fred Wetcher

After a hard day of classes Hary Gwinnell entered his suite in Good Counsel Hall unaware that d a n g e r lurked near by. Looking up he saw hanging from his b l i n d s a nocturnal placental flying mammal with f o r e l i m b s modified to form wings. He retreated quickly, fearing that it might be one of the blood thirsty Vampire types, and relayed news of his discovery to the other guys on his floor.

Soon there were fifteen or so brave adventurers in the small room investigating the new find. S u d d e n l y the bat began to spread its wings and fifteen or so brave adventurers were out in the hall. Immediately the question was asked concerning the removal of the intruder from Harry's room, brought up by none other than Harry himself After deliberating for some time lots were cast and Drew the Fearless was elected official exterminator for the entire dorm, pending future elections.

Prize Captured

Drew, being quite experienced in handling nocturnal mamals, put on his hooded parka, armed himself with a towel, and boldly entered the room. Outside the room tension mounted as minutes passed and no sound came from within. Then all at once noise of a vicious struggle issued from the room and then silence. As the door began to open those who had been waiting outside stepped back and Drew the Victor walked out with his prize wrapped in a towel.



Trophy Mounted

After showing it to everyone present the great White Hunter proceeded to pin his trophy to his bulletin board next to a picture of his girl. Drew's roommate being quite sensitive to dead bats pinned to his wall, decided that it was killed out of season and should be moved to a place where it would not implicate them in the crime.

At this point a procession was formed and the bat was moved slowly from room to room and finally ended up in an unknown bunk on the third floor. The story did not end there because the very next day a sign was posted on the bulletin board which read as follows:

'Cat Sluggers Lose St. Joe Suffer First City Series Loss

By Jerry Bruderle

Villanova opened its baseball season last Tuesday with a 2-0 loss to St. Joseph's on the Wildcat's home diamond. The 'Cats first two games against Maine and Bowdoin were postponed before the Hawks game, and the game against Penn last Saturday was also called due to the cold weather.

Following yesterday's game with Princeton, Villanova entertains West Chester tomorrow, before traveling to Penn State for a game on Saturday. Then next Tuesday, April 12, Villanova plays host to Rider College, before six straight road games.

The St. Joe's game was the first for coach Harry Booth, former St. Joe's basketeer.

Hawks Score In First, Fifth

The Hawks scored both of their runs exactly the same way in the first and fifth inning. John Hinkle drove in the both runs with two singles. Bespectacled catcher John Glodeck opened each inning by working 'Cat hurler Vic Majewski for a walk. Glodeck advanced to second on sacrifices by Mike Dalsey. Hinkle sent him home each time with singles.

Winning lefthander Jake Gaffney held Art Mahan's Mainers to a single and two walks in six innings. Righty reliever John Butz gave up a double and two passes.

Majewski was the loser, working six innings. Thus, the 'Cats who won the Big Five title last season, suffered their first City Series loss of this year's campaign.

Final Deadline For Junior Week Villanovan

FRIDAY, APRIL 9

Bowler Jones Wins Finalist Position in the NIBC at Minn.

The odds on winning a finalist spot in the 1965 National Intercollegiate Bowling Championships were 184 to 1 against him, but the challenge proved equal to the ability and determination of Spencer Jones.

A Villanova Universi'ty sophomore, Jones finished fifth in regional competition to win one of the 75 spots in the national finals at St. Paul, Minnesota on April 25 and 26. He competed against 13,800 college bowlers representing 185 colleges and universities throughout the country.

The National Intercollegiate B o w l i n g Championships are sponsored by the Association of College Unions, American Bowling Congress, and American Machine & Foundry Company. The finals tournament is literally the Rose Bowl of intercollegiate bowling, with competition to determine champions in team, singles, doubles and all events.

Rugged Football Slate Shows Cat's Facing Formidable Foes

By Joe Maffongelli

A quick glance at the 1965 football schedule shows the Wildcats facing nine formidable foes. The rugged slate kicks off with Toledo on September 18 and reaches its end zone via Buffalo on November 20.

Highlighting the season will be contests with Washington State University and V.P.I., along with West Chester State and the Marines from Quantico. Missing from last year's schedule will be the gridders from Holy Cross, Detroit, George Washington, and V.M.I. The traditionally big encounter with Boston College will be played at Boston on September 25.

Washington State, a member of the Rose Bowl-participating Big Eight Conference, finished with a disappointing 4-6 log last season. However, they did knock off Stanford. Any team in this conference is more than capable of a good game. The 'Cats are in for a rough one.

Among the five victories enjoyed by V.P.I. in '64 were Florida State and North Carolina State. These clubs won the Gator Bowl and the Atlantic Coast Conference respectively. In addition, the Staters lost a tight one to Syracuse in the last five minutes of play. Their overall tally was 5-4.

The assignments to Quantico are never known for certain until their season opens. It is rumored that the great Roger Staubach himself will don the red and gray come the fall. The 'Cats' own Emmet Michaels may also be changing sides for this one.

West Chester, a local thriller, is expected to come up with another strong club. They have fared extremely well in their small college field over the last few years. The 'Cats innicted their only loss upon them two years ago.

The usual story is out on B.C. In Ed Foley they have a great quarterback, though his top receivers—Bill Cronin and Jim Whelan—have flown the 'Eagles' nest.

The rebuilding 'Cats can expect a rough time, but the strong opposition early in the season should provide valuable experience.

Intramural Spring Activities Include Handball, Tennis And Softball

By Frank Miller

Today is the last opportunity for anyone interested in entering the Intramural Handball Tournament to hand in his application. This competition is open to all Villanova students and Villanova faculty members. Gloves and handballs may be picked up in the intramurals office. Competition will begin tomorrow. The pairings will be listed on the bulletin board in Alumni Gym.

The tennis season will also begin tomorrow, April 8. Each participant in this singles tournament must bring his own equipment. No equipment will be issued by the intramurals department. The pairings for this tournament will be based on general ability and experience. This wil be judged from the information given by the applicants on their entry forms. Matches in this tournament will be held on the Villanova courts.

The softball t o u r n a m e n t swings into its second round next Monday, April 12. There are to be three games today which will close out first round action. These games will be the Rovers vs. the Dean's Boys on Austin Field, the Shakes vs. the Wipeouts at Mendel, and LKD vs. DPM on Sullivan Field. All 56 teams appeared in the first round. Second round pairings wil be posted on the Bulletin Board in Alumni Gym.

In order to reward the intramural officials for the excellent job they did throughout the year, the intramural department is sponsoring a dinner Thursday, April 18 at the Conestoga Mill Inn. The secondary purpose of this affair is to present an award to the outstanding senior intramural athlete. He will be chosen by an intramural council on the basis of four years of sportsmanly participation in Villanova's intramural program.

Through the rest of the semester, the intramural association will be sponsoring v a r i o u s events. One of which is volleyball. This activity begins on April 8. The games are played on the A n n e x and Sullivan courts.

The Senior Red Cross Life Saving Course is already in progress. The 70 qualified men will be instructed by Mr. Jack Lumsden, the assistant swimming coach here at VU. After this course is completed the Water Safety Instructors Course will be given. One of the highlights of the year, the I n t r a m u r a l Track Meet, will be held April 28, at 3 p.m., in Goodreau Stadium. A n y o n e can enter, and the blanks are available from the Intramural office or from John Bergin in 125 Fedigan Hall. Contestants for this meet may enter in all events but they must limit their participation to three.

There is a correction in last week's article. The Intramural Basketball Final was won by 56-39 over the Pipers.

"The Business Of Intercollegiate Sports"

By John DiGennaro

Inter-collegiate sports have become a business. They have transcended the c o m p e t i t i v e plane in quest of prestige, and in particular, its remunerative sidekick—money. Thousands of dollars are invested yearly in high-school hotshots, some of whom produce; others wh simply thank the school for their free education, and casually recline on their well-molded, splinter-splattered posteriors. This could prove yuite expensive since latest national statistics show that the wood gatherers have the same market value as their more productive colleagues.

Once this talent has been corralled it must be saddle-broken, trained, discipl.ned, and then unbridled to exact its pent-up fury on its opponents. This presupposes capable and adequate stables masters and assistants, who are able to get the maximum out of their charges. Furthermore, it demands skillful managing, scheduling, and planning, so if the horses do round into form people will be happy to pay for their performances.

The past several years has seen the "Big V" turn out some mighty fine blue-bloods, who have turned in many prize winning performances, and have made several special tournament appearances. They have competed from coast to coast in many categories, and have garnered many laurels for the school. Furthermore, s c h o o l spirit, since it seems proportional to athletic success, has reached a peak; and the box office has also flourished, assuring use of still more success in the future.

Arthur L. Mahan, athletic director, is one of the prime factors in the Villanova success story. He has the difficult task of coord.nating all Villanova athletics into one, well-oiled unit capable of reaping the dividends of investment, and above all, spreading the name and glory of the school. He serves as representative to NCAA rule-making committees, and is responsible for the arrangement of s c h e d u l e s. In short, he is in some way connected with every athletic event that takes place, and for the making of decisions thereof.

Truly, success has become the calling card for Villanova sports, and success is Art Mahan's trademark.

own equipment and uniforms, and make their own travel arrangements. There is evidence that recognition is slowly coming. Last Monday, the New York Times carried the score of one if the Villanova games. It's only a start but it IS the New York Times.

In other words, Rugby at Villanova is truly an amateur sport. They don't play for money and the VILLANOVAN is the only place you'll see their names, but they practice every afternoon and when they finish they look like one of those dirty clothes experiments for the Tide commercials.

Rugby Team Captures First Win By Defeating Drew University

By Jerry Bruderle

Villanova's Rugby team captured its first victory of the season by defeating Drew University of Madison, New Jersey 14-3 on Saturday. On Sunday, the 'Cat ruggers dropped a close decision to the Philadelphia Rugby Club 8-6 bringing their record to 1-3 for the season.

Against Drew, Jim Brant tallied five points with a 45-yard field goal to pace the 'Cats. Captain Dick Gove, Bert Lambino and Ken Sears all made a try worth three points each to round out the scoring for Villanova.

Villanova's "B" squad also played and defeated the Drew "B" team 14-0. Ernie Abate and Don Donlan both made tries for the 'Cats. Both games were played before a large and enthusiastic crowd.

Sunday's squad was a combination of the "A" and "B" teams. Dick Gove made an early try to knot the score at 3-3 at halftime. Bill Blauvalt made a three point penalty shot in the second half, but it was not enough to avert defeat.

Southern Division

Villanova competes in the Southern Division of the Eastern Rugby Union, with clubs like Phila., First Troop, (also from Phila.) Baltimore, Washington, and schools like Villanova and Drew. Their 1-3 record doesn't rate too high in the conference, but they have hopes of equalling last year's 3-3-1 record. When asked if they can match or better that mark, Jim Brant said, "I hope so", and then added, "at least we should."

This Saturday the Rugby team has game with Yale at New Haven, and they have future dates with Brown and Manhattan before the end of the season on May 8. These games are all away, but there is one more chance to see the 'Cats in action.

On Sunday, May 2, Villanova plays host to a Seven-a-Side Tournament with each team having (you guessed it) seven on a side. Invitations have been sent to Temple, Jefferson, St. Joseph's, Phila. Rugby Club, First Troop Rugby Club, Pennsylvania, Princeton and Lehigh. Each teac a expected to send one or two teams to fill the one day schedule.

Complicent Due

The Rugby team is to be commended if only for the fact that they do compete. But they represent the school only in name. Under the auspices of Coach Francis Coghlan, a History Professor on campus and a former Rugby standout, the team acts and plays as a close-knit, hard-working, and enthusiastic unt. They have been trying to get financial aid from the Administration bu so far have been unsuccessfu.

A Villanova stickman juggles the ball and wheels around two Georgetown defenders enroute to a score in the Mainliners' 16-6 pounding of the Hoyas from the Nation's capital. The victory evened the local's record at 1-1.

The Villanova harriers get in shape for the opening meet in the outdoor track season, the Iona Relays.

Lacrosse Club Evens Record Defeats Georgetown, Hoyas

By Chub Connor

The Villanova Lacrosse Club posted its first seasonal victory over a reputedly strong George town University team with a thumping 16-6 rout of the Hoyas on Saturday. The win evened the 'Cats record at one up and one down. The squad from the banks of the Potomac came into the Main Line with high hopes of offsetting a tight loss to Notre Dame by a single goal, 4-3.

With only 2:48 of the first quarter gone, Pete Mills cooled their enthusiasm with a goal that set the pattern for the highest score that Villanova has totaled against any foe. Led by attackmen Rich Hook with an almost unheard of 8 goals, and Ed McFadden with one goal, but 9 assists, the Blue and White pressed to a determined and hard-fought triumph.

Despite the large margin of victory, Georgetown was far from dishonored. They were one of the most determined and hard-blocking teams ever faced by the 'Cat stickmen. Only heads-up play and enthusiasm down to the wire kept the local attack clicking. Strong alert defense and excellent goal tending held the Georgetowners out of serious threats to tie or go ahead.

Mills Scores Two

Pete Mills winged two into the net for VU scores as did Jimmy Ryan who dazzled the spectators and the Blue and White goalie by intercepting the Hoyas' goilie's pass a clearing maneuver (moving the ball out of the defense zone of the field) and racing around the stunned stickmen on a 15-yard sprint to an open goal. Whipping the ball into the unguarded net was anticlimax to an alert, aggressive move, with just 1:30 left to play in the first half.

Co-Captain Bill White, and midfielders Ed Paul and Ron Meyer each contributed a goal for the Cats. No Georgetown man scored more than one goal except for McAllister, who had two.

After an early 2-0 lead, VU closed the first quarter on the long end of 4-2. The second period saw the muddy field dry out fast with the sizzling speed that raised the margin to 10-3 by the end of the first 30 minutes. Villanova scored 3 goals in each of the remaining two quarters and the Hoyas added 3 more.

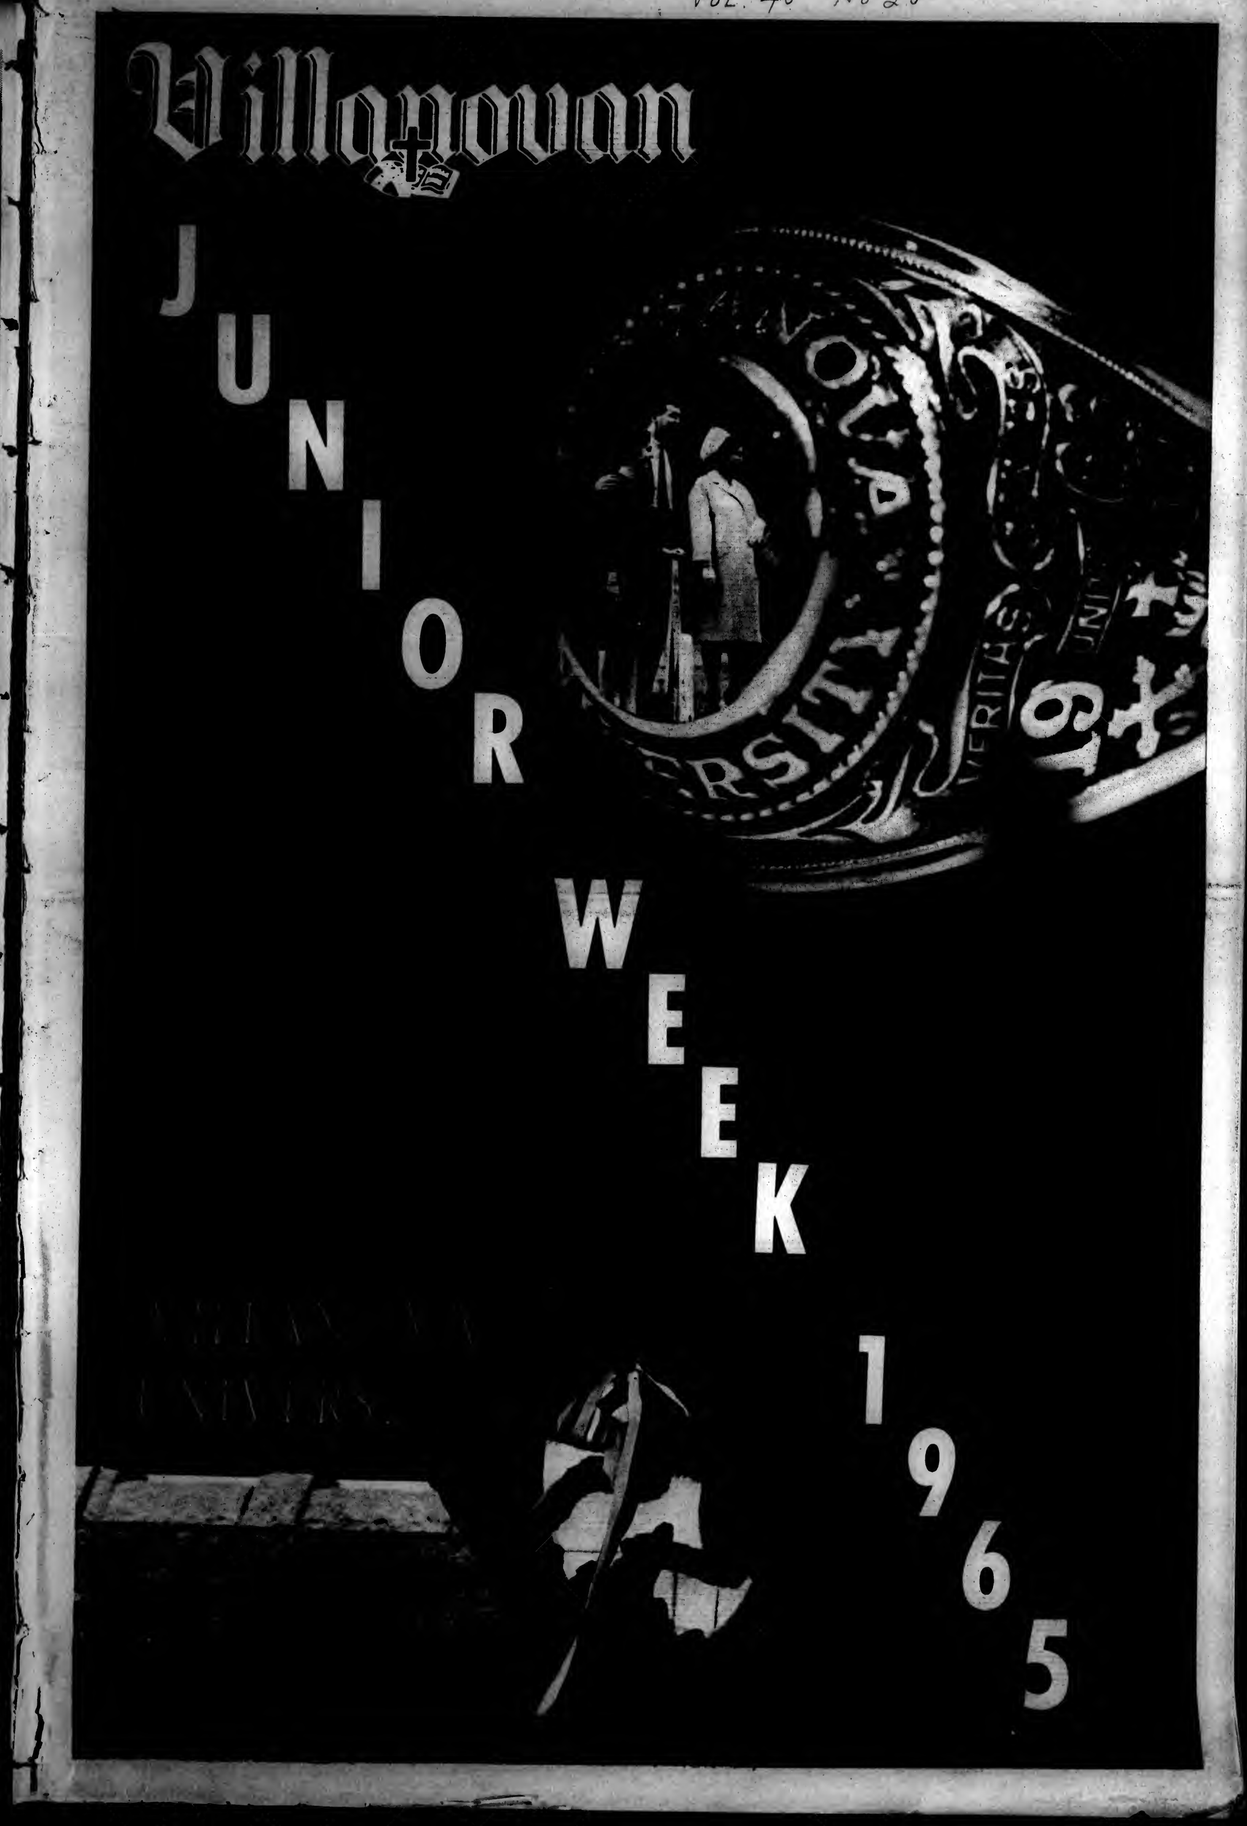
Kevin "Termite" Tyler, playing his first full game as goalie in the place of the disabled Jack Wehrum acted as if he had invented the position. He had 15 clean saves.

The enthusiasm of the entire 'Cat squad should carry over to next Saturday's game (April 10 2 p.m.) with the New York State Maritime Academy on the Lacrosse field directly behind the stadium. Spectator interest is reaching new highs, so a large rooting section is expected for the game with the N.Y. sailors.

The balance of the schedule is:

University of Pennsylvania "B", Tuesday, April 13, 3:30 p.m. River Field Phila., Pa.

Hartwick College, Saturday, April 12 p.m., Oneonta, N.Y.



Georgetown University, Saturday, May 1, 2 p.m., Washington, D.C.

Class Officers Enact Significant Programs

By Bill Tucker

The many-faceted events of Junior Week reflect the ingenuity and service which has typified our Class officers throughout the entire Junior Year. This week's festivities are a tribute not only to the Class but also to these officers who have made a successful Junior Year a reality.

Our Class President, Frank Eck, is a graduate of the Benedictine Military Academy, Richmond, Virginia and an Accounting major. As an avid participant in Class activities, he is a member of the Knights of Columbus, Delta Pi Epsilon, and the Accounting Society.

Those close to Frank realize the tremendous ability of this sincere, industrious, and loyal Villanovan. He signifies the "Spirit of the Class of 1966." His forthright and mild-mannered attitude has gained additional respect from his classmates and Villanova as a whole

Juniors Cooperate

Frank feels that "the cooperation of the countless Juniors has made my job much easier. With their unfailing support the burdens of my office have been alleviated. Junior Week is a perfect example of the zeal which has characterized our Class."

Paul Dixon is the New York delegate among the Class officers. He graduated from Massapequa High School in Massapequa Park, Long Island and is the Vice President of the Class. Besides being a History major, he is the president-elect of the Blue Key Society.

Paul was active in such events as Parent's Weekend, Orphan's Outing, and the Sophomore Cotillion. Paul said, in regard to the Junior Class, "The future of Villanova depends upon the support of its alumni. The education and benefits received from our school are an intrinsic part of every Junior and will follow him throughout his life."

The Class Treasurer and future President of the Senior Class, Jim Griffin, comes from Chicago, Illinois. This Political Science major's activities range from Shamokinaki, the Blue Key Society, past President of the Debating Society, and has held a chairmanship in every campus function since his Freshman Year.

Future Plans

His future plans include Law School, the F.B.I., and the setting up of a Law practice in Chicago. "The Junior Class," Jim said, "has a special pride in the school which will become evident not only in Junior Week but also in our Senior Year. The rewards of my position rest in the recognition that my classmates possess an intangible quality which will not be flaunted in later years. Junior Week and the Class of 1966 should show the calibre of the students at Villanova."

Coming to Villanova from Mary Immaculate Academy, in Connecticut, Betsy Grabowski has graciously contributed to the growth of our class. She feels, "The evidence of the greatness of the Class of '66 was visible during our Freshman year but, after working as Secretary for two years, I've really come to appreciate the dedication which our classmates have displayed. They all have made the job simpler for myself and the other officers."

In addition to other activities, she has worked on the Orientation Committee, the Intercollegiate Jazz Festival, and will be the Nursing SGA representative next year.

Dedicated Moderator

By Roseanna Boylan

The presence of Rev. Richard D. Appicci on the Villanova campus has been a source of motivation to the members of the Class of '66. As the Class Moderator for the past three years he has been the impetus which has united our purpose and set our sights high.

Richard Appicci was born in the town of North Bergen, N.J., the son of Domenico and Ida Appicci. Here Richard received both his elementary and secondary education, after which he was inducted into the United States Army. He took basic training in Virginia and the remainder of his military life on the shores of France.

After fulfilling his military obligation, Richard entered the novitiate at New-Hamburg in 1953. This completed his novitiate, and from there he went to St. Mary's Hall, Villanova, where he obtained his A.B. in Philosophy. Four years were then devoted to the study of Theology at the Augustinian College in Washington, D.C. He was ordained June 1960, a member of the first class at the newly completed Shrine of the Immaculate Conception. Father Appicci was assigned to Villanova in 1961.

As a member of the faculty, Father teaches Theology in both the full time and part time divisions. He holds the position of Dean of Extracurricular Activities as well as the moderator of the Student Government Association. In addition, Father has become an integral part of dorm life. As Prefect of the third floor of Sheehan Hall he is known for his congeniality and warmth with the students.

Acting as both priest and moderator for the Class of '66, Father was the moral force behind the successful realization of the functions of the Junior Class... Charity Ball, Orphan's Outing, and the social highlight of the year, Junior Week. Because of his enthusiasm and encouragement in working with our class, he has been an inspiration to the class officers and members.

Asked to comment on the Class of '66 Father replied, "I consider it a privilege to have followed the Class of '66 from its Freshman year to the present Junior year. I certainly have enjoyed the relationship with the Class as a whole and with many individual members of the Class. All present preparations point to a highly successful Junior Week and I am sure a Senior year which will be representative of the common effort of the Class of '66."

Class Spirit Personified In Villanova Swimmers

By Ray Curran

An essential part of any truly great athletic team is spirit. It is an intangible. The best Webster can do to define it is "a frame of mind, an enthusiastic loyalty." This sort of spirit is traditional at Villanova.

When coupled with measures of skill and determination, it can carry a team to the loftiest pinnacles of success. It was this sort of spirit which led an underdog Villanova basketball team to a stunning upset victory in the 1963 NIT. More recently it was this spirit which carried the indoor track team to victory in the IC4A Championships.

It is also this nearly undefinable something which is the driving force behind the most adrenalin-charged squad at Villanova --- the swimming team.

The propellant of this great team, the swimmers who are always adding fuel to the fire, are primarily members of the Junior Class. In the words of Assistant Coach Jack Lumsden, "I have never seen a group of guys with cohesiveness like this bunch, they work together as if there were no tomorrow." Lumsden's outlook is probably somewhat tinted by the fact that as freshmen the Class of '66 formed the greatest yearling squad in Cat-fish history, the only freshman team ever to defeat the awesome Army Plebes.

But there have been other, bigger victories since then. The biggest occurs every year at Annapolis, Maryland. Annually, for the past three years, the 'Cats have travelled to Navy for the most vital meet of the year, and for the past three years the 'Cats have upset the nationally-ranked Middies. Although these victories receive almost no publicity, they are as weighty as any in Villanova's rich sports history.

This year, as always, the triumph was earned by the entire team, but without backstroker Bill Livingood, breaststroker Ken Herr, freestyler Ray Donnelly and diver Bob Biese (all members of the Class of '66), victory would have been unattainable.

Once again, "enthusiastic loyalty," spearheaded by the juniors, had carried the 'Cats to victory. Another manifestation of the overriding characteristic of the junior class -- The Spirit of '66.

Unheralded Juniors Add Much to Class Showing

By Tom Sproul

Throughout our three years at Villanova, many individuals have contributed to make our class a great success. But, it is impossible to mention all the constituents responsible for this achievement. However, we hope that we may bring a few of these "Unsung Heroes" from behind the scenes and into the spotlight where the members of the Junior Class may applaud their performance and express their gratification.

First is Pete Struzzieri who is proficiently handling the publicity for Junior Week from his position on the Committee. Pete also can be credited with a large helping-hand during Charity Weekend, and he belongs to the Steering Committee.

Next to be mentioned is Joe Daly who as co-chairman of the Junior Class Concert has arranged for the performance of Peter, Paul, and Mary. Joe is a member of the Steering Committee, and he was a key factor in the success of the Charity Ball.

Roseanna Boylan, who recently received the distinction of first female editor of the BELLE AIR also has donated a long list of other unmentioned accomplishments in her position: in the SGA, in the Blue Key, and in the Steering Committee. Roseanna's three years of work for the yearbook have not gone unnoticed. Her other class contributions should not remain hidden from the eyes of her classmates.

Pat Grady, another feminine ingredient in the formula for success from '66, is a hard working member of the Steering Committee. She is to be congratulated for her role in the equation Charity Ball equals success, and, finally, Pat is doing a remarkable job in arranging the floral decor for Mother's Day.

Bob Mentzinger is the last member of this unique Committee of Unsung Heroes for his resourcefulness and efforts in the SGA and his initiative put to use in the Steering Committee.

In closing, we would like to thank these individuals and those still unmentioned, and we encourage them to continue.

Junior Concert Slates Peter, Paul and Mary

By Tom Dabney

Their music is described as urban, meaning neither pure ethnic nor pure commercial. Their audiences are of the same caliber, neither all-beat nor all jet-set, neither all Beatle-mongers nor all chamber music conservatives. They can be situated in any number of places from the steps of the Lincoln Memorial to the black-tie and tails formality of a Presidential celebration.

Peter, Paul, and Mary, sometimes known as "P, P, and M," will bring their many talents to the Villanova Field House this Friday as part of the Junior Class Concert.

The first letter stands for Peter Yarrow. He is the smaller one of the three with the tenor voice. He is the one with the quiet discerning manner, who steps to the forefront to announce the program for the evening. And he is the only one of the three who still remains unmarried, but like his compatriots he is a conglomeration of many talents and experiences.

Columbia Graduate

He got his start in life in New York, 1937, and since then has spent much time departing and entering this place on his climb to success. He got a sheepskin from one of the hometown schools (Columbia U.) in psychology, which at one time would have led to a career in television research.

His interests however, have been centered more often than not around stringed instruments and painting - thus he was saved from the plight of Madison Avenue. He alternated his energies between art and the violin in his younger years to such an extent that he showed promise on both.

The guitar, however, exerted a stronger attraction in the end and he began traversing the big city playing in different places. After an appearance on "Folk Sound, USA," in 1960, Al Grossman, the group's organizer and present manager, signed him for an appearance at Newport the coming summer. Following this engagement, he went on a cross-country tour hitting "The Ash Grove" in Los Angeles, the Windy City's "Gate of Morn" and then back to the Village.

Of his trade, he finds it a "satisfying field," that "offers a wealth of material" with which to work.

The group has capitalized on this wealth of material. Their songs show a wide variety from the ethnic folk song out of the hill country of America and Ireland, to the world of phantasy and juvenile rhymes. They also have an amusing and lighter side to them which is commandeered by the tall, baritoned voice of Paul Stookey.

At the time that Grossman met him in the Village, he was the highest paid entertainer there. It was decided that his talents would provide the balance of variety that was needed, and ever since then it has done just that.

Paul started strumming his electric guitar with a local group on the tube in his home town of Birmingham, Michigan. He moved on to Michigan State University where he met expenses by emceeing shows. When his parents moved to the Keystone state, he got the big city bug. With $400 he set off for New York, but did not meet with instant success and as a result was forced to make do on $1.48 a week. Through necessity he entered the business world with a chemical firm on the managerial level.

The Village, however, appealed more to him and he found himself constantly roaming its he premises, thinking of new arrangements for his country music compositions. Overwhelmed with its appeal, he bartered his electric for a fine classical guitar. The rest of his story is well known, except for the fact that he is married to a wonderful young lady, who is to have their first baby sometime soon.

Speaking about wonderful young ladies, we come to the prettiest member of the threesome ... Mary Travers. Mary is the tall, mystifying and shapely blond who needless to say enhances the group. Her youth is steeped creatively since her parents were journalists in Louisville, Kentucky, where she was born, before they moved to New York.

Early Folk Interest

Mary has the folk music tradition deeper engrained in her than her other two partners, since she acquired a taste for it as a youngster in kindergarten. In New York, she spent most of her time singing and in dramatics. She worked for a while in various literary and advertising concerns, studied for a year at the Art Institute of New York.

Then one evening in 1961 she found herself in an audience in the Village. Paul, who was performing there at the time asked her to step to the stage and sing. When she finished, Grossman asked her to join the trio. Prior to this her only audience exposure had been with several folk groups that died out, and in a Broadway musical.

"A Song Will Rise, Peter, Paul and Mary," released just recently, in their fifth album and has all the marks of success that their other albums and singles gained. This is not their only source of publicity since they have been lavishly covered in the news media from the very astute and cryptic pages of TIME to the deep philosophical thoughts of men's magazines.

Their appearances have been on television, the nightclub circuit, and international tours, and the regular concerts on college campuses and in city convention halls. They have for the past couple of years been rated among the top folk groups by various polls taken by magazines like DOWNBEAT, BILLBOARD, VARIETY, and MUSIC WORLD.

When they appear on May 7 at the Field House, it will mark their second appearance here in the last three years as the featured entertainment for Junior Week.

Junior Week Activities Start With Mother's Day

Junior Week activities range from the sacredness of Mother's Day to the frolicking of Muff Day. The Junior Week Committee under the aegis of Paul Dixon has arranged for a diverse program to round out the juniors' unique week.

Today the major event and kick-off for Junior Week is Mother's Day. Offering a welcome to the mothers via a Mass, favors, lunch, and entertainment, Mother's Day gives solemnity to Monday, May 3. The selection of the Diaper Dan adds amusement to the affair.

Tuesday, May 5 provides the athletically interested with an outlet for their feelings as the Junior Class Smoker will take place that night in Vasey Hall Auditorium. A movie, CAPE FEAR, will be shown while refreshments--hoagies and soft drinks--will be served.

The main event of the evening will be the presentation of awards to the top junior athletes and a guest speaker will be on hand to keynote the smoker.

On Wednesday, May 5, the Junior-Senior Muff Day will be presented as athletic events similar to those of the Orientation period will be featured. Chances for sweet revenge flitter into the juniors' mind as they remember the cruel happenings of that Muff Day in 1962.

The Friday night concert adds real zest to the Week's activities and should provide numerous people with an opportunity to see the famed folk-singing group in action. Memories of Peter, Paul, and Mary will dance in the heads of juniors after the affair is completed on Friday night.

A fitting climax to Junior Week arrives on Saturday night when the annual Dinner Dance enters the Downingtown Motor Inn.

Junior Dinner Dance To Be Held Saturday At Downingtown Inn

By Bob Dean

The Junior Dinner Dance will be held at the Downingtown Motor Inn on Saturday night, beginning at 7 p.m. The formal affair will take place in the Grand Ballroom of the Inn.

Joe Santomauro and John Rabenau, co-chairmen of the Dinner Dance, announced that entertainment will be provided by Lee Vincent and his orchestra.

From 7-8 p.m., a cocktail hour will get the event rolling; from 8-9 p.m., dinner will be served -- "a very good menu with Prime Roast Beef the main dish," -- said Santomauro; and from 9 to 1, all couples so inclined will take to the dance floor.

Tickets went on sale shortly before the Easter vacation at the cost of $18 a couple. Four couples will be seated at a table and any remaining tickets will be sold in the SGA office this week. These couples will fill any empty seats left in the tables.

Junior Queen Contest

Besides the dancing, dinner, and cocktails, a queen contest will be held, at which a Junior Week Queen will be chosen from five finalists. The finalists' pictures appear on page 6 of this issue.

Individual favors will be distributed to each couple at the Dinner Dance. Approximately 500 couples will attend the affair.

Santomauro commenting on the Dinner Dance said, "The affair should be a great success, due in part to the efforts of General Chairman Paul Dixon and (Jr. Class) President Frank Eck whose organization made it easier for our committee."

Other members of the committee are: Bob Fisch, Jim Griffin, and John Barone.

Smoker on Tuesday To Feature Movie, Awards and Speaker

By Joe Maffongelli

One of the major events of Junior week is the smoker. This affair will be held on Tuesday evening, May 4, in Vasey Hall Auditorium. Being an established tradition for the week, the smoker is a time for the Juniors to gather for an evening of relaxation and bull.

The chairman of this year's affair, Joe Santomauro, has worked very hard to put together a program which he feels everyone will thoroughly enjoy. Working hand in hand with his assistant chairman, Dave Banmiller, Santomauro has obtained a first rate speaker to accompany the movie which will be shown during the course of the evening.

"CAPE FEAR," a suspenseful drama which stars Robert Mitchum and Gregory Peck and features Polly Bergen is the film which Santomauro has selected to make the affair enjoyable for all. It is a movie which has been enjoyed in theatres all over the nation. "The underclassmen on the Main Line should not prove exceptions," said Santomauro.

The guest speaker of the evening will follow the athletic presentations which will be made to various members of the class of '66.

Refreshments consisting of hoagies and soft drinks will also be served. The cost of the evening will be held to a small donation.

All Juniors are cordially invited and urged to attend this event. The committeemen and all concerned have worked very hard to make the evening a success and this work can only be rewarded by a large turnout. The entire Junior week committee is very pleased with the organization of this affair, and they believe that it will be one more reason why this will be the best Junior week ever held at Villanova.

Jr. Week Committee Organization Good

Shortly before the semester break in 1965, Class President Frank Eck called the first meeting of the Junior Week Committee. General Chairman Paul Dixon then announced the ten subcommittees and their chairmen.

First on the agenda is Mother's Day. The chairmen of the event are Skip Camardo, Brian Banmiller, and John Barrow. Junior SGA Members Act As Effective Politicians

By Joe Linsalata

In every University there's an elite element of the student body who consider themselves a Harry Truman, an LBJ or to go to the other extreme -- a Warren G. Harding.

In Villanova's elite group, the Student Government Association, the senior conservative element constantly strive to pacify the younger, rebellious radicals in their attempts to overrule the administration.

Hearing the list of the younger radicals are 19 members of the Class of '66.

Always seen in the forefront of all political entanglements is the past secretary of the SGA and president-elect, Steve Freind.

Close by his side are his aides, Executive Secretary Betsy Grabowski and Parlimentarian Bob Dean. Incidentally, Dean has been elected Vice President of SGA for the coming year.

Other important Junior members of the SGA are Class President, Frank Eck; Dave Banmiller and George Valva, both representing the C&F School; Leo Carroll from the School of Arts and Science; Jim McDonnell and Bob Mentzinger standing in for the Engineers; and Roseanna Boylan representing the attractive element on campus -- the Nurses.

Carrying the half-votes from their clubs are Bob Kenin, Betty Kelly, Tom Krause, and Barbara Park.

Also sitting in are Tom Kelly, George Ackerson, Andy Donahue, Don Franz, and Brian Banmiller.

Steering Committee Has Class Co-ordinating Role

By Betty Kelly

The Junior Steering Committee of 57 members and 11 class officers did an excellent job this year co-ordinating class activities. Under the leadership of the Junior Class President Frank Eck, the Steering Committee was divided into subcommittees: Athletic, Class Directory, Practical Lecture Series, Special Problems, Entertainment and the Class Bulletin.

The Athletic Program, under Dave Banmiller, for Juniors was begun too late and conflicted with the present Intramural set up and therefore was dropped. Until recently, the Administration would not allow a class directory for general publication, and thus the class directory committee did not function. However, the administration will now allow voluntary directories to be compiled.

The Practical lecture series under Jim Griffin and Steve Freind was created to offer students lectures on a purely practical basis, and, as a result, had guests such as Mr. Moritz from the Placement Office, Dr. George from the Graduate School, Dr. Duffy from the Psychological Service on campus and several other guests speaking on a practical topic. The lectures were held in the afternoons so that students could easily attend.

Special Problems under Leo Carroll and Bob Birmingham decorated the float for the Junior class on Homecoming Weekend, and planned the events for this Junior Week.

George Valva and John Fenlen working for the Entertainment Committee provided the entertainment for the Class Party, Mothers Day and Junior Week.

The Class Bulletin which came out twice a month was under the co-chairmanship of Betsy Grabowski and Don Anderson. The Bulletin was printed for the information of the Junior Class in past and future happenings.

Shows and Luncheon Part of Functions Held Mothers' Day

By Barbara Park

Today, the twenty seventh Anniversary of Mother's Day, the class of 1966 pays a small but sincere tribute to its mothers.

Through the efforts of Brian Banmiller, Skip Commadro, and John Barrow, the Juniors have prepared a day which mothers should cherish and recall often as a memorable occasion. Mom's day on campus will begin with registration at 9 a.m. in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall. At this time mothers will be given corsages, and will have a chance to view the Diaper Dan entries.

After this, a full schedule of events has been planned. At 10:30 a.m. the Rev. Richard Appicci OSA will celebrate Mass at the Shrine of Our Lady of Good Counsel.

Immediately following the Mass, in accordance with the traditional aspects of Junior Week, Class President Frank Eck will make the presentation of the Class Memorial, the Class Tree, to the University. At 12:30 a.m., all will gather in the Field House for a luncheon prepared by Smythe Caterers.

Following the luncheon, the class of 1966's Diaper Dan, selected by a prominent mother, will be announced. The afternoon will come to a climax with entertainment provided by the Spires, Jim Croce, The Haveners and James Debesis.

Academic Leaders Get Deserved Recognition

By Jim Morgan

During Junior Week at Villanova the entire school takes time to look at the Junior Class and single out those members of the class who have distinguished themselves in some field. The athletes and class leaders receive their plaudits in the VILLANOVAN and the outstanding Junior members of campus activities are noted.

Junior Week is also the time to look at the academic leaders of the class. They are publicized during the year. Making the Dean's List is not as glamorous as going 90 yards for a touchdown or pulling down 15 rebounds. Being a standout in the academic realm does, however, represent the same degree of hard work and dedication which pays off in athletic scores.

John Walsh

The nine academic leaders of the Class of '66 are indeed worthy of praise for their consistently high scholastic achievement. The quantitative measurement of scholarship is the cumulative average or "cum." These nine have achieved and maintained what the general consensus labels "fantastic cums."

The College of Arts and Sciences is led by John J. Walsh, a Classics major from St. Clair, Michigan. John leads the leaders with a 3.94 average for five semesters.

James Giardina

Sharing honors with Walsh in Arts and Sciences is Joseph A. Torregrossa, III, another Classics major. Although a 3.86 in Classical Languages suggests Greece or Rome, Torregrossa comes from Brooklyn, N.Y.

James A. Giardina leads the College of Commerce and Finance with a 3.84 average. An Industrial Administration major, Giardina comes to Villanova from Bishop Loughlin High School in Flushing, New York, where he won a coveted Regents Diploma with Honors.

Henry P. Seager

Anthony R. Giachetti, Jr., an Economics major, is second in C&F with a 3.80. Giachetti hails from Glen Cove, N.Y.

The College of Engineering, generally acknowledged as the "toughest" College of the University, can boast the leader with the second highest average from among the nine. Henry P. Seager, who was a member of the National Honor Society at Immaculate Heart High School in Mahanoy City, Pa., has achieved a 3.93 average in the Electrical Engineering division.

Rodney P. Plaurde from the Civil Engineering division and Robert Jansen from Electrical Engineering have identical 3.88 averages. Plaurde, from Portsmouth, R.I., and Jansen, of Upper Darby, Pa., were both members of the National Honor Society while in high school.

Barbara Lowery

Barbara Lowery from the Nursing Division ranks third among the leaders with a 3.92. Barbara, from Malvern, Pa., is followed by Lorraine Anderson who has achieved a 3.86 in her 2-1/2 years at Villanova. Lorraine is from Wayne, Pa. Both Lorraine and Barbara had perfect 4.0 averages last semester.

President's Letter

Welcome to Our Mothers

This is your day . . . after two decades of care and worry on your part, the care and worry descends upon our shoulders . . . to make sure that nothing happens to you -- our dearest mothers. It would be senseless to try to thank you for all that you have done for us, from the gift of life to the agonizing concern you have bestowed on us through our short sojourn in time. But please accept our meager gratitude for the numerous times that you have comforted us in depression, cajoled us in apathy, and strengthened us in defeat.

Mother's Day is a drop in the unlimited bucket of thanks which each of the junior's mothers deserve. We welcome you to campus with joy in seeing that little spark of happiness in your eyes, in hearing that kind, loving voice offering words of confidence, and, most of all, in bringing a little joy into all your lives, no matter how fleeting that joy may be.

It is my pleasant task to welcome the mothers to campus and to wish them a happy Mother's Day. Please enjoy the day we have planned for you and remember that we'll always love you.

SINCERELY YOURS,
FRANCIS T. ECK
JUNIOR CLASS PRESIDENT

CLASS HISTORY

'66 Has Past And Future

By Bill McCloskey

The Class of 1966 this week will put the finishing touches on their first three years at Villanova, with the celebration of Junior Week.

It's been a long road but the members of the class have moved along it at what seems to many to have been breakneck speed.

By now, the takeover is almost complete. Steve Freind, a member of the class has been installed as President of the Student Government Association. Tom Krause is now Editor of the VILLANOVAN. Paul Dixon is President of the Blue Key. Roseanna Boylan is now the Editor-in Chief of OUR edition of the BELLE AIR.

By next May the 1966 yearbook will be in the hands of the student body and a full compilation of our history will be available. Yet, even today, the Class History is well worth retelling, as we take this brief time out to look back at the first three of our undergraduate years at Villanova.

Of course, like all classes, our first recollections of Villanova came from a college catalog extolling the beauty of the campus, competence of the faculty and practicality of the activities.

For us the argument was obviously a convincing one and we dutifully entered "Villanova" on the College Board's Answer Sheet where it asks to what schools to send your scores.

For some the marks were higher than they expected, and the admission letter from Father Smith's office came as quite a surprise. For others marks were lower than hoped for and these came to the Main Line only as a second choice.

Today, as we embark on Junior Week, we are a united class. Thanks for this unity go mostly to people like George Valva our first president, Frank Eck and now Jim Griffin who have followed George into the highest office in the class.

Looking Around

We have discovered a lot of things about Villanova that were never listed in that rosy blue and white picture painted by the Editors of the Catalog. By the same token, there are a lot of things on those pages that we still haven't managed to spot. We'll keep looking though.

After several letters welcoming us to the fold, we figured out which of the form letters applied to us and showed up on what, to my recollection, was an unbelievably hot day in mid-September, 1962. Off hand, I remember filling out several hundred forms which acquainted my draft board, chaplain, public relations man, home town newspaper, Dean, activities co-ordinator, and most of all O.C. that I was here.

I vaguely remember O. C. Charlie Zaccaria and O. C. Ernie Abate squiring me around the campus. We were permitted to walk across the "Upper Classmen's Walk" to Mendel Hall. We were then each fined 25¢ for the privilege. (We got back at the next group of Frosh).

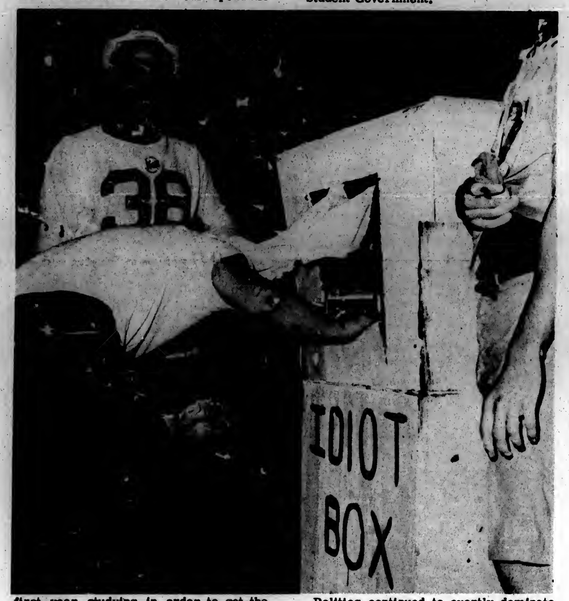
For some it wasn't too hard to figure out just which of the "Recommended Activities" we could skip; others were led like so many sheep through the mill that included such goodies as the "Activities Forum" where the Editors, Station Managers and Presidents of all of the major activities on campus tell you in terms more glowing than even the catalog, why THEIR club is THE ONE you should join. Actually, we get the feeling they could care less, but at the time, some enterprising member of the then Student Council felt it would be a good idea.

As the years progressed we became more and more engrossed in more and more of the various and sundry. We've all gone through the rigors of say: Math 115 or Bio 101 or Chem 101, or maybe Statistics or the omnipresent language and English Comp. courses.

Some directed their efforts toward the academic ends of the University and there are a couple of Class of '66 4.0s that show up in each compilation of Dean's List. Others directed their motivation toward extra-curriculars and today these are the ones that are about to be installed in the highest student positions in the University.

Those who have been busy in both the Activities and Academics will be represented in Who's Who come the Winter.

Diverse though the fields of endeavor were, the old adage, "politics makes strange bed fellows," helped to unify our class from the very beginning.



Our first election was to place a day-hop and resident representative to the Student Council. It pitted Al Becker and Mike Gill of the "Voice" Party against Bob Dean and Trinket Grubb of the "Rite" Party. Greg Galland and Tom Glennon also ran for the Resident Representative's slot won by Becker.

Bill Thomas, John Stevens and Robert Jansen ran against Miss Grubb and winner Mike Gill.

It was probably this race that really brought our class to a realization of student politics as 32% of the class showed up to vote. The new class leaders realized what a poor showing this was and went all out to get top flight candidates for the regular Student Council elections later in the Spring.

Jim Griffin, our newly elected President tells the story of his first campus political "draft." He says he decided when he came to Villanova that he would spend his first year studying in order to get the cumulative average needed to run for campus positions later in the academic career. He says he thought nothing about politics in that first year here.

"However," he says, "when it started to get close to elections and only one slate was proposed, someone came around the dorms just looking for someone with the 2.5 average. I had the average, so they asked me what office I would like to run for. I picked treasurer and was lucky and won."

It was this going out and looking for candidates by these few students that perhaps changed the vote total from the 401 who went to the polls on February 20, 1963, to the close to 800 which turned out to elect George Valva as President of the Class on April 4.

New Record

John Graziano tallied 512 votes in winning the Vice-Presidency. This vote total was more than all of those who voted in our first election. On a percentage basis, the vote set a new record for Villanova elections at 72% class participation.

Betsy Grabowski was elected Secretary that April, an office which she still holds with our class as a Junior today. Pat Mahady became our Resident Representative. As mentioned, Jim Griffin was elected Treasurer and Bob Gallo, day-hop representative.

With the Sophomores busy organizing our first election, (They would have been better off trying to improve on their own total vote of only 500) and people such as Steve Freind, Paul McGrath, and Bob Dean scouring the dorms and day-hop dining areas for candidates, we got all the boost we needed to make our Freshmen voices heard.

Both winner George Valva and losing Presidential Candidate Steve Freind congratulated their classmates for their excellent turnout. It was such after the election solidarity that brought on the unified class that stood ready to collect fines from the incoming Frosh the following September.

On April 24, 1963, it was announced in the VILLANOVAN that applications for the Orientation Committee would soon be available. The eight elected officers of the class reviewed them on May 3, and selected those who would ride into the valley of the Chemical Engineering pond on the shoulders of the incoming twelve hundred.

According to the records at the VILLANOVAN office, Pat Mahady was the first class member to propose a motion in Congress as a class officer. He co-sponsored a bill for a student directory. Ironically, this is still an issue today in Student Government.

Politics continued to overtly dominate the scene for the Class of '66 as Sophomores when Frank Eck and Brian Banmiller started early to build up steam for their pursuit of the Presidency in 1964. No one is quite sure when Eck started, but it was obvious that by the time the others got underway it was far too late to do a thing about it.

Eck says he entered Villanova having in mind that he would run for the Presidency of the class for the Senior year. He's not quite sure what changed his mind but he claims it was not the SGA Presidency that he had in the back of his head. He says the SGA election "just sort of happened" this year.

It is interesting to note that during our first two years here it was a member of the Class of 1966 that wrote the story on the elections for the VILLANOVAN issue of the week following the balloting.

In his story on April 22, 1964, Tom Krause, now editor of the paper, told of our class surpassing our previous record, as 74% of the class turned out to elect Frank Eck President, while the rest of another slate filled our other officers' positions.

Paul Dixon was elected vice-president; Jim Griffin, Treasurer and again Betsy Grabowski, Secretary. It was a close call for Betsy though for Greg Galland came within 54 votes. With as large a turnout as our class has, that is a close election.

It was in this election that Steve Freind started his quest for the SGA chairman's seat by being elected to a two year term by his day-hop peers in the College of Arts and Sciences. Leo Carroll was elected to a similar post by the residents of the College.

Jim McDonnell, Bob Metzinger, Dave Banmiller and George Valva were elected to the other posts in the SGA from our class.

It was during the 1964 election campaign that the "Great Debate" format was used to its fullest by our class and the class that preceded ours. Held in Vasey Hall Auditorium many of the members of the class got their first real chance to see what each of the candidates, Frank Eck and Brian Banmiller really stood for. The debates were broadcast for the first time on WWVU thanks to then Campus News Director now Station Manager Bill McCloskey of the Class of 1966, working in conjunction with Bob Dean another class member.

The debate format was continued this year when Jim Griffin faced Dave Banmiller in the Training Room on the top floor of Dougherty Hall, but the timing and location were not as good. For all intents and purposes, the debate was a bomb.

This may have been prophetic for the class has lost a lot in the past 12 months. We are falling apart and from where we sit it seems that petty politics is the reason.

The campaigning for this year's seats in SGA and class officerships pitted two completely different types of people.

Two Factions

There were the "Tweeds" and the "Outs." Call them what you will it is obvious to anyone in the class just who is who. There was back biting on both sides in the contest and all became fair in love and war. This was not a game of love but all out political war.

It seemed that none of us was above a little name calling, mud-slinging, arm twisting or what have you. The Johnson-Goldwater fiasco example is a good parallel.

Never before had there been a choice for Student Government President. This was the first year that saw no Vice-Chairman of Congress, so there was no heir apparent. The ones in Council had no one, really, to carry any type of tradition. The battle lines began to form in September, and carry right through to today.

But, as was the case with Eck in 1963 and '64, Steve Freind started looking early for support. By Christmas it was all down to a science. It didn't seem long afterwards that the Eck forces were challenging and the mud-slinging began. As indicated earlier, neither side is blameless.

Party lines were formed, basically, around Eck and Freind. Each had presidential candidates and so on, right down the line.

It finally became an election of an electoral college for Student Government rather than an election of class officers. In this way, each student in the class was electing a true representative to SGA, since it was well known who backed whom.

However, the elections are over and it is time to mend the bridges that were burned behind our candidates. No matter whose candidate won or lost it is certainly time for the class to come together again as we were in 1962 and 1963.

Good Candidates

It was well put by one Junior before the polls even opened on election day. He told one of the candidates, "You know, I plan to vote for your opponent, but I can really feel that it is not a vote against you. This class will be in good hands no matter who is leading it, and the same goes for the SGA."

– Prophecy –

A lot has happened in the last three years. Much of it would have happened without the Class of '66 but we remain convinced it would not have happened quite so well. As a group there is only one thing that can be said for us: "The Class of 1966, the class most likely to succeed."

CLASS PROPHECY

Rose Bowl Reunites Class

By John DiGennaro and Carol Egan

"Good evening, sports fans everywhere, this is Obby Noxious bringing you today's play-by-play of the 1999 Rose Bowl between Villanova and UCLA out here in sunny Pasadena. This is the first trip here for the Wildcats and they've brought with them a question that has been hogging headlines and buzzing through the sports world for the last couple of weeks. Namely, can these brash, young upstarts from the East, ranked number two nationally, successfully extend their unbeaten skein to 17 games against the top-ranked Uclans; or will the powerful Bruins send the Wildcats reeling back to the Main Line and make their first Rose Bowl appearance an unfortunate mistake.

"The class of 1966 has been invited as special guests of Villanova, and we'll try to pick some of them out for you now and while the game is in progress. I have just received word from our publicity director explaining why they chose the class of 1966 for representation.

"The explanation reads: It has been 33 years since they graduated, and 2 x 33 is 66. Furthermore, 1/3 of 99 is 33, and 33 is also the number of players on the Villanova roster of which 1/3 , or the starters, are the sons of members of the class of '66, and since 6 x 11 is 66 and 1/3 of 66 is 22 and there are 11 offensive and 11 defensive players on the team it stands to reason that the class of '66 is the natural choice." Incidentally, our publicity director is Bill Graham, better known as "Crackers," and since that unique piece of logical deduction makes as much sense as anything else he's ever said we'll have to accept it. I'm amazed how with dynamic minds like that they can rate Villanova as merely a 'track and field' power.

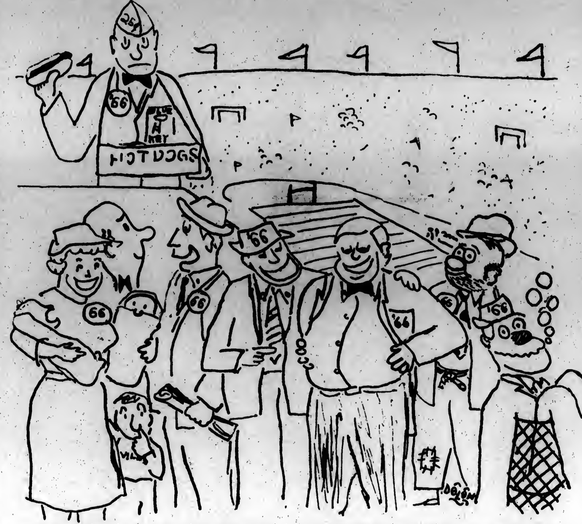
"I've just been handed the starting lineup cards, and somewhere out in the stands are 11 proud fathers from the class of '66 as they prepare to watch juniors perform. Starting for the Wildcats on the front line from end to end, left to right: "SEED" CARAWAY, JOE TORREGROSSA, PAUL VETTER, JOHN WALSH, PHIL MINO, PAT MAHADY, and "SPUD" WILLIAMS. At quarterback, since he's been known to throw the ball, BOB DOLON and behind him a trio of the hardest-hitting ground gobblers since the days of the "Horsemen," JOE "JOLTER" YUEN, "CRASHER" CARLISLE MORGAN, and "BRONCO" BOB MORGENSTEIN.

"We have a few minutes until game time so let's take a look through the stands as I promised. There's RAY "JACK BENNY" HOLLANDER, and his bride-to-be Marcia. He just gave the usher a dollar tip -- Oh no, it was attached to a rubber band. Well, he sure hasn't changed. There's DON FRANZ still wearing his Barry Goldwater button and walking in with GREG GALLAND -- not to be sarcastic, but he probably roots for the Mets and drives an Edsel, too. Sitting over in our section B are BOB WIHNYK, GEORGE VALVA, DAVE SLACK and their lovely wives; and right by them I see BOB MURPHY and MARTY INRA, two newly elected diocesan lay representatives and their mentor Father Halphen.

"Ah, it's good to see old ties still unbroken. Three old roomates, ROLLIE CARIGNAN, GEORGE POND, and LEO CARROLL, are sitting right next to one another --- handcuffed to police commissioners TONY CACCESE and JIM FARLEY. There's MIKE FARRELL, BOB BIRMINGHAM, CHARLIE HATFIELD, DON KOSHLAP, and MIKE KELLY, all members of the screening committee of one of America's larger organizations. Oh, Oh, they were screening DON ANDERSON and GARY GARBACCIO, but the boys seem to have had enough and are walking away indignantly.

"Over in section A, there's a group of some of the finest scholars ever to leave the "Blue and White," and they're still wearing their Moe sweatshirts -- What! gentlemen, too -- why they're all sitting around trying to make things comfortable for some little old lady, probably somebody's Grandma. They're all there, too, MENTOR, JIM, CONIG, HORNS, NARE, RODENT, GINK, and why there's MOE GEET, sound asleep; they must have just come from a party.

"Look over in section E, it's the crew from Brooklyn. There's JACK FITZPATRICK and TONY CARBONE all outfitted in stud duds from their square backs to their Voodoos. They sure are putting on quite a show -- sidewalk-surfing down the main aisle; and FRANK FLEMING is no better - tearing around the upper deck on his Honda. "SHACK" VETRANO and "JET" RUBINO, transformed into tweedies back in their college days, are all decked out in their tapered silks, but then again, I hear that's vogue in the underworld.



"I just got word that a special half-time dance will be done by "GYPSY" JOE GARIBALDI to the music of the BOB LAMPE quartet, known as "Poon's Goons." Also KEVIN FIDGEON will lead his "Leonia Loads" in for a special display of Rugby at its finest; it could prove quite interesting since all team members tip the scales at over 250. GEORGE CONWAY has promised to pole vault over the crossbars if JOHN CAPUTO, RAY CURRAN, and DENNY WEST do the "swim" to the music of CURT SEIFERT and his "Critters."

"There's also a few celebrities in the stands. The famous partners of the world-wide women's fashion design house, now setting financial records as the delicate designs turned out by "Connell-Studon the P.A. is retired Ocean City police chief DEXTER KLINE, and for the first time people seem to be listening to him. Speaking of Ed, his wife Monnie just presented with an Ed, jr. Unfortunately, the baby was born with just a mouth, but doctors expect the rest of him to grow around it -- I hear he's really a chip off the old block.

"BOB RYAN has just been elected president of the "Who Club," replacing former president Calvin Cranium, and he's out in the stands today with "Bad" WALLY HAVENS for whom the symbol of the club was named. GREG PEDEN was supposed to have come, but word has it that he's still floating around on an air mattress in his swimming pool watching "Shindig" on his pool-side television.

"JOE GALLIERA, DANNY FLORA, and JIMMY CARR have just hit the big time, getting to live in the "Dazziers" Paradise Arms third floor suite. They're so happy there, they couldn't leave, so they sent their butler, JOE MARSH, and a few of his friends, to take their places.

Brown" are being worn by women of stature everywhere, are sitting by newspaper magnate TONY LAMPAZZI and his cub reporter STEVE FREIND. I see TOM DABNEY, multi-millionaire owner of the "Carot-Top" Wig Company, is still buddies with BILL TUCKER, the famous Doctor of Philosophy and world-wide lecturer on the philosophical element of Shakespeare.

"JOE MARCIN, proprietor of "The Babe's Snack Bar" on the second level here, has been plagued by an undiagnosed red rash, and had to sell out to a character named "Bad Dan," who immediately hired JACK COONEY to sell hoagies, and JOHN DiGENNARO, GERRY McATEER, and JOHN CROUSHIRE to sell donuts. BILL CHULA, BOB DELLA CROCE, TOM SCHAEDLER, DICK SHORE, WALT APATH and BILLY CARNES are pushing their way around to try and buy some donuts, while LOUIE CAPUANO is creeping along behind the basket trying to steal some.

Word has just come over the P.A. that YOUNG LEVA, NICK ZACCARIA and RUBE DONAHUE have started a pinochle game behind the stands, and are looking for a fourth -- preferably one WALLY OSCAR. Speaking of cards, I hear that ED GIEGENGACK has extended his losing streak in "hearts" to 5,864 over a 34 year span, and that CHUCK PREAS is really pressing him for all-time losing honors. Incidentally, the man you hear running around laughing in a funny-looking sweatshirt with an arrow on the front and the name "Crazy" on the back.

"I see that JOE LINSALATA has taken time out from his Hollywood duties to join us, and DICK PAGE, head of technicians at Temple University Hospital in Philadelphia, has come with his singing staff aide JIM DEBESIS and their pet frogs. Sitting near them, flasks in hand, tongues wagging, and pretty red noses aglow, is the learned triumvirate of DON CAMPBELL, BOB GREENFIELD, and ED JOFFE. JOE O'DONNELL, one of the world's most unsuccessful ghost writers, is sitting there counting his "pie-shoppes."

I see my producer waving frenetically in the background so, if you'll excuse me, I'll turn over the mike to CAROL EGAN, world's foremost lady sports announcer and a graduate of Villanova ('66), who'll take you the rest of the way.

"Well here we are in the second half. UCLA's sun-tanned beauties are doing cartwheels in front of the South stands. Villanova's cheerleaders don't seem to be able to get the same response. Oh, wait a minute. Here comes BETSY GRABOWSKI and LORRAINE FARINO. That's the spirit, girls. The fans are going wild. One of them is running from the bleachers waving a black and yellow hat frantically. He's calling for a "V" -- why, it's GEORGE VRIONIS. He hasn't changed a bit. Wait a minute. George just relinquished the microphone to TOM KELLY. Damn right! That's the way to cheer.

"There's a couple of suspect people invading the press box now. They have press passes from 1966. Oh, I know the fellas. Yes, it's JIMMY BRENNAN, BOB FENNEL, BOB ELSCHNER and MATT ROCHE. What's that -- you're looking for TOM KRAUSE. Yes, I saw him wandering around the stadium a couple times. He was looking for the Frankford El. O.K., if I see him, I'll tell him to reclaim his date.

"We have a little bit of drama going on in the NQ section of the stands. Old MIKE SUTHERLAND and CONAL BYRNE are giving the fans around them a new interpretation of that last kick-off. These are cheap binoculars I'm using but I think I see CAROL DONAHUE looking on in wide-eyed admiration.

"This display brings old Belle Masque members running from all directions. MIMI McFALLS just tripped RICK GALLI in her hurry to make the scene. Yes, and here comes RICKY HOBDELL and JEFFRA DIEN. The performance can't be that good, though. I just noticed that BETTY KELLY is sound asleep.

"The NS section has just divided into three parts. You won't believe this, ladies and gentlemen, but the entire section is singing "The Magnificat" led by BARRY BURN and MARGIE WALSH -- old Glee Club Presidents. Oh, if only Father Doherty could only fly here to see this. There's VALERIE HERBSTRITT singing with JOHN GRAZIANO and FRANK ROMANO. Way down with the altos we have JAN MONTERO, ANNETTE PACZKOWSKI, PAT GRADY and PAT HERLIHY showing PHIL MALARKY and HARRY McCREEDY how to hit those high notes. STEVE ALCHERMES was trying to work in a little rhythm with a tamborine when JIMMY WASHINGTON pulled him out of the stands.

"Former second soprano MAUREEN CORR was trying to make it across the field to join the chorus but was detained by TOM WESTHOFF, BILL TUCKER, BOB FISCH, TOM PRIORY and JOHN FENLON, who insisted she finish telling a joke instead.

"Oh, there's a brawl going on now in the south stands. Former POLITICO head GREG LEONARD must have irritated GENE FITZMAURICE in some way, because the place is in an uproar. Here comes JIM CLARK trying to break it up but he fails in his attempt. LEO CARROLL obviously feels that this is a responsibility of Blue Key and he is running to the disaster area with PAUL DIXON, JIMMY GRIFFIN and DAVE BANMILLER, all determined to uphold the good name of Villanova. Griffin, incidentally, has recently opened a new reservation for half breed Indians.

"ROSEANNA BOYLAN is rushing to the scene waving a camera. The former BELLE AIR Editor, I understand, now photographs for the Blue Key Alumni News.

"Not too much has been happening in the field the second half and FRANK ECK, SANDY FORTUNATO, JIMMY MORGAN and NANCY HAMMEL are approaching the referee for an explanation. Nancy, a football fan from way back to the 1962 season on the Main Line, is demanding fair play for Villanova football players.

"Referees JOE MAFFONGELLI and JOHN O'LOUGHLIN are telling the committee that they will do their best to see that Villanova gets a few breaks.

"I just got a report from JOHN BARROW and BRIAN BANMILLER that IGGY TRAYNOR and his wife TRUDY are having a small reception at the MANOR for all the athletes from the Class of 1966.

"Well, I guess that's about it for the UCLA-Villanova game here in Pasadena. The Marine Band is striking up "Hail to the Chief" as a familiar member of the Class of '66 is ushered into his limousine by the Blue Key members.

"The stands are emptying out a little, although REENIE CORR has to tell BOB FISCH one more joke and those old Belle Masque members are reviewing their entire repertoire in the top row of the stadium.

"So that's the story, folks. One more Villanova win in the records. Chalk up another one also for the Class of 1966."

The Little Things

By Barbara Greehey

To the outsider observer, Villanova is another campus or university or basketball team. Only after you've served time at an institution of higher learning can you fully appreciate its singularities and prize them always, I'm sure, as graduates.

This space is dedicated to people, places, and events at Villanova that have long gone unheralded. The spotlight is now on these anonymities, till now unapplauded.

First of all, there will be a general distribution of maps and a numbered parking space system to make for ease in finding your car or cycle in the tin jungle.

So as to clear my conscience, I would like to return everything I took from Villanova stadium - namely, three thousand, two hundred and fifty splinters.

To the football team goes a supply of foot rests in thanks for holding up the Pie Shoppe wall for so long.

At this time a Foundation will be started to raise funds for the enlargement of the Pie Shoppe. Despair, for the space is little and the people many.

To the nurses go long deserved wash and wear uniforms and a four years' supply of pink permission slips. A course in Irish brogue and a four leaf clover (better luck next year) are given to those who attended women's retreat.

Next, the residents' cafeteria ramp will be equipped with skate boards - since it's the best hill on campus. A poetic license will be awarded to the creative author of the meal menus.

Fifty snow shovels or a large liability insurance policy will be donated to the school maintenance department. A committee is being organized now to pick the buds off the trees so there won't be any leaves to rake in the fall.

A free fish dinner at Aquarama (if anyone from Villanova can get in) goes to whomever takes care of the goldfish in the engineers' pond. Where do they go in the winter, anyway?

A first aid station will be constructed at the intersection of Lancaster Pike and Ithan Avenue. Tranquilizers will also be distributed here to motorists using these roads around the time for change of classes.

A team of interior decorators is being interviewed and it will have the job of renovating Vasey Hall and some of the other buildings now done so tastefully in "early American massacre."

To the mausoleum, where books and periodicals are buried, goes a complimentary copy of the new non-fiction work- HOW TO FIND BOOKS AND INFLUENCE PEOPLE.

Lastly, I would like to give an automatic with a silencer to the presiding officer of the Political Union as a replacement for his gavel. I think he'll have better luck with it.

Reflections

By Terry Mills

Do you remember how it was back in the fall of '62 when some twelve hundred assorted Freshmen descended upon the campus? Rather stunned, the bewildered group chanted in unison to the dictates of the fearsome O.C.'s. Rolled up trousers, bow ties and dinks became the uniform of the day. West Chester fell as we growled the Cats to victory. The Tiki Ball ... "We'll win Muff Day." ... No More Regs ... Seems like yesterday.

We've come a long way. Many of the prominent names on campus are Juniors, both in the fields of student government and activities and in the field of athletics. Academically we've made strides and a large number of honor students come from the ranks of the Junior Class.

Villanova is a school on the move; it is much more than a cluster of buildings spread along U.S. Route 30; it is an infectious spirit which will remain with us long after the Class of '66 has departed. It is the quiet of the library, the tension of the exam room, the roar of the Palestra. It is many things to many people. Whether our goals have changed or remained the same, the choice of coming to Villanova seems to have been a wise one.

The friendships that we have made at Villanova will endure far into the future. The broad background of the years spent on the Main Line will prepare us to assume our places in far-off communities in varied professions.

Soph Cotillion ... Another Homecoming ... The Chad Mitchell Trio ... Now the Christmas Tournament ... N.C.A.A. ... 24-4.

We have always been willing to support any activities and the present Junior Class has often been the key to success for an affair. Each year brings some new endeavor but we seem to work well together.

Snow in Bullalo lost us a bowl game. Roundball again ... Providence N.I.T. What! Junior week already.

An Educational Sojourn

By Wayne Hupfer

Having been a student here at Villanova for nearly three years, I find the task of sitting back and analyzing my own progress to be quite fascinating. However, I am not here mentioning merely those changes that I believe have taken place in me, but rather I seek to point out the manner in which ALL of us, as Juniors, are different than we were three short years ago.

The courses that most of us have taken here probably do not themselves justify my conviction that our minds are more keen now than they were three years ago. At that time, most of us had read every one of Shakespeare's plays, memorized all of the atomic numbers of the elements and gone over all of American History from the Revolutionary War to the Korean Conflict. Thus, it is doubtful that we know much more now in terms of factual data, then we did when we matriculated.

Yet I would have to say that the greatest single gift that we have received from our three years at Villanova has been a kind of appreciation - an awareness of the enormous value of education, both for the individual and for society. In addition, our courses in English and American literature, philosophy, science, theology, psychology and mathematics have enabled us to realize the wonderful connection and interdependence of each of these areas upon the other.

Villanova has given all of us the key to the meaning of man and the meaning of his life, and it is because of this great gift, if nothing else, that we can honestly say that these last three years have not been wasted.

'It Is Our Junior Week'

On Second Thought

By Eugene Fitzmaurice

It is our Junior Week. It is the time for all of the shining young men to adjust the too-large carnations and agonize over the proper way to set the pleats.

It is our Junior Week. It is the time for all of the glittering young women to step from Fitzgerald's hold and lean across the table to hear the hollow words of all the doomed Divers' who pursue them.

It is our Junior Week. It is the time when the young men will honestly believe that it is the best of all possible weekends, and the young ladies would not choose to believe anything else. It is the time when the chances lost and the opportunities taken are recounted and the all too familiar pledges are made.

It is the Junior Week of a class which can never look back to its concert or dance as their own, because the music of one is for all times, and the music of the other not really at all. Our class, all of our fellows, are caught up in the time, which must be unique, when the music seemed only a conditioning for later actions, and when there were no songs to become bittersweet.

TWO MINUTE WITTICISMS

It is the Junior Week of a generation which takes its witticisms from the two minute extemporizings of Eric Sevareid and its values from TW3.

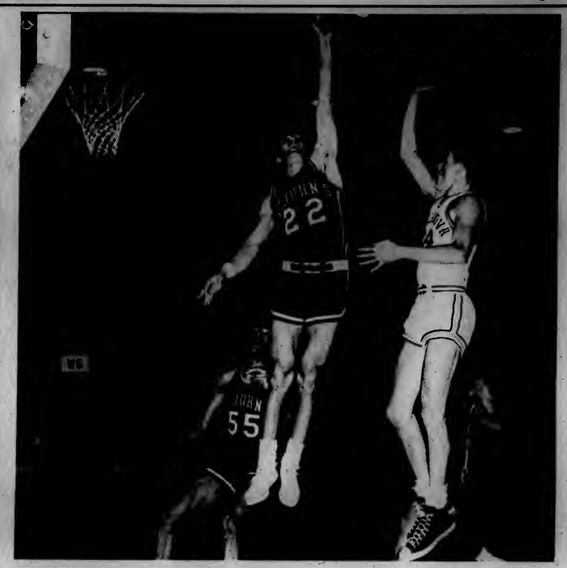
It is the seven days when only those things which appeal to us should be considered. And that is exactly the way that we view them.

We have constructed a 20 pennyweight circle within which we wait to see what must be seen, and then look out only through pleasant shades of our own choosing.

When we seize upon a cause, it is one safely radical, and weighed not to determine its merits and faults, but only to decide its self-serving content.

It is the Junior Week more than any other that will set the accountants at their own tables, admitting no others; when the historians will look down on the educators; when they will look down on the nurses, and they on others. It is the time when we do this because our patterns are formed and our ends are set.

If we aim high, it is only because we look to make our compromise all the more tolerable. We never look to the chance that a compromise might not need to be made.



THRESHOLD OF ADULTHOOD

We are standing now in an entryway into adulthood. We will continue to stand there until the drafts of days lost slam shut the doors into hope and fulfillment.

We are enrolled in a prestige school. Our athletes are successful. The campus is sufficient for any impresssions that we might wish to make. Our date is attractive enough to withstand the critical eyes of our fellow students. We are neither hungry nor in physical danger. The most difficult part of our education has gone by. Now we need only bide our time and all things which we desire, both good and rare, will come to us.

It is our Junior Week. It is a time of absolute contentment. Perhaps that is what mars our dream.

Junior Stars Replete In Villanova Sports

By Joe Maffongelli

It has been said that a grid team is only as good as its quarterback. DAVE CONNELL, a Monsignor Bonner grad, handled the chores of that position very capably last season, and he deserves a large share of credit for the 'Cats 6-2 record. Being an elusive runner, Connell accounted for 34 points on his own last season; he also threw five touchdown passes. In addition, he is considered one of the best punters in the East having averaged 36.3 yds. per boot. Having this 6-2 lad at the helm next season may spell disaster for enemy defenders.

Playing right half for the '65 'Cat eleven, as he did so well last season, will be JOE SANTOMAURO. Being rather light at 185 lbs., Santomauro compensates for every pound with an extra burst of speed. The scatback is a murderous break-away threat on end sweeps as well as a competent pass receiver.

The third junior starter from last year's backfield is "big" TOM BROWN. This miniature steamroller is out to prove that the need for a fullback to exceed 230 lbs. is a pure fallacy. Weighing only 195 himself, Brown accounted for some 515 yds. rushing last season. His 6.4 yds per carry ranked among the top in the nation. The little giant also hauled in five passes for another twenty yards.

The '64 'Cat line has been called the best in Villanova history by many. Though the majority of that group will be departing from the Main Line next month the center (of attraction) will return. Jolly ROGER AGIN will be around to anchor an entirely new contingent of granite blocks. Being big at 235 lbs., Agin is especially valuable for power plays off his center or guard. At the same time his agility is still sufficient for capable pass blocking.

In JOHN KELLEHER coach Bell has one of the best split ends in the East. The 6-3 flanker from Lawrence, Massachusetts, is always a threat on the long pass. He tied captain John McDonnell with 10 pass receptions last season, but his share accounted for 247 yds. and three touchdowns. These figures were easily highs for the squad.

Another junior stalwart at the end position was RICH FABRIZIO. Though not a spectacular flanker, Fabrizio is a capable blocker and excels on defense. His presence will make the going tough when the opposition takes to the outside lanes next season.

Basketball

No introduction is necessary for the "cyclops" as he's known around campus. BILLY MELCHIONNI led all scorers in '64-'65 with 19.5 points per game while shooting at a 43.5% average throughout the season. Having stepped in for Wally Jones upon the latter's retirement, Melchionni's worth was fully realized when sickness prevented him from a 40 minute appearance in the finale of the NIT.

BERNIE SCHAFFER is a 6-5 "sixth man" from Bryn Mawr. However, on more than one occasion his clutch rebounding has made him number one in the hearts of all 'Cat fans. The 109 rebounds which he did share throughout the season is only a preview of things to come.

The only other third year cager was KEVIN "IGGY" TRAYNOR. Playing his first year of varsity ball in any capacity, the 6-0 Bonner grad showed many signs of adept ball handling and real hustle.

Baseball

The most outstanding junior diamond man to date has been BILL BERGOLD, judging from past performances. Bergold, from Cleveland, has now spent two seasons putting together his powerful bat and gleaming glove to harass opponents. We look to even further improvement from Bill in the coming year.

DION VONDERLIETH is the 'Cats' pride and joy at shortstop. The Ridgefield, N. J., product started out slowly last season, but has blossomed into one of the best infielders in the area. He is a major factor in a potent 'Cat double play act.

JOHNNY EDWARDS is a powerful outfielder who will again strengthen the diamond men's batting order. His glove is also competent, but coach Mahan appreciates his use of the wood even more.

When Artie Mahan broke his collar bone before the season he was replaced by PAUL PECORARA. Pecorara has always been a flawless fielder, but his bat has just gotten into the full swing of things. He'll probably step into the keystone spot full time next year.

JOHN PATANE, the third year manager, has done a fine job in the past; and he is a credit to both the club and his class.

Track

"Jumbo" Elliott has built Villanova into a track coach's dream. The junior representation on this club is no exception to the usual 'Cat caliber.

KEN CONIGLIO had a rough indoor season due to a pulled muscle. His leg is in good shape now however; and he is looking forward to the IC4A'S in which he made such a good showing last season. He plans to team with fellow hurdlers Larry Livers and JOHN COUSHORE to form the nucleus of an outstanding hurdle relay team. Coushore, another junior, is also a capable broad jumper.

One of the best 220 men in the East is EARL HORNER. Besides placing fourth in the 60 yd. dash event of the last IC4A'S indoors, he participated in the National AAU's in a grand fashion.

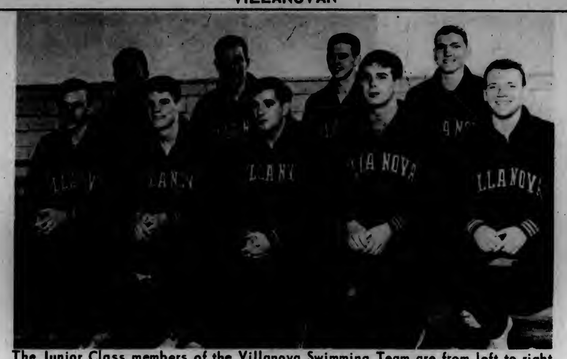
PRENTISS YANCEY suffered through an indoor season hampered by a leg injury of the same nature as Coniglio's. He still managed to run with the 440 relay in the BALTIMORE SUN Meet. He is looking forward to a good spring with the 880 relays and the quarter mile.

Little GEORGE CONWAY is the team's leading pole vaulter. Though he remains in the shadows of Rolando Cruz, he is number one in the hearts of all his fellow third year counterparts.

CHARLIE PREAS is a junior threat in the broad and triple jumps. He contributed valuable points in last year's Queens Iona Meet with his surprising performance.

Swimming

RAY DONNELLY, a two time All-American who hails from Connecticut, leads the third year 'Cat-Fish. He holds a school record in the 50 yd. freestyle and was a member of VU's best 400 yd. freestyle relay.



KENNY HERR is a third year standout in the relay events. He has been a member of the 400 yd. medley cast which holds the school record, and the 200 yd. edition which captured the national mark last season.

Also in that championship medley group is BILL LIVINGOOD. The smiling Sayrite has school records in the 100 and 200 yd. breastroke to his credit. He came through with a sixth in the eastern championships to the tune of 57:1 in the 100 backstroke.

Off the board (diving board that is) BOB BIESE is one of the best in the 'Cats' history. The 5-8 junior engineer from the Garden State scored over 100 points in a meet no less than five times in '64-'65. Bob culminated his season with an eleventh place finish in the easterns.

RAY CURRAN is the junior manager of mermen who has made coach Geisz's job much easier. He is also a credit to '66.

Here have been mentioned but a few of the many athletic assets of our Junior Class. We wish to express to them all our undying gratitude for their part in making the class of '66 the best ever at Villanova.

Who'll Win Muff Day?

Remember those heart-rending days back in 1962 when the ten sophomores managed to defeat the struggling freshmen in a disputed Muff Day victory? Well, another chance to get even arrives on Wednesday as the Junior-Senior Muff Day - part of Junior Week - provides a battle field for the two classes.

Rick Livingstone in charge of the juniors and Jack Peters in charge of the seniors have announced that a similar format to that of Orientation Muff Day will be followed for the soon-to-be-accomplished Muff Day. Softball and volleyball will be featured due to the season and some football events will take place.

The events will occur in the afternoon probably on Mendel Field. Juniors - participants and non-participants - are asked to watch for announcements for definite times and places.

'Unsung' Heroes Fill Necessary Positions In Shadows of Stars

By John DiGennaro

Headlines are reserved for stars, but winning teams must go a step further. Their success depends not solely on individual performance, but on the depth and versatility of their bench.

The bench is the home of the unsung hero; the boys who put in as much time, and practice just as hard, but must wait for either injury or situation to pave their way into the game.

The boys sitting, hoping, waiting for their big chance, or who, a la Frank Ramsey, realize their value lies in spot service. The boys too often belittled by the campus know-it-alls, but who could run rings around any of these loudmouths.

Last year saw Larry Jones, Jerry Strid, and Harry Walter, three rugged 230 pound tackles, relegated to second line duty. These victims of circumstance happened to arrive at the same time Villanova was sporting its finest line in history, and to make matters worse all three were hampered by injuries during some part of the season.

However they all saw plenty of game time, and are being counted upon to anchor this year's forward wall. Dave Capozzi, and Al Becker, a couple of 215 pound roommates, are also expected to help replenish the line stripped bare by graduation.

Track

Bob Cubbin, a likable little half-miler, has been running in the shadow of a world record breaking crew, but the ability is there along with the experience, and "Cubs" should pull in some valuable points this season. Joe O'Neill and Chuck Preas, a pair of lithe leapers, could be the answer to the point draught in field events, provided they hurry and hop, step, and jump to their full potential. Hal Croft, a fiery, hustling, bundle of dynamite might just explode this year, and if he does, he may prove a pleasant surprise in the sprints.

The '66 "Catfish" are represented by Tom Brennan, butterfly; Bob Frey and Pat Sullivan, backstroke; and Denny West and Jim Rowley in the free style events. These boys have helped make a good team a powerhouse, by giving it the depth to place more than one man in individual events, thereby racking up the points by which meets are won.

The diamond is just a stone's throw away from the pool, and they're at no loss for juniors over there either. Ed Parello, a righthanded junk thrower, is expected to give the relief corps the middle distance man they're in such dire need of; and if he flashes any of his old high school form he could develop into one of the best hurlers in the area.

Joining Parello in the "Catpen," and also counted upon heavily, is Tommy Sofield, a righty curve ball specialist out of Longbeach, New York. George Pond, a husky six-footer with a bullet arm and a booming bat, is a proven wearer of the tools of ignorance.

Plagued by injury for the past two seasons, if he ever gets healthy opposing pitchers and runners are in for trouble from this solid two-way performer. Coach Mahan has good infield depth with first baseman John McMillan, a dangerous long ball hitter, and vacuum-gloved utility infielder Johnny Stevens. Outfield insurance is provided by Paul Pucalik, a scrappy lefthanded hitter, and a good defensive grass roamer.

Minor Sports

Rugby, along with Lacrosse, are two sports in which all the participants are virtual unknowns. This is not due to lack of talent, but rather to lack of interest on the part of the school and the student body. The following two juniors are as worthy of recognition as any other athlete on campus.

Kevin Fidgeon has been a rugby star ever since freshman year. This 250 pound "Pachyderm" is practically unstoppable, and constantly belitties opponents with his dazzling combination of strength, mobility, and bone-shattering tackles.

Although he never played lacrosse until he came to Villanova, "Twilight" Hollander has developed into a pretty potent stick wielder. A rugged six-footer, he has improved steadily each season, and this year looks ready to put what he has learned to good use.

Steve Freind Assumes Reins; Summons New SGA Into Motion

by Walt Baginsky

An Historic Student Congress Session of April 28 marked the commencement of a new era at Villanova - an era of renewal as well as change. Tom Furst's year of reign came to an end as he bequeathed to Steve Freind the presidency of the Student Government Association.

President Freind, because of the very lengthy congress session and lateness of the hour that evening, was unable to deliver his formal acceptance address, but in spite of this, did express his belief that "next year could be the best year yet for the S.G.A. if all congress members work together with the student body."

NEW APPOINTMENTS

Freind also announced his new appointments for next year; Executive Vice-President for the Student Government, John Graziano; Executive Vice-President for Student Affairs, Bob Dean; Executive Vice-President for Educational Affairs, Frank Eck; Executive Secretary, Betsy Grabowski, and Parliamentarian, Tim Coyle.

Also, chosen by the Associated Student Government of the U.S.A. as regional Chairman was Dave Banmiller, class of '66.

Among the multitude of awards rendered at the meeting was a memorial plaque to be given to the family of the late Captain John Murphy, a token of sincere sympathy on the part of the S.G.A.

A "practical" award was also given to Father Appicci in the form of an attache case which held inside two tickets to the Broadway musical 'Hello Dolly.' The final award to be given that evening was an ingraved gravel plaque awarded to Tom Furst by Steve Freind.

Also, at the historic session, the election of new senate members was undertaken. The following members from the class of 1966 were elected: Dave Banmiller, Leo Carrol, and Prentiss Yancey. From the class of 1967, those elected were Dick Behrens and Frank Samer and for the class of 1968 the senators include Jim D'Agostino and Jay Meginniss.

Annual Junior Week Events Feature Peter, Paul and Mary

by Steve Buck

Villanova's annual Junior Week began Sunday night and the festivities will continue throughout the week. Highlighted by the Peter, Paul, and Mary concert, the class of 1966 will attend a variety of functions during the week.

Junior Week opened with a Mother's day concert given by the Villanova Singers, the Villanova Band and the Women's Glee Club, Sunday night in the Field House.

On Monday morning a Mass and class dedication were held in the grotto, followed by a lunch in the Field House and Benediction. The annual Junior Week issue of the VILLANOVAN came out the same day. The paper was written completely by Juniors and it featured the history, activities, and members of their class.

JUNIOR SMOKER

Last night the Junior Smoker was held in Vasey Hall Auditorium. This is a traditional event of the week's festivities. Tomorrow afternoon athletic contests will be held between the Juniors and Sen-

Soph Spring Outing To be Held at Malvern

by Jeff Radowich

Jeff Radowich, Sophomore Charity Outing Chairman, announces that the outing will be held on Saturday, May 8, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

For the first time, the entire outing will be held off campus, professional entertainment will be on the program, swimming will be available for the children, free transportation will be provided for the "parents for a day," and the emphasis will be on participation by the group.

NORTH PHILADELPHIA

In addition, the children are, a precedent, as they are not orphans, but children from an underprivileged neighborhood in North Philadelphia.

More significantly, the Sophomore Charity Outing Committee, was organized in a completely different manner for this year's project.

Normally, this committee merely carried out the program that had been decided by the class officers. This year, however, the group not only implemented but legislated; that is, they made all decisions themselves in the form of a recommendation of alternatives to the officers and moderator.

Not one of any of the seven sub-committee's recommendations were denied by either the officers or the moderator.

CLASS PARTICIPATION

The results indicate that this type of organization is not only a way of achieving more class participation in class projects, but, if properly coordinated, produces an excellent and unique program for the day.

General Chairman Jeff Radowich, in charge of the overall program, gave the credit for the Charity Outing to the committee members, and to the subcommittee chairmen.

CREDIT DUE

In his words, "The sub-committee chairmen are the real backbone of an organization like this, and the efforts of Art Johnson, Frank Samer, John Dougherty, Jim Donegan, Ed Yarrish, Jim Proud, Steve Seitz, Ed Cunningham, Paul Sorrentino, and Brenden Brett, the Coordination Chairman, certainly were fundamental to the success of our project. But behind them were the individual members and without their dedication, any outing at all would have been impossible."

The Outing will be held this coming Saturday at Malvern Prep from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Tickets are two dollars a couple; transportation and lunch will be provided. There are still a few tickets left on sale in the Pie Shoppe.

Prof. Link to Speak At History Lecture

by Tara Siegal

The Department of History will present its final public lecture of the school year on Tuesday evening, May 11, at 7:30 in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall. Professor Arthur S. Link of Princeton University will speak on "Woodrow Wilson: the Life of Faith in Politics."

WELL KNOWN SCHOLAR

A well known scholar in the field of twentieth-century American history, Professor Link has distinguished himself by his research in the subject of Woodrow Wilson's presidency. The fourth volume of his biographical study of Wilson was published this spring; two previous volumes in the same series received the Bancroft prize, awarded by Columbia University for distinguished historical writing.

TAUGHT AT PRINCETON

After receiving his doctorate from the University of North Carolina in 1945, Professor Link taught at Princeton, and was a member of the department of history at Northwestern University from 1949 to 1960. He served also as Harmsworth Professor of American History at Oxford University in 1958-59.

In 1960 Professor Link returned to Princeton as professor of history and undertook supervision of the publication of the papers of President Wilson, a major project in the publication of historical documents being carried on at Princeton.

Professor Link's lecture on Tuesday is open to the public.

WWVU staff smiles after learning of their appointment.

Noted Biblical Scholar Talks at CCD Lecture

The Confraternity of Christian Doctrine will present Rev. Wenceslaus J. Pilch, O.F.M., who will discuss, "Thomism and its Relation to Modern Biblical Theology," tonight, May 5, in 110 Bartley.

Among the most important issues which the present Ecumenical Council has discussed is the relation between new Biblical criticism and traditional theology. Since for the last 500-600 years traditional theology has been centered upon the doctrine of St. Thomas Aquinas, the controversy has been -- Does the theology of St. Thomas fulfill the demands of modern society? Can it be made compatible with modern Biblical studies?

Fr. Pilch is a keen student of Biblical reserch. He is a member of the staff of a periodical, NEW TESTAMENT ABSTRACTS. He is a contributing editor for two magazines, FRANCISCAN MESSAGE and MIESIEECZNIK FRANCISZOKANSKI, in which he has written about current theology. For the periodical THEOLOGICAL STUDIES, he wrote "An Existential Approach to Sacred Scripture." Fr. Pilch has spoken at Temple University and LaSalle College, and is expected to speak soon at the University of Pennsylvania. The lecture, will be held at 8 p.m. tonight, in 110 Bartley.

Fr. Louis Rongione Garners Two Posts At CLA Convention

Father Louis A. Rongione, OSA, moderator of the VILLANOVAN and University Librarian, recently was named to two positions of national prominence.

At the annual convention of the Catholic Library Association held during the week of April 19, Father Rongione was elected national chairman of the Library Education Section.

The second important position that Father has recently received came when he was elected president of the Catholic Audio-Visual Educators at the National Catholic Educational Convention.

George Washington Letter Stolen From Falvey Library

A Rembrandt etching ... and a letter written by George Washington have "apparently been stolen" from the Falvey Memorial Library on the Villanova Campus.

The Rembrandt original is valued at upwards of $500. There has been no value placed on the other cultural item.

The etching hung on the wall of the stairwell between the first and second floors of the library. The letter was on display on the wall of the Reference Room, the most frequently used room in the student library.

The Washington piece has been in the Villanova library for as long as anyone on the staff can remember. John McVey, a former Philadelphia Publisher, now deceased, donated the etching.

The loss was discovered last Tuesday evening by Ward Donnelly, an employee of the Falvey Library. He reported the apparent loss to Rev. Louis Rongione, OSA, the Library's Director. He immediately checked with employees to make sure that the items were not out for repairs or retouching. When it was determined that they were not, the campus Security Force was notified.

Their investigation was culminated Friday and the announcement was that the items "had apparently been stolen." Radnor Township police were notified, and it is understood that they are preparing descriptions of the items to distribute to police agencies around the country.

The Washington letter was dated November, 1799, from Mt. Vernon, the first President's Virginia homestead.

Ed Note: After the press deadline, it was learned that the etching had been returned.

Champion Chairman

by Joe Maffongelli

The Junior class is presently in the midst of celebrating what may well turn out to be one of the best class weeks in Villanova history. At the same time the third year men are benefitting from the efforts of a class government par excellence. The success of the class week is due largely to the efforts of one man. This man is a vital part of the superior class administration: Paul Dixon.

Paul Dixon, a product of Massapequa Park, New York, is presently serving in the capacity of general chairman of Junior Week. Assisted by a capable group of individuals Mr. Dixon has coordinated the various events into a rather spectacular affair. This will probably be realized by all juniors come next Sunday morning at its close.

Although it would be impractical to attempt any catalog of Paul's activities on the Main Line campus, it is well to point out that the vice-president of the class of '66 has recently been elected to the position of Blue Key president. Such an honor speaks for itself.

To coin a phrase the efforts of this Villanovan will definitely leave their mark on his future alma mater. He can definitely look forward to a future marked with achievement if his college career proves to be any criteria.

At the meeting, which began at 7:30 P.M. and lasted for three hours, Mr. Rashad Mourad was the scheduled speaker. Mr. Mourad is the United Nations representative for the Arab League. He spoke in favor of the resolution that the United States should not extend any military aid to Israel at the present time. The resolution, however, was defeated by one vote.

The Political Union, moderated by Mr. Logue of the Political Science Department, is planning for speakers next year. One of the proposed speakers is the Junior Democratic Senator from Alaska, Ernest Gruening, who recently spoke to the demonstrators protesting U.S. action in Viet Nam.

Belle Masque Society Plans 'A Man for All Seasons'

by Joe Linsalata

With the quality of undergraduate college theatre in the Philadelphia area at a peak, the Belle Masque Society has decided to "think big" and surpass all other colleges. So, through arrangements with Samuel French Drama Service in New York City they have obtained permission to stage Robert Bolt's sensational hit A MAN FOR ALL SEASONS. The dates for the production are conditionally set for November 11, 12, 13 and 14, and it will be in the Fieldhouse.

The play was first per ormed in London in 1961 with the veteran Shakespearean actor Paul Scofield in the lead role as St. Thomas Moore. In New York it was Scofield again as St. Thomas when it opened at the ANTA Theatre in November of 1961. Since then the play has been presented in most of the major cities in the United States. Included among them was its successful week at Philadelphia's John B. Kelley's Playhouse in the Park last summer.

PLOT

Basically the play is the culmination of the crises between King Henry and Thomas Moore. But it is the story of St. Thomas Moore -- the man -- not the Saint.

Mike Sutherland, the recently-elected president of Belle Masque, has decided that during the past year the society neglected the taste of the student body in selecting the plays to be presented. To solve the problem, he is attempting to enlarge the membership and cater to a larger prospective audience.

GOALS

The first goal was to select a play of prominent critical acclaim and one acceptable to the students. The play selection committee had no problems unanimously accepting A MAN FOR ALL SEASONS when it was mentioned.

The second goal is to increase attendance by presenting the play in a place which would accommodate an audience in relation to the magnitude of the play. By selecting the Field House, Sutherland feels they can draw at least 500 people for each performance. This also will be the first time since 1959 that the Belle Masque is using the Field House.

COMMITTEE

A third goal is to increase the activities of the club into the different branches of the university. Working towards the fulfill-

Garey Law School Stages Annual Day of Visitation

The Board of Consultors to the School of Law engaged in its seventh annual "Day of Visitation" to the School of Law on Friday, April 23. Obert, of Philadelphia. The function of the Board is to advise and counsel the administration of the University and the faculty of the law school.

CONSULTORS VISIT

On the Day of Visitation, the consultors visited the classes, discussed matters of curriculum, administration, library, recruitment of students, placement of law graduates, and the conduct of various law school activities such as the VILLANOVA LAW REVIEW, moot courts, and the Student Bar Association. After their inspection of the Law School in operation, they met informally with the president of the university, and were the guests of the university at a reception in Garey Hall and at dinner that evening.

NEW OFFICERS

Newly elected as officers are William Duffy, Jr., President Judge of the Superior Court of Delaware, Chairman of the Board of Consultors; Vice Chairman, Hugh P. McFadden; and secretary, William C.A. Henry.

Editor Scanlan Accepts St. Augustine Award

Patrick J. Scanlan, Managing Editor of the BROOKLYN TABLET, a weekly Catholic newspaper, has been named as the 1965 recipient of Villanova University's "St. Augustine Award." The announcement of the winner of this annual presentation was made by the Very Rev. John A. Klekota, OSA, University President.

This was the tenth presentation of this award which is given for "Distinguished Achievement in the Field of Communications Journalism." The award is named for St. Augustine, The Patron Saint of printers. It was presented at the annual Villanovan-WWVU Dinner Dance at the Barclay Hotel on Saturday evening, May 1.

Scanlan, an alumnus of St. Joseph's College, was born in Manhattan where, except for his early life spent in Philadelphia, he has spent most of his life.

He was made Managing Editor of the TABLET in 1917 and has since served in this capacity. He served for two years as president of the Catholic Press Association, and was a member of its board directors for three years.

Mr. Scanlan is the recipient of many honorary degrees and awards for his efforts. Among these honorary degrees are numerous Doctors of Letters, Humane Letters and Laws.

Rick Berry Plans Folk Festival for Villanova in '66

An Intercollegiate Folk Festival is in the planning stage for Villanova next year. Rick Berry has originated the idea, and a small crew are assisting him at present.

They are sending to 500 colleges and universities across the nation, questionnaires concerning the extent of folk interest on their respective campuses, and requesting their ideas on the feasibility of a folk festival of intercollegiate scope.

Those interested in folk at Villanova are urged to pick up information and application forms in the Student Council Office, or see Rick Berry in 148 Sullivan Hall.

Blue Key Society Elects Officers

Recently the Blue Key Society of Villanova completed two very important items of business: the selection of new members and the election of officers.

This year saw a new record set in the total number of applications, with 135 students applying for admission.

Those selected included five juniors: Brian Banmiller, Tom Brennan, Bill Carnes, Frank Eck and Bob Mentzinger.

Five sophomores and five freshmen were also chosen. The sophomores: John Bossaco, Ken Hedges, Bob Layne, Frank Samer and the only female selected this year, Tara Siegal. The freshmen: John Carey, Bill Martini, Tom Parsely, Robert Ross, and John Schmidt.

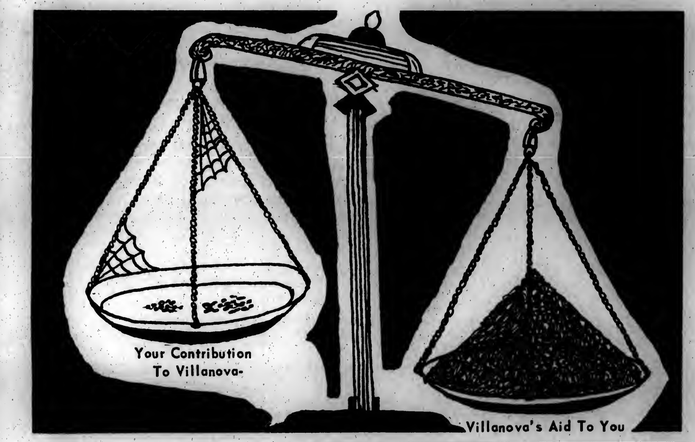
At the first meeting following the acceptance of the new members, the election of next year's officers was conducted.

Leo Carroll defeated Dennis O'Hara and Prentiss Yancy for the office of vice-president. Leo was last year's secretary.

Don Serafano triumphed over John Zoubek, and Brendan Moore defeated Jeff Radowich, for the offices of Secretary and Treasurer, respectively.

David Croninger, vice-president of Metromedia, Inc. and general manager of WIP, Phila., explains modern programming concepts to WWVU staff.

'What Can You Do for Villanova?'



"Ask not what Villanova can do for you; ask what you can do for Villanova." This statement was made by Professor Thomas Mentzer of the Villanova History Department in an address delivered before the Student Government Association last Wednesday night. His theme was improvement of the University by the students themselves. Many Villanova students seem to acquire a resentful attitude toward the Administration before they leave here. Students "get back" at the school by refusing to donate their breakage fee when they become seniors and by constantly complaining about food, courses, administrators, and teachers without ever placing things in a true perspective.

Under constant pressure, real and imagined, the students, in many instances, carry on impersonal relationships with their university. Some, however, are able to cast off this impersonal relationship and assume useful roles on campus and their own personal lives. They accomplish this feat first by realizing that constructive criticism, after serious consideration, will have a greater effect than automatic, inveterate complaining.

Secondly, they take an active interest in the school by partaking in extra-curricular activites and by taking an objective look at the university in order to understand certain problems peculiar to the institution.

Gradual improvement at Villanova has been and will continue to be a reality. Any one who says that there has been no improvement refuses to open his eyes to factual information cited not only by Professor Mentzer, but also by other faculty members. The Annual Report of the President cites improvements of the last two decades in black and white.

But heresy has been written here; no undergraduate is allowed to praise the University ... back to the lunch tables ... "Gee, I can't wait till I get out of here." But how many will "return to normalcy?" "Ask not what Villanova can do for you; ask what you can do for Villanova."

Have Guitars- Will Demonstrate

From the experimental theatres, the coffee houses, the pie shoppes of universities, they came to Washington, April 17, to chant vague slogans and wave scribbled signs. They carried banners which expressed their intellectual distaste over AMERICA'S IMPERIALISTIC INVOLVEMENT IN A CIVIL WAR IN VIET NAM. Yes, the marchers came sprawled and floundered within sight of our nation's shrines -- a pitiful crop of individuals whose sole ambition in life seems to be to turn their backs on realities of the world situation.

Everyone who came to Washington to express themselves that day, certainly were not Communists, nor if the college boards are valid, not stupid. Yet the main coordinator of the group was the Students For A Democratic Society -- a motley collection of social pariahs.

It is truly unfortunate that 20,000 people of our generation are so utterly befuddled when it comes to comprehending the facts as they are in Southeast Asia. This country cannot unconditionally negotiate with an enemy who is a flagrant internationally recognized aggressor solely to soothe the anxiety of immature people.

The freedom of one Vietnamese citizen from political, social, and religious enslavement is just as important to American ideals and security as the freedom of these marchers to stain our national shrines with their shadows.

Letters to the Editor

To The Editor:

The student response to the administration's decision to initiate televised classes into the curriculum should be, "YOU SEND YOUR TELEVISION TUBES INTO THE CLASSROOM, AND WE'LL SEND OUR TAPE RECORDERS!!!"

The experience, which the student obtains, of the personality of the Instructor is, to my mind, more than 3/4 of the education process. Let us stop this mechanization madness, before our age becomes referred to, at some date in the future, as the age of the brilliant technician, but the age wanting of thinkers. The philosophy that pervades modern America, that technology is the answer to all social evils is false. Wake-up, machines will not supply new teachers. This is not the answer to the problem of the flooded college due to social pressures. Technology is like dope ... you alleviate the pain, but you do not cure the sore ... each time, the pain requires more of a fix. Jamming the colleges with students and handling them inadequately by means of impersonalization, is merely producing more of an already sick society ...

Experiences of people who have attended large schools, such as the University of Pennsylvania, where impersonalization is almost complete, point out the tragedy of mass education. The social inadjustment, the high rates of nervous disorders, the higher drop out figures, the social push to get ahead, in a world which is scrambling away faster than you can chase it; all of these illnesses would make one decry the situation. We at Villanova have a taste of some of these problems. However, we still have a choice to make ... we can retain the sanity of education and the feeling which we have for our fellow - man. Television in our classrooms will push us one more step down the road toward problems, which I do not think that the Administration would like to face, or to be morally responsible for. And, when we create these degrading social evils, and bring them upon people, and into situations were they were not before, we are responsible.

I would think that those teachers of Villanova who are purely selfish would speak out at their disenfranchisement by automation, much less, those who are interested in preserving academic usefulness and worth. We congratulate Dr. Rofinot on his fine letter.

Students who spend well over two thousand dollars a year, for ..... a Villanova diploma, should speak out. We can watch T.V. at home ... let's not be so many slugs.

To The Editor:

Although not academically connected with Villanova, but as an employee, I have one outstanding criticism of the VILLANOVAN. This fault has occurred in previous articles appearing in this paper but was very significant in the April 7th issue.

I am referring to the "last name calling" of those whose names appear in this newspaper. Men are quite accustomed to this; some even think it sounds very masculine BUT it is very degrading to a girl to be referred to as such as was Miss Boylan. Would it take too much space to place "Miss" before her last name? If not out of courtesy to Miss Boylan; then out of respect to the feminine gender.

(Miss) Pat Cunningham
Secretary

ED. NOTE: No offense was meant to MISS Boylan; the VILLANOVAN simply followed a journalistic procedure in including the last name of a person already mentioned in the story. However, if the sensibilities of anyone will be sincerely offended by such procedure, "MISS" will be placed before a girl's name. By the way, MISS Boylan said that she understood.

To the editor:

After spending an afternoon in the library trying to obtain references for a term paper, I have come to the conclusion that the library is in dire need of an operation retrieval. More specifically, it needs to get overdue books off the shelves of the faculty members' private libraries and back into general circulation. After searching the card catalogue, I found six books which suited my topic exactly. However, only one of the books was available. The other five were borrowed by faculty members and were four to six months overdue! Since my paper was on a technical subject, the books were being "used" by professors of the science and engineering departments; but from what I have seen and heard the other departments are also at fault.

I thus urge the library to make a special effort to remedy this situation; and most important, I wish the offenders would show some consideration for the students of Villanova.

Journal of a Journey

by Jack Stagliano

Ed.'s note: Jack Stagliano went to Mexico with VAMP (Villanova Aid to Mexico Program) last summer. The group spent seven weeks in Mexico-one week in training, and six in action. Mr. Stagliano's group was sent to Alamo, Vera Cruz where they taught English to children in the morning, and to teenage girls and women at night. In between time they showed catechetical filmstrips, painted the rectory interior, constructed a wall for the parish church, and visited some of the 84 mission ranchos with the pastor. The VILLANOVAN endorses this personal commitment of Faith in action and supports VAMP's summer fund project. Students are urged to pledge one hour of summer pay. The following are excerpts from Jack's personal diary:

Mexico City

The tower of the convent in which we live has a weathervane instead of a cross, and the only way the convent remained open during the revolution was by fronting it as a house of prostitution. The broken glass along the walls is to discourage burglars.

June 24

Some of the houses in this city are nothing but a half dozen boards and a corrugated tin roof, and they may well be next door to a large modern bank. There is such a mixture of old and new, rich and poor. Not a quaint, "old-world" blend as one would picture Rome; just a disorganized conglomeration.

June 25

The bus broke down twice and the third time the motor caught fire. Natch-I was in the back of the bus. It's amazing that it didn't blow up because it was quite a fire. We were only two blocks from home so we walked.

June 27

We went to the Fiesta-a dinner in a Mexican restaurant with Mariachis playing music the whole time. There was one fairly good tasting thing that looked like very large potato chips or pasteries. After eating it we were told it was fried pig skin.

June 29

Five of us rode in the rigged-up car to Vera Cruz. It rained a couple of times and since the windshield wipers were broken, we attached a rope and hooked it up from inside. The scenery was so beautiful we oh'd and ah'd like kids all the way. This may be a civilization-forsaken country in parts, but it's certainly not God-forsaken.

July 5

I've given up trying to record everything-it's just impossible. Today is National Election Day. The people take politics very seriously and think nothing of shooting the opposing party. Yesterday we ate in Pepe's house. His father was shot to death ten years ago for political reasons ... We spent a couple of hours down at the river about 1 1/2 miles away gathering rocks for the wall. The people warned us about the snakes hanging from trees-but the scenery of banana orchards, and African-like huts along the cliff by the river was indescribable ... It's odd being here, not knowing if the U.S. is at war, how the civil rights problem is going, or whether the Phillies are in first or last place.

July 8

Three more guys arrived today. They're from LaSalle. Imagine travelling 3500 miles and still being able to argue about Big 5 basketball.

July 15

We helped bury a prominent Catholic woman yesterday. She died at 9 a.m. two days ago, so the funeral was at 9 a.m. the following day. After Church we herded into 12 trucks and stood for the hour ride to the cemetery. Around here the dictum "to bury the dead" is really practiced. After the service everyone stood around talking in groups for an hour or so while the men of the family completed the burial.

July 19

Damn. Those fried bananas again. I took about four bites and just couldn't take any more. I also had a whole fish, and had to explain to "mamma" that in America it isn't the custom to eat the head and eyes of the fish.

July 21

As I was eating supper, there was some kind of drunken gun fight down the street, but I just kept eating. I'm surprised how casual I've become; as when I watch little Oliva struggle to wring the neck of a chicken. There are so many things-like cutting sugar cane-that we've seen in pictures and are now experiencing.

July 23

Jerry and I just tried to kill a spider as big as my hand-then its mate, the same size, appeared. Now we're sitting here picking some kind of bugs out of our beds-maybe the little lizzards that run around here will get them.

August 5

We made up the final exam in English for the kids today and we'll give it tomorrow. Tonight was "family album" night, so we looked through scores and scores of pictures-some of the funeral we attended last month. Saturday night Connie's "family" gave a small fiesta. The "aunt" is a fabulous guitar player and I wish I could have recorded her playing Malaguena.

August 7

Tomorrow we receive Communion at 6 a.m. and leave by bus at 7 a.m. Today we gave back the final exams and went over them with the class. Tonight there was a farewell party at which Padre gave a speech and the kids contributed songs and dances. It's a scene I won't soon forget-all those kids.

August 8

Back in Mexico City-we went to Mass at Guadalupe, and toured part of the city before we left. On the bus from Alamo we discussed the results of the project, while keeping one eye on the drunken old gentleman who sat next to us with a large revolver casually stuck in his belt.

I hope we changed the "Gringo" image, or at least corrected some of their misconceptions. If they learned from us half of what we learned from them, we've done pretty well.

Elephant's Footprint

by Stephen Stadelmeyer

Father Joseph J. Burns, OSA, addressed a general session of the Villanova Student Education Association and their guests on Thursday, April 8, 1965.

Father Burns uses his own peculiar employing techniques derived from the "Elephant's Footprint." This theme symbolizes those events or persons which have left an imprint in our impressionable world, and which in turn direct us toward the source and purpose of life.

Unfortunately, we do not follow in the footprints of men such as Ignatius of Loyola or Saint John Baptist de la Salle toward the true goal of life. Rather, we choose to emulate men like Rousseau, Kant, and Locke, who worked against the fulfillment of the divine plan. We tend to search for status, skill and professionalism, failing to see the true purpose of life.

The set of footprints we tend to pursue is exemplified in our unselective choice of reading material. This applies not only to philosophical literature, but also to the constant attacks on the true purpose of education, which are found in the alleged "professional" periodicals.

We are so carried away by the world about us, that we fail to hear the voice of God. We are blind to the need for a Peace Corps mission to the United States, or to the decay of the sacredness of matrimony.

Role of the Teacher

Here, in part, is the problem which confronts the educator. It is the purpose of the teacher to draw his students closer to God and to His Divine Plan. The teacher must be stimulant and a uniting force, fostering the will of God and the relationship between God and His children. The teacher cannot hope to accomplish this task by allowing the "experts" to guide him. He must follow in the footprints of people who have left their impression in the field of education, people such as Mother Seton, and Blessed John Neumann. The devoted educator still cannot succeed so long as he persists in dispensing information. Rather he must seek, and aid others in their search for knowledge and wisdom, Fruits of the Holy Spirit, permanent and profitable gifts.

The direction which the teacher pursues is marked by the footprints that remain. The perplexing question is, which set of footprints did He follow?

Tolerant Americans

by G. W. Gingery

If asked, almost any American would tell you that the worst socio-politico philosophy on this earth would be that of communism. Isn't it somewhat strange that the American people tolerate an American Communist party in their very ranks?

When the Russian Communists were openly supporting the dictator Castro in Cuba, every American felt that President John F. Kennedy was entirely in the right when he set up the American maritime blockcade around that small Caribbean island. Of course, this is a very natural reaction when communism gains an undisputed foothold 90 miles from our shore. But when communism threatens the free world in Southeastern Asia, why do so many Americans shout "foul play?" Why do the Americans wish their forces to withdraw from the most recently threatened democratic foothold? Is it merely because American fighting forces are dying in the protection of a foreign nation? I think not!

No Immediate Threat

Because South Vietnam is on the other side of the world, could it be that the American feels that Communist agression is not an immediate threat to our state of well being? These same American dissemblers might feel that South Vietnam's defensive problems are intrinsically their own.

It is quite evident to every American (I hope) that the smaller nations of the world are no match, militarily, for the two major Communistic powers of Russia and Red China.

Speaking of Art

by Ron Javers

"Did you see that painting of the Campbell's soup can by Andy Warhol?" "Just what is he supposed to mean by that?" "There's just no meaning to this Modern art."

Ah, critics, critics everywhere with not a thought to think. Attackers, mockers, fools thinking the sole criterion for judgment is their own understanding or misunderstanding, conception or misconception of another's creation.

Orange TIRADE

Certain of us are far too quick to criticize what we simply can't fathom. If one goes to a particular grocery store where there are oranges offered for sale, and one doesn't care for oranges, one simply doesn't buy oranges. There is no intelligent purpose in standing in front of the store screaming out a tirade against oranges, orange eaters, and orange growers. It simply doesn't make sense.

Art doesn't have to be a practical thing that one can put on and take off like a hat. Nor does it have to be something everyone can understand and use.

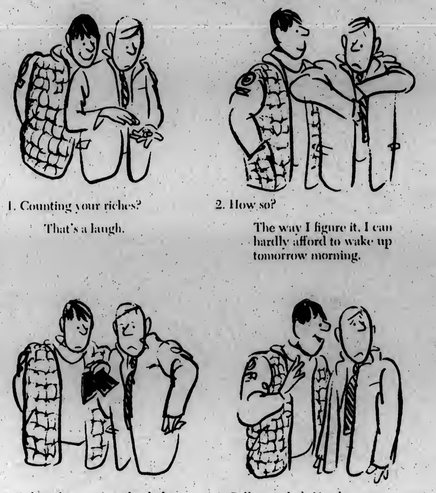
Art for Art's Sake

Art arises in a civilization only after the practical necessities have been satisfied. It is that something extra. I might even allude that great art is frivolous, but that would get me into trouble with some of the same type of people that D. H. Lawrence called "Censor-Morons."

People seem to forget that art is as much intended for the artist as for the devotee. It is the artist who must struggle with the creativity inside him. He must often tear from his breast the ideas that speak so neatly to the public through clean lines and shadows on white canvas. He paints for HIMSELF. If he can also give something, however small, to others, then and only then it becomes art, their art; but it was always his art from the moment of its conception in the womb of his brain.

Universality

People have never understood the artist. He doesn't really expect them to, for he seldom understands himself. What he is entitled to is his passion to create in freedom. This is all he needs. Of course the chrysalis of the crowds are helpful plaudits of the crowds are helpful (one must eat), and an ego-builder.



I have thus far been speaking primarily of painting, but the same principles apply equally to all the Arts. What then of the charges of obscurity and vacuousity in the New Poetry? It has been claimed that a truly great work of art must have "universal appeal," whatever that is.

Plumber Appeal

Certainly Eliot's WASTELAND holds no essential appeal for the plumber down the street. It seems there are too many "plumbers" in the university today. This lamentable fact is not Eliot's fault, nor does it make his work less art. Often the simplest-seeming poems are the deepest. Dickinson is short and sweet, but her sensibility is often trying. Cummings is simply beautiful in his childlike verse, but no child could read it. (many have tried.)

There are many geniuses in the world; the most creative are often the most wickedly defamed. Each man must make it in his own way. Each man has his own art inside him. Not all men are artists. Don't buy my oranges, but don't squeeze them and walk away sneering.

Juniors! Don't forget to have your senior picture taken. If you haven't made an appointment yet—do so now in the BELLE AIR office in the bottom of St. Rita's Hall.

5. Didn't you tell him tusks were in?
He told me I'd have to demonstrate a more sensible attitude toward money before he'd shell out anything above the subsistence level.

6. That's no problem. Next time you get some dough, get yourself a Living Insurance policy from Equitable. It's one of the most sensible things you can do with your money. Postage Problems

by Bill McCloskey

In Fiscal Year 1963 there was close to 75 million dollars collected in revenue at the Philadelphia Post Office.

We doubt that our own friendly neighborhood post office (Matric number 19085) makes quite that much, but we have reason to believe this is not the University's fault.

As students, we sometimes wonder about policy of some of the people sitting behind some impressive desks around the area. While the title on the door doesn't rate a Bigelow on the floor of the Mail Room in Tolentine Hall, we know that an awful lot of money goes into feeding that Pitney-Bowes stamp-it-in-the corner, seal - it - if - your - lucky - machine called a postage meter.

Wasted Money

A lot of the money that is spent for postage is wasted.

We had heard suspicions of this before but proof positive came our way in Mid-March.

There seems to be a rash of mail going from one building to another on campus that is finding its way through the postage meter.

This is ridiculous.

There is an inter-campus mail system on campus but for some reason it is not used to its fullest extent.

Tolentine to Tolentine

We found the following inter-campus pieces of correspondence going through the postage meter in Tolentine Hall, out to the Villanova Post Office, back to the University, and in turn back to the same room in Tolentine Hall, where it is sorted into the departmental mail boxes:

---Letter from Father Klekotka's Office to the Jazz Festival.

---Note from Sociology Professor to WWVU.

---Form letter from Jazz Festival to WWVU (offices located across hall from each ather.)

---Letter from Father Kemme's Office to the Jazz Festival.

---Note from Belle Air Editor to Belle Air Moderator.

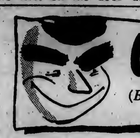
Reasons

The reason for these mistakes in most cases is that the letters were placed in white University imprinted envelopes, rather than the brown envelopes prepared especially for inter-campus communications.

As long as it is our tuition that is being used to feed the Pitney-Bowes machine we might just as well offer a few suggestions as far as inter-campus mail goes.

We hereby run the following up the flagpole:

---All Inter-campus mail should go in brown envelopes.



-- Those who do not want to send it this way should sort their mail before it goes to the mail room so that campus mail will not go through the meter.

---Those with campus organizations or offices on their mailing lists for form letters should keep these addresses separate.

---The mail room should watch out for inter-campus mail mixed with outgoing mail.

---Brown (inter-campus) envelopes should not be run through the meter.

Let's see who salutes.

IS EUROPE?

College life is such a busy one, what with learning the Maxixe, attending public executions, and walking our cheetahs, that perforce we find ourselves sometimes neglecting our studies. Therefore this column, normally a vehicle for innocent tomfoolery, will occasionally forego levity to offer a quick survey course in one of the learned disciplines. Today, for an opener, we will discuss Modern European History.

Strictly defined, Modern European History covers the history of Europe from January 1, 1964, to the present. However, in order to provide employment for more teachers, the course has been moved back to the Age of Pericles, or the Renaissance, as it is better known as.

The single most important fact to remember about Modern European History is the emergence of Prussia. As we all know, Prussia was originally called Russia. The "P" was purchased from Persia in 1874 for $24 and Manhattan Island. This later became known as Guy Fawkes Day.

Persia without a "P" was of course called Ersia. This so embarrassed the natives that they changed the name of the country to Iran. This led to a rash of name changing. Mesopotamia became Iraq, Schleswig-Holstein became Saxe-Coburg, Bosnia-Herzegovina became Cleveland. There was even talk about changing the name of stable old England, but it was forgotten when the little princes escaped from the Tower and invented James Watt. This later became known as the Missouri Compromise.

Only last week he invented the German short-haired pointer.

Meanwhile Johann Gutenberg was quietly inventing the printing press, for which we may all be grateful, believe you me. Why grateful? I'll tell you why: Because without Gutenberg's invention you would not have this newspaper to read and you might never learn that Personna Stainless Steel Razor Blades are now available in two varieties—the regular double-edge blade we have all come to know and love, and the new Personna Injector Blade. Users of injector razors have grown morose in recent years, even sullen, and who can blame them? How would you feel if you were denied the speed and comfort and durability and truth and beauty of Personna Stainless Steel shaving? Not very jolly, I'll wager! But injector shavers may now rejoice—indeed all shavers may—for whether you remove your whiskers regularly or injectorly, there is a Personna blade for you—a Personna Stainless Steel Blade which will give you more luxury shaves than Beep-Beep or any other brand you might name. If by chance you don't agree, the makers of Personna will gladly buy you a pack of any brand you think is better.

Yes, friends, we may all be grateful to Johann Gutenberg for inventing the means to spread this great news about Personna. The next time you're in Frankfurt-am-Main, why don't you drop in and say thanks to Mr. Gutenberg? He is elderly—408 years last birthday—but still quite active in his laboratory. Only last week he invented the German short-haired pointer.

But I digress. Returning to Modern European History, let us now examine that ever-popular favorite, France.

France, as we all know, is divided into several Departments. There is the Police Department, the Fire Department, the Gas and Water Department, and the Bureau of Weights and Measures. There is also Madame Pompadour, but that is a dirty story and is taught only to graduate students.

Finally we take up Italy—the newest European nation. Italy did not become a unified state until 1848 when Garibaldi, Cavour, and Victor Emmanuel threw three coins in the Trevi Fountain. This lovely gesture so enchanted all of Europe that Metternich traded Parma to Talleyrand for Mad Ludwig of Bavaria. Then everybody waltzed till dawn and then, tired but happy, they started the Thirty Years War. This later became known as Pitt the Younger.

Space does not permit me to tell you any more about Modern European History. Aren't you glad?

Farrell and the 30s

by Matt Roche

The bleary eyes stared out from behind coke-bottle glasses perched at the end of a crooked nose. The wide mouth edged out to the sagging neck and the stooping shoulders, and the unbuttoned button-down collar. This is James T. Farrell.

Mr. Farrell's first action at the Literary Society-sponsored lecture was to call for a minute of silence in memory of John F. Kennedy. After the mist cleared from his eyes, he began speaking on "The Lasting Changes of Literature of the '30's."

Nostalgic Overflow

The author provided the audience with a background from post-Civil War to pre-Thirities. Then he launched into an analysis of the economics, politics, and literature of the '30's. But "analysis" does not properly describe his platform delivery.

A "spontaneous overflow of nostalgia" might better depict his talk. It was an anecdotal reminescence of former literary friends and acquaintences who have since met their "Judgment Day," among them H. L. Mencken, Hemingway, Faulkner, and Dreiser.

The speech had personal association, no logical connections, and was alternately amusing ("The people in the '30's were either artists who followed Marx but didn't bother reading him-or politicans who didn't read him, but followed people they thought had.") personally evaluating ("I liked Hemingway's FOR WHOM THE BELL TOLLS and A FAREWELL TO ARMS best-they smacked of his own personal professional experience."), and revealing ("I was the only one that TIME and PRAVDA both called the "worst writer in the world"-that's quite a distinction being placed at the head of over eight thousand writers.")

Pride And Prejudice

After the novelist warmed up, he got over his initial hesitancy and later on, plunged into the body of the speech.

In the question and answer period following the lecture, he revealed some of his literary prejudices and opinions. J. D. Salinger he declaimed as "overrated"; on O'Hara, "good short story writer ... but he doesn't have the proper attitude towards sex," and personal literary preferences-"Proust, Dostoyevski, Balzac." He interspersed his comments with some tart remarks that he "doesn't write about the upper-class slums," and when asked the origin of the character Studs Lonigan (real life or imagination) he replied, "None of your business. People have been asking me that question ever since the book appeared. It's time they stopped."

Serenading Singers

To an unmatched degree, the Villanova Singers have the Villanova spirit. They have the "trophies" too. But more important is the fact that this year, in the course of the spring concert season, the Villanova Singers carried the image of their University and the Villanova spirit over 4,000 miles-as far north as Boston and Concord, as far west as Chicago and Milwaukee.

CHAMPIONSHIP CALIBER

What the Villanova Singers presented on stage was a music performance of championship caliber. With a concert program ranging from the sublime, selections by Bach, Beethoven and Brahms, to the ridiculous but intricate and entertaining novelty numbers and including an occasional sea chanty or old English drinking song, the Villanova Singers appealed to a wide range of musical tastes, while the funloving, folk-singing Spires specialized in a more popular if not ethnic vein.

Last Sunday, after the miles of travel, the many bus ride hours of pinochle and poker, guitars and cigars and after 14 successful concerts, the Villanova Singers returned to the Field House, donned their spirit and their university blazer, and concluded their season in the way that it began -- before their favorite audience. After all, they are the Villanova Singers. They are your Glee Club and in their own rugged league, they are number one.

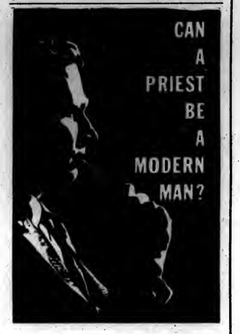
The only measure on the calendar to be discussed and voted upon at the session was a motion submitted by Pete Mangan, Ken Curtin, and Charlie Zaccaria asking that the Student-Faculty Committee of the S.G.A. discuss at its next meeting the value of comprehensive examinations at Villanova, and further that this discussion be conducted with the express approval of the congress. This bill achieved passage by the student congress after many questions and much heated debate.



At the culminating point of the evening, Tom Furst, outgoing president, expressed his deep thanks to anyone who worked with him during the past year and wished the S.G.A. even greater success in the future. "The torch has been passed to a new generation" of Villanovans.

He Bowls Them Over

Ranked as one of the nation's top college bowlers after competing in the 1965 National Intercollegiate Bowling Championships, Spencer Jones picked up some inside information on championship bowling from two-time All-Star champ Dick Weber during the college finals at Saint Paul, Minnesota, on April 26.

by Joe Maffongelli

The finalists fell almost as fast as the pins, but Spencer Jones was one of the last to go down. The date was April 26, and the sight St. Paul, Minnesota. Some 13,847 keglers entered the 1965 Intercollegiate pin tourney, and it wasn't until after the first 13,824 of these had been eliminated that Spence was scratched.

A highlight of this season's tournament was the presence of Dick Weber. Weber is the number one bowler in the nation today as well as being a member of the AMF Staff of Champions. He provided invaluable experience and know how for the finalists. Working on specific problems and questions his presence made the tournament an event in itself.

With two more years left as an undergrad Jones may turn out to be the best alley man ever produced at VU.

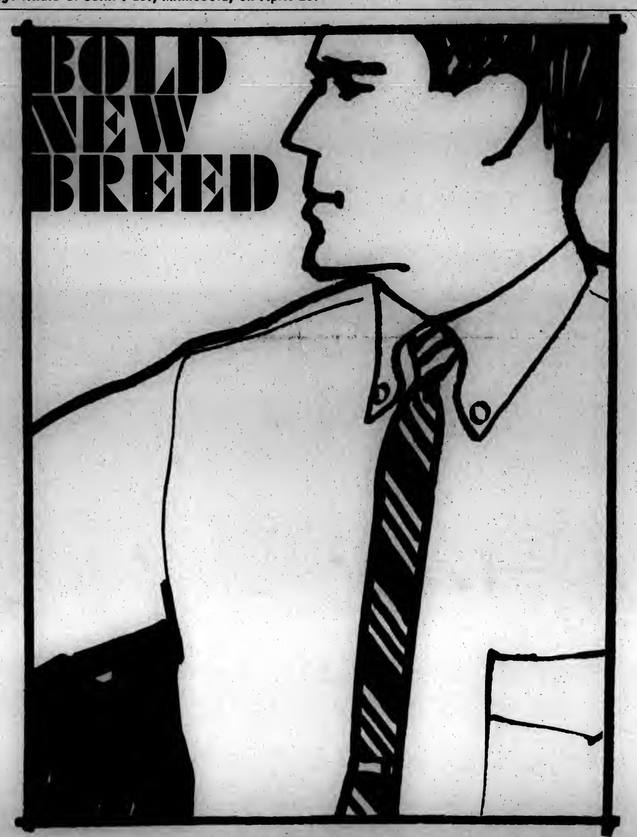
WWVU Radio Station Loses To WIBG 'Pros' in 16-4 Rout

The WWVU softball squad played host to WIBG on Saturday, April 24, only to be humbled 16 to 4 in a fun-filled, extremely entertaining game. Austin Field was the scene, and approximately five hundred rooting Villanovans saw Hy-Lit, Philadelphia's top disc jockey, pitch his club to victory.

Managed by Bill Wright, Sr., the WIBG personnel featured such "good guys" as Frank X at second base, Jerry Stephens, at shortstop, Allan Dean in the outfield, and Dean Tyler at third base. The remainder of the club consisted mainly of engineer and management recruits.



WWVU Team

The WWVU team, managed by Jack Moscardelli, obviously had plenty of heart but little experience. Terry Cooney's pitching was quite adequate but the "Cat's" infield seemed reluctant to cooperate. On several occasions, Cooney found himself pitching out of jams created by errors and over-all poor fielding.

It was quite obvious to spectators that this encounter was the "woo-woo" team's first of the spring, "Wibbage," on the contrary, fields a team every season to do battle with various Philadelphia broadcasting networks, and used the Villanova contingent simply for a scrimmage in preparation for league games.

FUNNY FIASCO

The estimated five hundred fans seems to love every minute of the game and subjected the visitors to some light-hearted, but plainly-audible comments, with Hy-Lit, of course, as the center of attraction. The excellent turnout, and the amusing afternoon enjoyed by all encouraged the WWVU management to continue the fiasco. Therefore, the WWVU "goofy guys" will take the field again this afternoon at 6:30 p.m. to play host to one of Philadelphia's top radio stations, WIP. Drop over to Austin Field tonight and watch "fun for all ages."

Coach Art Mahan discusses some strategy for an upcoming game with members of the Villanova baseball team.

'Cats Hitting Perks Up Attack; Mahan's Mob Beats Owls, Middies

by Jerry Bruderle

Villanova's disappointing baseball team broke a four game losing streak this past week in defeating Navy and Temple. The 'Cats have finally started hitting in the last two games while bringing their record to the .500 level at 5-5, (not counting yesterday's game against Delaware).

Most of the time this season, Villanova has gotten good pitching from senior righthander Vic Majewski and sophomore lefty Jack Grasing, but the hitting has been spotty at best, and the 'Cats have been struggling to win.

Villanova has lost by scores of 2-0, 3-2, 4-0, and 2-1 but defeated Navy last Thursday by a 7-4 score and Temple on Saturday by an 8-4 margin to brighten the outlook.

Majewski, with a 2-3 record, has had some tough luck in his earlier outings. Against St. Joseph's and La Salle, with Vic on the mound, Villanova was shut out, and in the Rider game, two windblown homers, on otherwise easy fly balls, led to his undoing.

NAVY

Against Navy, however, the 'Cat hitters, paced by Sam Greenwood, came through in fine style. Greenwood had a homer and two singles to lead the 'Cats to a 7-4 victory at Annapolis. Roger Staubach had a two-run triple for the Midshipmen.

Villanova backed up Grasing on Saturday with a 10-hit attack on the Owls home field. Grasing, who sports a 3-2 record, fanned 13 for the second time this season. Earlier he did the same against Princeton in his first start. In his second game he struck out nine and pitched a one-hitter against Penn State.

Although walking six Owls, Grasing allowed only one run after Temple's 3-run second inning. Villanova took the lead on a 5-run rally in the top of the third on 4 hits, a walk, a hit batsman and an error. Grasing also had two hits, as did Art Mahan Jr., while Jack Emery had 3 rbi's.

Another sore spot in the 'Cat outlook has been the inconsistent play in the field. Coach Art Mahan, realizing that he had a weak attack, had hoped to have a fine defense to back up the strong pitching. The moundsmen have responded well, but the same can't be said for the defense. Against West Chester and Penn State the 'Cats committed 4 and 3 errors, respectively.

In both of these games, however, Villanova managed to win. Majewski defeated West Chester in a close 2-1 game despite the 4 miscues, and the 3 in the Penn State hardly affected Grasing's 10-1, one-hit victory.

ERRORS HURT

But the 'Cats also committed 2 errors in both the La Salle and the Seton Hall games which Villanova dropped. The Explorers, who beat Villanova for the first time since 1959, took the 'Cats by a 4-0 count. Majewski did the pitching and the hitting, picking up 2 singles.

In the Seton Hall game, Grasing had a 3-hitter going in the ninth inning when the roof fell in. After retiring 16 straight Pirates from the third to the eighth innings, Seton Hall led off the ninth with a triple. Protecting a slim 1-0 lead, the next two hitters were walked intentionally to set up a possible force play. However, two errors blew the strategy and the game, 2-1.

The fielding would not be such a problem if the offense would pick up. It's hard to win without hitting or fielding. This is why the strong hitting in the last two games means so much as far as the upcoming games are concerned.

On May 10, Villanova hosts La Salle in marking 100 years of baseball on the Villanova campus. It was in 1865, just after the Civil War, that Villanova played and defeated La Salle in the first intercollegiate contest. Before the La Salle game, however, the 'Cats travel to Fordham for a game with the Rams, and on Saturday, Seton Hall comes in for a return engagement.

'CATS COMING HOME

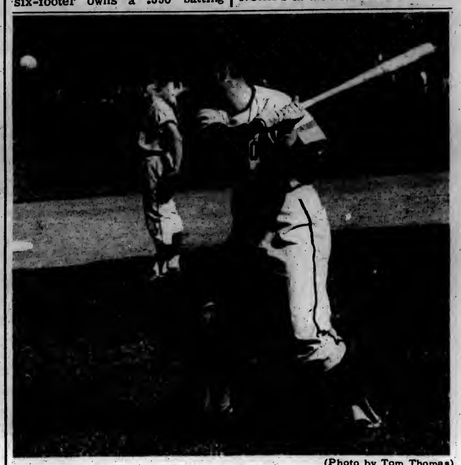
The Seton Hall game will be the first of four consecutive home games. After that game and the La Salle game, Lafayette and Ithaca follow. Then after a game at Rutgers in South Jersey, Scranton and Philadelphia Textile visit Villanova, before wrapping up the season at West Chester. The 'Cats have already beaten the Rams in a game played in early April.

Also, the Mainliners have a game to make up with St. Joe's after their April 26 rainout. Many of the rainouts are not rescheduled, but there is a chance that this one might be. The Hawks are tied with La Salle in the Big Five standings. Villanova, the defending champs, are 1-2, having defeated Temple while losing to the Hawks and the Explorers.

Sophs Sparkle on Diamond

by Frank Miller

The 'Cats Diamond Squad may own a mediocre 6-5 midseason log but there is much optimism concerning the balance of the campaign because of the outstanding play of two fine sophs. These two soph phenoms are Jack "Job" Grasing and Sam Greenwood, who are both roomates and scholarship ball players.



Grasing may stand short of stature at 5'8" tall but is big in desire as his record indicates. His record is only 3-2 but this does not tell the true story. Both his losses were by one run and in the final inning of play. His victories have been even more impressive. He shut out a good Princeton team with a stunning low-hit game 6-0. His best game however came early in April when he beat Penn State 10-1 with a tremendous one hit effort. In his most recent outing he defeated Big Five rival Temple 8-4 last Saturday. In this game he helped his own cause by chipping in with two hits and scoring a run.

'CATS SINK MIDDIES

Greenwood is the star centerfielder on the squad. This lanky six-footer owns a .350 batting average and has been getting his share of base hits. Last Friday he had his best day of the season when the 'Cats knocked off Navy. Against the middies Sam banged out three hits in four at bats including a big home run. He scored three times in this contest.

But success is no stranger to either one of these talented Sophs. Both earned all-state honors in High school. Sam earned all state honors for two years at Somerville High School in Somerville, Mass. Grasing was an all state hurler at Dwight Morrow High School in Englewood, New Jersey. They both played baseball outside of High School. Greenwood played two years of American Legion Ball and led his team to the National Finals both times. His Somerville team earned fifth place honors in 1962 and came in eighth in 1963. Grasing played in the BabeRuth league. In 1963 he led his Englewood team to Montana for the finals.

As you can see these two sophs have tremendous potential. Looking at their past performances and this season's record these two could lead Villanova to the NCAA's in the near future.

Villanova Rugby Club Loses But has Winning Spirit

by Aurel Villari

This year, as so often in the past, Villanovans are justifiably proud of the athletes who represent the University in various fields of sporting activity. Because of their athletic achievements during the past seasons, men such as Al Atkinson, Mike Strofolino, Jim Washington, Billy Melchionni, Noel Carroll and Tom Sullivan are usually the first to be praised, and well they deserve it.

However, unsung as they may be, there are fine athletes at Villanova who participate very capably in sports other than football, basketball and track. The Rugby Club is a good example -- though it lacks the publicity and student support it deserves, it is nevertheless staffed by several outstanding athletes.

Although the Rugby Club is not formally sponsored by the University -- meaning its members must pay for their uniforms and transportation to and from away games -- the membership turnout is strong every year.

Coached by Mr. Coughlin of the History Department, the Ruggers have demonstrated some fine play so far this season, although they presently hold a losing record. Although the last game completed before this writing ended in a 39-0 loss to Yale, the boys had but one day of practice to prepare for the contest, having just returned after the Easter recess.

Some of the Club's more prominent members are senior Tom Gove, playing back, who very ably captains the Ruggers; senior Dick Brandt, playing fly-half, who has developed into an excellent runner and fly-kicker; junior Kevin Fidgeon, a 250-pounder playing in a line position, who has demonstrated agility and strength to match his competitive zeal; and seniors Bert Lambino, a wing, and Bill Bluvalt, a forward, showing a lot of ability, have also been of great value to the Club.

This season, moreover, the Ruggers have found several freshmen of great potential, who need only experience to sharpen their skills. These include Rich Crawford, Andy Sears, and Dave Carmichael, all of whom are being counted on to help boost the Ruggers' record next season.

Senior Weekend

Last Sunday the Ruggers competed in the first annual Seven-Asides Tournament held at Villanova, which featured teams not only from the Philadelphia area, but also from as far as Pittsburgh and Baltimore.

The next game is scheduled for Father's Day, Senior Weekend, to be played against Manhattan here at Villanova.

Softball Playoffs To Begin on May 10

by Jim Proud

The intramural softball league has been in action for the past few weeks and is going well. The only problem that the league is facing is that of the weather. Rain has been hurting the scheduling and may cause a few games to be canceled or played at a later date.

Despite this the intramural office announced that the playoffs will begin on May 10 and conclude on May 17.

The other spring sport sponsored by the intramural department is volley ball. The top eight teams at the end of the season will compete in the playoffs. They will begin on May 11 and run until a champion is decided.

Perhaps the one day on which more students participate in intramural sports is the day of the intramural track meet. This was held on Friday, April 30. The meet began at 3:30 and ended at 5 o'clock in the afternoon.

The top runner of the day was Rich Andreikovics who won the 100 yard dash and the 440 yard run. In the first event of the day Rich ran a 10.4 to win his dash event by two yards. His second victory came in the last event of the meet. His time for the 440 was 57 seconds flat. He garnered the victory by just nipping John Bossacco at the finish line.

There was one record broken in the meet and that was in the mile run. The new record holder is Tony Sellitto who covered the distance in 4:49.5.

Holding the ball a la Jimmy Brown, Wildcat Rugger heads for pay dirt during last Sunday's rugged action.

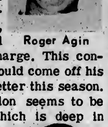
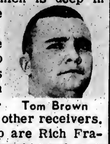
Spring Football Practice Reveals Gridiron Talent

by Joe Maffongelli



While most people are turning their minds toward the more cooling aquatic sports a group of dedicated men have been grinding out their afternoons on the hotter-than-ever gridiron. The 1965 edition of the Wildcat football team will be rich in determination, but rather lacking in experience at many positions.

Dave Connell



NEW LINE

Most of the cogs in last year's forward wall have been replaced. Only the dependable center, Roger Agin, will again lead the charge. This consistent senior should come off his own snap even better this season.

Roger Agin

The end position seems to be the only spot which is deep in talent. While the condition of John Kelleher, the spectacular deep flanker, remains a question, coach Bell is very optimistic about his other receivers. Among the group are Rich Frabrizio, Paul Sadowski, and soph hopeful Dallas Webb. Tom Flandera, who was injured in a preseason scrimmage last year is again in good condition. His sure hands should provide a definite asset.

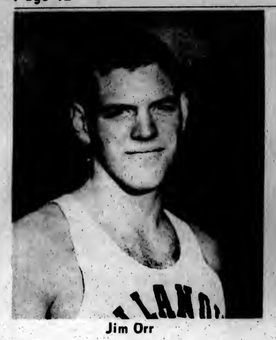
Tom Brown

John Fry seems to be the most likely tackle to fill the shoes of All-American Al Atkinson. He will probably team with big Harry Walters at the meat posts. Jerry Strid has looked very well on defense as has Joe Nolan. Strid has been hampered in the past by constant injuries. Larry Jones is capable but has not yet lived up to his potential.

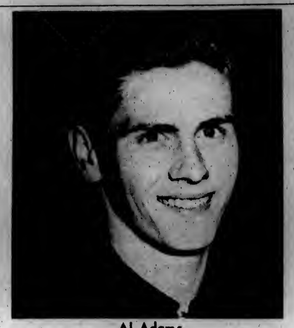
Brian McDonnell and Lou Morda are presently leading the guard corps. A future star seems to be present in the person of Fred Levinsky.

Dave Capozzi will probably be spelling Agin, but a soph named Weglarz is pushing

BACKS BACK



Joe Santomauro



The backfield is blessed with three returning starters in quarterback Dave Connell, fullback Tom Brown, and right half Joe Santomauro. John Connor, Chip Bender, and John Kolmer will provide sufficient depth on the wings.

Bill Andrejko backs up Connell at the helm while Ferrainola or Ditze will spell Brown up the middle. Connell and Jim Case will handle the kicking chores.

The determined look on Ed Parello's face seems to be warning foes that the Wildcats are ready to break loose.

RELAY TEAM TO GRADUATE

Quantico Loss Mars 'Cats Great Win at Penn

by Bob McIntyre

The Villanova Wildcats continued their domination of the Penn Relays, held two weeks ago, as they captured two Championship of America Relay titles, in the 71st annual renewal at Franklin Field.

The two relay Championships brought the Villanova total to 25, all in the last 11 years, and tied the Main Liners with New York University for third place on the all-time list. Only Pennsylvania (52 1/2) and Michigan (33) are in front of the Cats and the Violets.

During the two-day meet, four Collegiate Carnival records were broken and another tied, while a National Collegiate Athletic Association standard was also equalled.

Villanova's two wins were classy efforts, and had Jim (Jumbo) Elliott, and his capable assistant Jim Tuppeny smiling from ear to ear. The Cat quartets, established new standards in gaining hard-fought and close decisions in the 2 and 4 mile relays.

The four-mile team of Dave Hyland, Jim Orr, Noel Carroll, and Tommy Sullivan were a close victor over Georgetown with a 6:39.4 clocking, bettering the time of 16:42.7 set by Fordham in 1963.

Villanova's World Record holders repeated their 1964 victory in the two mile relay and lowered the meet record to 7:26.1. Yale set the previous record of 7:27.4 in 1961.

The race was exciting from the start. It figured to be a battle between Villanova and Missouri, and that's just the way it turned out. At the tape, Noel Carroll of Villanova had eight feet on Robin Lingle of Missouri.

Villanova led at every pass on legs of 1:52.4 by Jim Orr, 1:52.4 by Al Adams and 1:51.0 by Tom Sullivan. At the last exchange, Carroll was six yards ahead of Lingle. Then the Missouri senior, the son of a Philadelphia policeman, closed in and ran at Carroll's shoulder but Carroll held him off and crossed the tape a winner in his own time of 1:50.3 and team time of 7:26.1.

Carroll, the smiling Irishman, was voted the outstanding collegiate performer for his two fine relay efforts in a close balloting over North Carolina College's Norm Tate, last year's winner.

Quantico a Nightmare

On Friday afternoon, at Quantico, Virgina, the Villanova Wildcats got caught in what could be termed a bad dream, which turned out to be a reality to the dismay of the 4 Mile and 2 Mile Relay teams, who just last weekendwere the toast of the Eastern Seaboard.

The one team that saved face for the Cats was the Sprint Medley team which knocked off a strong Manhattan team. The team was led by Stan Kozlowski, Earl Horner, Marshall Uzzle, and Al Adams. They were timed in 3:22.8.

Larry Livers set a new school record as he finished second behind Olympian Jay Luck in the 440 yard Inter-Mediate Hurdles, by running 51.9.

The 4 Mile relay team had its problems on Friday and that's were the bad news comes into being. Noel Carroll, who the week before ran a 4:10.2-mile leg could only produce a dismal 4:36.6. Noel, giving no tongue in cheek excuses, said he thought it had a lot to do with the two hours the team was forced to warm up in because the meet was running behind schedule.

Dave Hyland's 4:16.9 gave Villanova a yard lead over Quantico's Bob Brouillet on the opening leg. But Tom Blache, formerly of Purdue, jumped the Cat's Jim Orr coming into the exchange of the second leg in 4:14.4 and after that it was all Quantico.

Saturday was another story, as the Pride of the East, Villanova's famed World Record 2 Mile Relay Team, fell by the wayside to place second, to the school which seems to thrive on knocking over the Wildcats, St. John's University.

Given a 1:48.9 third leg by Tom Bauer, who crushed Sullivan (1:51), the unheralded Redmen, who haven't run together for two years, slammed out a meet record of 7:26.7.

Villanova tried to add the 880 Relay to the Sprint Medley title it won on Friday, but anchor Stan Kozlowski couldn't hold it in the stretch against North Carolina College's Ed Roberts, who was voted the "outstanding athlete."

At the 11th Annual Track Dinner, held last week at the Covered Wagon Inn, Strafford, the MVP was won by Tommy Sullivan and the dedication to the team trophy, was won by Larry Livers.

Lacrosse Club Batters Opponents As Aggressive Offense Prevails

By Jim Proud

The Villanova lacrosse club is in the midst of its finest season to date. The team is sporting a 5-1 record, the best in the Delaware Valley. Despite injuries to top players the squad is still very aggressive and shows almost no sign of weakness due to the loss of players.

Prior to the Georgetown game on the first of May the team's two games were victories. One over Hartwick and the other over Penn. In the game played at Hartwick the Villanova team put on an overpowering display of offensive force and downed the home team 14 to 4.

Power Galore

In the battle with the neighboring Pennsylvania team the Cats also came through with a victory. Offensive power also dominated this game. Although the Cats only scored 6 points they were in striking distance many times. The Quakers were only able to tally 2 points in this game which was due to the hard play of the Villanova defense.

On Saturday the 4th the Cats traveled to Georgetown for their sixth game of the season. In this game the offense was again the prominent part of the Villanova attack. The final score of the game was 11-7 in favor of the Cats.

The Villanova club was led by a Freshman, Rick Hook. He was the leading scorer on either side, tallying a total of 7 goals.

The most spectacular goal of the game for Villanova was scored by Jim Ryan. The score at half was 8-3 in favor of Villanova but as soon as the second half started Georgetown scored 3 quick goals. When there was an apparent time out on the field, when both sides thought the ball to be out of play, Jim Ryan picked up the ball and ran over the line for the score. An argument followed but the referee ruled in the Cats' favor.

After this point the game was all Villanova. From here on the Cat defense took over and held the team from Georgetown to one goal for the remainder of the half.

The team's next home game is on the 8th of May at 2:30. The team will play the team from Fairleigh Dickinson and this squad will be the Cats' toughest game left to be played in the season.

"Aw, that's not fair," says a Villanova rugby player to a grasping opponent as his tear-away jersey (Villanova hopes so) becomes stretched to the stopping point. Action took place at the Seven-Asides Rugby Tournament held last Sunday.

'Moes Conig and Horns'

by John DiGennaro

"Grandma," as I've been told, and in case you are interested, is the legendary founder and protectress of the "Moes." The "Moes," in case you are still interested, is the name of a group of students who, as the forename MOE indicates, are supposed to be able to do "More Of Everything." "Moe Conig" and "Moe Horns" are well on their way to fulfilling the club legend - by the way, that can be translated to Ken

Ken Coniglio

Coniglio and Earl Horner respectively.

Conig (Kenny) is a 6 ft. 155 lb. hurdler out of Flushing, New York. He originally jumped his way into Wildcat land when as a high school senior he lowered the world-record for the 60 yd. highs to a "Moevelous" 7 flat. Since joining the Blue and White thinclads he has, proven himself as a better than average wood jumper, with the exception of an occasional knee splinter, and has turned in a fast 14.0 outdoors ranking him 21 in the world-standings in the 120 yd. highs.

Third Internationally

Last year he copped several firsts including a championship at the Queens-Iona meet in New York. Also, during the IC's, when Larry Livers suffered one of his rare off days, it was young Coniglio, the upcoming soph, who got the "Cats" some of the valuable points they were counting on in the hurdles. School over, he traveled to England with the New York A.C. and placed third in international competition.

Unfortunately this year has been a different story. After capturing the Mets, Kenny suffered a pulled hamstring which kept him sidelined for practically the whole indoor season. Healed, and working his way back into shape for outdoors, last week he pulled again, and will be out for the remainder of the season.

Earl Horner, Ken's "moemate," is a 6'1," 165 lb. cinder scorcher out of Camden, New Jersey. Coming off a great sophomore showing, which ranked him near the top of the country's sprinters, even bigger things are expected of him in the future. He has already been clocked in a blistering 9.5 100, and a comparably quick 20.8 220. Last year in the IC's he won gold in the 220, and was a barely nipped runner-up in the century. Last spring in the NCAA's in Oregon he placed sixth, qualifying him to compete against the nation's best in the 200 meter Olympic trials in New York.

Potential Great

So far this year, although not a good board runner, he still picked up a fair amount of points and chest jewelry, and came through with a much needed fourth in the indoor IC's. Outdoors, and at home again running the cinders, there is no telling what he might do as can be witnessed by his fantastic 20.6 220 leg in the recent Penn Relays.

Earl Horner

"Horns" and "Conig" have arrived, and if they keep up their "moementum" they can't help but keep going higher and higher and doing "moe-r" and "moe-r" for themselves, for the "Wildcats," and of course for "Grandma."

An Open Letter To The Student Body

Fellow Villanovans,

I would like to briefly outline the goals of the Student Government Association for the forthcoming year. The SGA intends to initiate and continue many programs which will prove beneficial to the student body and the University, but the keynote for the entire year will be a closeness with the student body. The SGA's sole reason for existence is to represent and serve the student body.

Ninety members of the Student Congress cannot isolate themselves in Dougherty Hall and expect to represent 5000 students. Too long in the past has the student body been left unaware of the workings of the organization which supposedly represents them. It is our intention this year to go to the students who have elected us and explain exactly what is being done in student government.

The SGA will accept, and indeed welcome, any criticism, suggestions or advice which any member of the student body may have. A Congress composed of ninety people by no means has a monopoly on good ideas which will benefit the student body. There is no doubt in my mind that this can be the finest year in the history of the SGA, but to achieve this goal we need the support of the students.

It would be folly for the SGA to expect any respect or consideration from the Administration if it does not first have the respect of the student body it represents. We need the help of you, the student body. Can we count on it?

Sincerely,
Stephen F. Freind
President of the Student Body

VU Band Captures Second In Apple Blossom Parade

The Villanova Band placed second in the University and College division of the Apple Blossom Parade held April 23 in Winchester, Virginia. The parade witnessed by crowds in excess of 60,000 people, is the traditional opening of the Apple Blossom Festival.

At the special request of the Winchester's Board of Commissioners, the "Pride of the Main Line" was further requested to give a concert in Town Square.

The "Princess Trophy," award for second place ranking, was formally presented to the Band's new director, Mr. C. Dudley Lowden and its moderator, Rev. Edward C. Doherty OSA, on the occasion of Villanova's first Annual Spring Concert in May.

The weekend in Virginia and the Spring Concert helped round out a successful season for the Band. Under the baton of Mr. Lowden, the Band in the past year traveled to Buffalo, N.Y. Rochelle, N.Y., Camden, N.J. and Passaic, N.J. in addition to the Virginia trip. The Bandsmen also had the opportunity to attend the NIT games in New York City. Plans are presently under way for an even more extensive itinerary next year.

Although the Villanova University Band can be proud of the quality which it has exhibited, as evidenced in the attainment of its recent trophy, the appearance of a forty piece band is not as impressive as that of a larger unit. Spectators will inevitably remem-

Justice Goldberg To Speak At Commencement Exercises

The Honorable Arthur J. Goldberg, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, will speak at Commencement exercises for the Class of 1965 when it graduates on June 7 amid a host of precedences.

Justice Goldberg is known for his impressive work in labor relations and as Secretary of Labor under the Kennedy Administration (1961-62). As Secretary of Labor, he was responsible for settling several major labor disputes and averting national strikes. He has been, since his appointment in 1962, a member of the liberal faction of the Supreme Court. At the Commencement exercises he will receive an honorary Doctor of Laws degree.

Other honorary degrees will be distributed to: Rt. Rev. Msgr. Charles McGinley, Doctors of Humane Letters; Mr. James Quigley, Doctor of Education; Mr. James Conrad, Doctor of Pedagogy; Dr. Barry Ulanov, Doctor of Literature; Mr. Louis Stengel, Doctor of Humane Letters; and Mr. Henry Clifford, Doctor of Fine Arts.

UNPRECEDENTED

The exercises for the Class of '65 will be unique in many ways. For the first time the Commencement exercises will be held away from the campus, but for two very important reasons, according to the Rev. Richard Appicci, OSA, Grand Marshall. During the past ten years when graduation was scheduled for the Stadium, inclement weather has prevented it. Secondly, with the inclement weather, it was necessary to move the ceremony into the Field House which has a limited seating capacity of 3,600 forcing many to be turned away.

By holding the Commencement in Convention Hall, Philadelphia, both of these problems will be alleviated, since the indoor capacity of the hall is 12,800. This capacity will more than cover the 1,327 graduates of the full-time divisions, graduate schools, and the University College, and their guests.

The Valley Forge Philharmonic Orchestra will help set another first. The orchestra, which will play the recessional and processional, is the first major musical group to play at the ceremonies. Finally, the midshipmen of the NROTC unit will be commissioned during the exercises, rather than

Annual Nurses Pinning On Sunday, May 16 In University Chapel

The graduates of the College of Nursing will receive the pins to signify their profession at the fifth annual pinning ceremony of Villanova University.

The ceremony will be held in the University Capel on Sunday May 16 at 3 p.m. Father John A. Klekotka, president of Villanova University will bless and confer the 48 pins to the students who have completed their Bachelor of Science degree in Nursing. Fr. Klekotka will address the graduates after the distribution of the pins.

The ceremony will conclude with solemn benediction. Father Richard Appicci, OSA, dean of Student Activities will be the celebrant. Father Michael Gallagher, OSA and Father William J. Hopkins, OSA, University Chaplain will be the deacon and sub-deacon respectively.

RECEPTION

A reception for the graduates, their families and friends will be held in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall from 4 to 5 p.m.

The pinning ceremony signifies the completion of four years of Nursing. It takes the place of the capping ceremony which is held by most schools of nursing.

A unique feature of this year's ceremony will be the conferring of pins to several students who have completed the registered nurse program.

Senior Parting Fete Features Fat City 4

The final social function for the class of '65, the Senior Parting Festival, will take place on Saturday May 29 from one to eight p.m. at the Orioles Grove in Collegeville. Joseph Karnicky Chosen Commencement Speaker

by Joe Nalbone

Joseph Karnicky of Trenton, New Jersey was chosen as student commencement speaker for the class of 1965. Joe was a graduate of Notre Dame High School in Trenton, and here at Villanova he is in the school of Arts and Science. He will receive a Bachelor of Science degree in Chemistry.

The chemistry major is an active Villanovan and besides keeping up with his studies has taken part in other activities, such as intramurals, and the Chemistry Society.

Joe also received other honors this year by being chosen for the 1965 Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities, and is a member of Delta Epsilon Sigma, a Catholic Arts and Science Honor fraternity.

When asked about his reactions to being chosen as commencement speaker, he said, "I was very surprised when selected, because of the strong competition among my classmates, and was very honored by being selected."

The valedictorian has been awarded a National Science Foundation Fellowship and plans to continue his education at the California Institute of Technology, where he intends to acquire his Doctorate in Chemistry.

His commencement speech is going to be on "The meaning of True Success."

Whiskey Company Retains Title, 'Top Navy Drill Team'

Whiskey Company, the drill team, captured seventh place last month in the National Drill Championships in Washington, D. C.

The competition is part of the Capital's annual Cherry Blossom Festival which takes place every April. Participating teams represent only the top units from around the nation. This year, 52 teams performed, representing Army, Air Force, Navy, and R.O.T.C. Sponsor Corps units from colleges and universities throughout the country.

In the final count, Villanova's score of 770 enabled the team to place seventh in the competition, one step higher than last year's eight place berth. This score, incidentally, permitted Villanova to retain its title of top navy drill team, a title they have held for the past several years.

TOUGH COMPETITION

Whiskey Company's triumph was an accomplishment, for the caliber of the teams was higher than in the past; less than 100 points separated the top ten teams. The Queens Guard from Rutgers University garnered the first place trophy, defeating Capital University by the narrow margin of two points. In third place was Harvard University army R.O.T.C. team followed by Clemson University, Howard's team, the University of Michigan and Villanova.

To achieve success, any squad requires team effort, and Whiskey cooperated under the leadership of their company commander, Midm. Lt. John Moore. Moore, a Marine option student majoring in history, has been marching with Whiskey Company since he came to Villanova from Xavier Military High School four years ago.

OTHER MEETS

Since the National Championships, Whiskey Company has appeared on two other occasions. On Saturday, April 24, the second platoon brought home three trophies from the Manhattan College Invitational Meet. These trophies included a fourth place in basic drill, fourth in trick drill, and a third place trophy for their overall performance.

On Monday, April 26, Whiskey Company's first platoon performed at the New York World's Fair, giving two commendable exhibi-

Presidential Portrait

The passing of the reins from one class president to another is always a memorable occasion, but this coming September it should have a special significance. This year's Junior Class President, Frank Eck, will not go the way of the retired, but rather he will assume a position of much greater importance not only to his class, but to the entire university. Frank will now serve the SGA in the distinguished capacity of vice-president for educational affairs.

A little over a year ago Frank was given little chance of attaining his presidential aspiration due to the popularity and record of his opponent. The fact that he did overcome this impediment, as well as many others, must be attributed to his deep sincerity and desire to work for others.

When Frank's initial attempt at a class affair failed, he was addressed with scorn and a tone of "I told you so" by his opponents. The fact is that their remarks probably hurt the president more than people realize. The failure of such an activity cannot be attributed to one individual, but rather to a lack of unity. The succeeding events which he arranged for his classmates have proved his worth.

SGA Correspondent — Analysis and Commentary

Conference Tomorrow

By John Barrow

A new dimension in Villanova student government has descended upon our campus; an era of student -- government communications, rather than student government communications.

SGA President Steve Freind, in an effort to get closer to the student has initiated a presidential press conference, sent letters to all Villanovans, and scheduled meetings with the officers of all three classes. Freind plans to take his "get acquainted" policy to the students from both ends.

He has already been in touch with the Alumni Association, and yesterday met with the officers of the orientation committee, to insure that the incoming freshmen become familiar with the functions and efficacy of the SGA.

Freind is hopeful that this will result in representation in the Congress of 4600 Villanovans, rather than the ninety who are actually members of the Congress. By the end of the school year, no one should be able to use that old cliche' "I didn't know what it was all about -- no one asked me my ideas."

His ideas will be welcomed by the SGA, and his help in implementing them solicited as never before. Even now, SGA applications are available on the second floor of Dougherty Hall for any student, SGA MEMBER OR NOT, who wants to work on a student government committee.

This is that "chance to help" which was never given except to those in the clique. Response to these applications has been promising, if not yet gratifying. If you wish to get involved in student government, fill out an application as soon as possible. If you would rather wait, then do so, and the SGA will come to you, through WWVU, personal letters, and the VILLANOVAN.

The VILLANOVAN will carry a weekly box showing the exact present condition of any bill brought before the Senate. That is, whether it is in the Senate, in the Congress, before the administration, or defeated, and if so, why. If a bill is passed in the Student Congress, a Congress member will immediately be assigned to investigate the bill, pro and con, and report back to the Congress, before the bill is taken to the administation for implementation.

In this new investigative process, full use will be made of the ASGUSA (Associated Student Governments of the USA) as a clearing house for ideas and an information and comparison center, comparing our ideas and policies with other universities, and learning how other schools have made these ideas work.

If you have any questions or ideas to present to the student body president, a second press conference will be held tomorrow afternoon at 4:30 p.m. in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall. The primary purpose of this conference will be to discuss the results of two ideas including a non compulsory attendance system for juniors and seniors with a cumulative average of 3.0 or better, and a set policy for picking the graduation speaker.

For those who wish to get involved in Villanova, the second presidential press conference, is on Thursday, May 13, at 4:30 p.m. in the East Lounge.

ber a large band playing mediocre music more readily than a smaller band with an outstanding repertoire.

In order for the band to be effective on the football field this fall, Mr. Lowden feels that we must increase our marching unit to seventy-two men. If this number is not reached, it may be necessary to discontinue Villanova's Marching Band.

ELECTIONS

Elections for the 1965-66 season were held a few weeks ago. Leading the Band next year in its endeavors will be Al Bingham, President; Dave Boyle, Vice-President, Russ Williams, Secretary; and Bob DeLauretis, Student Council Representative. Don Swartz has been appointed its new student conductor. These men, in co-operation with the director and the moderator, have already started a new recruit program and have high hopes that a band becoming the size of the University will be realized in terms of numbers.

Sociology Club Shows Cancer Society Film In Vasey Tomorrow

The Sociology Club closes its activities year with a special color movie tomorrow. Produced by the American Cancer Society, the film is a searching analysis of the aspects, pro and con, of the worlds most accepted 'bad' habit. Entitled 'IS SMOKING WORTH IT?' the feature will be shown during the Sociology Club meeting Thursday at 10:30 a.m. in 207 Vasey.

Last week, the club sponsored Mrs. Hilda Wilson, chairwoman of the Philadelphia chapter of the student Non-Violent Co-ordinating Committee. Mrs. Wilson, in a speech delivered in Vasey Auditorium, described conditions of civil rights workers in Alabama and Mississippi.

Also last week, outgoing President of the Sociology Club, Lou Petrillo was awarded an engraved gavel, in appreciation of his three semesters of service to the Club. Rick Berry, next year's president, made the presentation, and projected some of next year's activities.

Course Evaluation Planned Meetings Set With Faculty

A course evaluation program is presently being planned by the SGA. Letters have been sent to Harvard, Yale, Ohio State, Northwestern, North Dakota and the University of Pennsylvania in order to study their programs.

At present the Industrial Administration department under Dr. Kline has an internal, voluntary program as do several other departments. However these are rather limited at present.

Several successful meetings have been held with the faculty and the administration. From these and from questionaires sent out to the department heads, two plans are being considered.

The first is a student evaluation course in which the students will evaluate courses they are taking and publish the results in order to help students choose their courses when they register. The second method is an internal plan where the instructor would pass out forms to his class which would ask for defects or good points the student sees in the teacher.

The second method is in limited use now and is favored over the other by the instructors and the administration. It would allow only the instructor to see the criticisms of his class thereby eliminating any outside pressures. It would be placed on a voluntary basis and should help the instructors who use it.

'Villanovan' Editor Roche Awarded News Scholarship

by Louis Bibri

Matthew Roche, a junior English major, has received the Wall Street Journal's News Fund Scholarship. Roche, a member of the Literary Society and current Exchange Editor for the VILLANOVA, is the first Villanovan to receive this scholarship in three years.

It is awarded by the Wall Street Journal mainly to Juniors attending schools having no journalism courses, who would like to work for a newspaper during the summer.

An application, a transcript of his grades, an essay and several newspaper articles formerly written by Matt were required for consideration. Upon being chosen, Roche was sent a list of newspapers to apply for work.

His choice was the Scranton Tribune where he seems assured of obtaining a job. Roche will work for ten weeks this summer with the Tribune and then receive a five hundred dollar scholarship from the News Fund.

Villanova Arts Forum Holds Concerts, Cultural Exhibits

by Rick Berry

Rev. Richard Appicci, OSA, has announced an innovation in the realm of cultural exhibitions at Villanova. A group of eleven men under the leadership of Mike Sutherland will operate as the Villanova Arts Forum.

Their function will be to supervise major concerts next year, and to make arrangements for art exhibits and other cultural projects on campus.

Arrangements have been made for the Villanova committee to work in conjunction with the Main Line Arts Forum, to which Father Appicci is Villanova's representative. This group is founded on the purpose of increasing cultural activities on the Main Line. In return for advice and publicity for Villanova events, The Main Line Arts Forum will receive publicity on this campus for their events.

FOUR CONCERTS

Four concerts will be sponsored by the Villanova Arts Forum next year. The United States Marine Band ("The Redcoats are coming!") will head the list arriving in September. For Parents' Weekend in October, Mantovani and his orchestra will appear. Early in February the Forum will present the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra, and the Philadelphia Youth Orchestra will make their second appearance at Villanova in April of 1966.

The Villanova Arts Forum will supervise publicity, ticket distribution and technical arrangements for these affairs, which will be held in the field house.

Law School Announces Outstanding Results On Bar Examinations

In connection with the meeting of the Board of Consultors to the School of Law at Villanova on Friday, April 23, Dean Harold Gill Reuschlein presented a survey of results in the most recent bar examinations taken by Villanova Law graduates.

The Consultors heard the report that on the last bar examination in Pennsylvania Villanova Law School graduates were 100 percent. The same was true of the last bar examination in New York State. It is a remarkable achievement to score 100 percent in both New York and Pennsylvania bar examinations. In the New Jersey bar examination Villanova's candidates did not score a perfect record but 80 percent of the New Jersey bar on the first try.

The 1965 edition of the Belle Air will be distributed to seniors on May 13-14, to underclassmen on May 17-21 in the Training Room on the second floor of Dougherty Hall from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Rev. Richard Appicci, OSA, congratulates Mr. Logue of the Political Science Department, moderator of the Villanova Political Union, on VUPU's fine work throughout the year as outgoing President Robert McKelvie becomes a spectator.

Fr. Appicci Praises VUPU; Presents Awards of Merit

Rev. Richard Appicci, OSA, distributed certificates of merit to Villanova Political Union members on Wednesday, May 5, for distinguished service.

The Villanova Political Union was termed, "one of the best, if not the best" organization on campus by the Dean of Student Activities last week.

The Awards Meeting heard a review of the year's activities by outgoing President Robert McKelvie, '65 who congratulated the members on a productive year. This year saw Union members engage in ten debates on topics ranging from school bussing to U.S. policy in Viet Nam. Each debate was triggered by a half hour speech by a prominent guest speaker. Guests included such political opposites as Democrat Richardson Dilworth, mayor of Philadelphia twice, and Republican D. E. "Buzz" Lukens, national chairman of the Young Republicans. The Union welcomed two representatives of foreign nations, Pashed Mourad, Ambassador of the Arab League to the United Nations and Bernardo Teixeira, Portugese Press Attache.

This year's debates were held in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall. This has enabled the Union to adopt some of the mechanisms found in the British House of Commons, for example, party members sit facing each other across a centeraisle.

The newly elected Political Union president, Robert C. Leonard, '66 presented McKelvie a gavel for his service to the Union. Leonard promised the Union that the new officers would work hard to bring renowned speakers and "controversial topics" to the campus in the year ahead. He also promised that the Union would continue to welcome Rosemont students as members.

A surprise guest at the awards meeting was Sir Cedric Kendrick, introduced as president of the Oxford Union in 1925 and a distinguished British Businessman. The graying, bespectacled Kedrick congratulated the Villanova group on its work. In the course of his address a suspicion arose - and grew - that Sir Cedrick was actually the Union's moderator, Professor John J. Logue of the Political Science Department.

Later in the program Mr. Logue was presented an engraved pen and pencil set and was congratulated for his services to the Union by President McKelvie and Father Appicci.

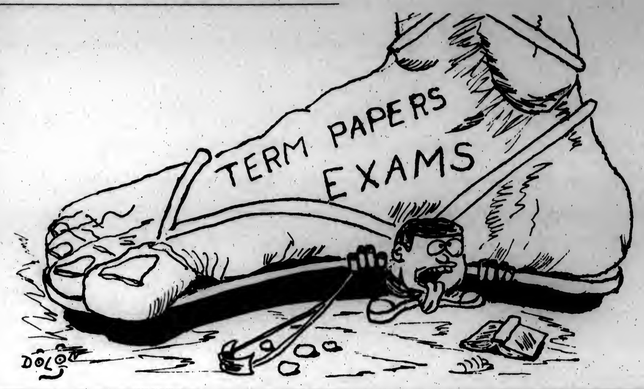
'Concept' Spring Issue Out; New Editors Want Opinion

CONCEPT magazine, Villanova's student opinion journal, has announced next year's editorial staff. Dennis Gildea, a junior majoring in political science, will head the editorial board.

Assisting him will be Don Anderson (general arts) and Bob Koogler (E.E.). Chosen primarily because of their interest in stimulating student opinion, the three will focus their efforts upon developing CONCEPT as a forum of student expression.



Meanwhile, the spring issue of CONCEPT is now on sale in Dougherty Hall, at the library circulation desk, and on magazine racks in Tolentine and Bartley Halls.

Factionalism On Campus

By Gene FitzMaurice

It was recently stated in these pages that it is not difficult to distinguish a Tweed from an Out. This is not true.

If an Out is one who is without major, upperclass office; one who is without control of a major campus publication; one without control of the Student Government Association, then an Out would have to be a Tweed.

If a Tweed is one whose manner, style, and personal effectiveness have earned for him the power bases named above, then a Tweed must be an Out.

The past weeks have demonstrated once again that on the campus level, as in every other walk of life, there are more Outs than Tweeds. They have also served to show that the Tweeds represent a sufficient proportion of the student body to merit consideration as an essential campus minority group.

ROBES OF CALLING

We should not let the labels fool us. Those who, outside of Villanova, have accomplished through position, skill, and home great things have not felt it necessary to clothe themselves in robes of calling.

It is hoped that the weeks above will find the Outs learning that it is no disgrace to serve the student body with perhaps a bit more polish than has previously been the case. It is also hoped that the Tweeds will learn that it is no disgrace to serve the student body.

If the candidates of the past weeks show the same maturity which was displayed by the electorate, then they will quickly move to close ranks and join their forces as they begin to lead the upper class, and the SGA into what could be its greatest year. If they do not, they will permit the factionalism which has weakened us in the past to grow larger and menace us once again.

Perhaps the greatest obligation of both groups is to draw more fully into the student body the large number of students who can be classified only as Aboves.

PIE SHOPPE PHILOSOPHERS

By this is not meant the small group of Pie Shoppe philosophers who sit about daily toasting one another's glibness with the mugs they have barely touched to the springs of knowledge. Rather, it is the large group of students whose intellectual and social gifts have been allowed to stagnate while a few with less ability pushed themselves to the fore.

Unless these students are quickly drawn into the student body, no accomplishment will be universal in its good effects; no accomplishment can be truly claimed by class and Congress officers; no accomplishment will be worth seeking.

Letters To The Editor

To the Editor:

My subject is apathy and my reference is the Sophomore Charity Outing.

For the past two and a half months, I have watched this project grow from a mere hodgepodge of vague ideas to an efficiently-coordinated major event on the Sophomore calendar.

I have seen about twenty of my fellow classmates devote much time and effort to punching this project into shape.

DISINTEREST

And I have witnessed the response this work has elicited from the Sophomore Class as a whole: one disgusting blob of disinterest.

It's pathetically ridiculous to hear shouted from every podium at election time: "The past administration didn't provide enough class participation. Elect me, for I will provide more participation for everyone."

For the entire past year, I have seen the totality of this animal, class participation, and I have found him to be non-existent.

It's absurd to have only Freshmen at your SOPHOMORE Cotillion; it's pitiful to have no one at all at your SOPHOMORE Charity Outing.

NO BETTER WAY

There is no better way to have "class participation" than to attend your class functions. Not everyone has the time or the inclination to organize a project, but everyone can patronize an activity.

This past year for our class was a failure because there was no class spirit because no one gave a darn. Everything we did was an organizational success, but this is a shallow triumph indeed. Everything went off as planned, but there were no sophomores there to appreciate it.

It happened this past year under Tim Coyle and it will happen next year under Rick Holwell, unless there is a drastic change of attitude by a lot of people. Our presidents are not responsible and there is nothing they can do about it, but, paradoxically, accept the blame.

The only remedy is for some of the inactive members of the class to take and pursue an interest in our class, if possible, but, at the very least, to attend the class functions. The only remedy is for the sleeping many to realize that the only thing one gets out of a class, one puts into a class.

These words are not merely destructive criticism. We begin a new year with a chance to rebuild the fallen statue which is the Class of 1967. I, for one, will give all that I can; but I an only one. It takes more than one, or twenty, or one hundred.

There's a class meeting tomorrow. Take a little initiative; find out when and where, and then be there.

Jeff Radowich
General Chairman
Sophomore Charity Outing

To the Editor:

Not being one who likes to take too much advice, I feel strange in giving it. Regardless, I must make the attempt since there is little else to write about (as explained below).

What the complaint (or criticism, for hard-core reactionaries) boils down to is this - last week's VILLANOVAN was very uncontroversial. For example, it is really impossible to write a letter to the Editor concerning any of the news items (e.g. "Soph Spring Outing To Be Held At Malvern"), because news is news and that is that.

However there were several articles of an opinionistic nature, which normally make good letter material. Unfortunately, to write about these would be unhealthy. If one writes about "What can you do for Villanova?" he becomes a disloyal student. If one writes about "Elephant's Footprint" he becomes a heretic. If one writes about "Tolerant Americans" he becomes a Communist. If one writes about "Speaking of Art" he becomes an enemy of Pop Art, which is worse than the first three.

So, in light of this unfortunate situation, I've decided not to write a letter to the Editor.

Neil Sheehan
Class of 1968

ED. NOTE: The purpose for the VILLANOVAN'S existence is not the engendering of controversy. If certain stories tend toward controversy, then that is the way it is. Our responsibility is to provide the students with a voice on campus and to supply the news as it occurs. By the way, are you kidding?

A Time of Tribulation

The typical student finds himself at the end of a semester embroiled in academic difficulties due to diverse reasons. Among them are poor organization, putting things off until the last minute, and lack of study throughout the semester. All of these difficulties are usually the student's fault. Students will complain about the teacher's attitude, about the poorly organized course, and about the impossible tests that are given by the teacher. Human nature being the way it is, students make various excuses to themselves, to the teacher, and to their parents in order to mitigate their laxity and carelessness.

However, while admitting that the student is usually the one to blame for his academic difficulties, sometimes the teachers deserve to wait for assigned term papers, to read sketchy essays, and to talk to stone walls when discussing the day's assignment. These are the times when more than one major test is scheduled for the same day, when more than one term paper is scheduled for the same day, and when a combination of both term papers and tests occur on the same day especially during special social events, such as Homecoming, Junior Week, Senior Weekend, etc.

If these term papers and tests are scheduled well in advance of the deadline, then the student hardly has any justification for his gripe. But if important tests and term papers are sprung from the bottom of the professor's academic bonnet, then the student has a legitimate cause. Tests scheduled for the same day - especially during mid-term week - become an almost unbearable hardship if the student waits until the last night to study. But one night to review a subject is not too much to ask when a lot of material is to be covered on the test. Early notification for a term paper is almost essential for an efficient job. True, the student will probably wait until the last night to do the assignment but if it is assigned early, there will be no excuse for the dilatory. Consideration on both the student and the professor's part would be beneficial for the waning days of any semester.

A Summertime Suggestion

In the midst of Exam Week, the college student often thinks of the rapidly approaching summer and what he will do with it. Besides the revelry, relaxation, and work, the student should set aside time for one of the most important things in life -- READING. We leave you with a parting suggestion: READ THIS SUMMER.

This is the last VILLANOVAN of the school year. Anyone who is interested in working for the paper next year leave your name and address (next year's) in the VILLANOVAN office on the second floor of Dougherty Hall. We will contact you when school starts in September.

Peter, Paul & Mary Receive Much Applause, Many Laughs

By Bill McCloskey

Mary Travers, knee bent, eyes fixed on a point just above the heads of the crowd. Peter Yarrow, head held high with a satisfied smile on his face. Paul Stookey with a cynical grin looking from one audience member to another. Against an orange and red phosphorescent trio of letters, this was the first glimpse of Peter, Paul and Mary in the Field House Friday.

The lighting, carried out by members of the WWVU engineering staff, to the specifics of the PP&M contract, was excellent. The sound, always a problem with the poor acoustics of the Field House, was equally excellent from every quarter of the huge arena.

The loudest applause of the evening came for a Jesse Fuller song "San Francisco Bay Blues" that was highlighted by a kazoo rhythm section, composed of the two gods and the goddess of the folk world.

It didn't take long for the trio to figure out their audience and they had them "rolling in the aisles" to the episode of Captain M&M, which featured a crazed, sugar-coated, 17-forward-and-three-in-reverse, TV hero and his straight man Billy Bite-sized.

It was reported that Miss Travers was ill before the show. However, after some medication she felt well enough to go on. After the show she is quoted as saying that she felt it was one of the best concerts she had ever done, because of the fine acceptance by the audience.

The group had the audience with them from the start and must have read everyone's mind when they suggested a sing-along to "Puff."

Their humor was also pointed and topical as exemplified in the Market Research Man's dream song "A Dog Named Blue" complete with Rolling Stonitis syndrome thrown in.

A professional performance is always a pleasure to watch and this group proved their professionalism when a string broke in Peter's guitar. After Paul and Mary did a number alone, Paul was able to fill in for a few more minutes by himself.

Sounds of Note

by Bill McCloskey

We were saddened by the passing of the final bit of critical humor on television, THAT WAS THE WEEK THAT WAS. It offered a little bit of thoughtful fun and aimed a few barbs at the very serious people in the news.

It was a refreshing relaxation from the pseudo-humor of the Huntley-Brinkley type newscast, yet it was able to have a serious moment when the situation merited it.

We note that HULLABALLO is sold out commercially for next year.

We're still waiting for the people at WCAU or anybody for that matter to let the public in on the reasoning behind Taylor Grant's demise from "EVENING EDITION." If any more controversey gets bumped from the airwaves, they'll have to quit reading weather forecasts.

We're happy to note that WHAT-FM's Del Shields has been named Jazz Editor of BILLBOARD MAGAZINE.

The Lynx Isn't Missing

By Tom Krause

A wild red and white cover warns you that this one may be different. The LYNX, Villanova's literary magazine, offers several fairly good stories and an interesting cross-section of the college student's outlook on life.

For many years, students have castigated the LYNX and its kin CONCEPT for their abstractness, unintelligibility, and dull material. But they fail to realize the importance of self-expression and both magazines provide the student with vehicles for this self-expression.

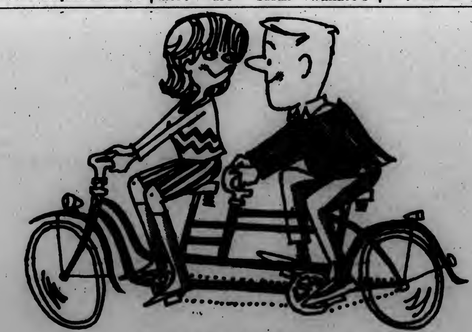
The poetry in the LYNX seems to fall short of the standards set by some of the short stories -- notably John DiGennaro's "Give Me A Break," and Richard Smith's "The Phone Call." Perhaps it is true that a poet has to have had some experience before he can set it down in verse.

However, there are some poems that deserve recognition. Among these are Susan Wallace's "Thoughts in Amhurst Jail" -- a rapid-fire approximation of hours spent in a Southern jail complete with the prison dialogue and sounds; "Antithesis: Reconstruction" by Joseph T. Dibos, OSA an account of the beauty of nature being seduced by the 'Rats, rabble, iron castings,' Men's way ..."; "Results" by Jason Randolph, and "Lucifer's Banquet" by Robert Walsh.

"Farewell, Father McShea" by Joseph W. Ratigan adds a note of information about "a talented priest and professor" on the Villanova campus.

Several of the short stories in this issue were well-written but seemed to lack a unifying factor and a definite theme. The best of these was Eugene FitzMaurice's "Nobody's Perfect" which is reminiscent of Fitzgerald. Fred Hetzler's "Where He Is Going" also falls in this category.

DiGennaro's "Give Me A Break," besides being well written, tells an imaginative tale about a jewelry heist and a broken friendship. Smith's "The Phone Call" comments on the reaction of a family after the oldest son is arrested for stealing a car. The story is told by the brother of the criminal and we cannot help empathizing with him.



Tom Grassey's "Some Curiosity" portrays a touching moment in the life of a youngster who realizes the finality of death. One of the better short stories in the LYNX is "The Beginning" by Jeff Radowich. It tells of a moment of decision in a young man's life and a weak ending is its only blemish.

Perhaps the LYNX isn't appreciated on campus because so few write for it. More contributions would enable the magazine's editors to exercise greater selectivity and make for a better literary magazine. Why not try your hand at writing?

VU Singers Conclude Most Successful Year

The Villanova Singers recently completed their concert year with its annual Spring Concert, in the Field House. The year ended with acclaim and precedents.

Michael Neuman, outgoing president of the group, commented on what he felt were the important factors that contributed to this year's success.

He said, "Above all I found spirit and excellence to be the most evident marks of our concert year. The group continually presented an image of enthusiasm and dignity wherever it performed. It has also brought the school as well as itself much acclaim and recognition through its appearances."

The recognition of its excellence has been acknowledged by two national groups. Mutual Broadcasting invited them to produce a choral program to be used on its annual Christmas program. The program was broadcast coast-to-coast. Recently the National Catholic Music Educators Association asked the Singers to perform at their annual Convention held in Philadelphia.

Neuman went on to say that he felt particular tribute should be paid not only to the Singers themselves, but also to "our excellent director, Mr. Herbert Fiss." He also lauded the efforts and contributions of their moderator, the Rev. Edward Doherty, OSA.

Where's Elvis Been

by Jim Brennan

Have you ever wondered what happened to Elvis Presley, that gyrating, hip switching, guitar strummer who used to make our radios and televisions vibrate. Well he is still very big - at least moneywise. This year he figures to make approximately $5,000,000.

He doesn't appear on television anymore, and he has not made a personal appearance in four years. All he does is make a few records and three movies a year. Elvis just finished a movie, which he completed in 18 days. His salary - a meager $1,000,000.

Aside from his salary, he also gets 50 percent of the movie profits, and since none of his 17 movies has lost money, that 50 percent in old and current films is an easy $1,000,000 more.

PLAYS FOOTBALL

Members of the older generation would like to think of Elvis as a wild teenage idol but this is not so. He calls elders by their surnames, keeps in physical shape by playing touch football, and holds a black belt in karate.

Although his theatrical work has brought him into contact with various degrees of sexy girls, he has eluded their grasp and remains a bachelor. Elvis has surrounded himself with eight Tennessee buddies who earn their pay by keeping everyone else away.

Just a thought to leave you with. Elvis lives in an 18 room $1,000,000 house and he never went to college. How's your room on campus?

You Can Be a Cannibal

by Rusty Miller

In a mixed-up capitalist country such as this, one of the most interesting phenomenon to observe (sometimes from a distance) is the changing of the fads. Each year the Lemmings in Scotland make their suicidal march to the sea. People gape in wonder. "Look what their doing to themselves!" "It's horrible!" "It's insanity!" Sound familiar? An irate mother perhaps.

Remember "pegged pants," with saddle stitching yet? Then there were black leather jackets and sack dresses. Now we have Beatle haircut, no socks, and what this writer considers the most insane of all -- pierced ears.

You say you tried to fondle your date's ear lobe and she screamed and hit you? You got embarassed when everyone else at the party looked at you kind of funny. You say they didn't believe you when you explained. That's odd!

Let's review briefly how the operation in question is performed in many cases. A typical victim's story goes: "I was at a party one night. Well, there was this girl there who had pierced ears and she said she knew how to do it. Well, I decided to get my ears pierced. We went upstairs and they held ice cubes on my ears till they were numb. Then the girl got an ice pick and pierced them. It didn't hurt much!" "Then why do you flinch whenever somebody touches them?" "Oh, they got kind of infected later, but they'll get better!"

Right! Nice, eh guys? You can picture even a doctor putting holes in your ears. Think of it, maimed for life! We hang decorations from Christmas trees, not from holes in our ears.

The next step in this barbaric pattern of masochism is obvious -- a ring for your nose. Then comes ... you guessed it, a bone in your hair. Then the trend will be complete, right back to the stone age.

Now nose rings might not be too bad. You can picture your date coming to the door with a leash. The implication is obvious, but then even now some guys who call on Saturday for a date wind up taking a leash out with them.

The Alfalfa bit with a bone instead of a ribbon could draw a mixed reaction. It might be a little smelly, but then you'd be on the best of terms with every canine in the neighborhood. For the 6:00 type date, it would provide something to gnaw on while her date enjoys himself -- elsewhere.

What are the various elements in our civilization that wear pierced earrings? Well there's the primitives in Africa, pirates (pirates?), gypsies, Italian organ grinders (What kind of grinders?) and American college girls. A good group, wouldn't you say?

So, girls, why not join the crowd? Remember, you too can be a cannible!

HERE WE GO AGAIN!

By Joe Maffongelli

Richie Allen is presently going through a drastic sophomore slump as it was predicted he would. As a result he is hitting well below the expected .400 average which the Phillie brass requires to put a soph into the higher salary brackets. On the other hand the golden arm - Jim Bunning - is pitching better than ever before, before he started pitching that is.

Undoubtedly the Phillies will stay in the first division, but their pennant days seem to be in the future once more.

Out on the coast Walter Alston is still trying to prove that pitching alone can win a pennant. His credentials are a first place spot with Tommy Davis still out of action. He has a few hitting rookies but they may turn out to field like Allen and thereby balance out their credits.

THE NEW BREED

The New York Mets are back home, but who'll bet that they're doomed to the cellar once again. It must be kept in mind that they only required three starts to gain their initial victory this season while last year their first win left them with a 1-5 record.

On the other hand the Astros are a bit insubordinate these days while winning game after game. They don't even have a washed-up manager either. However they do have a pretty good young pitcher named Giusti.

Alvin Dark was fired last fall because he couldn't get enough out of his squad. At least he did get something out of them. This manager shuffling could get Herman Franks to take up catching or at least coaching first base.

BOMBERS GROUNDED

Something rather unusual is happening over in the American League these days. Al Lopez is saying that the Yankees can be beaten and he's been right so far. The old windbag may turn out to be the enlightened prophet for the third time in some seventeen years.

It seems as though Mickey Mantle and Whitey Ford haven't yet found the time to sit down and organize the attack. To be sure there is no other feasible reason for such a collapse of power. It is almost as bad as the situation in St. Louis where a guy named Keane is sorely missed. Of course the Yanks did find a Doc (Edwards) around when they had an injury afflict Elston Howard last month.

There are two pitchers in the junior circuit who are enjoying banner seasons. They are Robin Roberts and Ralph Terry. It's a shame that the Yankee pitching strength was too deep without them.

But Lopez's Sox are holding down the fort with their power hitting and swiftness afoot. The only weakness seems to stem from pitchers with high strikeout records.

The nation's capital is overflowing with excitement as the Senators are showing what a difference a democratic congress can make.

The name Charlie Finley is associated with a certain ass nowadays. It's a strange thing to have a mule managing a major league club, but strange things happen all over whether it be in Kansas City, Atlanta, or elsewhere.

Stickmen Win 7 Straight; Crush Fairleigh Dickinson

By Aurel Villari

This season's edition of the Lacrosse Club is presently nearing the end of the most successful year in the history of the Villanova Stickmen. Having rolled up a fine 7-1 log to date, the Stickmen crushed Fairleigh Dickinson last Saturday, 20-4, led by the sterling play of Jim Ryan, who contributed 7 goals in the victory.

Not only have the Stickmen rolled up an impressive record this season, but several individuals on the squad have been nothing less than terrific, without whose efforts the Club couldn't have come close to its present record.

Rich Hook has been instrumental in the club's success. Rich, playing crease-attack, has racked up a total of 38 goals over the first seven games, which is good enough to rank him unofficially as the nation's top scorer. Rich especially made his presence known in the first Georgetown game, when he contributed 8 goals.

Ed McFadden, also a frosh, has thus far accumulated 40 points (goals and assists), which ranks him among the national leaders in that category.

Senior Bill White, who co-captains the Stickmen at his midfield position, provides the cohesion and spirit which are so necessary to a winning club; his value to the club became evident when his entry in the second-half inspired the Stickmen to victory over Dickinson, after being on the short end of an 8-6 half-time score.

Senior Jim Rantanen and junior Ray Hollander, playing crease-defense and wing-defense respectively, are solid, hard-hitting defenders, whose rugged play has helped limit the opposition to fewer tallies than it would like.

Kevin "Termite" Tyler, having originally stepped into the goalie sport as a substitute, has done a great job there over the season, and is one of many being counted on to keep the Stickmen flying high.

Although the Stickmen lost the season's opener to C. W. Post. They've since overpowered Georgetown (twice), New York Maritime Academy, Penn, Hartwick College, Dickinson, and Fairleigh Dickinson. On May 12 the season's finale pits the Stickmen against Franklin and Marshall.

Rugby 'A' Team Ties Powerful Jaspers 3-3 'B' Team Triumphs

By Bob McIntyre

On Saturday afternoon, Villanova's Rugby (A) squad could only get a 3-3 tie out of a rugged Manhattan Rugby Club. The game went back and forth with neither team making any dent in the others defense and so at the half the score stood at 0-0.

Towards the end of the second half, Manhattan broke the ice and pushed across a score but couldn't get the extra point as Villanova's defense began to get fired up.

With the score reading 3-0 and time running out, the 'Cats' offense went into high gear with Dick Gove kicking ahead, he was able to score the tying goal, Dick Brandt just missed the crossbar for the extra point and thus the game ended in a deadlock.

The B game was a different story as the Ruggers from Villanova got off to a fast start thanks to the fancy footwork of Rick Ward. Mike Kane missed the conversion and the score held at 3-0 for the 1st half.

Rick Crawford, with superb running got off a beautiful pass to Dick Gove and he quickly scored to make it 6-0. Crawford scored the extra point and the game ended in a 8-0 victory for the 'Cats, to give the annual Senior Father's Day crowd something to be happy about.

TESTS, AND HOW THEY GREW

Just the other night I was saying to the little woman, "Do you think the importance of tests in American colleges is being overemphasized?". (Incidentally, the little woman is not, as you might think, my wife. My wife is far from a little woman. She is, in fact, nearly seven feet high and mantled with rippling muscles. She is a full-blooded Ogallala Sioux and holds the world's shot put record. The little woman I referred to is someone we found crouching under the sofa when we moved into our apartment back in 1928, and there she has remained ever since. She never speaks except to make a kind of guttural clicking sound when she is hungry. To tell you the truth, she's not too much fun to have around the house, but with my wife away at track meets most of the time, at least it gives me someone to talk to.)

But I digress. "Do you think the importance of tests in American colleges is being overemphasized?" I said the other night to the little woman, and then I said, "Yes, Max, I do think the importance of tests in American colleges is being overemphasized." (As I explained, the little woman does not speak, so when we have conversations, I am forced to do both parts.)

But I digress. To get back to tests—sure, they're important, but let's not allow them to get too important. There are, after all, many talents which simply can't be measured by quizzes. Is it right to penalize a gifted student whose gifts don't happen to fall into an academic category? Like, for instance, Finster Sigafoos?

She is a full-blooded Ogallala Sioux . . .

Finster, a freshman at the Wyoming College of Belles Lettres and Fingerprint Identification, has never passed a single test; yet all who know him agree he is studded with talent like a ham with cloves. He can, for example, sleep standing up. He can do a perfect imitation of a scarlet tanager. (I don't mean just the bird calls; I mean he can fly south in the winter.) He can pick up BB's with his toes. He can say "toy boat" three times fast. He can build a rude telephone out of 100 yards of string and two empty Personna Stainless Steel Razor Blade packages. (This last accomplishment is the one Finster is proudest of—not building the telephone but emptying the Personna packs. To empty a Personna pack is not easily accomplished, believe you me, not if you're a person who likes to get full value out of his razor blades. And full value is just what Personnas deliver. They last and last and keep on lasting; luxury shave follows luxury shave in numbers that make the mind boggle. Why don't you see for yourself? Personnas are now available in two varieties: a brand-new stainless steel injector blade for users of injector razors—and the familiar double-edge stainless steel blade so dear to the hearts and kind to the kissers of so many happy Americans, blades so smooth-shaving, so long-lasting that the Personna Co. makes the following guarantee: If you don't agree Personna gives you more luxury shaves than Beep-Beep or any other brand you might name, Personna will buy you a pack of whatever kind you think is better.)

But I digress. Back to Finster Sigafoos—artist, humanist, philosopher, and freshman since 1939. Will the world ever benefit from Finster's great gifts? Alas, no. He is in college to stay.

But even more tragic for mankind is the case of Clare de Loon. Clare, a classmate of Finster's, had no talent, no gifts, no brains, no personality. All she had was a knack for taking tests. She would cram like mad before a test, always get a perfect score, and then promptly forget everything she had learned. Naturally, she graduated with highest honors and degrees by the dozen, but the sad fact is that she left college no more educated and no more prepared to cope with the world than she was when she entered. Today, a broken woman, she crouches under my sofa.

Speaking of tests, we, the makers of Personna®, put our blades through an impressive number before we send them to market. We also make—and thoroughly test—an aerosol shave that soaks rings around any other lather: Burma Shave®, regular and menthol.

Pop honors for Gale Garnett

Here's the latest album from the gal who's a number one favorite on campuses across the country. Seven of the twelve songs on this brand-new album are Gale Garnett originals including "Marionette" and "Excuse Me Mister." She also adds a new charm to such hits as "Long Time Blues" and "St. James Infirmary." It's a beautiful, melodic example of Gale's many talents that move her up to the head of her class. Wildkitten Crew Wins Place In Dad Vail Regatta Finals

By Lou Sonzogni

Before a riverside throng of ten-thousand, dotted with enthusiastic Villanova students, a Wildcat eight completed its first season of competition last Saturday.

The Freshman Crew had made a valiant effort in a qualifying race on Friday to win a position in the finals of the Dad Vail Regatta, but a strong Northeastern eight (whose crew, incidently, swept the Vail's finals, the first such feat in the regatta's 27-year history), and a surprising La Salle squad, gained the coveted berths with less than a length separating the boats. George Washington and C.W. Post trailed.

In a race for place on the next day, however, the Cats rallied huskily over the final 500-meters of the mile and 5/16 course to quell a sprint by Clark University and four other crews. The Villanova boat, stroked by Clem Kopf, held 42 strokes-per-minute over the entire course, but did not take the lead until midway through the race. The erstwhile pace-setter was Drexel Tech, who eventually finished fourth; the remaining crews were Iona, Marist, and George Washington.

VILLANOVA WINS

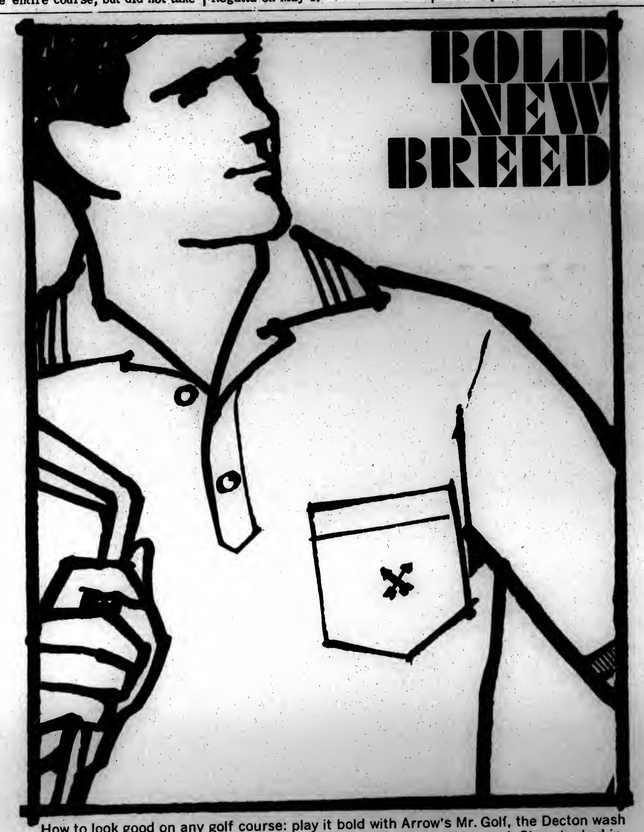
The victory by Villanova was the sole first-place finish of any area crew in the regatta's six-race program.

Ironically, Drexel has been giving the Cats Crew the most trouble this season, not on the river but in the administrative ranks. The original members of the Crew overcame innumerable obstacles so that Villanova might join the host of eastern universities, noted for rowing supremacy.

Application for recognition of the inaugurative effort was made to the athletic directors of all area colleges, and all welcomed the Wildcats - all except Drexel. For this reason, the Cats eight was refused a place in the City Championship Regatta on May 1.

Perhaps the protests Drexel Lodged against Villanova's entry in every other race were well-founded though. This is one way to write off the fact that Villanova's Frosh soundly trounced Drexel's at every meeting, and gave the Dragon's varsity tense moments in practice sprints.

This year's difficulties, however, are the basis for next year's program. A full squad comprising varsity, junior-varsity, and freshmen boats is envisioned, and recruiting plans for the coming season are well under way.



The Crew is dependent upon the donations of generous benefactors and hopes to purchase a shell. The continuing use of the Penn Athletic Club Boat House and the services of its coach, John R. Galloway, have been assured.

Consequently, the Villanova Crew Club's first year has ended quite successfully, with a backlog of victories in both New York and Philadelphia.

"Baby, the rain must fall" seems to be the plaintive cry of this Villanova gardener as he awaits what has gone up and what will come down in a game against Seton Hall.

Steady Stan

By John DiGennaro

Some teams have stars, some have team-men, still others, like Villanova, have both. Most college athletes have, somewhere along the line, been stars, but it is a long trip from the local high school to the big time campus. Some can make the adjustment, others can't. Stan Kozlowski has.

Stan Kozlowski

"Koz," a ruggedly handsome, 6 ft. 165 lb. sprinter came to Villanova, from Perth Amboy High School, on a track scholarship. He has never been a star at Villanova, but he has been a hero, and is as responsible as anyone for the Wildcat's continued success in track and field.

MAINSTAY IN MILE

For three years now he has been a mainstay on the mile-relay team. He is usually the Wildcat entrant in the 440, has run the 220, and has run relay legs on the sprint-medly team, and the 880 relay. In short, he can be called on for a good performance in just about any sprint, or sprint relay.

His best time for the quarter is a better than average 47.4. Just this past weekend, in the meet with Quantico, he won the event in 48.7, a good time considering the track condition, and the few competitors. Also, in the mile-relay, he took over the lead on his leg, and this turned out to be the margin of victory.

CONSISTENT

In last year's IC's he competed in the quarter, 220, and ran a leg on the mile-relay. As you can see "Steady Stan" plays an important part in the Wildcat track story, and as you know, his points, and performances speak for themselves.

WWVU Defeats WIP In 11-10 Slugfest For First Victory

WWVU defeated WIP 11-10 last Wednesday for their first victory in two seasons of warmup softball.

Terry Cooney was the winning pitcher and he contributed a double that went under the fence to lead off the first inning. The game was played on Austin Field.

WIP Station Manager David Croninger hit a home run to left center field later in the game to narrow the margin.

Due to confusion caused by the rain, several of the WIPeople never made it to the campus and a few Villanovans were pressed into service as "ringers" for the Metromediocres who were playing their first game of the year.

WWVU is now 1-3 over the last two years. They play several members of the Television and Radio Advertisers Club League in pre-season warm-up game.

Several of the WWVU players went 3 for 3. Bob Schaumann played first and hit three doubles while Terry Cooney and Vic Ferrante hit 2 singles and a double apiece.

Bill McCloskey, WWVU station manager, played for WIP and "loyally" singled to drive in a run. Dick Carr, WIP's Program Director, homered as part of their losing effort.

With the taste of victory still fresh in their mind, the goofy-guys of Woo-Voo are now attempting to arrange a game with the Atlantic Go-Patrol Team.

'Mr. Versatility'

By Bob McIntyre

Larry Livers, a mainstay on the Wildcat track team, is a 6-2, 170 lb. senior, who originally hailed from Norristown, Pa. and now resides in West Philadelphia. At Norristown, Larry began what was to become a very successful career as a hurdler and sprinter in track and field circles.

In high school, he ran on the track team for three years, played basketball for three years, and he was vice-president of the Newman Club. In track, he set records in both the high hurdles (14.2) and the low hurdles (19.3).

After high school, Larry was undecided where he would attend college, since he had a number of offers from both the East and West coasts. Finally, he chose Villanova because of its reputation. He has never regretted his decision.

STAR HURDLER

Since coming here as a freshman, he has proven himself beyond the shadow of a doubt to be a top-flight hurdler. He recently broke the school record for the 440 intermediate hurdles by spinning out a 51.9, just being nipped by Olympian Jay Luck.

He also holds the record for the high hurdles at Villanova as he reeled off a 13.9 last year. Larry said his biggest thrill came when as a sophomore he and three teammates set the mile relay record in the IC4A's.

The "Devil," as his sobriquet goes, (thanks to his teammates) received an important award for his "dedication to the the team" at the eleventh annual track dinner held at the Covered Wagon Inn two weeks ago.

PLANS FOR FUTURE

His plans for the future include providing for his wife Janet and their little girl, Jacqueline, running in the high hurdles and 440 yd. inter-mediate hurdles at the NCAA Championships to be held at Berkeley, California on June 17, 18, and 19, and summer competition with the Pioneer Club of Philadelphia.

In the fall, Livers returns to Villanova to trade in his track spikes for a pair of sneakers, which he hasn't donned in regular competition since high school. As the story goes, Larry will return to play for Jack Kraft's cagers in one of the surprise moves of the year. He still has a year of eligibility and the 'Cats can use some of that tremendous speed next year.

Coach Kraft has been observed walking around campus lately with the biggest smile this side of Lyndon Johnson -- wonder why?

Cats Smother Leather Necks By 94-55 As All Contribute

By Jerry Bruderle

Villanova's track team placed 1-2 in seven events on Saturday in defeating the Quantico Marines 94-55 at Villanova Stadium. The 'Cats also took the mile relay against some familiar faces before a Fathers' Day crowd of 2,000.

Quantico actually didn't enter a Mile relay team, so Villanova's world-record holding 2-mile relay squad ran against the 'Cats regular one-mile quartet in the one mile event. It was Marshall Uzzle, Bill Heidelberger, Stan Kozslowski, and Larry Livers against Al Adams, Jimmy Orr, Tommy Sullivan and Noel Carrol. Livers held off Carrol on the final lap to win in 3:13.6. The losers were caught in 3:14.1.

Villanova took a 1-2 in the 440 hurdles, the 100, and 880, the 220, the triple jump and placed 1-2-3 in the Pole Vault.

The Marines didn't offer much competition in the Pole Vault, as the winning height was 12'0." George Conway was first with Forns second and Charlie Preas third.

Livers captured the 440 hurdles in 56.3, with Marty Ferko right behind him.

HORNER WINS TWO

Earl Horner was the meet's only double winner turning in a 9.7 100 and a fine 20.8 in the 220 to capture both events. Marshall Uzzle trailed in second place each time, - by inches in the 100 and by a few feet in the 220. Horner, who has hopes of an N.C.A.A. sprint title next month, took off about 100 yards out in the latter event, and steadily pulled away.

Carrol and Adams took 1-2 in the 880 in 1:51.1, while Stan Kozslowski held off a closing rush to win the quarter. Stan was threatened by Jim Buchta but led at the tape to win in 48.7.

Other Villanova victors were: Tommy Sullivan in the mile, Dave Hyland in the two-mile and Augie Zilincar in the shotput. Sullivan, who is running better than at any time in his career at Villanova, turned in a good 4:09.1 in the mile. Hyland just squeaked in under nine minutes in 8:59.9 in the 2-mile.

SHOT PUT

Sophomore Zilincar, who has been a pleasant surprise to Coach Jim Elliott and Assistant Coach Jim Tuppeny, heaved the 16-pound ball 54'2-1/4" in gaining his victory. Augie also placed second in the hammer throw and second in the discus in addition to his shot-put triumph. In the other field events, Charlie Preas was the main attraction. Charlie captured the triple jump with a leap of 44' 10-1/2," placed second in the Broad Jump, third in the High Jump as well as the Pole Vault.

Other points for the 'Cats were scored on Cronwell's second in the javelin and Livers' in the 120 hurdles.

The 'Cats have their second and last dual meet of the season next Tuesday, May 18, against St. Joseph's in the Stadium. This is another Villanova-St. Joe match and tickets are hard to come by, especially since they haven't been printed. It's not even a sell-out, so, come on down and see the Hawks run and jump, and the 'Cats win, and when it's all over stand up and yell, "We're Number 1."

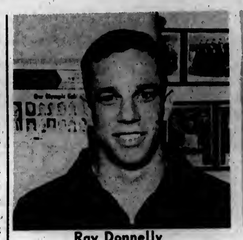
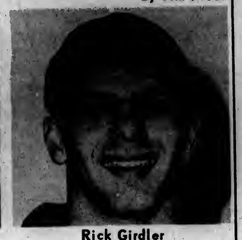
THE YEAR IN SWIMMING



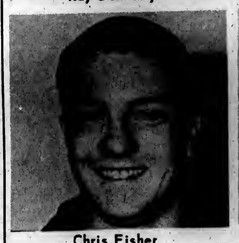
'Catfish' Swim Home

By Jim Proud

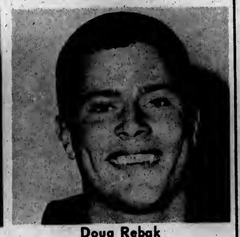


One of the under publicized yet successful athletic teams on the Villanova campus is the varsity swimming team. This season the squad won 8 of their twelve meets and set new records in many events.

Their season opened with a second place finish to Maryland in the Eastern Collegiate Relay Carnival at Yale. The team's first victory came at hands of the University of Pennsylvania. In the meet held at Villanova's pool, Captain Elect Ray Donnelly upset Penn's threat to national honors Lou Kozloff. The team's next victory came against Rutgers. In this meet Pete Ancona broke the Villanova 200 yard Breaststroke Varsity record and the other members of the team held on for the victory by the score of 56-39.



The meet with Princeton was one of the team's toughest losses. Ray Donnelly won the 50 and 100 yard Freestyle and the teams two divers Bill Bohrman and Bob Biese finished a surprise one, two. The only other victory for the 'Cats came in the Freestyle relay. The team composed of Chris Fisher, Doug Rebak, Ray Donnelly, and Rick Girdler won in a fast time of 3:19.3. The final score of the meet was 58-37.



Ray Donnelly

Rick Girdler

Chris Fisher

Doug Rebak

WEST CHESTER

The West Chester meet supplied the 'Cats with a host of new records. Donnelly set a pool record of 22.6 for the 50 yard Freestyle. Roger Guthrie set the pool record in the 200 yard Butterfly and Girdler tied the pool record for the 200 yard individual medley in 2:11.1

Another of the team's losses came against Army. In this meet the 'Cats were able to win 5 of the eleven events but were not able to finish in the second and third places. Army's depth enabled them to sustain the losses in the events by taking the second two places. Girdler won the 200 and 100 yard Freestyle events with excellent pre-championship form.

Perhaps the biggest win for the team came against the Naval Academy. This victory was one of the biggest upsets in the East. The biggest performance of the meet was turned in by Senior Girdler. In winning three individual Freestyle events he proved his great versatility. He won the 100, 200, and 500 yard events to give the 'Cats a much needed victory. Ancona also did a fine job in lowering his own 200 Breaststroke record to 2:23.8.

In a Big Five meet the 'Cats defeated the much publicized Explorers from La Salle. In this meet Girdler broke another Villanova pool record. This time in the 100 Freestyle event.

RECORD BREAKER GIRDLER

Rick Girdler continued to break more records in the New York University meet. There he set the record in the 200 yard Freestyle and the 100 yard Freestyle. In setting the pool record for the hundred he turned in one of the fastest times recorded this season, 47.8.

The 'Cats then traveled to New Haven, Conn. to swim against Yale, the best team in the nation. The only win for the 'Cats came when Captain Girdler won the 50 yard Freestyle and 100 Freestyle. In both events he broke the Villanova Varsity record.

At the end of the season Girdler was invited to go to Brussels and compete in an international meet. This was due to his outstanding performance in the A.A.U. championships at Yale. Together with Mike Burton and coach-manager Ray Essick Rick flew from Kennedy airport in New York to London and then to Brussels.

The meet was held just outside Brussels in a town called Woluwe-St. Lambert. Girdler's race was named the Von Schelle Challenge dedicated to a former Belgian National champion who was killed in World War II.

Girdler won his race, the 100 meter Freestyle, by defeating every European champion and broke the American listed record also. His record time was 52.3 and for his accomplishment his name was inscribed on a statue of a swimmer and will remain in Belgium.

Who's Big Time

By Joe Maffongelli

An interesting question was brought up at the recent Junior smoker. The question read, "Why don't we play a schedule like Notre Dame?" Coach Alex Bell was very honest in answering all the gems which confronted him, but one of this nature merits a more detailed analysis.

In order to play a topnotch schedule a school must have topnotch ball players. There is no doubt that the V U campus boasts such players, but they do not come here in the numbers which would be necessary.

"So if we need more talent get it." This is a solution requiring money. Villanova is not blessed with the endowments found at Notre Dame. Few people have probably ever bothered to look into such things as the Ford Foundation. The only alternative would be a higher athletic fee. Do I hear any "ayes?" Sorry!

But now to consider the schedule itself. Last month we had a rundown on the 'Cat's '65 agenda and it didn't appear to be any tasty morsel. Boston College, Washington State, V.P.I., Quantico, Delaware, and even Xavier are not considered exactly push-overs. Maybe we definitely should go big-time, but the only opposition seems to be coming from the check books.

'It's All Over'

By John DiGennaro

The time has come the walrus said
To think of many things--

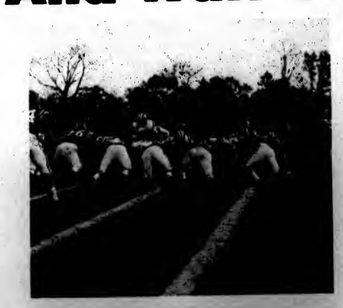
Of ships and shores, girls, parties, summer jobs, playing ball, and whatever else you feel like doing. However before you trade in the "Big V" for a "Big 6," no matter what your favorite brand, take time out to remember all the thrills and excitement, suspense and action, and above all spirit, that has been provided by the Wildcat teams for the past year.

No more pencils, no more books,
No more Wash's sweeping hooks.

The '64-'65 season proved quite fruitful for the Blue and White from the opening kickoff to the latest strikeout. Sporting their finest line in history, and a colorful crew of pint-sized pigskin toters, this year's footballers ground their way to a successful 6-2 season.

The B-ballers, led by Washington and Melchionni, fast-broke their way to an impressive 23-5 year, and a second place finish in the NIT.

The Catfish, behind All-Americans Rick Girdler and Ray Donnelly, splashed their way to another fine year.



The thinclads, with the two-mile relay team, Earl Horner, and Larry Livers setting pace, are once again sprinting toward the winner's circle.

The Rugby and Lacrosse clubs have finally established themselves as teams to be reckoned with, and the Diamond-dwellers, after a slow start, are now swinging toward a winning season.

To top that off -- in the immortal words of poetry --

It tis an ancient Mariner,
Who to me once said--
My hand was quick, my aim was true
And now THE HAWK IS DEAD.

A Look at 'Baroque' America

By Charles Quirk

Tom Wolfe (no relation to the famous writer) is an author who takes great pleasure in observing what he considers some of the more baroque, to use his favorite word, segments of the American cultural and social world.

THE KANDY-KOLORED TANGERINE-FLAKE STREAMLINE BABY is a collection of twenty-two essays under four topics - The New Culture Makers, Heroes and Celebrities, Status Strife and the High Life, and Love and Hate New York Style.

Wolfe seems to be asking a question which is a favorite of Murray the K, the New York disc jockey described in an essay entitled "The Fifth Beatle." Murray continuously screams "What's happening, Baby?" And so does Tom Wolfe.

He asks it of Junior Johnson, the hell-bent-for-leather NASCAR Ford driver. He asks it of Baby Jane Holzer, The New York Press's "Girl of the Year."

Although the book has received some fairly adverse reviews, Wolfe does not really deserve the castigation enveloping him. His prose is a symbol of the times in which he lives. His style may not interest you because of his overuse of ellipses, exclamation points, and repetition of words.

An example of Wolfe's writing gives the impression of spontaneity: "Here were all these ... WEIRD ... nutty-looking, crazy baroque custom cars, sitting in little nests of pink angora angel's hair for the purpose of "glamorous" display ..."

Wolfe's comments on the teenage culture and its idols are quite true, although the recent barrage of articles in the popular press have lessened its effect. One of Wolfe's most striking statements about America reads: " ... the automobile has, for one very large segment of the population, become the focus of the same sort of quasi-religious dedication as art is currently for another large segment of a higher social order."

Part of Wolfe's popularity undoubtedly rests on his "inness," ever since he wrote an article in the New York HERALD TRIBUNE which cast animadversions on the "in" NEW YORKER --making the NEW YORKER staff quite unhappy. He was graduated from Washington and Lee University, before obtaining his doctorate at Yale. Therefore, Tom Wolfe is really an "in" who is "out" -- whatever that means.

THE KANDY-KOLORED TANGERINE-FLAKE STREAMLINE BABY reveals an author with talent who prefers a slam-bang approach to achieve his journalistic endr. The essays were written in a fifteen-month period and echo the argot of the teen-aged customized set in some ways and the rebellious youth of Berkeley in other ways.

Tom Wolfe speaks to youth so that they, too, might understand.

Summer School Introduces Workshop in Space Science

Villanova University, in conjunction with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, is offering a workshop in space science for elementary school teachers this summer.

The workshop is sponsored by the Villanova Summer Session and the University's Astronomy Department. It is independent of the summer school curriculum.

Running from July 19 to July 30 the workshop consists of afternoon sessions from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. Subjects to be discussed include: aeronautics, the principles of rocketry, meteorology propulsion systems and a history of astronautics.

Personnel from the Goodard Space Flight Center, Greenbelt, Md., are conducting the ten day workshop. Four night sessions are planned and airplane trips are scheduled for the participants.

Sessions are being held in Villanova's science and research center, Mendel Hall. The facilities in the building's astronomy department are used for space observation and serve as a laboratory for the workshop.

The purpose of the workshop is to familiarize elementary school teachers with general knowledge about space science in order to enable them to improve their teaching abilities in this relatively new field and to prepare them as resource personnel in their respective school districts.

Approximately 30 teachers from both the Public and Parochial school systems in the Philadelphia area participate in the program. The workshop is under the supervision of Charles P. Bruderle, Director of the Villanova Summer Session.

New Campus Security Chief: Captain Joseph R. Cunnane

Villanova University has acquired a new chief of security, Captain Joseph R. Cunnane, formerly executive officer of the Philadelphia Traffic Division and commanding officer of the traffic district.

Captain Cunnane replaced the late Captain John T. Murphy who died in April of a heart attack. The new head of the Villanova Security Force assumed his duties in June, after officer Joseph Flanagan served as acting captain in the interim.

The new captain, 50, served 23 years on the police department of Philadelphia and he was a captain in the traffic division for eight years.

He joined the Philadelphia police department in 1942, spent three years in the Army, and returned to become a sergeant in 1954. Cunnane became a captain n1957.

As a Philadelphia policeman, Captain Cunnane planned details for Army-Navy games, Mummer parades and many sporting activities held in the city. He anticipates that parking problems will be his number one concern at Villanova.

Two new members of the Security Force were announced by Captain Cunnane. They are officers John Dougherty and Frank Bramlage, both veterans of the Philadelphia Police Department.

Mr. John D. Cronin, Executive Vice President of the Freehold (NJ) Raceway, Chairman of the "Parents Program" and Rev. John A. Klekotka, OSA, former President of Villanova admire citation given by the American Alumni Council to the University for its fund drive conducted among parents of students.

Parents Program Acclaimed By American Alumni Council

A unique fund raising program directed at the parents of its students won honors for Villanova University from the American Alumni Council during the annual national convention of the organization in Atlantic City held in the first week of July.

"The Parents Program" is one phase of a five year, 7 million dollar fund drive now underway by the Office of Development at Villanova.

The American Alumni Council Award cited Villanova for the "planning, organization and special characteristics of the program." A constant flow of information between the University and the parents of its students resulted in a greater awareness of the University's programs.

John D. Cronin, Executive Vice President of the Freehold, (N.J.) Raceway served as Chairman of a group of seventeen parents who administered the year long drive.

With 1000 Villanova parents ultimately contributing, the financial goal of $50,000 was easily exceeded. A long range goal of a quarter of a million dollars has been established for 1968.

In addition to this year's successful drive, the 1963-64 campaign far exceeded its goal so that $90,000 of the overall "Parents Program" objective has already been raised.

Peter G. Frederico of 914 Edgewood Road, Havertown, Pa., a staff representative in the Villanova Development Office has been directing the parents' campaign for the past two years. Last year the American College Public Relations Association cited Villanova for its program.

A group of Villanova officials joined Frederico in Atlantic City to accept the coveted citation by the American Alumni Council at the Chalfonte-Haddon Hall Hotel. Representatives of more than 200 colleges from across the nation attended the convention.

Mendel Lectures Focus View On Life of Great Biologist

By Sister Mary Francele, SSND

With commendations from such divergent sources as the Holy See and the Kremlin commemorating the centenary of the publication of Mendel's paper on heredity, Villanova invited Reverend Thomas Mahony O.S.A., and Dr. Thomas J. Lowrey as speakers for the Sixth Annual Lecture Series.

Choosing "A Biographical Sketch of Gregor Mendel" and "Mendel, Then and Now" as their titles respectively, these scholars addressed summer school students on Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons, July 13 and 14 in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

Citing Mendel as "an example of a religious for modern times" Father Mahony traced the scientist's life from his boyhood at work in his father's orchard, through difficult periods of sickness and financial worry in young manhood to his subsequent acceptance into the Augustinian Fathers.

After ordination he was assigned to parish work which was not to his liking; Father Mendel was much happier in teaching and by conscious preparation made his theory that "pupils should have a lively interest in their work" a reality.

As a young monk he experimented with breeding mice in his room, evoking criticism from some; he turned to plants and flowers and the plot where he worked was a mere 120 feet by 20 feet. From the age of thirty-four to forty-one his main interest was the crossing of pea plants. Then lack of time rather than lack of space became his problem, for he was elected abbot.

Overnight in middle age, his doctor advised Mendel to start smoking; twenty cigars a day eventually led to other difficulties and in 1884 he died of heart and kidney ailments.

Mendel, according to Father Mahony, was a great religious man and priest as well as an outstanding scientist.

Doctor Lowery explained that Mendel was very meticulous, carefully covering each tiny flower of the pea plant with a small bag to insure the purity of the strain. Theoretically a mathematician, Mendel is credited with the first two of the six scientific laws governing heredity, i.e. segregation and random assortment.

In discussing "natural selection" Doctor Lowery called it the "ARRIVAL of the fit"! He illustrated the theory of genetics with blackboard diagrams and projections on the screen.

Charles McGeehan Field Dedicated; VU Baseball Celebrates Centennial

By Ken Mugler

Villanova University celebrated 100 years of collegiate baseball on Monday, May 10 with the formal dedication of the Charles A. McGeehan Field on campus.

The ceremony took place prior to a game with LaSalle College. The field was named in memory of a former Villanova baseball great who was head coach of Wildcat teams from 1912 to 1932. McGeehan's record was 202-155-3.

Three of McGeehan's children were on hand to help officiate at the dedication. A daughter, Mrs. Thomas W. Sherman, Broomall, and two sons, John, Rumson, N.J. and Cornelius, Bay City, Mich., attended.

FR. O'DONNELL'S IDEA

The original idea for the naming of the field came from Rev. Michael J. O'Donnell, OSA, Villanova's sports historian, who has compiled the 100-year history of baseball, which will be out in book form early in 1966. Father O'Donnell lists the Villanova all-time diamond record at 695 victories, 378 defeats and 15 ties.

The first game played at Villanova was on May 2, 1866 against the Central team of Philadelphia. Villanova won, 74-9. Catcher Dennis (Mack) McGee was in charge of that team and later went on to play professionally in Philadelphia.

Hall of Famer "Cap" Anson played against Villanova in 1872 with the Athletic Club, the top pro team in Philadelphia at that time.

BIG LEAGUE 'CATS

Former Villanova players who have gone on to recent big league fame include first-baseman Nick Etten, infielder Len Merullo and first-baseman Mickey Vernon, who signed after playing as a freshman.

Students old-timers include pitcher Frank Donahue, shortstop Mike Doolan, of the Phillies, Fred "King" Lear, of the A's, outfielder Eddie Murphy, onetime captain of the A's, infielder Frankie Skaff and Mike O'Neill, brother of famous manager Steve O'Neill.

In all, 27 players from Villanova have gone on to compete in the big leagues, including present athletic director and baseball coach Art Mahan, who played with the Phillies in 1941.

One Villanovan, Dick Nallin, was an American League umpire from 1915 to 1932.

Charles McGeehan, grandson of Charles A. McGeehan, admires monument and plaque in honor of his grandfather, a former Villanova great and baseball coach for 20 years.

NCAA Snubs Baseball Team

Diamond and Cinder Men Finish Strong

By Ken Mugler
Sports Information Director

Villanova's baseball team, under the guidance of coach Art Mahan, finished the season in a blaze of glory, but were denied a bid to the NCAA District II playoff despite the fact that they won their last 12 games and defeated two teams, Princeton and Lafayette, who were invited.

The Wildcats finished with a 15-5 mark, their best since 17-3 in 1961 when a bid was given to the Main Liners.

After a slow start that was marked by numerous injuries to regular performers, Mahan's team caught fire and behind excellent pitching by sophs Jack Grasing and Gene Rampone and senior Vic Majewski proceeded to run off the string of 12.

OFFENSIVE STANDOUTS

Offensively, soph Sam Greenwood and senior Jack Emery provided the power with senior stalwarts Bob Hall and Art Mahan, Jr., contributing to the attack consistently.

With Grasing, Rampone and Greenwood, plus several other starters returning, Mahan's men may get that NCAA bid next season. Grasing, Greenwood and Emery were singularly honored by being chosen to the District II All-Star team.

Meanwhile, Jim Elliott's track team was far from idle. Junior Earl Horner captured the NCAA 220 championship at Berkeley, Calif, while teammate Noel Carroll was second in the 880. The Wildcats scored 18 points to finish in the top 10 teams in the nation.

EDGED IN IC4-A

Villanova almost won its fifth straight IC4-A title, but was just edged, 46-43, by Maryland. The Terrapins were deep and strong in all field events, while the Wildcats ran through the competition in the running events.

Villanova greats ending track careers included captain Tom Sullivan, Jim Orr, Al Adams, Larry Livers, Marshall Uzzle, Stan Kozlowski and Dave Hyland.

Coach Art Mahan gives squad members some valuable baseball tips during early part of the season. The team must have been listening closely for the 'Cats went on to win their last 12 games and finish with a 15-5 record.

Freind Resigns as SGA Head; Appoints Frank Eck Successor

By Robert Fennel

In a special session of the SGA last Wednesday evening, Steve Freind transfered the duties of his office as president of the SGA to Frank Eck Executive Vice President for educational affairs. Eck's tenure will last until such time as the Academic Board considers Freind able to resume his duties.

The resignation followed the decision of the Academic Board of the College of Arts and Sciences that Freind would not be allowed to participate in extra-curricular activities. Much controversy arose over the order of succession since the present SGA Constitution does not cover this situation.

Steve Freind transfers the duties of President of the SGA to Frank Eck in an emergency meeting of the Student Congress last Wednesday night.

A caucus consisting of the officers of the SGA decided that Freind's temporary resignation would solve the problem within the limits of the constitution. Article IV, section 5, subsection D, of the Constitution states, "One of the executive vice-presidents will be designated by the president to assume his duties in the event of his temporary absence. According to Eck, the decision of the academic board is appellative there-by making Freind's ban from extra-curricular activities temporary.

Freind expressed his concern for the unity of the SGA. "I hope the members of the SGA will stand behind Frank because our sole purpose for existing is to serve the students." Freind expressed his hope that he would be able to resume his duties soon, but that this resignation would be effective until at least midterm.

When he was asked whether he was in agreement with the decision of the Academic Board, Freind said, "My opinion is irrelevant. The administration has ordered my resignation and I am just following orders. We must abide by this decision if there is to be unity in the Congress."

Frosh Orientation Activities Demonstrate Wide Diversity

A variety of activities from lectures to pep rallies constituted Villanova's class of 1969 orientation period lasting from September 7 until Muff Day.

After a long wait in the registration line on Tuesday, the Frosh were given a campus tour by the OC's. That night they were addressed in the Field House by Father Francis Smith, OSA, Dean of Admissions, and Professor Thomas Mentzer, of the History Department.

Wednesday saw the freshmen split into groups for language and psychological tests. In the evening they again assembled in the Field House for the Student Activities and Organizations Forum. Thursday morning the Frosh were addressed by Father Robert Welsh, OSA, Dean of the College of Arts and Science.

Thursday afternoon, a pep rally was held in the stadium. During this time a dance contest was held which a red bearded freshman won by popular acclaim. On Friday, each freshman had a personal interview with an Augustinian Father.

Saturday morning a large part of the new class journeyed to Philadelphia for the area tour conducted by the Blue Key Society. Here they visited many places of historical and cultural interest.

The Orientation period continued on Monday evening with a lecture by General Mark Clark. The General spoke on "Educating the Youth of Today for Tomorrow. Tuesday night all freshmen attended the concert given by the United States Marine Corps Band in the Field House.

The Freshman Mixer, perhaps the highlight of the orientation was held on Friday evening, September 17th. All area girls colleges were invited, and attendance was estimated at over 2500.

No More Half-Time Shows For Villanova Football

C. Dudley Lowden, director of the Villanova Band, has announced that, due to the shortage of personnel, the band will not be able to provide half-time shows this year.

"It is unfortunate," said Mr. Lowden, "that such a fine-sounding band is prevented from presenting a good exhibition because there are not enough marchers to perform an effective drill."

Al Bingham, president of the band, commented, "The members of this year's band have been anxious to march this season; musically the band is the finest in the recent history of Villanova.

"It seems as though out only hope for realizing this wish is to get immediate support from the musicians of the University, especially from the classes of 1968 and 1969. Without this support, it appears that Villanova's long history of spirited marching bands is at an end. Neither the band members nor the student body, we hope, wish to see this happen."

Beta Gamma Debaters Extend Invitation For Annual Reception

Beta Gamma Debate Society will hold its annual reception on September 28 from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. in Geraghty Hall. This is the new debate lounge, which is located next to Moriarty Hall on the south side of Lancaster Pike.

The main purpose of this reception is to acquaint the freshmen and upperclassmen with the team and its activities. No experience is necessary. Only an interest in a challenging and intellectual extra-curricular activity is required.

For the benefit of the freshmen, a member of the debate team will visit each Frosh English class during the next few weeks to give some insight as to the aims and purposes of Beta Gamma.

The debate club is one of the more active organizations on campus, attending such top collegiate debate tournaments as Georgetown, Princeton, Dartmouth and Annapolis.

Among other achievements, the squad placed eighth in district competition for the national collegiate championship, while the novice team placed tenth in the nation at the Bellermine National Novice Tournament in Louisville, Kentucky.

Concept Editorial Board Formulates New Changes

The editorial board of CONCEPT announced last week that they intend to pursue a revolutionary course in regard to several aspects of the magazine.

The board, which is composed of Dennis Gildea, Don Anderson and Bob Koogler, feels that to best serve the function of a student magazine CONCEPT must become more representative of all student opinion. In order to accomplish this objective, they are actively encouraging the submission of material from every corner of the campus.

Hand in hand with this drive for increased student representation is a plan to up-date the magazine in general. Students eager to express their thoughts on any contemporary problem or situation are invited to submit manuscripts to the CONCEPT office in Corr Hall.

Another innovation is that CONCEPT will now appear four times during the school year rather than two as it has in the past. "This is part of our plan," Anderson stated, "to make CONCEPT a more available and useful organ of student thought at Villanova." The first issue will be distributed in the latter part of October.

The board also expressed their need for an artist interested in working for the magazine. Qualified parties are requested to contact any board member at the Corr Hall office.

U.S. Marine Corps Band Gives First Concert of Arts Forum

The Villanova Arts Forum last Wednesday night initiated its program of cultural events for the 1965-66 scholastic year, presenting the United States Marine Corps Band in concert.

The concept of the Arts Forum came primarily through the efforts of the Rev. Richard Appicci, OSA, Vice-president of Academic Affairs. He is now aided by the Rev. James Ryan, OSA and Dean of Student Activities Michael Sutherland, '66.

The forum was first formulated as a cultural events program during the second semester of last year. A group of private Main Line citizens with a desire to bring a program of regular cultural events in the visual and performing arts contacted several area colleges in effort to get their program moving.

They contacted Father Appicci and asked him attend a meeting to be attended by representatives of several other Main Line colleges. At this meeting it was decided that the colleges would serve as a testing ground for this program by serving as hosts to prominent programs which would be both for the students of the college and interested local citizens.

Late last semester Father Appicci, an avid supporter of such a program for many years, and several students worked on a program for this year. They decided that their main purpose would be to stimulate the interest of the students in the Fine Arts. With this objective in mind, the committee felt it would be more reasonable to sell the tickets by subscription, with a special price for students.

This action proved to be a significant one since more than 500 subscriptions have been sold, a majority of them to students. Tickets can still be obtained from the student activities office in Dougherty Hall.

As of Wednesday September 15 the subscription rate for students has been reduced to Six dollars for students and eight dollars for general admission for the remaining forum events.

The aim of the program is to garner enough interest to the arts forum to make it a permanent

Captain Cunnane New Head Of Villanova Police Force

Villanova University has acquired a new chief of security, Captain Joseph R. Cunnane, formerly executive officer of the Philadelphia Traffic Division and commanding officer of the traffic district.

Captain Cunnane replaced the late Captain John T. Murphy who died in April of a heart attack. The new head of the Villanova Security Force assumed his duties in June, after officer Joseph Flanagan served as acting captain in the interim.

The new captain, 50, served 23 years on the police department of Philadelphia. He was a captain in the traffic division for eight years.

He joined the Philadelphia police department in 1942, spent three years in the Army, and returned to become a sergeant in 1954. Cunnane became a captain in 1957.

As a Philadelphia policeman, Captain Cunnane planned details for Army-Navy games, Mummer parades and many sporting activities held in the city. He anticipates thatparking problems will be his number one concern at Villanova.

Two new members of the Security Force were announced by Captain Cunnane. They are officers John Dougherty and Frank Bramlage, both veterans of the Philadelphia Police Department.

Dr. William Tomasco Chosen Parents Program Chairman

The Rev. Joseph A. Flaherty, OSA, President of Villanova University, has recently announced the appointment of Dr. William A. Tomasco as the Chairman for the 1965-66 Parents Program.

Dr. Tomasco, whose son Bill is a member of the Class of 1966, served on last year's Parents Committee. He believes in this program which he says "is so vital because it aids the very heart of Villanova's educational programs." Villanova seeks funds from its parents for the purpose of aiding the University's Library.

The Parents Program has been nationally recognized for the past two consecutive years, winning awards from both the American College Public Relations Association and the American Alumni Council.

Peter G. Federico, who directs this program in the Development Office, points out that the great enthusiasm of the parents has made these awards possible. He said, "When parents know that their money will directly aid their child's education, they are more than happy to part with it."

This year the committee is optimistic of again realizing their goal, due to the fact that so many parents have taken pride in participating in the program.

Specter, Moore, Gen. White To Address Political Union

A political candidate, a civil rights leader and a four-star general are among the ten speakers who will address open meetings of the Villanova Political Union during the 1965-66 academic year. The kick-off meeting, Monday evening October 4, features Arlen Specter, Republican candidate for District Attorney in Philadelphia.

On October 18, Cecil Moore, head of the Philadelphia Chapter of the NAACP, will be the Union's guest speaker. On November 22, the Union expects to play host to General Thomas D. White, recently retired chief-of-staff of the United States Air Force.

As Union President R. Gregory Leonard, 1966, gavels for order in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall at 7:30 p.m., The Union will begin its fourth year. The debate resolution, read by Secretary Jose Buera, will be: "Resolved, this house favors a stronger two party system in urban areas."

Specter will begin the debate with a thirty minute speech and end it with five minutes of "closing remarks." Between the guests' two talks, members of the Union's three parties will give short speeches. The first ones carefully prepared, the last ones, short and impromptu. The President will put the resolution to a roll-call vote

Union members will participate "through the device of the interrupting question, a technique by which a Union member tries to distract and demoralize an opposition party speaker." Professor John J. Logue of the Political Science Department and the Union's Moderator contends that "the evening isn't really underway until a speaker agrees to 'yield for a question'.

Uusally the first speaker asked to "yield" is the guest. Later he is given the chance to question his tormentors. Party Leaders, Liberal Mark McGovern, 1967, Moderate Eugene Fitzmaurice '66 and Conservative James Clarke 1966 will participate in the action. Fitzmaurice, Clarke and Leonard are all four year men in the Union and veterans of the Union's January 1963 televised debate in Congress Hall, Philadelphia.

Appointed to the post is George D. Bruch of Roanoke, Virginia. Professor John J. Cleary, who has served as Assistant Dean of the School of Law for the past three years, now becomes a full-time teaching member of the faculty.

The new Vice-Dean comes to Villanova after twenty-three years service in the United States Air Force and its' predecessor, the Army Air Force. Ernani Falcone to Address Young Democrats' Meeting

The Villanova Young Democratic Club will hold its first meeting of the year tomorrow evening at 8 p.m. in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

Ernani C. Falcone, chairman of the Delaware County Democratic Committee, will be the guest speaker. He is also on the Marple Township Board of Commissioners, only the second Democrat in Marple Township to be so elected.

PRINCETON GRADUATE

Born in Upper Darby, Pa. and raised in nearby Ardmore, Falcone is a 1950 graduate of Princeton, where he majored in government. He received his master's degree in government from the University of Pennsylvania and is presently head of the Department of History and Government at Swarthmore High School. Falcone is 37 years of age.

He feels strongly about the necessity of the college graduate having a knowledge of local government. "As an educator I feel there's a crying need for more emphasis on teaching the make-up of local government," Falcone said. "I think its pathetic that college graduates are abysmally ignorant of the basic workings of our local township and borough governments, which I maintain form the background of our domestic system.

Besides his political affairs, Falcone is a captain in the U.S. Army reserve and is active in local civic, educational and religious organizations. He is married and the father of three children.

CLUB OFFICERS

Tom Bruderle, a graduate student in political science, is serving as President, with Mark McGovern Vice-President, Dick McMenamin Secretary, Pat Mahady Treasurer, and Terry Mills Publicity Director.

Bruderle noted that all students are invited to attend regardless of political affiliation, and faculty are most welcome.

The Club has nearly completed its agenda for the fall semester which includes the showing of two and perhaps three films in addition to several speakers.

In previous mailed literature, it was erroneously announced that the meeting is to be held in 110 Bartley, instead it will be held in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

Theme of Radio Station: More Variety in Coverage

WWVU, the radio voice of Villanova University, moved into its full broadcasting schedule Monday, September 13, after a week of open programming centered on Freshman Orientation.

For the 1965-66 school year, WWVU features a new type of music in its programming schedule: rock and roll with the top hits being given special consideration. Music of this type is heard on WWVU between the hours of 2 p.m. and 5 p.m. every weekday afternoon.

Returning to the air this season will be the Oldies But Goodies Show scheduled for 8:30 to 10 p.m. every evening and from 9 p.m. to midnight on Sunday nights. Jazz has not been forgotten. The station plans to carry the "in crowd" music nightly from 10 p.m. to midnight when WWVU signs off the air.

News is important to the WWVU service as was evidenced by Campus News Director Don Casey's coverage of the Frosh Orientation and the special emergency meeting of the Student Government Association. WWVU is the only radio station on the air able to give the Villanova Student the up-to-the-minute facts on campus happenings.

World and national events are also covered with the air of United Press International wire service. The Radio Voice of Villanova airs its newscasts on the hour and its sportscasts on the half hour. At 5 p.m. each evening WWVU presents a half hour roundup of the days news: campus, world, and national with additional spotlights on commentary and sports.

During the upcoming football season, the sports department will bring the student body full coverage of all Wildcats' gridiron encounters with opposing colleges both at home and away.

Auditions for the station's on-the-air staff were held last Wednesday, but interested members of the student body are reminded by Vic Ferrante, WWVU's Personnel Director, that new applicants are always welcome.

SGA Activities Committee Offers Four New Services

By Walt Baginsky

The Student Activities Committee, under the chairmanship of Brenden Brett, announced that four successful services for the student body have been completed.

First, over 70 senior applications were received for permission to park their cars on the school lot. A minimum 2.0 cum and a good chaplain record are the necessary requisites.

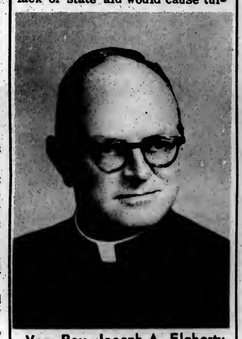
The list of applicants was given to the Dean of Men, the Chaplain, and the Vice-President of Student affairs for consideration. Notice of those names accepted will be posted on the Senior bulletin board in Dougherty Hall.

Second, a student activity handbook, the first of its kind, was edited by Brett, printed and distributed to the students during registration. Various information offered in the book included: an analysis of the Student Government Association, pertiment facts concerning the N.R.O.T.C. program, and details concerning the extra-curricular activites on campus.

Third, a contract was made with the Institutional Directories of Texas whereby they would furnish a specific amount of directories in which was printed the names, college addresses, home addresses, and local area telephone numbers of all undergraduates (home addresses of dayhops included.) They will be available for distribution sometime in October.

Fourth, a Used Book Exchange, the first of its kind, was initiated by the committee with the cooperation of Fr. Appicci. Books were collected last April and May and were arranged for sale in the basement of Sullivan Hall which took place the week of September 13-17. Three thousand dollars in sales were transacted. Notice of those students whose books were sold as well as those unable to be sold will be posted on all local bulletin boards.

Interview With Fr. Flaherty



Villanova Goal: Academic Improvement

The Very Rev. Joseph A. Flaherty, OSA, Villanova's new president, told the VILLANOVAN in an interview that he would like to keep enrollment at about 4,500 in order to insure a "small school" atmosphere aiming at academic improvement.

In the past two years, enrollment has decreased slightly while the number of faculty members has increased. At the present time, there are approximately 4300 students while the faculty numbers about 350.

Father President believes that the elimination of crowded classrooms by a low student-faculty ratio, except for lecture courses where a greater number of students can be accommodated, will help in effecting a more congenial academic atmosphere.

In an interview which appeared in the PHILADELPHIA SUNDAY BULLETIN on September 12, Father Flaherty expressed his hope that church-related schools would someday receive state aid. In reply to a question whether the lack of state aid would cause tuition increases in the future, Father President said:

Very Rev. Joseph A. Flaherty

"We are going to need more money. The tuition is high now ($700 a semester) but it is our main source of revenue. We would like not to have to raise tuition but it is a possibility we may have to face."

Explaining the function of a university president, Father President noted that some presidents are concerned with public relations, some with fund raising, and some with the university's academic standing. Father said that he will try to maintain a balance between these three facets of a president's administration.

Questioned on the possibility of reemphasizing football in order to raise income, Father stated: "I don't think that fielding a big-time football team would be a successful way of raising money. I think it would eventually cost more money."

In discussing curriculum changes, Father President mentioned the initiation of two 5 week sessions this summer which will enable interested students to study on their own. This, however, is not considered to be a trimester plan.

Asked about censorship in campus publications, Father Flaherty answered:

"I don't think that healthy criticism should be suppressed. I believe in freedom for the students to express their views but this freedom carries a responsibility for the students to substantiate their views."

"Rumors and personal pique should not serve as a basis for articles written in publications. Students who are unwilling to accept this responsibility are liable to discipline."

Father President, commenting on the ability of students to improve their university, told Villanovans:

"Study more, but study better. Let your challenges come in the classroom. It is better to challenge your professor, than to challenge the administration."

According to Father Flaherty, the danger in participating in too many extra-curricular activities lies in the student's developing of a more political than intellectual mind.

As a graduate of St. Joseph's, Father President was asked for which team he would be rooting when Villanova plays St. Joe's at the Palestra. Father said, "I'll be rooting for Villanova, naturally, but I do hope that the rivalry will become a little less antagonistic."

A Call for Unity

The Student Government Association witnessed an unusual sight at its last meeting. The change in leadership could have easily resulted in turmoil and created dissension which may have lasted for an entire year. But a reasonable compromise in the eleventh hour has effected a somewhat shaky coalition of the split factions of the SGA. It speaks well for the campus politicians to be able to mend broken fences in these times of stress.

Perhaps, however, a lesson can be learned from the shambles of a confused beginning. A united SGA has in the past year accomplished a great deal in pushing student reforms. But the lack of leadership in the organization for a short period of time engendered chaos.

The Student Government Association has a year in which to prove that its goals are well-defined, no matter who is holding the reins of power. It is the time for the SGA to become united under its acting president and to end the meaningless political feuds which have tended to cleave this Congress.

Let the SGA remember that its primary purpose is to serve the student body and not to use the Congress floor as a practice ground for professional politics. A united and dedicated SGA can do so much to improve the University. Is this Congress willing to make that commitment?

We Need Tickets

With the change in Administration which took place at Villanova during the summer, many new policies have been, and will be, initiated. One of these new policies concerns the selling of tickets for athletic events.

For years students have engaged in the "slightly dishonest" practice of using student tickets for non-student companions. It has been noted that it is "far more difficult" to erase a punched V, than a printed "Student" and, suddenly honesty prevails at Villanova.

The confession lines are shorter, the ticket lines longer, but the University's football program can now support itself.

The students have wished to take issue with this decision, but many more will take issue with the rule that each student may purchase only one student ticket. It would seem that by punching each ticket, the athletic department has made its point. A student should be able to purchase a ticket for a roommate whose class schedule differs from his own.

Especially for the big weekend games, Homecoming, Sophomore Weekend and Navy Weekends, students should be able to sit with friends without cutting classes.

The stated reason for selling only one student ticket to each student is to prevent stockpiling and scalping of tickets. Certainly a reasonable number of student tickets, three or four, could be available to each student.

Under the present arrangement, the burden has been lifted from the shoulders of the ticket sellers and placed on those of the football ushers, who will have to contend with obstinate friends who wish to sit together anyway, such as Villanovans who wish to take a nurse to the game.

It would seem more logical and workable to allow a limited number of matric cards to be presented by each student, thus eliminating the purchasing of large quantities of student tickets while facilitating seating arrangements at games.

Tradition and Change...

Hallmarks of Villanova's History

By Walt Baginsky

A view of the campus - minus Dougherty Hall - seen in the mid - '40s.

From Villanova Stadium to Fedigan Hall, from Dougherty Hall to the new Augustinian Seminary, Villanova is a University rich with tradition and alive with change.

This January 5, 1966, will mark the commemoration of 124 years of Augustinian guidance which began with the granting of the Belle Air property title to the Brothers of the Order of Hermits of St. Augustine on that historic day in 1842.

Belle Air had been formerly the property of a leading Catholic layman and Revolutionary War veteran, John Rudolph, and was purchased by the Augustinian Community of Philadelphia on October 13, 1841. The following August, community life was established at Villanova, and a novitiate was established in December.

On August 28, 1843, the country estate - Belle Air, which comprised "197 acres, 2 rods, and 31 perches" was dedicated and placed under the especial patronage of St. Thomas of Villanova. Villanova, no longer to be known as Belle Air, on that August day was launched on its religious and educational career.

SEEDS OF EDUCATION

In keeping with the Augustinian tradition of education based on a foundation of sound moral and religious training, the fathers were eager to open a school at Villanova. On September 18, 1843, classes were initiated with thirteen youths in attendance. At this time, the seeds of religious education were planted.

The first president of Villanova College, the Rev. John P. O'Dwyer, OSA, was forced to temporarily close Villanova's doors on February 20, 1845. His decision resulted because of imminent danger from "Know Nothing" riots in Philadelphia, which caused the burning of the Augustinian headquarters at Old St. Augustine's Church in Philadelphia and threatened to involve all other Catholic establishments in the area.

Undaunted by this temporary setback and invigorated with a courageous and zealous spirit, which has typified Villanova even to this day, it was reopened in September, 1846, with 24 students. The first public commencement was held July 21, 1847, and it has been written that "The tide of hope for the young college now began to fill."

In the early spring of 1848, the fathers earnestly petitioned the Pennsylvania State legislature for a charter. On March 10, of that year, by an act of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, the college charter was granted, thus legally permitting "The Augustinian College of Villanova in the State of Pennsylvania" to grant and confirm degrees. This power was first exercised on Commencement Day, June 27, 1855.

COLLEGE CLOSES

The second crisis in Villanova's College life occurred in June, 1857, when, because of a severe economic depression plus a desire to devote more time to ministering to the parishes assigned them, the Augustinian Fathers, under the leadership of Father President, Rev. William Harnett, OSA, wisely decided to close the college again.

For eight years, no lay classes were taught but the seminary continued in its training of young men for the order, and by 1865, twenty-seven new clerics had resulted. Also during the Civil War era, Villanova devoted its facilities to the direct service of our country by converting them into a hospital.

Finally, in 1865, Villanova College reopened its doors to lay students (never to be closed again) under the auspices of President Rev. Ambrose A. Mullen, OSA, and a faculty of twelve. The course of college studies at that time included: Greek, Latin, English, mathematics, natural philosophy, book-keeping, history, poetry, French, German, and music.

In 1872, Villanova College comprised only four buildings: the monastery, the college building, the old chapel and the gymnasium. But, since then, changes and expansion have been the keynote of Villanova. On Easter Thursday, March 29, 1883, the ground-breaking ceremony for Villanova's greatest traditional landmark - the St. Thomas of Villanova Chapel - was held and construction initiated.

A decade later, Villanova celebrated its Golden Anniversary and by this time its growth was quite apparent. The Chapel was already in operation and a large west wing had been added to the old classroom building.

BUILDINGS ERECTED

With the advent of the Twentieth Century, increased construction and changes in curriculum were most pronounced. A new Monastery and College Hall were completed by 1902. Both buildings were the result of the inspiration of the then provincial, Rev. John J. Fedigan, OSA. The growth of the Augustinian Order at Villanova and the rapid expansion of the college turned the structures into monuments to Father Fedigan's foresight.

Up until 1904, Villanova had been a combined prep school and college. In that year administrative trends were begun which ultimately resulted in the removal of the prep school to Malvern. In 1905, the Engineering School was opened - a change which was necessary because of the growing emphasis in this country on specialization. Technical courses in Civil Engineering commenced in the Fall of 1906.

In 1915, the School of Science was initiated. Beginning with a one-year pre-medical program, the school rapidly expanded its curriculum to meet the increasing demands of the medical schools, until a four year course leading to the degree of B. S. in Biology was offered. With the pre-med course grew the rest of the Science School.

About the time of America's entrance into World War I, Villanova began to train prospective officers. The government sponsored "Army Students Training Corps" was set into motion at Villanova. Presently, although the name of the armed service has changed, Villanova's tradition in training military leaders has continued.

With the conclusion of the War, Villanova was quick to see the need for a business school. America's industrial life had returned to the normal civilian pattern of increased consumer goods production. So, Villanova's expansion was redesigned with an eye on training Catholic businessmen.

By 1922, interest had so quickly thrived that it became necessary to establish a separate School of Commerce and Finance. The Rev. Joseph C. Bartley, OSA, was appointed Dean of the new school. At the same time, Austin Hall was built to provide more dormitory space for the growing enrollment.

Football Stadium Dedicated

In response to the fast growing popularity of inter-collegiate sports, construction of the stadium was begun in 1927, with the erection of the south stands, playing field, and track.

This is how the campus looked in 1952

With the addition of the north wing, construction of the stadium was completed. The stadium was dedicated to Leo Francis Goodreau, "Scholar, Athlete, Gentleman," who scored its inaugural touchdown and who died in his freshman year, 1928, because of a mortal football injury sustained on the stadium's turf. The University Field House was completed in 1931.

With America's entry in the Second World War, the demand for trained military leaders was on the increase. President Franklin Delano Roosevelt summoned twelve leading college presidents to Washington, D. C., to formulate a training program for prospective officers.

FROSH INTERVIEWS

FRESHMAN ORIENTATION REVISITED

By Gene Fitz Maurice

It is conceivable that 1400 Villanova freshmen could waste their four valuable years here.

The financial expenditure, greater than had been thought because of the failure to recognize the great expense of incidentals, may perhaps be recovered in the promises of greater income and job security. The energy may be rationalized as something that would have been used in almost any pursuit. The time lost will be, however, the one truly bitter memory, for it is time that can never be recaptured, and time that is totally wasted in vain pursuit of a goal which constantly recedes the nearer you come to it.

It is not possible that any freshman can do anything with his or her years here except waste them, unless they come prepared and willing.

The subject of college preparation has filled libraries, but nothing accurate has been written. The professors and researchers have gone to great lengths to present to the freshman the plight of the student who flunks out. The magazines have introduced only the sparkling whirl of four years in college: football games followed by parties and dances, each followed in turn by another cycle.

The novels have prepared the freshman for four years of constantly surprising experiences, but not for the cliches which must invariably surround anything as institutionalized as campus life.

The new student has received batches of mail from clubs and societies interested in his membership. But none of these letters tells him of the mortality rate among overclubbed freshman.

Prudence Brown

INDIVIDUALS

High school counselors have warned the frosh of the fact that his senior year independence will soon blow away, and he will be just another freshman, if only for an initiation freshman. But each student so warned comes ready to be the one truly distinct individual in his class.

The quarterlies have set down rules for dress and each freshman will hurry out to purchase what he wants. Friends returning for a summer vacation will talk of various fads then rampant on their campuses, but each new student will plan his own brand of fun.

Psychologists will be quoted in handbooks as warning against the possibility of becoming a number instead of a student, but each new boy and girl (and each 18 year old away from home is as much a child as each senior so sure of the world built for him) is certain that a university of 5000 must pay careful attention to them, because they were once the leaders of 500.

Perhaps this is the main failing of each freshman class in its preparation: all know that they are leaders, and when the school passes to them, they will turn around to find no one following.

Each freshman will open a copy of the VILLANOVAN in September of 1968 and think, "If I had only known then ..." If they should, by some odd chance, think of this, their first issue, the one that really belongs to them, they will be amazed at the speed with which the six semesters between have raced by them. The member of the Board of Editors who writes this section then will no more remember (if he ever learns) the name of his predecessors than I do of mine. Only the most exceptional will recall three years after that the names of his fraternity brothers and the teachers he disliked so.

ORIENTATION GOAL

When next year's Orientation Committee takes charge of the Freshman, they will be guilty of the same excesses as this year's group, last year's, and so on. This is because by then they will have learned that if all of the concrete activities of college life slip by in a blurred shade of confusion, the chaos will give rise to a not always accurate order in our memories, and those memories will be as pleasant or as easily forgotten as we choose to make them. This, then, in part at least, is the goal of Orientation: the awareness that college is a phase through which we pass, but which we never fully outgrow.

Such thoughts must lack credibility among the freshmen who have been hounded by the OC's for the last two weeks. The cost of the fines and the inconvenience of the dinks and legs must seem like strange ways to be brought to grips with college life. Until a less tortured and less effective route is found, however, it still seems a good path on which to begin the journey of the next four years.

The freshman whose false sophistication leads him to reject the traditions of his school has chosen not to weave into his college experience the valuable intangibles which the past has taught us. The frosh who finds the simple roar of a college cheer to lack meaning will also sit unaffected by the near-monotony of chants of belief.

The constant haranguing of the sophomores is not so much a legalized way for them to vent themselves against the freshman as it is a frenzied and hurried attempt to mold into one Class the 1400 students who come here in the Fall. The sophomores realize the shortcomings of a class not enough united, and they in the freshman class a last opportunity to weld together a body which may avoid their mistakes.

Next year, you will look back to the failings of the Class of 1969 and attempt, vainly you will think at the time, to correct your mistakes by making the Class of 1970 the perfect gathering of Villanovans. As long as your Class, and each succeeding one, realizes that the perfect gathering will never assemble in the Quad, then it will continue to strike out at the divisions and errors which can destroy a Class.

OBLIGATION

The weeks of Orientation are designed not only to forge you into a gathering of Villanovans, it is also obligated to try and forge Villanova to meet your standards.

Frosh Orientation 1965

By serving your personal goals in coming to college, each act, no matter how seemingly inconsequential, can be an addition to the school. It is as important that the University not fail you as that you not fail the University.

From the time you first met in the Field House to register and change from high school seniors to college students, to the time when you passed it on the way to the Toledo game, less than two weeks had elapsed. In that time, you ceased to be a milling, unrecognizing, unknown class of numbers, and became, if Orientation worked, the Class of 1969.

In those few days you were offered the fleeting chance to become a member of what could easily be the constructive group in the history of education on the Main Line. If you spurned the chance, you became, with equal ease, a collection of more than 1000 different ambitions, each ignoring the other.

As important as becoming a Class, was the organization into one Class. Villanova is more than a century old. Each year saw a new class, and each one succeeded or failed in proportion to its desires to do so. Your class will be no different, and yet will be so completely unique and your own that it will stand simultaneously as an assembly of students like six score others, and a Class unto itself.

When the first tests come back with a grade less than what you expected, or when the first party or mixer is less than you had hoped, it will be all too easy to join in the chorus of older students whose recognition of Villanova's faults has driven them into one field or another to try and correct those faults.

These are the students whose own personal failure to become Villanovans in the truest sense of the word has driven them out into the campus in search of others who might be persuaded that the best way to go through college is to complain about it, without ever bothering to have your complaints made meaningful by a desire to see the school improve.

INTERVIEWS

There is a temptation to think of these two weeks as belonging to the sophomores and their fun. This is not so. They belong to you the freshmen. Like any other possession, it can be either cherished or tossed onto that pile which the memory keeps for trash. In the last several days I had the opportunity to speak with several freshmen from all prospective major fields of study. As can be expected, their views were interesting, and frequently at opposition with one another.

But with rare exceptions, all seemed to realize that the Orientation period had the purpose of making them aware of themselves as Villanovans, more than any other goal. The most interesting, and widespread, reaction was to the fact that the methods and individuals employed in Orientation at times made mistakes which could have adversely affected the individuals involved in the freshman ranks. But these mistakes were shrugged off by the frosh as being unimportant to the aim of Orientation.

In interviewing a Medical Technology major, Geraldine Onisto, I read off a list of complaints and asked if she agreed with the rumblings of her fellow frosh. Her answer, a not untypical one, was:

"Yes. Some of the OC's occasionally went too far, but I think that beyond that they made us a class. I think that's the most important think. If the feeling of unity which they gave us during Orientation lasts, and I think it will, then their little mistakes can be forgotten."

As might have been expected, the complaint of Maureen Quinlan was the most often heard from Nurses, "The socks and hats get you down. No matter how you try to avoid it, they give you a terrible feeling."

NOTHING WRONG

All of the freshmen interviewed said that they found nothing wrong with Villanova, but imagined that they probably would as time went by. However, all quickly amended that they had no intention of looking for weaknesses, but wanted to be ready to overcome them if and when they appeared.

Interestingly enough, the Nurses tended to agree with Jean McManus's statement: "Once you have school spirit, nothing can take it away. It becomes a part of you." Interesting because many male students, such as Mike Glasheen, said that while they wanted their spirit to last them four years and beyond; "A lot of guys lose their spirit over one bad season in some sport. It shouldn't be that way, but it often is."

He quickly added that he hoped that such would not be the case with the Freshman Class, but did admit that all too often students become side-tracked by such considerations.

The question of why they chose a Catholic college was put to those interviewed, and here too the results were highly surprising. The nursing majority felt that they were here because of the education or for other similar reasons. The male students, however, felt that Villanova's religious nature was an essential aspect in the choosing of a college. Bill Weisser, for example, reflected the majority view by saying, "My religion is my greatest asset."

RELIGIOUS ATTITUDES

Dick Walsh seemed to sum up the attitude of students who have come to Villanova from non-Catholic high and prep schools with his candid, off the cuff remark, that, "After a dozen years in non-Catholic schools, my religion needed rounding off. I'm the only one in my class that went to a Catholic college, but I think it was the right move. After all, it's the base for everything that comes later."

Bill McDonough expressed a distaste for some attitudes on other campuses today and concluded by saying, "I want Catholic fundamentals." However, he agreed with all other freshmen interviewed that attendance at a Catholic high school frequently caused restrictions in many fields.

On the question of curriculum, only one nurse, Joanne Repasky, felt that more Liberal Arts courses were essential. Her opinion was, "It is necessary to be able to Capable of speeds better than 2,000 mph, the YF-12A is the hottest aircraft around. Now Maj. Walter F. Daniel, test pilot for the YF-12A, answers your questions about the world's fastest manned airplane and America's Aerospace Team.

(Maj. Daniel, a test pilot since 1954, is a member of the Society of Experimental Test Pilots. He received a B.S. degree in Aeronautical Engineering from the University of Oklahoma. In February 1962, he set world class time-to-climb records in a T-38 jet trainer.)

Is the YF-12A the world's fastest manned aircraft?

It certainly is. On May 1 of this year the YF-12A (formerly known as the A-11) reclaimed the world absolute speed record from the USSR. It was clocked at 2,062 mph over Edwards Air Force Base.

How big is the YF-12A?

The exact dimensions of the YF-12A have not been released yet. But it's approximately 100 feet long, with about a 50-foot wingspan. That's half again as big as our present interceptors!

Is the Air Force training many men as pilots these days?

Yes, very definitely. In spite of all you hear about unmanned vehicles, the human pilot is still very much in the picture. As a matter of fact, the Air Force pilot quota is on the increase.

What other kinds of jobs does the Air Force offer?

Since it's one of the world's foremost technological organizations, the Air Force has plenty of openings for scientists and engineers. There are also many challenging and varied administrative-managerial positions.

What do I have to do to become an Air Force officer?

Air Force ROTC is the best way to get started as an Air Force officer. The new two-year Air Force ROTC program makes this method available to men who have already completed a year or two of their college education. For college graduates, if you did not take advantage of ROTC, you can still get started through Air Force Officer Training School (OTS), a three-month course open to both men and women.

Can I keep up my studies while I'm in the Air Force?

The Air Force encourages its men and women to continue their educations. For instance, you may qualify to study for a graduate degree during off-duty hours, with the Air Force paying a substantial part of the tuition.

What kind of future do I have in the Air Force?

A bright one. As we move further into the Aerospace Age, the Air Force is going to grow even more important. And you can grow with it!

School History Spans 125 Years

New seminary building typifies Villanova's expansion

Among this honored dozen was the then Villanova President, Father Stanford, OSA, who was instrumental in aiding the formulation of the "V-12" program.

With a great increase in the post war college enrollment, Villanova responded by constructing a new classroom building and four new dormitories. Shortly after, a new Chemical Engineering building, one of the finest in the country, came into existence and next to it was erected John Barry Hall, housing one of the fifty-two N.R.O.T.C. units in America.

A new and spacious library was established to handle the enormous collection of books. In the 1963-'64 annual report of the then President, Rev. John A. Klekotka, OSA, it was announced that "Plans are currently being studied to expand the present library so that it will serve both present and future needs."

BECOMES UNIVERSITY

On Wednesday, November 18, 1953, Villanova College became Villanova University by virtue of the signing of a new charter.

On December 9, 1953, Father President Francis X. N. McGuire announced a twenty year, $21,150,000 development program. Its first goal was the constructing of a new Student Union Building - Dougherty Hall, the cornerstone of which was layed in 1954.

Also, Bartley Hall (formerly C&F building) was completed in 1958, and the new Mendel Hall Science building in 1961. The most recent edifice on campus is the thoroughly modern Augustinian Seminary (adjacent to the Law School) which was completed in 1964. It is quite a fitting testimony of Villanova's growth over the years when one considers its 1843 counterpart.

Therefore, from this vast tradition and numerous changes that have been wrought, it may be readily seen that Villanova's History is not something dead and still, but a living and vibrant legacy from which this present generation can draw that same intangible, zealous spirit which enabled our ancestors - the good Augustinian Fathers - to confront and refute the atrocities of hatred, bigotry, and ill-will which had plagued Villanova in its infancy. These roadblocks, through the grace of God, were removed and Villanova was able to continue, but the strength and zeal displayed in their removal should not be forgotten, but should become a source of inspiration and spirit for all present and future Villanovans.

So, this is Villanova. A university rich with tradition and alive with change. A university which on January 6, 1966, will embark on its 125th year of service to God and to man.

cope and to speak in all situations, with all types of persons."

There is another side to Orientation, of course, Not only does the frosh have to develop into a true Villanovan, he must know the guidelines which will help him to continue to be not only a credit to his Class and University. These guidelines, indeed, the entire program of Orientation must be supervised by the OC's.

I interviewed several and found their comments to be not only interesting, but sincere as well. To them, the true satisfaction of Orientation comes from helping the freshmen to become integrated into the University family, not in terrifying him, as he must sometimes believe.

Frank Carter, a leading member of the Orientation Committee, who became familiar to the freshmen as he gave more than his fair share of time to familiarizing them with the buildings and beauty of the Main Line campus, told me:

"This class is without question the most spirited that I have ever seen. They have managed to organize themselves into groups of interested and quick learning freshmen who give every promise of quickly developing into the most effective class in university history.

"But I must say that they have not yet formed into a completely cohesive action unit, there is no question in anyone's mind that they will be swamped by the vastly superior sophomore forces on MUFF Day."

FROSH WEAKNESS

When I asked him to appraise frosh weaknesses (MUFF Day aside) he said, "It would be difficult for me to state any concrete failures on their part. They have an intense desire to become Villanovans which will inevitably carry over into every phase of campus and off-campus life. Without puffing, I can honestly say that they have an intense school pride which will carry them far."

As to his general comments, he would only say, "It is more of a duty than a pleasure to be an OC. Your time is not your own. An OC must always be on the move looking for the frosh. They are learning, but they still need to be supervised.

"It is almost a relief to leave the duties of Orientation behind as I begin now to spend my time in study and hopefully, the pursuit of some leisure time." I asked him what his plans for future service to the University were.

Carter said, "I would like to increase my extracurricular participation in clubs which relate to my major field of study, as well as those organizations which will help me to broaden myself into the truly liberally educated man I hope to become."

Jane Ternosky, another OC had different views than Frank Carter. She said that it was obvious that the freshman nurses were carrying a large share of the active interest in the frosh group. She told me that she was not surprised by this and expected it to continue in future years.

"The frosh cooperated. The OC's really could not have accomplished anything without them. Their support of the Used Book Exchange was encouraging and should serve as a lesson to all of the other classes. Their response to General Clark showed their great interest in current events and indicated that they will be concerned with the world at large as well as the University."

DISAPPOINTMENT

When asked to describe her worst disappointment, Miss Ternosky said, "There was nothing disappointing in Orientation. These are good kids and they will become good Villanovans. I think that they really became spirited. It is a spirit which they will keep.

"We view the Orientation function as a continuing one, and our obligation as one which lasts for the three years we have left on the campus."

John Carey mainly was concerned with the outstanding administrative accomplishments of Class President Tom Conway. Conway places full credit on the part of the OC's and the tremendous spirit of the frosh class.

Brian Banmiller, Chairman of Orientation, pointed out that not only the OC's but the spirited frosh as well made Orientation a success. "The tremendous contributions of good will and interest made by the entire student body helped to make this the most successful Orientation in history. It wasn't hard, though, because this class was marked by the highest academic standards, the highest interest level, the most intense commitment to overall excellence that I have seen in four years on campus.

"The class has made this Orientation great. The OC's made it work. The hard work and long hours of the summer will pay off in the years to come as countless Villanovans look back to these two weeks as the day when they ceased to be strangers wandering in from all over the country and became instead Villanovans."

The OC's, the students, the upperclassmen who worked on Orientation, but most of all, the freshmen, made Orientation a success.

You Might as Well Ask

By Neil Sheehan

About movie intermissions. This is the time of the year when everyone piles out of their seats or out of their cars and assaults the refreshment stand, which is an institution known for popcorn, six-cent nickel candy bars, and grand larceny. It's easy to feel sorry for little girls during intermission.

They always have the one dime that took a half-a-movie and four cartoons to get from DADDY who'd much rather be playing poker with THE BOYS.

Invariably, this dime is useless, because all confections in metal and glass machines cost at least fifteen cents and no doubt if the little girl is in New York State, she'll have to find a penny for the extra little penny slot that the government (syn. - Nelson Rockefeller) will probably have installed on the machine. That would probably not come about, though, because it would cost more than all the tax revenue of New York and Darien, Connecticut put together; also because candy is food-more than you think. But somewhere between the LADIES ROOM and the dribbly water fountain is a machine which sells, rather vends, suspiciously short, five-cent rolls of Life Savers for one thin dime. The little girl promptly loses her dime when it gets stuck somewhere in the entrails of the machine, and the coin-return lever is little more than a jagged stump of metal sitting approximately an eighth of an inch below the forward surface of the machine.

Things like that make you feel sorry for little girls; and even for little boys, but not really because the little boys are the ones who ripped the coin-return levers off the Life Saver machines. And they did.

Villanova Grads Trained For Peace Corps Endeavor

Bernard F. Blanche, Albert Lofgren and William F. Wilder, graduates of Villanova, completed their training for the Peace Corps. They left this month for their prospective projects.

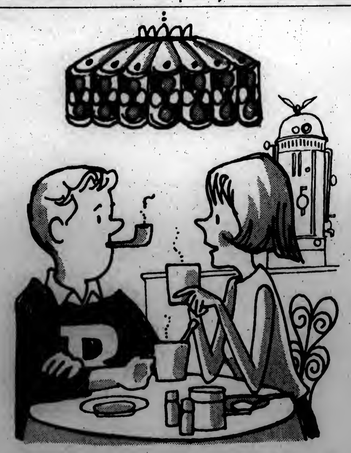
Bernard F. Blanche, a 1965 graduate from Bridgeport, Pa., received his Bachelor of Science in Education at Villanova. He left today for Brazil after a 12-week training program at Marquette University.

Nearly 8,000 Peace Corps Volunteers are now in Brazil, working in Public Health, nutrition, school lunch programs, rural and urban community development, agriculture, rural youth work, 4-H Clubs and English teaching.

Most of Blanche's group will work in Public Health programs in Brazil.

Alfred Lofgren of Philadelphia has completed nine weeks of training at Atlantic University. He left September 3 for Ghana.

With the arrival of this new group, approximately 115 Peace Corps Volunteers will be in Ghana teaching in secondary schools and colleges and working on geologic surveys.



Lofgren's group will work as geologic prospectors and surveyors in the southern area of the West African country, replacing Volunteers who have completed their two years of service.

William Wilder, also from Philadelphia, Pa., received his Bachelor of Science in Biology in 1965. 1965.

Wilder's group will expand Peace Corps teaching efforts in the Philippines. With their arrival, some 550 Peace Corps teachers will be working in elementary, secondary, normal and vocational schools throughout the islands. As "co-teachers," the Volunteers will work along side Filipino teachers.

When the Volunteers arrive at their destination, they will receive several weeks of further orientation.

These Villanova graduates have joined 10,000 other Peace Corpsmen now working in 46 nations of Asia, Africa and Latin America.

Forum Season Opens With Viet Nam Speech By Gen. Mark W. Clark

The VILLANOVA FORUM under the auspices of the Student Government Association launced its 1965-66 lecture series with an address by General Mark W. Clark entitled, EDUCATING THE YOUTH OF TODAY FOR TOMORROW on September 13.

Clark told a large audience that "Communists respect force and when they see it they sit up and take notice - when they find appeasement they drive forward."

Gen. Clark said that he believed the United States could step up its air war in Viet Nam without fear of intervention by the Soviet Union or Red China. He also added that President Johnson's Viet Nam Policy was "headed in the right direction, but more factories and military installations should be bombed."

Clark, who commanded the United Nations forces in Korea for more than a year, stated, "We are confronted in Viet Nam with a situation which is similar to the Korean War . . . . we should have won it and didn't . . . we had too many restrictions imposed upon us." The General said he was pleased when we started bombing, attacking and taking other steps to make it harder for the Viet Cong to fight in Viet Nam.

Communists, he said, "Are apt to construe the constant reiteration of the peaceful intentions of the United States as a sign of weakness, but a show of strength is more likely to bring them to the conference table."

thing. If enough support is shown the forum plans to build a center for the performing and visual arts on the Main Line which the participating colleges will be allowed to utilize.

The committee feels that while the series itself may prove to be a financial success; it will be a failure if the students do not derive cultural benefit from it.

The attendance by the Freshman Class was aimed primarily at motivating student interest in the arts early in their collegiate careers. In this way the committee feels that it will help to develop the man culturally in addition to socially and academically.

Events still to be presented in the Concert Series are the Cleveland Symphony Series, Mantovani and his Orchestra, the Singing City Choir, and "A Man For All Seasons, by the Belle Masque Drama Society. Amoung some of the many prominent lecturers to be heard are Winston S. Churchill, Marguerite Higgins, Barbara Ward and George - William Smith.

Villanova Sociology Club To Hold Meeting Tomorrow

The Villanova Sociological Society will adopt several innovations in procedure this year, Rick Berry, president of the club, announced that meetings will be held during the activities period each week on a regular basis in 207 Vasey Hall.

Alumni members of the club will be contacted regularly, invited to all functions, and familiarized with activities through a weekly bulletin. This bulletin will be sent out with the aid of the SGA's new Elliott Addressing machine.

Also on the roster for the coming year are several field trips including one major jaunt to Harlem to study urban redevelopment in the largest slum area in the world.

Members of Villanova and surrounding colleges' faculties, and members of local, state and national agencies will address the society. The Sociological Society is presently collaborating with the Villanova Forum to obtain a national figure as a speaker for late in the second semester.

Tomorrow, special attention will be paid to new members and discussing further plans in detail. Nurses, engineers and business majors are invited to join the club, as well as liberal arts students.

Educational TV Makes Debut; Two Courses Now Televised

WWVU-TV, Villanova's new educational television station, made its debut on Monday September 13, with the advent of the fall semester. Due to the experimental nature of the station, only two courses, Theology 205 and Psychology 134, are presently being televised. These two courses, however, represent 37 hours a week of air time.

The new station occupies two rooms on the ground floor of Mendel Hall. One is used as a studio, while the other is a combination control and recording room. Five classrooms in Mendel are equipped with receivers for the lectures. All shows are videotaped, thus enabling all sections to see the same lecture.

Educational TV, which in the past was only an idea, became a reality this year mainly through the efforts of three people. Rev. John F. O'Rourke, OSA, Mr. Raymond Wilke,, and Bill Madden. Fr. O'Rourke, chairman of the station, received permission from the Board of Trustees last September to set up the station under a limited budget.

Equipment was purchased from station WTOP in Washington D.C. Construction of the station began in June, and was finished in time for the opening of the academic year.

Mr. Wilke, former member of the speech department, has been named director of WWVU-TV. Mr. Madden, an electrical engineering graduate of the Class of 1965 of Villanova, is the technical producer of the station.

Father John O'Rourke, Mr. Raymond Wilke and Bill Madden put the new closed circuit TV equipment through a test run.

SEASON PREVIEW

'Cats' Foes Formidable

By Joe Maffongelli

From the frying pan into the fire seems to be the most appropriate way to describe the Wildcat hop from Toledo to Boston College. The Eagles once again appear as a formidable clog in the pipeline to a successful season.

Coach Jim Miller began spring training with some 22 lettermen. The great end combination of Whalen and Cronin has departed; but the twin quarterbacks Foley and Marzetti still bring a gleam to Miller's eyes. These two engineered the 8-7 upset of the 'Cats last season.

Although this has been labeled a rebuilding year, the '64 Eagle freshman squad has provided some rich talent. Penn State, Syracuse, Army, and Miami are formidable foes.

WASHINGTON STATE

On October 9 the 'Cats will face the Cougars of Washington State University. This will mark the first meeting of the two clubs.

Bert Clark is the artistic mentor at the big Western school, and he looks forward to a year of question marks. The Cougars face their toughest schedule in history, and they must face it with a host of sophomores and juniors.

All-American halfback Clarence Williams has departed, but fullback Larry Fillmer will take up the slack with plenty to spare. End Rich Sheron and halfback Ted Gerela will also bolster the offense.

DELAWARE

October 16 will find the 'Cats in Newark, Delaware to meet the Blue Hens of Delaware University. This club has only beaten VU on one occasion, but they show the rigors of a strong aggregate this season.

The brightest spot on the club seems to be at quarterback. Tom Van Grofski will again be on hand for accurate passing and ball handling. Although his receivers are not deep in number they are a quality breed. Sandy Sands looms as the top flanker.

Coach Dave Nelson is pleased with his line prospects, but is still looking for halfbacks. Ken Bills and Stu Green seem to be the top lettermen in this department.

QUANTICO

The 'Cats will open their November slate with a military battle. The Quantico Marines will line up on the Main Line field with a comeback in mind. Last year the Leathernecks suffered their worst season in 20 years (2-6-1). They will be relying on a great deal of help from colleges on the eastern seaborard. Among these are Ed Conti from Syracuse, Jim McGown from B.C., and Dave Gillespie from Navy.

Major Joe Caparara expects to have better luck this season, but a tough schedule may turn things around once more.

VIRGINIA TECH

Another new face on this year's slate will be that of Virginia Tech. The 'Cats will face the Gobblers at Blacksburg, Virginia, on November 13. In two previous meetings the 'Cats have been on the short end.

Coach Jerry Caliborne has 18 returning lettermen, but most of his '64 offense has departed. The quarterback department still seems strong with Bobby Owens and Tom Stafford back.

With a rather tough schedule ahead the Orange and Maroon will be in for a long season. Florida State, G.W., and West Virginia are the highlights.

BUFFALO

Parents' Weekend will find Buffalo on the scene. The 'Cats had to forego this one last year due to bad weather.

Dick Offenhamer has a few strong linemen on hand, but his quarterbacks and fullbacks are inexperienced. Nick Capriana and Jim Webber lead the pack at halfback, but there is no depth.

Rather than make any seasonal predictions, it would be well to say that the 'Cats are inexperienced, but will develop if given enough time, support, and interest, on the part of the school as well the coaching staff.

PUSTINICK NEW SOCCER COACH; CLUB LOOKS TOWARD BIG TIME

By Tom Willson

Soccer is a sport which generates the wild enthusiasm of player and spectator alike. Soccer is the most universally played sport in the world.

In hotly-contested international matches, victory is considered a matter of national honor and outstanding players are national heroes. In Spain, soccer even outdraws bull-fighting and in countries all around the globe, crowds of 100,000 are commonplace.

This fast-moving, action-packed sport has been introduced on the Main Line campus by the Villanova Soccer Club, which enters its second year of competition on the inter-collegiate level. The Club has made rapid progress since last season, the most notable step was the recruiting of a coach with highly impressive qualifications.

Following a meeting of the executive committee, the officers of the Club announced that "Marty" Pustilnick, former All-American from the University of Baltimore, will coach the team this season.

ALL-AMERICAN

Pustilnick started his career at Girard College in Philadelphia, where he played for one of the best high school teams in the Greater Philadelphia area. Following his high school career, he received a scholarship to the University of Baltimore, where he received recognition as one of the best forwards in the South, reaping All-Southern Conference, All-South, and finally All-American honors.

Pustilnick also played for Lighthouse United S.C. of North Philadelphia, which won the National Soccer Championship - Junior Division - in 1956. The soccer team's new coach is currently a member of the E.P. & D. Referee's Association, with a total of 50 matches under his belt. Needless to say, the Club is happy to announce the arrival of Mr. Pustilnick as its new coach.

That soccer is an international sport can be seen by taking a look at the Club's roster. Such countries as Trinidad, Columbia, Argentina, Puerto Rico, Switzerland, Turkey, Bavaria, Hungary, and Cuba are represented.

Starting next Monday, the Wildcat Booters will practice every Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday from 3:30 to 5:30 p.m. Practice is held on the field across from the Law School.

CLUB MEETING

If you are a Villanova Student, freshman or upperclassman, American or Foreign-born, graduate or undergraduate, and have played soccer in the past or have had any experience whatsoever, you should attend the next meeting of the Villanova Soccer Club, next Thursday, September 30 at 115 Bartley at 10:30 a.m.

The Wildcat Booters with their new coach are completing their eight-game schedule which includes contests with Drexel, Temple, Penn, St. Joseph's, and Textile.

Included in the Villanova schedule is an exhibition game with the St. Joseph's Bearcats S.C., one of the best junior teams in the state, who play in the Delco Soccer League and are a strong favorite to penetrate deeply into competition for the National Soccer Championship - Junior Division - this season. The Club will have their schedule completed shortly and will announce it as soon as possible.

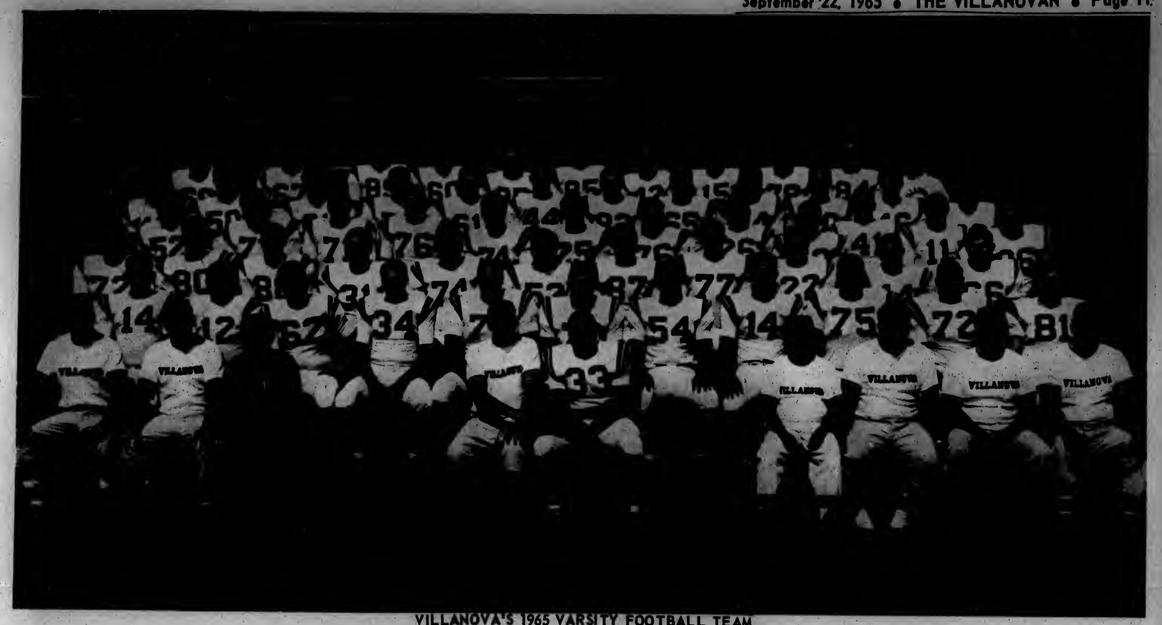
Swim Mentor Ed Geisz Spent Summer In Iraq Teaching U.S. Methods

By Terry Mills

Edward Geisz, coach of the Wildcat's famed swimming teams, has recently returned from several months in Iraq. Coach Geisz, the maker of 15 All-Americans in 13 years, was selected by the NCAA Swimming Coaches Association to teach American methods of training to the Iraqi Swimming Federation.

Geisz was given several citations and a silver palm tree trophy in recognition of his accomplishments. As part of the Education and Cultural Affairs Program, Geisz was in Iraq from April 28 to July 1. The training was in preparation for the Arab Games, which were held in Cario, Egypt.

The Program also hoped to establish a youth swimming organization. This was impossible at the present time but Geisz did lay the foundations for a national competitive program. This is the key to the successes of the Americans in swimming, according to the 'Cats' coach.



Edward Geisz

The future of swimming in Iraq is bright. Geisz stated that the climate of the Middle East is extremely favorable for the sport. The Iraqis can swim outdoors for nine or ten months a year.

The two pools used by Geisz were the first two competitive pools in Iraq.

This fact and the strong, coordinated Iraqis should provide this Middle East country with able swimmers for the future..

COACH OPTIMISTIC

By Jim Proud

For the past five seasons the job of head football coach at Villanova has been in the capable hands of Alex Bell. In those years he has seen some fine seasons and some that were marred by injury or graduation.

Coach Bell's outlook for this season is one of optimism, but he shows restraint in predicting a successful season. When he looks at his starting lineup he sees that he lacks the experience he's had in past years but does see a fast backfield and good size in the line.

"If we don't have any injuries we will give every team we play a good game," said Coach Bell. He also said that his first line offense and defense are adequate, but due to a lack of experience the second teams are question marks.

Alex Bell

Bell was enthusiastic about this year's backfield since it is the same as last year's with the exception of the halfback position.

The team lost Dick Sernyak to graduation, but the halfback position will be filled by John Kolmer. Kolmer played often last year and this experience is expected to help him and the team this season.

"Football is an emotional game and unless the players are up for a game it is almost impossible to win," commented Coach Bell on the necessity of good team morale. He said that the team has good spirit but it is not overconfident.

As long as the 'Cats stay in good shape physically and avoid serious injuries, prospects seem fairly bright for the rest of the season. One loss doesn't make a season.

BELL'S BOTTOMS

By Gerry Bruderle

Since September 1, Coach Alex Bell and his assistants have been drilling the Villanova Wildcats daily, sometimes twice a day, preparing them in every phase of the game for the long season ahead.

Although this season gives promise of being an especially long one, little of the praise for past victories has reached the humble figures of those men behind the scenes, the assistant coaches.

Joe Rogers, Lou Ferry and Joe Faragalli are football stars from the glory days of Villanova football 15 years ago.

Joe Rogers was a star halfback who in 1946 was 12th in the nation in rushing as a freshman. Villanova hung up four consecutive winning seasons from 1946 to 1950 with Rogers in the Wildcat backfield. Joe has been backfield coach at Villanova off and on since 1952, and he has a brother John, who is line coach at Temple.

LOU FERRY

Line coach Lou Ferry also played at Villanova in the late 1940's. Lou was captain of the chilling 1948 squad which played in the Refrigerator Bowl against Kentucky in Cleveland, after turning in an 8-1-1 mark in regular season play.

Lou played in the pros for seven years, starting with Green Bay and the Chicago Cardinals before going to Pittsburgh for five years. Ferry came back to Villanova in 1960 to help Coach Bell in the line. He is an excellent football analyst who usually mans the phones on top of the pressbox during the Villanova games.

Joe Faragalli came to Villanova in 1961, eight years after graduating in 1953 as an outstanding student and a standout tackle for three years. Joe was a junior star on the Wildcat team that compiled a 7-1-1 record in 1952 and he also captained the 1953 squad.

Joe was an All-Scholastic star at John Bartram High School in Philadelphia before coming to Villanova, and he coached at St. Thomas More High School shortly after leaving Villanova.

GREAT LINES

Faragalli and Ferry have helped produce some of the finest lines in the East in the last few years.

With Coach Bell, (himself a former Villanova great), Rogers, Ferry and Faragalli, Villanova football has once again returned to the respected position it held when these men were yesterday's heroes.

Wildcats Travel To Boston To Play High-Flying Eagles

By Frank Miller

"One team that could surprise a lot of people is Boston College." This is the phrase that SPORTS ILLUSTRATED (9/20/65) used to sum up the Eagles prospects for the current season.

The Eagles, who play one of the toughest schedules in the East (Villanova, Army, Penn State, Miami, and Syracuse), have again come up with a formidable squad. B.C., who last year nipped the Wildcats 8-7 in the last two minutes of play have a mammoth (234 lb. avg.) line and an experienced quarterback to lead their attack.

LINEMEN

The big men on the line for B.C. are Dick Powers (240), Jim Cheoillot (235), Ron Persuitte (240) Tom Sarkesian (240), Joe Pryor (230), Dick Capp (245) and Bob Hyland (240); except for Persuitte all are experienced.

The experienced quarterback is Ed Foley. He is a real sparkler and could very easily wind up as the top signal caller in the East. Last season he completed 72 of 144 passes for 957 yards. He also has a good backfield to work with. His backs are Ron Gentili, Hank Blaha, and Tom Calyon. All three are swift and speedy. He also has a hard driving soph fullback named Brenden McCarthy who has great potential.

CAPABLE THREE

Foley lost his favorite pass receivers Jim Whalen and Bill Cronin through graduation but seems to have a more than capable threesome returning in Charlie Smith, Gordon Kutz, and Pryor.

Last year the 'Cats stopped the high-scoring Eagles with a tough defense. The same kind of defense this year could stop Coach Jim Miller's multiple T and I defenses and ground the high-flying Eagles for their first Villanova defeat in the last seven years.

Cats Drop Opener 9-7

By Cliff Hagan

The Villanova Wildcats opened their 1965 gridiron season last Saturday ... or so they say. The 8200 'Nova partisans were bored most of the afternoon and frustrated the remainder as the 'Cats fumbled, stumbled, and arm-tackled their way around Goodreau Stadium.

The score at the end of the first half was a justified 0-0 as both teams appeared to be dulled by the intense heat, well over 90 degrees at turf level. However, the underdog Rockets came out of their stupor for about eight minutes of the third quarter, just enough time to score the 9 big ones.

The Mid-Americans served up the humblizer after the local defense apparently had them stopped at the Villanova 40 yard line with fourth and a long six. The foxy young kicker, Dennis Hromika, fell back into punt formation and disappeared, only to be discovered a few second later on the Wildcat's 16 yard line.

Somehow in those few seconds, he managed to field a bad snap from center, gather a wall of blockers, and jog around his left end for the game's most important first down. Soph Mike Holobetz took the plunge for a yard.

First-string quarterback Holobetz, who did a fine job of calling the plays shuttled in to him by coach Frank Lauterbur, then tossed an 8 yarder to messenger-halfback Jim Hauser. Co-captain Jim Berkey got the first down at the two.

First down was rerun because both teams were detected offsides; Berkey hit paydirt on the next play, but only because somebody did some timely holding.

TOLEDO TD

The added 15 yards turned out to be just another of several advantages that the 'Cats passed up. Villanova's defense stacked the middle; Hauser bounced off to the left, dodged a half-hearted tackle, and went in, this time for keeps.

Another dribbled pass from center helped the Main Liners snuff the extra-points pass attempt and the Ohio boys led 6-0.

The Rockets racked up three more points a few minutes later on a 18 yard field goal by Bob Buchs, who made it look easy from twice that distance. The Rockets got the ball when Dennis Riddle caught a pass that one of the 'Cats should have held.

This was only one of many plays that marred the Wildcat's receiving corps. The 'Cat catchers were mortified all day by an inability to find the handle, particularly in the waning moments of the game.

At any rate, 'Nova entered the final 15 of the Varsity Day contest trailing 9-0. Things just continued to worsen as top 'Cat quarterback Dave Connell was seriously sidelined early in the quarter.

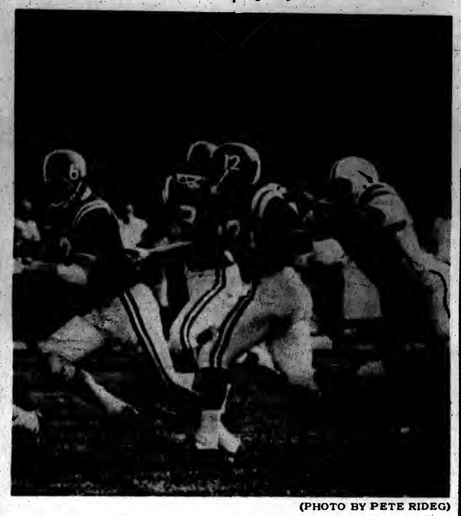
The Villanovans were already without the services of Chip Bender, who had sustained a shoulder separation in the early moments of the second half. Bender who was replacing the hobbling Santomauro may be through for the season; the outlook for Connell is only slightly brighter.

FINE PUNTING

One of the few bright spots in Villanova's game was the excellent punting of Connell and later Bud Piper. Piper's 60 yarder put the pressure on the Rockets in the fourth quarter, and the 'Cat defense forced them to punt back.

Villanova got the best of the foot battle and wound up with the ball on Toledo's 32 yard line. John Kolmer and Gerry Bellotti gave the Wildcats their best drive with some fine hard running.

Kolmer pushed his way over from the three and the Blue and White hit the scoreboard. Jim Case went through the formalities and the 'Cats trailed 9-7. And that's all she wrote.



The Wildcats' biggest surprise was the line -- not since the Dark Ages of 1960 has a 'Nova line been so manhandled. If Toledo got one point for every time a 'Cat QB was thrown in the act of throwing the game would have been a rout.

Villanova's defense could only be described as eccentric. The team as a whole looked dull, with the brightest spots where they were expected, in the fine running of Santomauro, Brown, Bellotti, and Kolmer.

CHEERS!

By John DiGennaro

When it takes three kickoffs to get the first game underway, you get that feeling it's going to be a long season. Then you really begin to wonder when your number one quarterback gets carried off the field, your number two quarterback is turned into a tackling dummy by his front four, and a stadium full of fair-weather friends sit dejectedly mumbling and grumbling rather than giving the team the home field advantage they are entitled to.

Meanwhile a flock of "Eagles" start their flight toward the summit of Mt. East, and a hungry pack of "Cougars" sink their teeth into a powerful Iowa eleven and its two All-American candidates Gary Snook and Karl Noonan.

Weighing all three outcomes carefully, and with the prognostic vista reserved for the know-it-all student spectators, bubbling enthusiasm is soon smoldering into plaintive groans of discontent.

Following along these lines I would like to congratulate last week's crowd for their academy award winning performance in filing out of the stadium. With their drawn faces and cowered heads I could not tell whether they looked more like a gathering of Mafia big-wigs in a St. Patrick's Day parade, or part of Chaucer's pilgrimage relating and evaluating the great and noble deeds of the past with current and future realities.

Are these real fans? I'm sure they proved rather uninspiring to the freshmen, and also to the local fans. Sure it was easy to root for an Atkinson or a Joe, a Jones or a Washington, but spirit does not rest on Billy Joe's broad shoulders anymore than it soars to the heights on a Washington leap. Spirit, as I understand it, is an intrinsic part of the given university and the students therein.

Ballplayers like the above mentioned did not need the cheers to inspire great feats; they had a greatness all their own and now they are pros to prove it. The ballplayers who need the cheers are the young, inexperienced kids who need a morale boost and a bit of confidence to get untracked.

The ballplayers who need the cheers are on this year's team. The potential is there; nurture it with patience, remember you're backing a school -- not a won and lost record.

Cross Country Squad Opens Tough Schedule Against Penn State

By Ken Coniglio

This year's squad has to follow in the footsteps of a team undefeated in dual meet competition in the past four years. In addition, last year's Captain and All-American Dave Hyland has graduated along with Tom Sullivan, Jimmy Orr and Marty Ferko.

Hyland has received a fellowship and is now attending Villanova Law School, Sullivan is at Loyola Medical School in Chicago, Orr is now studying for his Master's Degree in Business Administration at Harvard, and Ferko entered New York University Dental School this Fall.

The 1965 Cross Country season opens on Saturday, October 2 at Fairmount Park, with Villanova facing a strong Penn State squad. It is rumored that State traveled to Lima, Peru this past summer in order to practice on the extremely rugged terrain of the Andes Mountains. They promise to be quite formidable opponents.

Captain Noel Carroll is the sole Senior on the squad and it will be his job to lead the team to victory over a gruelling five mile test of endurance. Carroll and Mike Ferko are the only returning members of last year's team.

The blunt of the burden will be placed on the shoulders of a young and upcoming group of Sophomores: Dave Patrick, Charlie Messenger, Ian Hamilton (an Irish import), Jack Olery, Al McCaferty, Tony Selito, Paul Sanborn and Harry Degenhardt. Last year as Freshmen they made excellent showings which culminated in an outstanding victory in the IC4A Frosh Championships.

Following Penn State, Villanova takes on St. Joe's, rated the best team in the Middle Atlantics. Villanova faces an always tough Quantico squad October 16. Following Quantico is St. John's who sport All-American Larry Furnell. The M.A.C. Championships are on October 30. On November 15 the IC4A's will be held followed on November 22 by the NCAA Championships. This schedule will be a true test of this year's team.

The question which must be asked is whether this young team can pick up where last year's squad left off and whether they will be able to master the additional two miles required of the Varsity Squad?

With Coach Tuppeny guiding the way, this year's Cross Country team should be a fine representation of Villanova athletics.

Eck Names Vice-Presidents; Congress Passes 3 Motions

by Tom Dabney

The Student Senate and Congress met Tuesday and Wednesday respectively to hear a lengthy list of motions and reports and to announce several new appointments made by the Acting President of the SGA, Frank Eck.

At the Senate meeting, two motions were offered, which were not subsequently carried to the Congress meeting, since they were considered to be relevant only to the Senate.

The first motion dealt with an appropriation of funds to send five council members to the Associated Student Governments of the USA annual convention to be held in mid-October at Purdue University.

The motion, proposed by Dave Banmiller, Villanova's ASGUSA representative, was passed. It was not mentioned at the Council meeting and Bob Dean and Brenden Brett rose to question several unexplained aspects. They did not receive, however, a clear explanation to their inquiries on expenses or why an undergraduate was not being sent.

CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTION

The other motion was concerned with the relinquishment by the Senate of a specific power to the sole judgement of the President. The power involves the right of the Senate to suspend an organization's privilege to use bulletin boards if the organization is found guilty of a certain offense.

The motion was contested by several members of the Senate on the grounds of constitutional legality to forfeit this power.

It was contested secondarily on the basis of the harm incurred by an organization due to this loss of necessary publicity. The motion was passed despite this opposition, 7-6.

At the Congress meeting only three motions were passed. A motion requesting the University Shop to "seek a different procedure in the sale of its books, at the beginning of each semester" passed unanimously.

The second motion was to delegate "a committee to aid the University Band in their attempts to establish a marching unit."

The third motion requested the SGA to confide with Father Rongione on the feasibility of extending C&F library hours "into the weekend."

One motion that will not be acted on until a later date called for the setting up of milk machines in the residence cafeteria. This is awaiting further committee action.

APPOINTMENTS

President Eck announced five appointments as well as two resignations. Three of the appointments were the Executive Vice-Presidents: John Graziano, of Religious Affairs; Prentiss Yancey, of Educational Affairs; and Brian Banmiller, of Student Affairs.

Others were: Jeff Radowich, parlimentarian; and Andy Donahue to succeed Yancey as committee chairman of Social Affairs.

Tim Coyle resigned as Parliamentarian and Bob Dean as an Executive Vice-President. Dean was subsequently appointed Arts and Science Day-Hop Representative by Senior Class President Jim Griffin.

Villanova Playbox Plans 6 Productions For New Year

Mr. Richard A. Duprey, chairman of the Theatre Department, has announced plans for the department's third season at the Villanova Playbox.

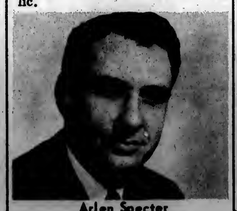
The six productions for the 1965-66 academic year are in keeping with the "new concept in university theatre" intended to provide an opportunity for the improvement of theatre itself through the presentation of new plays.

This effort was nationally recognized when Mr. Duprey was awarded the Margo Jones University Award for the encouragement of new playwrights. With its arena stage, which provides for more versatile and liberal staging techniques, the Playbox also provides students with a place to develop their own theatrical ideas through practical effort.

The first play of the season, THE DEATH AND LIFE OF SNEAKY FITCH by James Rosenberg, is a parody of the Code of the Old West. It will open October 8 and play October 9, 15-17, and 22-24. Michel de Ghelderode's MISS JAIRUS runs November 5-6, 12-14, and 19-20. Although little known in America, it is the famous writer's exciting and powerful statement of his own brand of Christian Pessimism.

The scheduled February production is AS YOU DESIRE ME, the exciting story of a mysterious woman's identity which illustrates Luigi Pirandello's arresting comments on the reality of the human situation.

Jerome Lawrence and Robert E. Lee, the American team who wrote INHERIT THE WIND and AUNTIE MAME, will come to Villanova in March to assist in the production of their new play, THE LAUGHMAKER. The absorbing plot concerns two actors torn by the perverse wish of a beautiful woman.



The final play of the season, to be shown in April, will be written by Cara Saylor, graduate student in the Theatre Department and holder of the Sam Shubert Playwriting Fellowship at Villanova.

A unique feature of each performance is the informal critique which provides both the audience and those involved in the production with the opportunity for discussion.

VUPU, Law Society To Host Opponents In D.A. Election

The antagonists in a close race for District Attorney of Philadelphia will address Villanova audiences on Monday and Tuesday. The challenger, Republican candidate Arlen Specter will speak before the Villanova Political Union on Monday at 7:30 p.m. in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

Incumbent James C. Crumlish will address the University's Pre-Law Society on Tuesday evening at the same hour in the same room. Both meetings are open to the public.

Arlen Specter

Specter will be the kickoff speaker in the 1965-66 series of Political Union debates. The debate resolution of the evening will be: "Resolved, this house favors a change in party rule in Philadelphia."

Also participating in the debate, will be the members of the Union's Liberal, Moderate and Conservative Parties. Specter will give the opening 30-minute speech as well as five minutes of "concluding remarks" at the end of the evening.

PORNOGRAPHY DISCUSSED

District Attorney Crumlish's topic before the Pre-Law Society will be "Pornography and the Law," a subject on which he has had considerable experience in his four years in his present position.

Both men are currently making headlines in the controversy over Specter's recently released report on the Philadelphia magistrate system. The report, the result of a ten-month investigation, has been called a "half-million dollar boondoggle" by Crumlish.

Specter, who supervised the investigation as Special Assistant Attorney General, has defended it as an accurate picture of faults in the system which require that the office of magistrate be abolished.

Challenger Specter graduated from the University of Pennsylvania Phi Beta Kappa in 1951 and received his L.L.B. from Yale in 1956. He was a 1st Lieutenant in the Air Force from 1951 to 1953. From 1959 until 1963 he served as Assistant District Attorney in Philadelphia.

In 1964 he was Assistant Counsel to the Warren Commission on the assassination of President Kennedy. In the same year he was named Outstanding Young Man of the Year by the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce.

Incumbent Crumlish, a native Philadelphian, graduated from Georgetown University in 1941 and began five years of active service in the Navy. He graduated from the University of Pennsylvania Law School in 1948.

From 1952 until 1961 Crumlish served as a member of the Philadelphia Registration Commission by appointment of three successive governors. He was appointed to the vacant post of District Attorney by the Philadelphia Board of Judges in March 1961 and was elected to a full-term in November of that year. Currently Crumlish is Vice-President of the National Association of District Attorneys.

On October 1 the Student Government Association will hold its first mixer of the fall semester. It will feature continuous music for the first time at a Student Government Mixer.

The music will be provided by the Fat City Four and the Del-Rays.

The dance will be held in the Field House from 8 to 12 midnight.

The next Student Government Association-sponsored mixer will be held on October 8 and will feature the Critters. A portion of the proceeds from this mixer will go to charity.

$2000 Grant Enables Law School To Stage Two-Day Program

The Villanova Law School was presented with a $2,000 grant by the Sperry and Hutchinson Lecturership Program to hold a two-day forum at the Law School.

The forum entitled "A Free Press and Fair Trial" will take place in April 1966 under the general supervision of Donald Dowd professor of law. Detailed plans for the forum are now being prepared and will be announced shortly.

The forum will be conducted in conjunction with the Villanova Law Forum and the principal papers will be published by the VILLANOVA LAW REVIEW.

The grant was given by Mr. Paul Murray, district manager of Sperry and Hutchinson Co. to Dean Harold Gill Reuschlein at the Law School last Wednesday.

The grant is one of several which are awarded by the Sperry and Hutchinson Lectureship Program to colleges and universities throughout the country.

Singers To Record Album As Concert Season Nears

The Villanova Singers, with 47 men returning from last year, gained a head start on the 1965-66 concert season by returning to school on September 8, 9, and 10 for a pre-school practice under the continued direction of Mr. Herbert Fiss.

The purpose of this early practice was to prepare the Singers for a recording they will make for a national recording concern. The recording will also include several songs sung by "The Spires," a folk group directed by Senior Frank Romano. The group consists of 12 of the Singers who excell in instrumental as well as vocal ability.

Rev. Edward Doherty, OSA, moderator, and Fiss are looking forward to a successful concert season. This optimism is based on the quality of new men who have auditioned successfully for the Singers.

The Villanova Singers will once again travel throughout the East and the Mid-West presenting their repertoire of classical, collegiate, and show numbers to colleges to which the Singers are invited.

Interview Dates Announced By Placement Department

One of the services offered by the Villanova University Placement Office is assistance to Seniors in securing permanent positions upon graduation. Approximately 200 companies, government agencies, and other employing institutions have been scheduled to visit the campus in order to interview Seniors for positions after graduation.

To be eligible for the interviews, each Senior must register with the Placement Office. Registration is accomplished by filing out two copies of a student resume. A list of visiting firms will be distributed to each senior returning a resume.

Interview dates this year have been set for October 26 with the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, and December 9 with the Central Intelligence Agency. General interview dates will be January 20-26, January 31-February 28, except February 22, and March 1-25, except March 17 and 18.

To help the student familiarize himself with the various employers, a file on all major employers is kept in the Placement Office, basement of Sheehan Hall. Any student who is interested, is encouraged to inspect this file. Brochures, pamphlets, financial reports, and others are included. Additional information is also available in the Falvey and Bartley libraries.

In accordance with this program, the Office of Psychological Services offers to all students academic and vocational testing and counseling. Experience in taking employment tests has some value, in addition to the vocational advice that might be sought.

An appointment may be made with the secretary for week-days, on the first floor of Corr Hall.

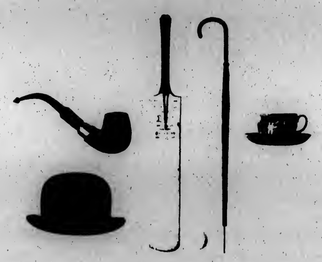
Psychological Services Announces Plans For Year

The Psychological Services Department, at its new location in Room 106 Corr Hall has expanded not only its facilities but also its personnel.

Four Counsellors assist Dr. James F. Duffy, the department chairman: Mr. Leo M. Zuckowsky, associate professor in Education; Mr. Danial T. Ziegler, assistant professor in Psychology; Dr. Howard McGinn, professor in Library Science; and Mr. Joseph Bevilacqua.

Mr. Bevilacqua is an alumnus of St. Joseph's College in Philadelphia where he received his B.S. in English. Later he received a M.A. in English and a M.Ed. at Pennsylvania State University. He has just returned to Philadelphia after a two year counseling position at the Air Force Academy in Colorado.

The function of the Psychological Services Department is to evaluate and counsel a student with respect to possible problems in his choice of a major or career.



The Department holds a reading improvement program for Freshman who are deficient in reading speed and ability.

The Department is also a center for administering the Graduate Record Examinations for Seniors interested in working for their Masters. The Service invites students to take advantage of the opportunities presented.

Villanova's Jazz Festival Slated for February 25-26

The Sixth Annual Villanova Intercollegiate Jazz Festival (IJF) will be held February 25-26, 1966.

The date and other plans for the Festival were announced yesterday by Bill McCloskey, general chairman of IJF'66 at an organizational meeting.

At the same time it was announced that Tom Brown, afternoon air personality at WIP Radio in Philadelphia, has been named to the Advisory Committee for the Festival.

Frequently a master of ceremonies at Philadelphia's famed Academy of Music, Brown holds a prominent listing in the "ENCYCLOPEDIA OF JAZZ."

Metromedia Inc. Vice-President David Croninger, General Manager of WIP said, "I am delighted that Tom Brown's knowledge and vast experience in all kinds of music, particularly jazz, will be available to the Villanova Intercollegiate Jazz Festival. It's always a pleasure to have WIP personnel participate in community activities such as this."

At the meeting, held in Vasey Hall, McCloskey told the workers who appeared that there is a need for more help from the student body in carrying on the tradition of the Jazz Festival at Villanova.

Already applications have come in from the Southwest and Middle West from groups wishing to appear in the Festival. Last year's final performance was heard throughout the country on ABC's Radio Network. This coverage is credited by IJF officials for much of the national attention garnered by the Festival.

A tentative agreement has been reached with a Philadelphia television station to televise portions of the IJF performances.

Within a week, applications will be mailed to the Music Departments of nearly 500 schools. These will request audition tape recordings from Jazz Bands and combos wishing to participate. Special emphasis will also be placed on solo vocal performances in IJF'66.

The rest of the Advisory committee is being formulated now and will be announced in the near future, according to Mr. Raymond Wilke, of the Office of Instructional Television, moderator of the Festival.

VU Band Needs Volunteers For Homecoming Weekend

Homecoming Weekend will be here soon, and with it one of our most important football games of the year, West Chester.

Traditionally, the Villanova Band puts on a great half-time show. This year, however, the band will not perform at the half way mark for this or any other game.

The Band membership is at a bare minimum and needs the support of fellow Villanovans, according to the Band Leaders.

Practice is held every Monday and Wednesday evenings from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. in the Classroom Annex. Free meals are offered to the day-hops who wish to eat supper on campus. The University Band provides each of its members with two free tickets to all home football and basketball games.

This year the band will travel to Virginia and Delaware to play at these respective games. The band will also make its Annual Concert Tour this spring.

Winston Churchill III Makes Lecture Debut In Field House Oct. 11

Winston S. Churchill III, grandson of Great Britain's famed Prime Minister, makes his American lecture debut at the Villanova Field House 8 p.m. October 11. Author, journalist, and world traveler, Churchill voices his opinion of Europe and her changing politics in a manner unfamiliar to the more orthodox British political views of our day.

The 25 year-old lecturer went to Eton and was graduated from Christ Church College, Oxford. He writes in his spare time for the LONDON EXPRESS and THE WALL STREET JOURNAL. His first book was the result of his travels to some 40 countries of the Middle East and Africa.

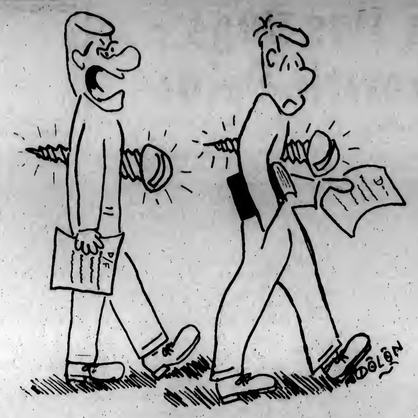
CORRECTION

It was erroneously stated last week due to a typographical error that the Dean of Student Activities was Michael Sutherland. The administration story inadvertently left out the appointment of the Rev. James T. Ryan, OSA, to the post of Dean of Student Activities. Our sincere apologies to Fr. Ryan.

UN AWAKENS



Amid the sometimes traumatic emotional disturbances caused by the rigors of re-entry into the academic world, we were able to view, last week, at least three related developments of major importance in the far away world of international affairs.

For one thing, Red China came as close to "backing down" on an issue since Mao tse-tung butchered his way into Peking in 1948. Second, India and Pakistan were able to stop, at least momentarily, their senseless religious war over tiny Kashmir -- without disturbance to the stability of Shastri's government. Third, and of greatest importance, the United Nations, under U Thant's leadership, finally came into its own.

Since he took office, Thant has been trying desperately to fill the great void left by the death of Dag Hammarskjold. He lacked, however, both the universal respect and the security of position to match Hammarskjold's image.

But crisis brings with it, according to an old (pre-Red) Chinese saying, both danger and opportunity. The crisis was the Kashmiri dispute. The danger was the consequent threat of at worst an eventual full-scale conflict with Red China, and at best a break-up of the free world's collective security system in the middle and Far East. The opportunity, then, was for a solution to be found and implemented.

In one series of moves the United Nations was able to demonstrate both its effectiveness as a peace-keeping organization, and its ability to act decisively in the best interests of the entire world. And in the process U Thant has, to borrow an expression, earned his stripes as Secretary-General.

Plea For Thought

College life is one of the most hectic experiences on the face of the earth. These are exciting years, packing life brimful of experience into a short span of time, years with their heartbeat closely attuned to the world of joy. Too often, however, these days assume an aura of unreality. College students, retreating from the vicious world about them, throw themselves into the helter-skelter life known as the campus whirl. Newspapers, books, and periodicals are not read, but favorite television shows, sporting events, and social activities are not missed.

Parties are planned several months in advance in order to insure their success. An illusory astro-dome is placed around the campus to protect the inhabitants from thought fall-out. Wit becomes the fashion and fun becomes the goal.

These generalizations are certainly not true of all college students, especially in the wake of students' participation in the civil rights movement. But for those who have not yet awakened, these suggestions are offered: slow down, read a good book, take life a bit more seriously, and above all, think.

All rumors to the contrary, this is the student's main function.

TIME IS SHORT

The first regular meeting of the Student Government Association was characterized by the chaos of bureauocracy. It is inconceivable that a meeting which lasted nearly two hours could accomplish relatively nothing. Only three motions were passed. Although these motions were relatively simple and clear-cut, they were accompanied by endless debate.

Was this debate necessary? Was the good of the students at hand? We maintain that this was part of a political move. One political faction cannot be singled out as the main agitator. It is part of the same petty politics which was responsible for splitting the congress last semester.

Such trifling politics has no place on the college campus. Our Student Congress is not a testing ground for Junior politicians.

Last week we made a plea for unity. Thus far it has been completely ignored. The congress and more important the student body is suffering from these personal rivalries.

It is seemingly futile to remind these politicians that the sole purpose of the congress is to serve the students, for this is obviously not their concern.

The congress is not to be crucified because it does have a great potential. But meetings will continue to be unproductive if the first forty-five minutes are spent reading progress reports which could just as easily be typed and distributed with the secretary's minutes and the remainder spent debating parliamentary procedure and practicing picayune politics.

We hesitate in castigating the SGA this early in the school year, but this is the time to alleviate the political congestion. The shortened academic calendar makes it imperative for the SGA to make efficient use of its alloted time.

Letters To The Editor

To the Editor:

Although most of our feelings toward Mr. Bauman's strict adherence to charging the suggested retail price for texts may be negative ones, and although most students would prefer to forget this aspect of Villanova life until the unhappy occasion reoccurs in January, I feel that we all would be missing out on one of the real bargains of the printed page were we not to stop in at the University Shop to examine H.W. Johnson's A HISTORY OF ART.

After paying an average of $8.20 for hardbound texts, I approached with apprehension the book which proclaims itself to have "928 illustrations, including 80 color pages, many with gold."

Such serendipity is rare in the V.U. Shop, but this exquisite book is available to all comers for the amazingly low price of $10.95 and is comparable to many books three times that price.

Though you may never have the course for which the book was designated, it is a rare person who could not benefit from this book in enhancing his appreciation for art, sculpture, and architecture... a worthwhile addition to anyone's library.

John L. Guinan
Class of '66

To the Editor:

For the first time in recent memory, the Villanova campus is presented with a balanced political situation. The Young Republicans have been joined by a youth group affiliated with the Democratic State Committee, the Villanova Young Democratic Club.

Unlike the YR's who would seem to cater only to a reactionary fringe, the Young Democrats are open to those of all political beliefs, be they graduate students, undergraduates, (male or female), or faculty members.

The attendance at last Thursday's initial meeting was extremely edifying to all the officers and we hope that this interest would be maintained in the future.

Next Thursday evening at 7 o'clock in Vasey Hall Auditorium, the Villanova YD's will sponsor the film of Theodore H. White's Pulitizer Prize winning book "The Making of the President--1960," chronicling John F. Kennedy's struggle for the Democratic nomination and his eventual campaign for the Presidency. The admission charge for this award-winning film, which was aired on NBC last year, will be 25 cents and all are most welcome.

President, Young Democrats

New TV System Has Bugs ; Classes Bear Growth Pains

by Bill McCloskey

It was 8:30. Wednesday morning. Students, hardly awake yet, were talking of going back to sleep.

"It's very easy to fall asleep," said a Math major enrolled in the Theology 205 section which was about to be told about Atheism and Agnosticism by a voice emanating from two televisions poised on a pair of rickety-looking metal stilts propped in the front of Room G-59 Mendel Hall.

This was the students' third exposure to teaching by television and they seemed skeptical, but not openly hostile to the system installed only a week and a half before.

The scene is repeated 38 times each week in Mendel and Vasey Halls where WWVU-TV (channels 4 and 7) is on the air.

Still officially classified as an experiment by the University, there was apparently no one more surprised than those in the Office of Instructional Television, when it was announced that some 36 sections of students, in two courses, would be taught via television.

Fr. John O'Rourke, moderator of instructional television, becomes a television 'star' as his image flashes across a screen in mendel hall.

ORIGINAL PLANS

As envisioned by Raymond Wilke, Director of the Office, and a member of the Speech Department the first semester of operation would include three courses, each being taught only in part via the system, or a total of about 6 hours a week on the air. The original plan was to do most programs live.

Over the summer, home type video-tape recorders went on the market for the first time. Villanova placed an order and was to receive the first two to come off the assembly line.

Then, the plans snowballed. Dr. Eugene Albrecht, chairman of the Department of Psychology, submitted a schedule of broadcasts covering all three weekly classes in his Psychology 134 course.

Due to the scheduling of the sections it became obvious that video-taping would be essential during even the incubation period for the system.

A rush order was placed with the Norelco Company for a more compatable tape system which would not require the weeks of adapting required by the model first ordered.

CLEAR SIGNAL

The necessity of this change of plans cost about $6,000, but brought to WWVU-TV a much clearer signal.

Cables were strung to the classes by Bill Madden, a graduate of Villanova in June. It is estimated the work he did would have cost close to $100 an hour had professionals been hired for the job.

According to Wilke, the system is currently "doing more than it was designed to do. If anything would break down, we would have nothing with which to replace it. What we need," said Wilke, "is more of everything we already have."

Meanwhile, a committee has been set up under Rev. John M. Driscoll, OSA, vice-president for Academic Affairs, with Dr. Emil Amelotti as chairmen. The committee will investigate the feasibility of the system as it is now being operated. Dr. Amelotti is also chairman of the Department of Mathematics.

PROBLEM CHILD

The operation still has a few bugs. As Humanities major, Jim Veneziani, a sophomore enrolled in the Theology course told the VILLANOVAN last week, "If it worked all the time, it would be okay."

The first week of operation was characterized by tape problems and scheduling difficulties all of which, according to Dr. Albrecht, "tended to reenforce students' initial negative attitude" towards the idea of televised classes.

Dr. Albrecht's classes cover a total of three hours of actual video-taping time a week, but each show is taking between five and eight hours of preparation. "Still," said Dr. Albrecht, "the overall saving of time to the department is significant, since it is no longer necessary to have other Department staff members lecture and hold recitation classes."

Senior Education majors are currently being used to proctor the Psychology classrooms.

Mark Scheele, a sophomore Math major taking the Psych, course was quick to point out the advantage of being able to "set up demonstrations." Pete Nielsen, another sophomore Math student, added, "the courses seem better prepared and better organized.

SHOWTIME

We watched while Theology 205-13 saw the first tape recorded by their teacher, Rev. Robert Gill, OSA, Dean of Men.

About five minutes after the class was called to order a tone burst was heard from the TV monitors at the front of the room and "I Am An Atheist" was "on the air."

After the first few words came out of the set garbled, the picture flip-flopped once and the lecture started. Father used most of the production aids available to those using WWVU-TV.

The key words in the lecture were on cards which were flashed on the screen as they were spoken by the instructor.

A film clip, borrowed from the Audio-Visual Department of Falvey Memorial Library, illustrating evolution, was used by Father to explain the necessity of a Prime Mover and therefore God. The film, based on Life Magazine's "The World We Live In" series, did not come over well, but did illustrate the point and demonstrate the capabilities of the system.

A musical interlude, about 20 minutes into the class, gave students a chance to organize their notes. Many of the visuals used by the instructor were left on the screen after he had finished with the point, to give students added time to get the idea into their notes.

CLASS TIME SAVED

This removes the necessity of repeating many primary points which might otherwise be missed by the student. This leads to a saving in overall class time.

The lecture itself seemed little different from a formal class situation. Father Gill showed no signs of being nervous. The lecture seemed straight forward. There seemed to be little daydreaming during the class. Students seemed more than attentive.

"It took five years for Education by Television to be accepted at Temple," intoned Wilke. "We hope for similar acceptance here."

Dr. Albrecht, who says he has changed his course to take advantage of the television system hopes "the students will endure a few more weeks. After the bugs are ironed out, it should be quite effective."

Asked about other possibilities of the system, Wilke says, "there is the technical possibility of picking up someone else's telecast of Villanova sporting events and broadcasting to all TV equipped rooms."

Section 14-B

by G. W. Gingery

Ever since its initial congressional passage in 1947, non-workers have considered the Taft-Hartley Act as a "new bill of rights for workers." On the other hand, labor leaders have criticized this act of legislation as "an act to establish slave labor in the United States." Never has there been a more controversial bill concerning labor, management, and the Federal government.

Since 1947, labor representatives and lobbyists have declared the act as unconstitutional and oppressive to the working man. They call for either the repeal of the Taft-Hartley act or its major ratification.

The one section of the Taft-Hartley Act that particularly irritates the labor unions in the U.S. is the section 14.b. This section regulates the Union Shop Laws.

CLOSED OR OPEN SHOP

A Union Shop is a place of employment in which union members are employed. Section 14.b stipulates that each individual state has the power to determine whether or not closed or open union shops will be allowed in that state.

Currently on Capitol Hill, many legislators, proteges of LBJ and of course many union lobbyists are doing all they can to repeal this short but vitally important section.

If the Section 14.b is repealed, no longer will the American working man have the right to work at a union contracted job unless they are willing to join the union or pay set standards of gratuity to the union bosses.

Can it be considered the American way that men must join a union in order to gain employment?

Certainly it can be argued that men not in the union will benefit by the union's collective bargaining power. This may be true. But what about the man who might be considered as a higher productive achiever? Why must he be held down financially by a set wage determined by the union and employer?

INDIVIDUALLY AND GENERALLY

Suppose one man has one skill and one skill only. Suppose that he is a plumber. If this is the only way in which he can earn a living, and if all the plumbing jobs were union contracted, what choice would he have but to join the union. You might say: "So what? Let him join the union."

"What if this plumber thought that the local plumber's union might be unjust to its members, unprofitable to him, or communist infiltrated? What then would happen to this American's judicial willingness to work?"

Getting away from the individual, let us consider the effect of the repeal of 14.b in general.

It is interesting to note that many of the states that allow Open Shops (where both union and non-union labor can be employed), are states in which there is the least amount of industry and the lowest per capita income (Alabama, Arkansas, Iowa and Maine for examples).

ATTORNEY GENERAL

Let us consider the case of Senator Robert Kennedy who, as the Attorney General of the United States, was considered to be a sort of block-buster of monopolistic union affairs (Hoffa and the Teamsters).

Yet when Kennedy was elected as the junior senator from New York, doesn't it seem somewhat paradoxical that our block-buster has become one of the staunchest supporters for the repeal of 14.b? In a very recent issue of THE NATIONAL REVIEW, Kennedy maintains that it is greatly unfair to the highly industrialized states such as his own New York that a great deal of industry is moving away from these states to the Southern states where they don't have as much trouble with wildcat strikes and the like.

Does it seem unfair that the people in these states would benefit greatly from the new incoming industry and the increase in financial status that it would bring along with it?

It seems as though many people feel that because they are not steel workers or retail clerks and the like that they are immune to the effects of labor legislation in general and the repeal of 14.b in particular.

It may be that they do not realize the increasingly strong grip that labor unions have on our already intricate and irregular economy. If they ignore or are ignorant of this fact, then I will leave it to them to consider the possibilities of imperative union employment and its disastrous consequences in the future.

The Newport Scene

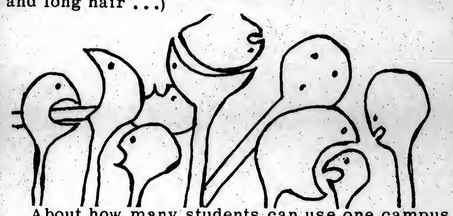
by Ed Bride

This year's Newport Jazz Festival (held in July) was rewarding from many standpoints: the music, the order, etc. But one aspect was particularly thrilling to this writer. It was like a reunion of old Jazz buddies, and we were able to take part, in some, at least.

We saw and re-acquainted ourselves with several friends of Villanova's Intercollegiate Jazz Festival: there was special affairs chairman Rich Dunne; there were two writers from Philadelphia, who had been particularly good to us, Nels Nelson of the Philadelphia Daily News and Goeffrey James of the Philadelphia Bulletin; there was Billy Taylor, who helped judge and award prizes at the Villanova Festival two years ago; there was Rev. O'Connor, who judged two years ago; there was Ira Gitler, former associate editor of DOWNBEAT, Jazzdom's most widely-read publication, who also judged last year; there was Bob Share, the Administrator of the Berklee School of Music, who did not like the avante-gard section (which made us feel good), and who has judged at the past three Villanova Festivals; there was producer George Wein, who sponsored one of the Villanova winners at last year's Newport fete; there was Dan Morgenstern, presently the Associate Editor of DOWNBEAT, who judged this year's festival.

And there was John Hammond, chief talent scout for Columbia Records, who judged at two of the past three Villanova fetes.

To watch these people milling around the backstage area, and to mill around with a hometown buddy (Jim Ryan, a three-year attendee of the Villanova Festival, our public relations advisor for this weekend), meeting jazz greats, was one of the greatest thrills of the weekend. A still greater thrill is to realize that it will all happen again next year.



Ed. note: Eddie Bride, class of '65, was the chairman of the Villanova Intercollegiate Jazz Festival for two years.

A Season of Classics & New York Tryouts Will Greet Philadelphia Theatre Crowd

by Joe Linsalata

Tryouts, classical plays, modern drama, and comedy will fill the Philadelphia theatrical bill this season. Among the plays scheduled for the local audiences are: XMAS IN LAS VEGAS, with Tom Ewell, Moliere's THE BOURGEOIS GENTLEMAN, at the Philadelphia Drama Guild, and THE LAST ANALYSIS by Saul Bellow at The Theatre of the Living Arts, now in its second season.

Philadelphia will welcome its third New York tryout of the 1965-1966 season, XMAS IN LAS VEGAS, on Friday, October 8 at the Forrest Theatre. Producer Fred Cole who has been identified with such hits as TWO FOR THE SEASON, THE MIRACLE WORKER and A THOUSAND CLOWNS, entertains high hopes for Jack Richardson's new comedy to enhance his record of Broadway hits.

Tom Ewell stars in the razzle-dazzle adventures of a Las Vegas family man with gambling aspirations. Ewell is better known for his portrayal opposite Marilyn Monroe in THE SEVEN YEAR ITCH and also in THE TUNNEL OF LOVE, A THURBER CARNIVAL and NEVER TOO LATE.

In XMAS IN LAS VEGAS he has the part of a compulsive gambler, hellbent on making a winning that will enable him to lavish on his wife, son and daughter all the luxuries of life that have hitherto been denied them. His escapades in the bonanza town are said to fill three acts with unending excitement and fun.

TECHNICAL CAST

Richardson, who also wrote GALLO VS HUMOR, the PRODIGAL, and LORENZO, has an able running mate in director George Sherman. Ralph Randolph who designed the scenery and lighting for FUNNY GIRL and ANY WEDNESDAY has done the same for XMAS IN LAS VEGAS.

The show will run for two weeks until October 23 with Wednesday and Saturday included on the agenda.

To celebrate its Tenth Anniversary Season, the Philadelphia Drama Guild is planning a schedule of four works by four of the world's greatest playwrights, Moliere, Shakespeare, George Bernard Shaw, and Sean O'Casey.

Starting off the season on October 14 will be Moliere's loud and rowdy burlesque of civilized society -- THE BOURGEOISGENTLEMAN. It will be presented nightly at 8:30 at the Playhouse, 1714 Delancey Street, with its last performance scheduled on October 23. Scheduled also are two matinees on October 16 and 23 at 2:30 p.m. Tickets and information can be obtained by calling LO 3-3137.

The rest of the season will be highlighted with: Shaw's ARMS AND THE MAN, December 16-23 O'Casey's SHADOW OF A GUNMAN, February 24 -- March 5; and Shakespeare's THE TAMING OF THE SHREW, May 5-14.

The opening play, Moliere's

witty satire about a rich bourgeois who aspires to the rank of gentleman, was first produced in 1671 and has been a favorite with the French and the rest of the world ever since. Even today, it remains an exceptional social satire which shows that our ideas of comedy are much the same today as they were three centuries ago.

A Russian classic, a Restoration farce, a modern French drama, a Swedish psychological drama and a new American play by a Pulitzer Prize winning novelist will make up the 5 play season for 1965-66 at Philadelphia's Theatre of the Living Arts.

Andre Gregory, Artistic Director for the city's own resident professional theatre announced the schedule this week, calling it "international in scope -- bringing the best in world drama to Philadelphia."

UNCLE VANYA by Anton Checkov will open the theatre's second season November 16 thru December 19. A new translation of the Russian classic is being prepared for this production by Alex Szogyi, already acclaimed for his translations of THE SEAGULL and

Richard Brindsley Sheridan's rarely seen Restoration farce, THE CRITIC, will play December 28 thru January 30, 1966. Gregory called the Sheridan play a "comic spectacle that is spectacularly comic."

POOR BITOS by contemporary French playwright Jean Anouilh will be the third production of the season, playing February 8 thru March 13. The psycho-sexual nature of the drive for power is examined by Anouilh in this theatrical tour de force which journeys from the 20th century into the French Revolution.

August Strindberg's classic psychological drama, MISS JULIE will be presented on a double bill March 22 to April 24. Curtain-raiser for the evening will be one of the Swedish playwright's theatre cameos, THE STRONGER.

Saul Bellow, Pulitzer Prize winning novelist and author of HERZOG, has turned his hand to playwriting with THE LAST ANALYSIS. The Philadelphia theatre will present the Bellow comedy May 3 to June 5. Gregory stated that "we're very excited about presenting a new American play and Bellow has given us a wildly comic gem."

Each production of the forthcoming season will run for 5 weeks to accommodate the increasing number of subscribers to the resident theatre. Gregory also stated that an expanded company of professional actors and technicians, plus a resident designer, will be added to the staff.

The Theatre of the Living Arts is offering a 20% reduction on subscriptions to the 5 play season. For information call WALnut 2-5727.

"Wildkittens" Look Tough

By Joe Marsh

In the midst of a football season in which the Wildcats have played the top team in the East, and still have to face a team which already has two Big Ten scalps on its rack, bright spots are difficult to find.

If Coach Bell has had time to look over his shoulder at this year's Frosh, though, a slight smile may have crossed his face.

The Frosh don't have a lot of men out for the team, but what they lack in numbers they make up in talent. You can detect a note of optimism in Coach Ed Michael's voice when he describes his team.

Next year's line will be greatly helped by the addition of 6'7", 275 lb. Richie Moore (sound familiar?) Moore is a quick, agile, three sport man from Cleveland, Ohio. Coach Michaels describes him as "very coachable" and intelligent. Moore is joined in the Frosh line by Frank Bogle, a very determined LaSalle High graduate. Wayne Wiggins and Bob Traylor round out an outstanding bunch.

The backfield is a "melting pot." The right half slot is filled by Kelly and Boal, "two good runners," according to Michaels. St. Francis High School in Brooklyn, a good provider to Wildcat teams is the Alma Mater of Zizzio the fullback.

Barry Werkheiser and J. Reishman, round out the running backs. The all important Quarterback position is filled very capably by Paul Sodowski and John Bkilja.

Coach Michaels is more than pleased with the extremities of the line. Mike Fox, Dave Hoen, George Martin, and Johnny Moss, make up one of the most promising group of ends in recent years.

The only true test of any team is, of course, a game. The Frosh will have ample opportunity to prove themselves. They open October 8, against traditional rival, West Chester. Bullis Prep., Army, and Navy complete the tough game schedule. The Service Academy teams always field six or seven teams and are usually tough.

Barring any serious injuries, the outlook is bright for future Wildcat varsities.

Villanova Ruggers Face Strong Teams In 'Rugged' Season

By Bernie Schaffer

Villanova's Rugby Team opened the fall edition of its schedule last Saturday losing to the Pittsburgh Rugby Club by the score of 17-0.

Plagued by inexperience, the V.U. Ruggers were unable to penetrate the well organized Pittsburgh defense which consisted of the star players from Carnegie Tech and the University of Pittsburgh.

This year's squad had to be completely revamped as most of last year's top players were lost through graduation. The captain of the 1965-66 team is Haller LaRue, a senior Geology Major who mans one of the forward spots. Much of Captain LaRue's support will come from vets Vic Sarkissian John Polacovic, Jim McCusker, Tom Priory, Don Campbell, Pete Concerua, Rich Crawford, Richie Ward, Joe Forms, and dependable Mike Kain.

Coach Francis Coughlin has high hopes to equal last years 9-9-2 record. This year's team lacks the height and weight of most of its opponents, and as a result depends upon speed and teamwork to battle the opposition.

One exception to the size problem is John Polacovic, a hulking monster who stands 6'3" and tips the scales at a firm 230. Anyone who fits this description and doesn't mind a little bit of body contact should consider this unique and exciting sport (no nurses considered.)

The schedule will get tougher before it gets easier. Villanova entertains the Philadelphia Rugby Club at home next Saturday afternoon. Then on Sunday they run head-on into the tough University of Virginia Squad on a neutral field in Philadelphia.

The schedule eases up later on when the 'Cats oppose the likes of Lehigh, Temple Medical, Penn, and the ever struggling but never quiet Hawks of City Line Avenue.

CANDIDATES FOR FROSH SWIMMING TEAM SHOULD INQUIRE AT POOL IN FIELD HOUSE BEFORE OCTOBER 15 FROM 10:30 TO 5.

'Brownie'

By Cliff Hagan

People naturally expect great things of a football player with the name Brown; particularly when he is an explosive fullback. Tom Brown, the Wildcats' Captain-elect and star workhorse, does great things. Perhaps the best way to describe Brownie is: speak softly and carry for big yardage. Two of his three touchdowns last year came on runs of 75 and 59 yards; his not-quite against Boston College covered 87 yards (one way). After fighting his way to a starting berth last year as a junior, he gobbled up 515 yards in 80 carries to lead the 'Cats with a 6.4 average. He also led the Villanova ground troops at B.C. last Saturday.

The husky, soft-spoken senior from Bishop McDevitt High School in Wyncote, Pa., is more than just a fine fullback ... he's a fine example of a college student. One of the main reasons he chose Villanova for his alma mater is the academic program. Tom is a Finance major, but also has strong interests in marketing and insurance. His future plans include a career in business with the possibility of coaching football in a Catholic school. Brownie likes all sports, but especially football and track. At McDevitt, Tom was a thinclad standout; he was State Catholic 440 champ (49.8) and Suburban Catholic champ in the 100 (10.5) and 220 (21.9) yard dashes. He wasn't scouted extensively for football in high school, but a recommendation by an opposing coach and a few looks at his game films gave Tom his big break. Villanova got its big break when Tom chose the Main Line campus over an interested Service academy. Apparently both are very satisfied.

The 5-9, 195 pounder has some rather diverse interests, ranging from fishing to reading current best-sellers, but his biggest concern is the Wildcat football team. Tom realizes his responsibility as Captain: "My feeling is that the Captain should be a liaison between the coach and the team. I feel I shouldn't have to be a cheerleader for the team -- they know the name of the game."

Brownie is also optimistic about the Main Liners' future -- he says that things will really start clicking after the 'Cats pick up some experience: "We'll be all right if we can start playing ball and stop beating ourselves with mistakes." The 21-year old Philadelphian is a firm believer in a close-knit team, and considers it part of his job as Captain to make it that way.

He did, however, give a hint of his feelings about next week's Washington State game: "Well, they play a real Big Time schedule and should be a real challenge. We're going to try a lot harder to beat them, particularly since they knocked off Iowa and Minnesota."

Eagles Blast 'Cats 28-0; McCarthy Stars For Boston

The Wildcats started their season a week too soon, or their record would be 1-1 instead of 0-2. The same team that looked so terrible dropping a 9-7 decision to Toledo came back and played a good, hard-nosed football game against a big, overpowering B.C. eleven.

A game which a week ago would have been good enough for victory, but which this week gained nothing but game experience for the rookies. As Coach Bell remarked leaving the locker room, "They were just too good for us."

The game played at B.C.'s Alumni Stadium before 22,500 rather partisan fans opened with the 'Cats winning the toss and electing to receive. As Mike O'Neil teed up the ball both teams stood jogging in place, at the moment more concerned with the butterflies than the 20 yards separating them. Tom Brown field the short kick and returned it to the V.U. 36.

Gerry Bellotti, starting in place of the injured Dave Connell, began a drive which sent crazy thoughts dancing through even the most die-hard B.C.er in the stadium. Behind good line contact the 'Cats marched down field with John Kolmer picking up the initial first down.

Now Bellotti and Brown took over, and aided by a third down pass interference call on Eagle halfback Hank Blaha, ran the revamped 'Cats to a third and one on the B.C. 24.

Bellotti handed off to Santomauro who shot through a gaping hole off left tackle, gambled on turning the corner, but was cut off and spilled for a two yard loss. Bellotti came right back with it, but this time the hole wasn't there and the Eagles took over on downs.

The Eagles behind quarterback Ed Foley, and a trio of hard-running sophs marched right back up field to the Wildcat 33. The teams exchanged punts, and the first quarter ended the same as it started.

One minute later B.C. led 15-0. Soph bulldozer Brendan McCarthy picked up a first down on the Villanova 40. On the next play Foley dropped back for his first pass attempt, spotted soph scooter Paul DellaVilla with three steps between him and the secondary, and couldn't have placed it better if he handed him the ball. DiMezza converted, and the Eagles led by 7.

Kolmer returned the kickoff to the Villanova 27. On first down Bellotti was trapped behind the line and really jolted, the ball squirted loose, and Bill Ladewig, who later suffered a broken leg, fell on it at the V.U. 15.

Foley sent McCarthy up the middle and the big fullback took her all the way in. Foley, a la '64, went with the quarterback option, turned the right corner, and B.C. suddenly had a 15 point lead.

Following the kickoff another exchange of punts left the Eagles in good field position on the Wildcat 27. DellaVilla went for 6, then McCarthy took over, and in four straight carries hammered his way to a first down on the 5 yard line.

Foley then, on a good fake, rode Brendan the Brute into the line, pivoted, and gave off to Della Villa who knifed through the right side for the touchdown. B.C. tried for two, but Foley's pass to DeLeonardis fell short.

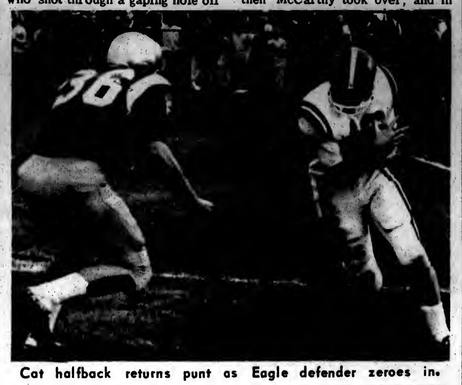
TD CALL-BACK

It was now time to toy with the fans. Tom Brown took the kickoff on the left sideline, headed laterally across field, turned the right corner, and sprinted 87 yards to paydirt.

However, the biggest thrill was soon the biggest disappointment as the referee picked up his flag, took a couple of chops at his right knee, and placed the ball down on the 17 yard line. The Wildcat's drive fell short, and the half ended with B.C. having the ball, and a 21 point edge.

It was all Eagles in the third quarter. They controlled the ball on a beautifully executed drive from their own ten to the Villanova two, where on first and goal the 15-play march was brought to an end by McCarthy's fumble. The 'Cats picked up a first, but no more, and were forced to punt.

B.C. came roaring right back, but failed to score as DiMezza blew a ten yard field goal attempt.



With the exception of a 50 yard pass, Bellotti to Schunke, the 'Cats were through for the afternoon. The Eagles were finally able to get some second half points on the board when halfway through the last quarter DeLeonardis scored on a five yard sweep, and the point after was good.

B.C. broke a school record for first downs with 28, and they owe most of it to Brendan McCarthy whose 168 yards on 34 carries enabled them to control the ball most of the afternoon.

On the bright side for the Wildcats was the fine offensive play of John Schunke who caught five passes for 111 yards, and had another taken away when he landed out of bounds after a leaping grab.

JOHN KOLMER CAN

By Joe Maffongelli

When coach Alex Bell found himself without the services of Dick Sernyak at the outset of the season, he immediately looked to John Kolmer to fill the vital left halfback spot. This shifty and powerful junior was one of the few bright spots in last year's one point loss to Boston College.

John came to the Main Line campus after a sterling high school career at Malvern Prep. His home is in Bala-Cynwyd. Being the "rookie" in an otherwise established backfield can be a trying experience, but Kolmer has certainly made the most of it. With running mate Joe Santomauro on the sideline he helped Tom Brown carry the bulk against a shocking Toledo club.

Before being racked up in the Boston catastrophe last year, John had been averaging 3.5 yards per carry, and had displayed tremendous ability both as a receiver and a blocker.

John has continued to do an outstanding job this season, and he is surely one more reason why the local fans should have more and more to cheer about with each succeeding game.

Intramural Football Begins As Sixty Teams Compete

By Bob McIntyre

The outlook for the Intramural Department this year is again a good one thanks to its fine administration. Last Wednesday began the official season of Intramurals at Villanova, with the opening of the Football leagues.

This year there are some sixty teams competing for the coveted crown symbolic of Intramural football supremacy at Villanova.

Last year's champ, the Chuggers, are back in strength and are out to prove last year was no fluke. Other title contenders could be the Misfits or the Eliminators but only time will tell who is the best overall. The games are played at 3:30 and 4:30, Monday through Friday on either Austin or Mendel field.

The Navy has its league games on Tuesday at Mendal field. The schedule for the Department thru October reads as follows: Cross Country-Oct. 7; Handball-Sept. 27; Swimming and Diving-Oct, 14; Golf-Oct. 21; and Foul Shooting-Oct.28.

The officers this year are Pres.-John Fenlon; Vice-Pres.- Mike Mulvey; Sec.-Jim Doubek; and Treas.-John Bergan, with the Head of the Department being Edward P. Geisz and his Assistants James M. Moran and John J. Lumsden. Any freshmen interested in being a staff member should contact Walt Wege in 345 Sheehan.

Sophs Defeat Frosh By Tally of 90-85 In Muff Day Events

As the Muff Day events began on September 20 with the sophomore nurses taking the softball game, it looked as if the day would run true to form with the sophs winners by a lopsided score.

Even after they had dropped the egg toss and the three legged race, the sophs were confident since the remaining events were the true tests of skill and strength. This confidence was visually shaken by triple upsets at the hands of the frosh in the passing and punting for distance and in the foul shooting.

Since the freshmen had now taken five in a row, the word began to spread that they were on their way to winning Muff Day. The next three events ran like a see-saw with the sophs taking volley ball, then being defeated by the frosh in the tug o' war and rallying to win the pushball contest.

It was clear now, with the freshmen leading 80-75, that the outcome would depend on the last event -- the football game. It was a hotly contested game, but the sophs came out on top to win the game and Muff Day by the unheard of score of 90-85.

As Tom Conway, sophomore class president, was to say later, "It was good to see the sophs come from behind to defeat the highly spirited freshmen." But it was obvious that he knew only too well how close the sophs had come to muffing Muff Day.

SILVER LININGS

By Charlie Haryslak

It was reported to be a clear and sunny day in Boston on Saturday, but none of the local weathermen said anything about the heavy cloud concentration that settled over the Wildcats at Alumni Stadium.

Yet a silver lining in the shape of end John Shunke occasionally gave the sparse Villanova cheering section something to cheer about. The 6-1, 200 pound junior from River Edge, N.J., pulled down five Wildcat passes for 111 yards. Shunke kept the Eagles' pass defense off-balance the entire contest as he showed some fine moves while running his patterns like a seamstress.

Lou Morda, a 6-0, 230 pound Junior from Paulsboro, N.J., had a long afternoon in the line-backer slot but made the best of it as he accounted for some timely and typical hard-hitting tackles.

Fred Levinski, a 6-0, 210 pound Soph from Baltimore, Md., teamed up with Morda to take care of the bulk of the tackles for the day. Levinski backboned his half of the line and helped to keep the B.C. running game pretty much controlled the second half.

Winston S. Churchill to Speak On European Politics at Forum

Winston S. Churchill, grandson of the late British Prime Minister, world famous journalist, and BBC personality will lecture on the "Changing Face of European Politics" at the Field House Monday at 8 p.m.

Churchill's reasons for lecturing on this subject could be traced to what might be called a continuation of the Churchillian commentary on the growth and changes of the old world political scene. The tradition, is a reliable and objective summary of what is happening and its probable repercussions.

Young Churchill follows in many respects the footsteps of his historically famous grandfather with his lecture series and journalism. In January of this year he launched his career as an author with publication of his first book, FIRST JOURNEY.

The book follows the route of his grandfathers Sir Winston and Lord Randolph, on their journeys through the Dark Continent. It is a diary of his 20,000 mile trek through Africa and the Middle East in which he visited over 40 countries.

In this publication the sojourners recount many of their memorable adventures from the actual witnessing of wars and revolutions, to the "hosting" of facinating individuals from politicians and Emperors to taxi drivers and Peace Corps workers. The author even had a crocodilemeat dinner with the late Dr. Albert Schweitzer.

Churchill's other undertakings also have the marks of success. With BBC, as a news commentator, he hosts his own show. In the field of journalism, he free-lances for both the LONDON EXPRESS and the WALL STREET JOURNAL.

Doctoral Program Initiated By Chemistry Department

by Barry Evangelist

The first doctoral program in the University's history has been established this year in the Chemistry Department. The program officially opened at the beginning of September with 15 graduate students being admitted.

To be eligible, a student must acquire a Bachelor's Degree in Chemistry from a college or university approved by the American Chemical Society or from a school with an adequate program.

A doctorate in Chemistry can be obtained through research in any one of the Chemical fields: General, Organic, Inorganic, Analytical, Physical, Biochemical or in a pertaining subfield.

Upon entering the program, a student is introduced to courses from each of the major fields of Chemistry. The following courses are required curriculum for the first year: Thermodynamics, Advanced Organic and Inorganic Chemistry, Atomic and Molecular Structure, Advanced Analytical Chemistry and Biochemistry. The remaining 2 to 3 years are spent on research and preparation of a dissertation after which time the knowledgeable student receives his Ph.D.

Dr. Bernard J. Downey, chairman of the program, has the duty to see that the standards of the program are always at a high level. He states:

"The Chemistry Doctoral Program is a breakthrough for Villanova. There is a greater need for more doctorates in industry than all the schools can put out. When Villanova obtained the new science building with its faculty and facilities, we then thought we were qualified to meet the needs. For a university to really be called a university, it must have a doctoral program."

In a related development the Pennsalt Chemicals Foundation has pledged $6,000 to Villanova University to support the university's new doctoral program in chemistry.

The money will be used to purchase a magnetic susceptibility balance. With this device, chemical samples can be weighed in the air and then in a uniform magnetic field generated about the sample by a strong electromagnet, from the difference in the two weights, the magnetic properties and electron structure of the sample can be determined.

The Pennsalt Chemicals Foundation was established by Pennsalt Chemicals Corporation in 1957 to handle more effectively the disbursement of Pennsalt's financial assistance to the many charitable, educational, scientific and other tax-exempt organizations.

Belle Masque Rehearsing 'A Man For All Seasons'

Belle Masque, Villanova's dramatic society, has been preparing for its fall production for several weeks.

Mike Sutherland, president of Belle Masque, announced Robert Bolt's award winning play "A MAN FOR ALL SEASONS." under the direction of Mr. Kenneth Resinski who is associated with the University Graduate Theater Department.

Lending itself to the particular time when England was negotiating the sharpest corner in its spiritual history A MAN FOR ALL SEASONS captures the integrity and vision with which Sir Thomas More handled an extremely human situation. The characters of the play include 100 other such notable historic persons as Cardinal Wolsey, Archbishop Crammer, Thomas Cromwell, Henry VIII and also a Common Man.

Four years ago "A MAN FOR ALL SEASONS" appeared on Broadway. Paul Schofield played Sir Thomas More, a saint, a scholar and Lord Chancellor of England.

The production will open on November 11 in the University Field House. It is the next feature of the University's Concert Series.

Playbox Opens Year With Three Act Play Satirizing Old West

The Villanova Playbox opens the 1965-1966 season on Friday, October 8 with James Rosenberg's THE DEATH AND LIFE OF SNEAKY FITCH. The three-act satiric view of the code of the Old West will play also October 9, 15, 16, 17, 22, 23, 24.

Richard Cavanaugh plays the "lily-livered, yellow-bellied, rotton-clean-through polecat" of the title who disgraces the revered code of western honor. Tom Hennessey, as the Singer, narrates in song the plight of the folk of Gopher Gulch as they try to rid themselves of Sneaky.

Lou Lembo appears as Rackham, the fastest gun in the West who, in his support of the code, keeps the undertaker, played by Paul Buckley, in business.

Edward Bell, Bernie De Koven and Howard Becker as the town sheriff, physician, and preacher try in their own ways to erase the blemish of Sneaky's cowardice. Sandra Salvana plays Maroon, the dance-hall girl who belongs to the hero of the hour, whoever he may be.

Also appearing are Carol Faul, Claire Ladd, Harry Guy, Jim Hicks and Ed Hagan as other good folk of the town.

Thomas F. Nevins, assistant professor in the Villanova Theatre Department, directed as well as designed the set for the production which takes place "once upon a time" in Gopher Gulch, "Out West."

Reservations may be made from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday at the Playbox or by calling LA 5-4600, ext. 454; student, group and subscription rates are available. Curtain is at 8:30 p.m.

SGA Mixer

A Student Government-sponsored Mixer will be held this Friday at 8 p.m. in the Field House.

The mixer will last until midnight with music by the "Critters". Portions of the proceeds will go to various charities, among them the Villanova Aid To Mexico Project.

Donation for the mixer is $1. All are invited.

St. Joseph's Bestows Degree On Fr. President Flaherty

by Bill McCloskey

The Very Rev. Joseph A. Flaherty, OSA, Villanova President, has been granted an honorary degree by St. Joseph's College.

The degree, conferrred on Sunday at the annual fall commencement, is a Doctorate of Human Letters. Father Flaherty also delivered the commencement address.

Seventy-five Bachelor degrees were awarded in addition to 19 masters.

Miss Genevieve Blatt, Pennsylvania Secretary of Internal Affairs was conferred a Doctorate of Civil Law.

Father Flaherty, president of Villanova since early summer, is a 1938 graduate of the City Line campus. His other degrees include a Ph.D. in English Philology from Harvard. He was head of the English Department at Merrimack College before coming to Villanova early in 1964.

In his speech, Father Flaherty reminded the graduates of their obligations as alumni and in particular their responsibilities as graduates of a private Catholic school.

"The day is fortunately gone," said Father President, "when the alumni association was simply a group of rah rah boys who thought a school's reputation is earned or lost in proportion to the number of wins and losses of its athletic teams."

Father Flaherty continued that it was his opinion "that if the private college is to maintain its status in the educational community it is going to need either direct or indirect aid (such as state scholarships) from government."

This was Father's way of expressing the "involvement" theme which was so prominent in last June's commencement addresses.

In addition to pointing out "religion as a human need is regaining recognition ... on campuses," Father Flaherty noted "there is a phenomenon of a constant increase in the number of laity on our faculties. And even in administration, formerly the most exclusive domain of clerics and religious, more and more influential positions are offered to laymen. "It is necessary therefore," said the Villanova President, "that there be an increasingly intimate dialogue and rapport between the ecclesiastical and lay worlds."

The commencement was held in Alumni Memorial Hall on the St. Joseph's campus.

Psychology Dept. Moves To Remodeled Tolentine

by Rick Berry

Two years of planning and construction culminated this September when the Psychology department moved into its new quarters. The old Tolentine Hall dormitory has been transformed into laboratories; offices and classrooms were all air conditioned and even wired for closed circuit television.

The closed circuit TV is completely separate from the campus WWVU-TV. It was installed as part of a National Science Foundation equipment grant. The department has its own cameras and receivers, and each classroom and lab is equipped with a cable outlet for the system. TV will be used primarily for close-up experiments and demonstrations to be shown to large groups. Programs can be pre-recorded on video tape.

Other new facilities include a calculator room and reading room for psychology majors. Visual and auditory labs have been installed, as well as a special group behavior lab. There is also a special room for keeping animals, and an electro-encephalagram room, electrically insulated for the sensitive machine.

A unique feature is found in the environmental control lab, where the temperature may be lowered to twenty-five degrees.

Dr. Albrecht, department chairman, says that the facilities reflect the department's emphasis on research on the undergraduate, graduate and faculty levels.

The large number of undergraduate labs make it possible for the psychology department to introduce laboratory procedure to juniors as an integral part of their curriculum, placing Villanova among the few schools that offer laboratory courses in psychology on the Junior level.

Three New Members Added To Political Science Dept.

Dr. Fritz Nova, chairman of the Political Science Department, has announced the addition of three members to the department this semester. Mr. Paul Ambrose, Dr. James Schremas, and Dr. Earnest Giglio.

Mr. Ambrose, a former member of the faculty of the University of Pennsylvania, will teach courses in Latin American Affairs and the Soviet Union. Dr. Schremas, who will specialize in Christian Political Theory, received his doctorate from the Catholic University of America.

Teaching Jurisprudence, State and Local Government, and Constitutional Law will be Dr. Giglio who has been on the faculties of Syracuse and Dickinson Universities.

Dr. Nova, Dr. Hartman, Dr. Schremas, Mr. Logue and Dr. Kangran, a recent recipient of a doctorate degree from Bryn Mawr, attended the five-day Annual Conference of the American Political Science Association in Washington D.C. on September 7 to 10.

Dr. Nova mentioned that due to department expansion, a new branch office at 144 Tolentine has been established. Dr. Malik and Dr. Khouri have offices there.

Chemistry Professor Completes Research At Kyoto University

Professor Kenneth F. O'Driscoll of the Department of Chemistry has recently returned from a sabbatical leave spent at the University of Kyoto. While in Japan Dr. O'Driscoll carried out theoretical studies of polymers with Doctor Seizo Okamura at the University of Kyoto's Department of Polymer Chemistry. In addition to his other work Doctor O'Driscoll lectured and wrote eight research papers.

Professors James J. Markham and Walter W. Zajac have taken sabbaticals for the academic year. Dr. Markham will do research on the latest analytical methods with Professor H. M. Irving at the Department of Chemistry of the University of Leeds, England. This work has been made possible by a Senior Post-doctoral Fellowship from the National Institute of Health.

Doctor Zajac will work with Professor Robert K. Brown at the department of Chemistry of the University of Alberta. They will do research similar to Doctor Zajac's work at Villanova on the synthesis of heterocylic compounds. Professor Zajac's research is financed by a Post-doctoral Fellowship by the University of Alberta.

Villanova History Club Goes Outside Classroom

The Villanova History Club held its first general meeting on September 23. At this time the new officers were presented to the members. They include Charles Purdy, President; Pat McManimon, Vice-President; Brian Dougherty, Secretary; Joe McCauley, Treasurer; and Pat Mahady, S.G.A. Representative.

Purdy asserted that the main purpose of the club was the "promotion and cultivation of History at Villanova beyond the limits of the classroom." This would be accomplished by a club-sponsored lecture series beginning in mid-October.

Professor Thomas J. Mentzer, Moderator, stated that this program would place the History Club among the foremost academic organizations on the campus. Plans also were inaugurated for the semester's social activities. A second important meeting will be held Thursday, October 7, at 10:30 a.m. All new members are cordially invited to this promotional meeting.

Senate Recommends Motions; Congress Meeting Tonight

by John Barrow

Four motions were recommended for passage at the second meeting of the Student Senate last Wednesday dealing with the freshmen representation to the SGA, tickets for athletic contests, a grievance committee for females, and an early posting of the exam schedule.

The hour-long meeting opened with President Frank Eck reporting on status of bills passed at the Congress meeting, and he also stated that, in the future, all vice-presidents' reports will be written, not oral, reports.

Under new business, the Senate unanimously recommended that all four freshmen representatives to the SGA be elected at one time, thus eliminating the need for a dual election. Also receiving a unanimous recommendation for passage was a motion calling for between one and five student tickets alloted to students for athletic contests.

A motion providing for the organization of a grievance committee for female students was recommended for passage after some debate not on the motion, but on the lack of a female to co-sponsor the bill.

The most spirited debate came on a bill requesting the Administration to post the final exam schedule for this semester by November 1. Again, heated debate centered on the question of limiting the bill to one semester, rather than the need for such a motion.

This motion was recommended for passage by the Senate, and it will be considered along with the other three motions at the Congress meeting to be held tonight in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall at 6:30.

CCD Expands Program With Lecture Series, Teaching Of Religion

This year the Confraternity of Christian Doctrine will execute a greatly expanded program of activities.

Inter-college C.C.D. affairs, social and otherwise, have been greatly accelerated by the formation of a cohesive inter-college council.

Another feature will be a continuation of last year's guest lecturer series. Last year's initial success featured a noted Biblical scholar.

As in past years the major activity of the C.C.D. will be conducting religion classes at Pennhurst, a state school for the mentally retarded. Classes are held every Tuesday afternoon and last for one hour. The entire program is conducted on a voluntary basis. All books and materials are provided, and absolutely no experience is necessary.

NEED FOR MEMBERSHIP

A major problem confronting the C.C.D. is the recruiting of new members to replace those who graduated in June. The gravity of this situation cannot be overemphasized. Virtually all of the active members were graduating seniors. The children at Pennhurst depend solely on Villanova for religious exposure of any sort.

No teaching experience is necessary. Anyone interested can contact either of the following: Dave Deal, WA 4-8430, or John Ruggeri, HO 5-9122; or drop a note in the C.C.D. office - 103 Corr Hall.

The C.C.D. meets every Tuesday at 2:30 p.m. in front of the Placement Office.

Young Democrats to Show 'Making Of A President'

The Villanova Young Democratic Club will show the film "THE MAKING OF THE PRESIDENT -- 1960" tomorrow at 7 p.m. in 207 Bartley Hall.

Adapted from Theodore H. White's Pulitizer Prize winning book, the film is divided into two parts. The first details the political activities of both Democrats and Republicans alike, ending as Senator John F. Kennedy and Vice-President Richard M. Nixon are nominated by their respective parties.

Following a 20-minute intermission, the battle for the presidency will be shown, chronicling the Presidential campaign, itself, and ending with the election of President Kennedy.

Tomorrow morning at 10:30, in a room on the second floor of Bartley Hall that was not announced in time for publication, an organization meeting will be held. All club members who filled in application blanks at the Club's first meeting are asked to attend, in addition to other interested students.

Posters will be up this week announcing the room location. Club plans for the future will be discussed.

A limited number of copies of President Kennedy's Inaugural address are on sale to the student body. Parchment copies are 50 cents, while others, printed on a heavier plastic material are one dollar.

Copies may be purchased from any of the club officers, Tom Bruderle, president, Mark McGovern, vice-president, Dick Menamin, secretary, Pat Mahady, treasurer, and Terry Mills, publicity director.

"THE MAKING OF THE PRESIDENT -- 1960" will provide a real insight into our political process.

In last week's VILLANOVAN it was reported that the film would be shown in Vasey Hall Auditorium but this soon proved to be in error. Instead the movie will be in 207 Bartley Hall beginning at 7 p.m.

The Villanova NROTC unit welcomes Commander Searle J. Barry, the new Executive Officer. He replaces Lt. Col. Thomas J. Johnston, USMC, who is presently stationed on Okinawa.

A 1944 Naval Academy graduate, the Commander saw action in the Pacific during the final years of World War II. After the war, Cdr. Barry attended and successfully completed Naval Flight School. During his career the Commander has flown seaplanes, jets and helicopters.

The Villanova NROTC unit is one of the three largest units in the country. Presently, 310 Villanovans are working towards a college degree and a Commission in the United States Navy or the United States Marine Corps. The unit is under the command of Capt. Marlin D. Clausner, USN.

Scholarly Cooperation

A library is usually thought of as a refuge from the world, a haven for scholars and students alike, and a place where the mentally hungry's appetite can be appeased.

Libraries, having common goals are labeled sister institutions. Common scholarly courtesy is the foundation of the profession. That is why it is so shocking to hear that students in legitimate academic quest were denied admission to neighboring institutions.

Rosemont and Villanova libraries honor each other's commitment to education by permitting students from sister schools to use the library's books.

Bryn Mawr, Haverford, and the University of Pennsylvania are sister institutions, and library cards are interchangable. But woe to the student from outside the magic circle. If a student from Villanova were to try to borrow a book from the Bryn Mawr Collection, he would find that he is rebuffed. But not only that, Villanova students are not permitted to do research work in their open stacks among the reference material. Penn allows students to do research work in its open stacks and Haverford will honor a letter of introduction from the Falvey Library. Bryn Mawr alone remains adamant in its position.

The VILLANOVAN believes that the time has come for an aggiornamento feeling among metropolitan libraries. Why could not an inter-library card be devised, for students on the dean's list -- for instance? Such an introduction might prevent academic frustration, inconvenience, and hostility, as well as furthering worthwhile contributions to research.

Such a card would be a boon to the scholar and student alike -- it might be his passport to the book which would be the measurable difference between a mediocre paper and a polished one.

And who would lose? Surely not the libraries, for a profitable, costless gesture is quiet public relations in action. A book is a passport to many lands. Are Villanovans to be treated as unwanted aliens?

ACADEMIC VICE-PRESIDENT

'Added Dimension'

by Bill Keane

"It's really an exhilarating experience to be on campus. I'm fascinated by it." These are the initial impressions of Villanova voiced by the new Vice-President for Academic Affairs, the Rev. John M. Driscoll, OSA.

Father Driscoll succeeds the Very Rev. Joseph A. Flaherty, newly-appointed President of Villanova. In his new position Father Driscoll is responsible for carrying out the functions involved in the administration of scholastic curricula.

A native of Philadelphia, Father Driscoll is a graduate of St. Thomas More High School. He then entered the Augustinian seminary, received a Bachelor of Arts degree from Villanova in 1948, and was ordained to the priesthood in 1951. He did his graduate work at Catholic University, where he received his doctorate in Philosophy.

From 1952 to 1956 Father taught high school in Washington, D.C. The following years he spent at Merrimack College in Andover, Massachusetts, where he served as instructor, Chaplain, and Vice-President. Prior to his Villanova appointment, Father was superior of the Augustinian community at the New England school.

Expressing a sincere enthusiasm for his new office, Father feels that his main task at the present time is to become knowledgeable in this particular office. He must become aware of the academic aspects of Villanova. Thus far he finds it very interesting.

Father Driscoll feels very strongly on federal aid to education. "Private education should get its share of the tax dollar. It will ultimately be up to you, the layman, to publicly express your feelings in the legislatures and elsewhere."

Rev. John M. Driscoll, OSA

Father Driscoll is acutely aware of the many problems facing modern Catholic education and is well-equipped to skillfully execute the office of Vice-President for Academic Affairs.

Deeply interested in the plight of the student, Father offered this sound advice to all Villanovans: "Villanova has something to offer in terms of an added dimension educationally, an insight into one's own nature. I think that the student should strive to grasp that added something that Villanova purports to give, the theological aspects, the Christian dimension."

Letters To The Editor

To the Editor:

I wish the administration would experiment on someone else! Television-taught classes are impossible and many sophomores are getting a pretty bad deal by having 6 credit hours of TV per week.

In theology it is a waste of manpower. One priest lectures on TV while another is in the class room. The general lecture on TV does not permit a detailed discussion which is supposed to follow; thus, the student only receives a general idea of apologetics.

In psychology it is almost impossible to take notes. Cards are previously prepared which the student must copy in an unfair amount of time. This year another new idea has been introduced - that of reading journal articles.

These should be discussed, not lectured on. Admitted, there are discussion periods, but many of us, because of conflicting classes cannot attend. Besides, these discussions should not be a matter of choice. Each student has a right to them.

In conclusion, TV is limiting the students' opportunity to learn, and is merely a time-saving advantage for the teacher. It also reduces the student to a number, encouraging factory education.

To the Editor:

I wish to commend Walter Baginsky for the fine article he wrote on the history and tradition of Villanova University. As an out-of-stater and a new student here, I knew little of Villanova's past. Your summary of Villanova's progress through years and of the University's bright outlook for the future was well written and interesting. Thank you for telling me about my University.

Miss Patricia Kelsh

To the Editor:

Your article (by Walter Baginsky) - "Tradition and Change ... Hallmarks of Villanova's History" - has some misinformation stated in it. So that these errors may not be continued year after year, I suggest that a corrective statement by yourself or by the VILLANOVAN be printed as soon as possible.

After all, the VILLANOVAN is looked upon always as the official school paper for the students, giving correct information for persons and affairs of Villanova. This suggestion is made in the spirit of aiding you and the VILLANOVAN to live up to this responsibility.

In column 4, page 5, you have written: "Up until 1904, Villanova had been a combined prep school and college." As a graduate of Villanova Prep, Class of '23, I think I am well qualified to tell you that Villanova Prep had its last graduation class in 1924. In the meantime, the Fall of 1921, Malvern Prep was taking over.

In column 5, page 5, you state: "With the addition of the north wing, construction of the stadium was completed. The stadium was dedicated to Leo Francis Goodreau, 'Scholar, Athlete, Gentleman,' who scored its inaugural touchdown and who died in his freshman year, 1928, ..."

A careful reading of VILLANOVA UNIVERSITY FOOTBALL, A STATISTICAL HISTORY will bring out the errors contained in these statements.

Page XXV states that October 8, 1927, is the date of the dedication of the new stadium (no north stands yet) and the playing of the first football game there against Lebanon Valley. It was then, as it is now, known as Villanova Stadium, or simply "the Stadium."

I suggest that you read very, very carefully page XXVII. This error has been handed down year by year in the VILLANOVAN since Leo's classmates tried to get the stadium named in his honor. I am not taking anything away from Leo because he never had this honor.

Page XXIX tells about the north stand used for the first time in September, 1929.

Page 76 of the football history proper tells us that Charley Gelbert, Lebanon Valley, scored the very first touchdown in the new stadium, October 8, 1927. The first Villanovan to score was Captain Paul Kuczo in the same game.

An examination of pages 225 and 226 will reveal that Goodreau was on the 1927 freshman squad which did not play at Villanova until November 11, 1927.

Congratulations upon an article otherwise very well done and most timely for the Freshman.

Can You Be Drafted?

by Joe Linsalata

Editor's note: The following article has been compiled from an interview with Edward Murray of the Selective Service Office at Villanova. Because of its length and pertinence it will be continued in next week's VILLANOVAN.

Each of you who are not veterans and have not yet taken steps to fulfill your armed service requirements, should be looking forward to a few years with Uncle Sam.

I doubt whether there are many of you who would shoot off a toe or take some other drastic measures to get that once-in-a-lifetime 4F classification. But, I know there are some who would claim a wife, dishearteningly go to graduate school, or perhaps even take a sojourn to Europe to avoid the barracks.

Today I heard of a great rumor that if undergraduates fail to have a 2.0 accumulative average at the end of this semester - in they go! I would like to state that at the present, anyway, this rumor is false.

STUDENTS & 2S

Today, as during the Korean conflict, students have been granted temporary deferments.

According to Edward Murray, an assistant professor of Economics in the College of Commerce and Finance, all "FULL TIME STUDENTS MAKING NORMAL PROGRESS TOWARD A DEGREE ARE ELIGIBLE FOR DEFERMENT FROM THE DRAFT."

To qualify this statement a bit further, it is important to note that a full time student is one who is working to complete his college degree in FOUR YEARS.

"THE SELECTIVE SERVICE SYSTEM'S REGULATIONS STATE THAT AN UNDERGRADUATE STUDENT IS ENTITLED TO FOUR YEARS TO COMPLETE A DEGREE PROGRAM." Mr. Murray stated that if it takes longer than four years to get a degree, then you are at the mercy of your draft board.

An example where problems could arise would be if you are several credits deficient to graduate at the end of four years. Could you obtain a deferment to continue an extra semester in order to graduate?

Usually you would be allowed to finish that extra semester provided that you are carrying a full load of credits according to university standards. At Villanova you need fourteen credits to qualify.

NORMAL PROGRESS

Another crucial point on deferments is, that the student must be making normal progress. This means that your CUMULATIVE AVERAGE MUST BE SUFFICIENT ENOUGH TO ADVANCE EACH YEAR IN ACCORDANCE WITH UNIVERSITY STANDARDS.

Any time you leave the university, be it from graduation, suspension for academic deficiencies, expulsion, or simply dropping out, the selective service office of the university is required to SEND NOTIFICATION TO YOUR LOCAL DRAFT BOARD. THIS HAPPENS WITHIN TEN DAYS OF YOUR DEPARTURE

GRADUATE SCHOOL

Any individual who is interested in obtaining a degree at a higher academic level can receive a deferment. Candidates for a Masters degree are alloted two years, law students receive three years while doctorate candidates are deferred for five years.

However, you must plan to ENTER GRADUATE SCHOOL THE SEPTEMBER AFTER YOUR GRADUATION. You must also be studying in a program that issues a degree in higher education which would discount any business training programs.

An issue to be remembered is that after graduation the draft boards always choose OLDEST MEN FIRST. Those who have had temporary deferments have priority over the younger draftable men.

Next week, I will discuss more specific types of deferments such as jobs, marriage, physical disabilities and European travel or education.

LITTLE MAN ON CAMPUS

By Matt Roche

This is an exchange column. That is why I've chosen the title of -30- for it: it is newspaper jargon for "fini," the end. The Villanovan office is the end of the line for over 300 newspapers across the nation -- from high schools and prep schools to colleges and universities.

But I don't mean to limit this column either to the tidbits contained in the tons of newsprint (e.g. King's College is building a new 12-story dorm, supposedly all within 96 days). The latest fads, fixtures and mania will receive their due attention, but occasional superfluous comment will seep and gush into the column.

This column may occasionally strike a serious note, deploring some current campus idiocy -- national or domestic. Sometimes a hopeful note may be struck, praising administration or clubs for some noteworthy achievement (e.g. Which administrator's light was burning far into the night in Tolentine Hall?).

This reporter does not profess to be an exponent of the Beat Generation, but he will pass on its current fads, popular collegiate reading fare and other worthwhile exports received by the pound.

From the Village to Vermont, from Norman, Okla. to Chapel Hill, N.C., news views and reviews will be coming into Villanova. So, be warned. Although this is the end of the line of news, it is the beginning of the pipe known as the V.U. grapevine. So for the beginning, this week -- this is -30-.

Why Am I Here?

By Matt Roche

It has always seemed to this writer that one of the fruits of a truly liberal education is the awakening of a sense of wonder.

For a sense of wonder is that marvellous thing that allows man to be in the world and yet separate from it. It is the insight that lets man see both the forest and the trees; it is the seventh sense that gives the philosopher the ability to see the man while being conscious of the humanity, and at the same time lets the psychologist see the humanity in the individual man.

G. K. Chesterton realized this fascinatingly fatal problem when he once wrote, "How can we contrive to be at once astonished at the world and yet at home in it?" It is the too rare student who has lost his early fascination with the beguiling world of learning, and instead has surrendered to the Medean scramble of the mark maze in which the rat with the best sense of patience receives the reward of The Mark at the end.

Is the old phrase "Ars artis gratia" now considered a pat cliche by the worldly sophisticate who is "above it all"? It is true that the magnetism of belles lettres requires a self-discipline, but isn't it worth it? In the words of a popular folk song. "Where have all the students gone, long time passing."

But it is time to raise the banner of that lost and forgotten soul who still remembers why he came to college -- No, it wasn't to join a fraternity, be B.M.O.C., football captain or club president.

Or, was it?

Belle Masque's History Spans 90 Years of Good Theatre

By Richie Hobdell

As the academic season opens again on Villanova's campus and a new season opens on Broadway, Villanova's own Belle Masque Drama Society begins its 91st theatrical season.

The 1870's dawned and the stage was set, a group of ambitious students initiated a new club -- The Dual Mask Club. Opening nights included the popular works of the day such as "DARK IS THE HOUR BEFORE DAWN" by Edmund Falemer in 1888.

The actual rising of the curtain for the Society occurred in 1896 when "JULIUS CAESAR" and "RICHLIEU" were presented at the Walnut Street Theatre. Melodramas and minstrel shows continued their popularity into the next century.

The curtain fell in 1910 for a brief interlude and rose in the Roaring Twenties with great emphasis on serious drama. Directed by Father John Burns the club progressed rapidly. During the Lenten seasons plays were presented at the Metropolitan Opera House in Philadelphia.

Now known as Belle Masque Drama Society, a burlesque of Shakespearean classics were performed. Beginning with 1934 a group of sketches and one-act plays were presented on and off campus. "THE GLORIOUS MARTYR" was the selection used for our participation in the Intercollegiate Dramatic Alliance contest.

With the advent of the war, many activities were called to a standstill on campus, among these the dramatic productions. In 1945, drama was reborn on campus in the spring semester.

Successfully directed and produced was the musical comedy "I WANT TO BE AN OFFICER." The following year saw a switch from musicals to an original play "UP IN CHARLEY'S ROOM."

Two years later three one-act plays were performed under direction of Fr. Krupa. Later in connection with Rosemont and Immaculata the full length production of G. K. Chesterton's "MAGIC" was enacted. "CYRANO DE BERGERAC" was performed at the beginning of a new decade.

ALPHA PSI OMEGA

In this new decade a new fraternity arose on campus -- Alpha Psi Omega, the National Honor Dramatic fraternity. In 1957 Mr. Richard Duprey stepped in and Victor Buono, Hollywood actor, starred in "BILLY BUDD."

In the succeeding years "STALAG 17" was one of the plays presented to a packed house. The following year, still under the directorship of Mr. Duprey, the theater in the round was inaugurated with the critique following the performance. In 1959 a Shakespearean comedy "THE TAMING OF THE SHREW" was presented.

The dawn of the 1960's continued with "TIME OF YOUR LIFE," "INHERIT THE WIND," and three one-act plays. The stage lights darkened at the end of last semester, ready to brighten for the fall production, Robert Bolt's award winning play of St. Thomas More "A MAN FOR ALL SEASON'S."

"After Six" Formal Wear For Sale or Hire

Theatre Review

By Joseph Linsalata

The Society Hill Playhouse at 507 S. 8th St., will begin its sixth season of operation tonight by presenting the works of two talented young American Playwrights to the Philadelphia audience. The double bill of DUTCHMAN by LeRoi Jones and CHAMBER MUSIC by Arthur Kopit, will play for six weeks through November 20. Performances are Wednesday through Saturday evenings at 8:30 p.m.

DUTCHMAN is the initial part of the bill, and is the first of the controversial Negro playwright's works to be seen locally. It is a stylized account of a subway episode involving a white girl and a Negro man. Since the success of this production, Jones has been represented in New York and California by THE TOILET and THE SLAVE.

UPCOMING PRODUCTIONS

Kopit's CHAMBER MUSIC is in the same avant-garde style as his OH, DAD, POOR DAD, MOMMA'S HUNG YOU IN THE CLOSET AND I'M FEELING SO SAD! CHAMBER MUSIC is a comedy which has a typical Kopit twist at the end. As the title suggests, the play forms a parallel with a musical composition. It was rewritten for production here after a preview in New York.

Scheduled for the remainder of the season are: WHAT'S HIS NAME, THE ANALYST?, an original script by Paul Aleiyunas, opening December 8, and Lorraine Hansberry's A Sign in Sidney Brustien's WINDOW December 29 which received vehement support by hundreds of theatre stars with their ads and personal appearances when the play was in New York last year, also WATERS OF BABYLON (February 23) written by one of England's finest playwrights, John Arden, and two original scripts by Philadelphia playwrights, MOMMA, LOOK AT BANG BANG! (April 13) by Frank Freda and THE DEATH OF COLUMBINE (May 14) by Walter Vail, will be presented.

STUDENT RATES

Prices for tickets are $2.00 and $2.50 for Wednesday and Thursday nights and $2.50, $3.00, and $3.50 for Friday and Saturday nights. Student rates are available for Wednesday and Thursday nights at $1.00 per person.

New Seminarians, Novices Come From Villanova Ranks

by Tom Krause

It's amazing that so few Villanovans enter the priesthood, the average student might say. But a minor revolution may be occurring, judging by the ex-Villanovans now in the Augustinian order.

Five former Villanova students professed simple vows in the Augustinian Order in New Hamburg, New York after completing the canonical novitate year and a day.

Arthur B. Chappell, OSA

They are: George McKeon, OSA, '64, of Trumbull, Conn.; Arthur B. Chappell, OSA, '64, of Rochester, N.Y.; Richard Ekmann, OSA, M.A. '65, of Avon, Ohio, Gerard F. Dobbin, OSA, of Staten Island, N. Y.; and John Brady, OSA, '60, of Washington, D.C.

What is a novitiate? Actually, this year and a day is spent in the quiet contemplation of the priestly life, a time for the youth to decide whether he is cut out for the life of sacrifice and devotion to God. Young men in New Hamburg are segregated from the distractions, noise, and activities of the outside world.

The VILLANOVAN asked some of these men what problems they encountered in the transition from the hustle and bustle of college to the quietude of life in the seminary.

Rich Ekmann answered: "It is necessary to keep your values on the right track." He felt that the values in the religious life must necessarily be higher than those of the layman's life. "Never keep your vocation to yourself," he also stated.

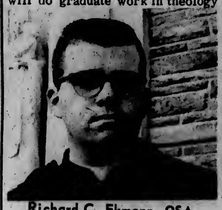
Seminarian McKeon, parliamentarian of the '64 Student Council, said, "Anyone who enters the priesthood should be in the proper frame of mind. He should not be over-protected."

Art Chappell, who was valedictorian of his class, was frank in his reply: "Giving up girls was difficult. But you have two goals which are seen as good, and you must set one higher than the other."

"When you are in college, you subconsciously plan your future -- everybody has a niche. A vocation will put you into that niche," stated Rich Harkins.



Somewhat unique is John Brady who spent three years as a Lieutenant in the Marine Corps before entering the Order. His answer was also different:

John R. Brady, OSA

"I found it to be a complete transition. There was a change from material to spiritual values. I had no trouble with confidence and I couldn't name a happier year in my life than the one in the novitiate."

These seminarians will now continue their ecclesiastical studies at Villanova. Once they receive their A.B. degree here, they will do graduate work in theology in Washington, D.C. for four more years.

Richard C. Ekmann, OSA

Aside from these new seminarians, five Villanova students, four juniors and one sophomore, received the White Habit of an Aug-

Latest Issue of 'Moderator' Focuses On Drug Addiction

by Bill McCloskey

"The gap between generations grows wider," so begins Sherman B. Chickering's "Publisher's Letter" in issue number nine of what has emerged as perhaps the best of all intercollegiate publications, MODERATOR.

The articles that follow seek to bridge that gap.

Delivered free to some 30,000 of "the top students in the country" the slick paper magazine discusses timely issues of interest to collegians.

The October issue, which crossed our desk this week, is the best in the two years that the Philadelphia based magazine has been published.

This edition's cover story is "The Question of Pot." In three well written essays, based on interviews and personal experience, Moderator seeks the whys and wherefores of campus drug usage (is it really addiction?)

While pot, stuff, et al. are not known to be a problem at Villanova it is well for the student here to be familiar with the problems his peers are facing.

"The real probelm" says writer Richard Goldstein, past editor of Hunter College's MERIDIAN, "is communication." It was Goldstein who faced the drug problem editorially when it rose on the Hunter campus last year.

An article on "Club Football" tells how students formed a football team at Fordham (which hadn't played intercollegiate football since Villanova defeated them in 1954.)

A mythical letter from Dean of Admission Harrison Wibble to the philanthropic father of a not-too-bright prospective student is a gem in illustrating the tactful handling of a recurring administrative problem.

BACK OF THE BOOK

Towards the back of the book a few more meaty items show up. Toby Ann Gordon, a pert recent Temple graduate reports on tutorial projects across the land, including the one so many Villanovans dedicate their time to.

Here we find another institutional ad (the best of the issue), sponsored by NEWSWEEK, apparently one of their great series of think pieces which show up from time to time (that was a poor pun) in NEWSWEEK.

The final articles are excellent. Larry McKinney, an enterprising enterpreneur from Harvard, who rents out surf boards (he makes $10,000 a year doing it) has his story told TIMEstyle.

Then, a look at careers in advertising, from the top (interview with the Chairman of the Board of Ted Bates & Company Advertising) and the bottom (through the eyes of a trainee). Followed by a look at trainee turnover, based on an article in the HARVARD BUSINESS REVIEW, the Careers section is well handled.

Spoofs on Television and MADEMOISELLE (the female version of ESQUIRE for those who don't look over their girlfriend's magazine rack) are pointed and in the best tradition of critical essays with a humorous bent.

Roy Mumme's discussion of hilarious talking planaria or flatworms should be required reading for all science students. Cartoons reminiscent of those captioned male-female symbolisms follow the article to loosen the reader up for Managing Editor, Marz Lono's well thought-out editorial on student protest.

EDITORIAL

Seeking "meaningful education" he talks of who should protest. Students should (they can't abandon their responsibilities). Administrators should (against bureaucratic red tape). Faculty should not (better they should have longer office hours).

While the inside work is incisive and often brilliant, the real "grabber" is the cover. Displaying all the needed paraphanalia for the use of minor drugs the cover scene, shot by Hugh Bell, is printed with a green overtone, which, the student reads, is how things look when one is under the influence of these so-called escapes. The cover makes the magazine complete.

Perhaps a budding Henry Luce, Sherm Chickering has a winner on his hands in this issue of MODERATOR, "the magazine money can't buy."

Those interested in receiving a copy of the publication should write MODERATOR, 115 South 37th St., Philadelphia, Pa. 19104.

Villanovans Enter Priesthood

ustinian Novice and have commenced their studies at the novitiate in New Hamburg.

They are: Bernard McKeon, '68, C & F, from San Antonio, Texas; Francis X. Bernard, '67, Eng.; Daniel McLaughlin, '67, Eng.; Martin J. McNally, '67, English; and William F. Painter, '67, Eng. Bernard, McLaughlin, and McNally all attended Monsignor Bonnor High School in Drexel Hill, Pa.

A sixth Villanovan, junior Jack Stagliano, entered the Augustinian Brotherhood during the summer. This little-known segment of the Augustinian Order is concerned mainly with teaching, although various jobs from gardening to cooking are open to the Augustinian Brother.

Presently in the seminary, there are 79 seminarians, 3 Brothers, and 10 Priests. The Very Rev. Henry Greenlee, OSA, Prior and pastor of St. Denis Church in Havertown, received the five white-robed students into the Good Counsel Novitiate in New Hamburg.

Fr. Greenlee was acting in the name of the Very Rev. James G. Sherman, OSA, the Provincial of the Villanova Province.

The white habits of the Augustinian novices contrast sharply with the black habits of the Villanova priests in the background. Seated in the foreground are from left to right: Francis X. Bernard, John F. McKeon, Martin McNally, William Painter, and Daniel McLaughlin, all novices. Standing in the back are Rev. George F. Riley, OSA, Rev. James T. Ryan, OSA, Rev. Michael J. Gallagher, OSA, Jack Stagliano, an Augustinian Brother, Rev. Marshall J. Halphen, OSA, and Rev. George P. Lawless, OSA.

Forget all you've seen and heard about '66 cars. Because Coronet is here . . . sharp, smart and sassy, the greatest thing from Dodge since Year One. Loaded with luxury the higher-priced cars haven't caught onto yet. With a choice of five engines, each one designed to make the walls of Dullsville come tumbling down. And with a whole slew of standard equipment that used to cost extra. Like an outside rear view mirror. A padded dash for extra safety. Variable-speed electric windshield wipers and washers. Backup lights. Turn signals. Seat belts, two front and two rear. And, as some extra frosting on the Coronet cake, a 5-year or 50,000-mile warranty.*

Enough said to get you really tempted? Now let's get away from the look-alike, drive-alike, first-cousin cars with Coronet, a car with a lively personality all its own.

Accounting Society Heads Expect Record Membership

The first meeting of the Accounting Society for the academic year, 1965-66, was held on Thursday, September 23. Welcoming its 103 new members were Mr. Clay, Moderator; George D'Ambrosio, President; Lew Wieczezynski, Vice-President; Frank Pavlica, Secretary; Bob Harter, Treasurer; Joe Overbaugh, SGA Representative. An outline of the Society's activities were announced and membership dues were collected.

The purpose of the society is to expose the members to the importance of forming oneself into a well rounded accounting major. The stress is on education in college and practical endeavors.

Speakers of interest are invited to the meetings and acquaint the members with the problems and advantages of their various professional fields. These speakers are professionals in their work and prove to be very informative. Many such instructive discussions are scheduled for the present year.

To facilitate the formation of a well rounded young man, the Accounting Society also sponsors teams in each of the intramural sports. On the social side, the members conduct a Dinner Dance as a climax to the academic year.

Membership applications will be taken at the next meeting on Thursday, October 7, at 10:30 a.m. in Room 110 Bartley Hall.

Vamp Project Successful Student Help Appreciated

Four Villanova students journeyed to the town of Ishuattan, Vera Cruz, Mexico this summer as part of the work of Villanova's Aid to Mexico Project.

The four, Karl Kottman, Marty McNally, Tom McMahon, and Mike Kielor purchased a car and started out on June 7. Arriving in Mexico two days later, they traveled the last few miles to Ishuattan by burro because the roads were impassable to autos.

Once settled, the VAMP volunteers started their work by teaching catechism and English to the Mexican people. In addition, they proved their physical abilities by helping to build a road through the town.

Fr. Michael J. Gallagher, OSA, moderator of VAMP, termed the trip a complete success and stated a desire to further help the Mexican people with future VAMP projects.

Castro Passes 'Hot Potato'

Fidel Castro is trying to pass a "hot potato" to the United States in his offer to allow some Cubans to leave the island for Miami, according to Mr. Daniel Rivas, Villanova Foreign Students Advisor (FSA), a Cuban.

On Friday, the Cuban Premier offered to give free air transportation to anti-Castro Cubans if the U.S. would pay landing and take-off costs. The offer, an expansion of another offer made last Tuesday, was reported in the official Cuban press. The Cubans would be flown to Miami.

In an interview broadcast on WIP, Philadelphia, Rivas pointed out an already crowded situation for exiles in Southern Florida.

"What Castro is trying to do is to pass this hot potato to the United States to see if the U.S. will actually go along with opening their gates generously to all these Cubans, or whether the U.S. is going to ask for some conditions," said Rivas.

On Sunday, President Johnson, speaking at the base of the Statue of Liberty, announced acceptance of the offer. Starting this Sunday, Castro is to supply two free airlines daily.

The President made the announcement as he signed the historic Immigration Bill into law in New York, a day prior to his meeting with Pope Paul VI.

Mr. Rivas still has relatives in Cuba.

Automation At WWVU Results In Schedules For Radio Engineers

John Lellis, Chief Scheduling Engineer for WWVU, the Radio Voice of Villanova University, is responsible for the inception of a new procedure for schedule making at the campus radio station. In order to draft the schedule assigning WWVU's engineers certain shifts during the time when the station is on the air (between 2 p.m. and midnight daily,) Lellis is using IBM punch cards. Each engineer volunteering his services fills out an IBM card which is subsequently fed into a computer. The computer tells Lellis whom to assign to what shift.

Station Manager, Bill McCloskey, had this to say about the use of the IBM cards: "This is another example of how WWVU staff members get the opportunity to use the skills they learn in class in a practical way even before they graduate. WWVU's engineers are to be congratulated for their intuition."

DAD VAIL EYED

Here Comes The Crew

By Lou Sonzogni

In the tradition of Penn, Cornell, and most of the Ivy League schools, plus Drexel, La Salle, and arch-rival St. Joseph's, Villanova's first Crew struggled through miserable weather, gruelling practice, and 6 a.m. workouts to a winning first season. This year the sport has ballooned from merely a Freshman boat to a full squad of Freshmen, Junior Varsity, and Varsity.

The Crew's first major recruiting meeting last week produced over 80 applicants who have been diligently arising at five every morning to learn the fine points of the sport. The only obstacle is transportation to and from the river for the resident students.

A small band of day-hops with cars have been ferrying these men back and forth, and any additional help in the form of prospective oarsmen is welcomed.

Head Coach Jack Galloway has said, "For a small school, Villanova has produced some of the best material I've seen on the river in years. The potential is here, and with a little determination and hard work we'll guarantee winners." (Galloway, an attorney, is submitting his services gratis, as is Freshman Coach John Parker, former Yale coxswain.)

Galloway, also Head Coach at Penn Athletic Club, has coached numerous national champions, and intends to work his Villanova boats on a similar, arduous training schedule. Until Thanksgiving, the coaches and experienced men will be teaching new members the finesse of rowing, while impregnating a running schedule of from three to five miles daily.

During the winter, Villanova oarsmen will follow a weight program, and upon commencement of the second semester, will attend a daily program of calisthenics in the gymnasium. As soon as the ice on the Schuylkill breaks, it's back to the river for the spring rowing that will, it is hoped, result in three Dad Vail champs.

The Dad Vail Regatta is the World Series for smaller rowing schools. The Freshman V.U. eight last year gained quite a bit of local publicity for having been the only Philadelphia Crew to win in the Vail.

Villanova Ruggers Split

By Don Campbell

An underdog, but aggressive Villanova Rugby Club startled the several hundred spectators who were on hand Saturday afternoon, by handing a heavily favored Philadelphia Rugby club, a 6-0 setback.

On their home field for the first time this season, the first 15 outhustled, out-tackled, and outplayed their supposedly superior visitors.

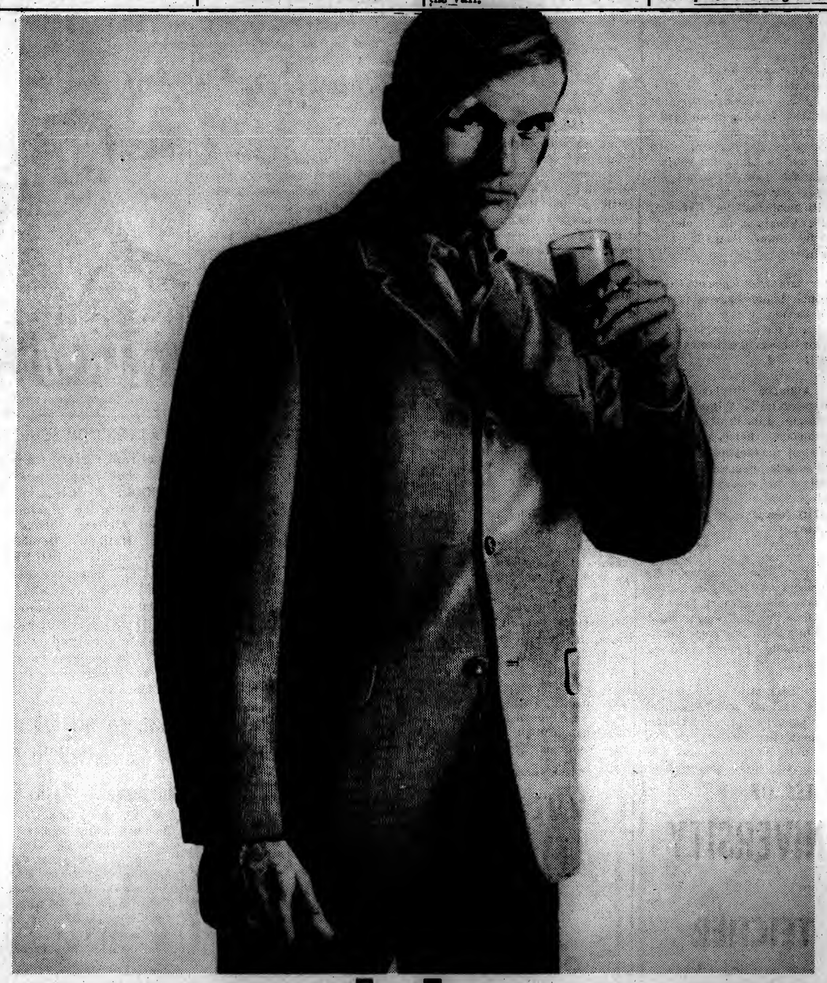
Villanova was given a slim chance after suffering a humiliating defeat last week at the hands of Pittsburgh. Coach Coghlan of the History Department made a few adjustments in his starting lineup and the team roared back with their first win.

Immediately after the opening kickoff it was obvious that the club was up for this long time rival.

Led by one of the better tacklers in the East, Rich Ward, and some quick play by John Thomas and Jim McCusker, the 'Cats kept the Philadelphia backs from moving the ball. The scrum, under the leadership of Don Donlon outplayed their heavier opponents throughout the game.

After some give and take on the visitors side of the midline marker, sophomore Rich Crawford broke the deadlock with a 40-yard penalty kick. The play was again stalemated through the half and during frequent interruptions for injuries, until back Pete Concerva broke through for the first goal of the year.

This gave V.U. their second three points and their biggest win since last spring's drubbing over Drew University.



VIRGINIA 6 -- VILLANOVA 3

Sunday presented the same story to the young Main Liners as again they were cast as underdogs. Any optimism that the result would be the same as the day before, was quickly wiped out, when Virginia scored in the opening minutes.

Virginia, using a well drilled passing and kicking attack, kept the 'Cats continually on the defense. Villanova's backfield, which was one of the biggest reasons for the victory the day before, was unable to get a good drive going.

Virginia scored again to make the score 6-0 before Rich Crawford put a remarkable 35-yard drop-kick through the uprights for Villanova's only score.

NOTES: Captain Haller La Rue has done a remarkable job of recruiting for this year's squad ... Vic Sarcission and Mike Kain were impressive in both games with their "guts" ball ... Senior Tom Priory broke his wrist last week and will be out for the rest of the season ... Spectators, many who saw the game for the first time, were enthusiastic in their support of the ruggers ... The game looks like non-stop football or soccer with tackling ... To this writer, who has seen hundreds of sporting events, this is one of the toughest and fastest moving games to date ... If you want to see something new in American collegiate sports, watch the team battle Lehigh next Saturday on the Rugby field (trans de stadium) ... The ruggers welcome all enthusiasm.

The corduroy is wide-wale that's deep-cut for extra rugged looks, plus extra softness to the touch. Quite a one-two combination punch. The tailoring is as traditional as the pre-fight handshake: natural shoulders, trimmed flapped pockets, 3-button front, lapped seams, leather buttons and a 9" center vent. The Fall intramural schedule is again in full tilt on Austin and Mendel fields with 51 teams vying for the garlands of victory.

The schedule is broken up into four leagues. There are games Monday through Friday at 3:20 and 4:30 on both fields.

Many of the teams are showing more continuity than in previous years judging from their initial tilts. Among these improved teams were several who have won their first games. LKD and the two Navy teams, Alpha and Charlie, impressed in the 3:20 Mendel league.

An off-campus team, the Commuters, could surprise in the 3:20 Austin league. Competition in the 4:30 Mendel league between the Solicitudes, DPE, and the Etceteras should be intense.

The 4:30 Austin league features last year's champions, the Chuggers, with strong challenges coming from DPM, the Misfits, and the Eliminators. The Chuggers are favored by many to repeat last year's showing.

The Intramural Cross Country Meet will be held October 7 at 3:30. The start and finish will be in the Stadium. Support Villanova's track tradition and participate.

The Intramural Swimming Meet will be held October 14 at 4 p.m. Enter now at the pool.

Where Have All The Flowers Gone?

By Aurel Villari

Over the past several years, some outstanding football players after making some unforgettable contributions to the fortunes of the Villanova eleven, have gone into the wars of professional football.

In 1962, for instance, a 250-lb. fullback by the name of Billy Joe went from Villanova to the Denver Broncos of the then newly-established American Football League. After bulldozing over opposing tacklers for four years at Villanova, helping the '1962 squad to a birth in the Liberty Bowl game with Oregon State, Billy went on to become the A.F.L. "Rookie of the Year."

Over the past three seasons Billy's play has been of such spirited quality as to let him easily retain his ranking of one of the top fullbacks in the league. After the '64 season, Billy was traded in a "man-for-man" deal to the A.F.L. Champion Buffalo Bills for another all-star fullback, "Cookie" Gilchrist.

The Bills are being counted on by most observers to repeat as A.F.L. champs, and the addition of Joe, slimmed down now to 235 pounds, certainly is not about to lessen their chances of retaining the title.

STERLING SQUAD

Larry Glueck was another member of the sterling 1962 squad who went on to participate in the Autumn wars of the pros. As a result of his consistently spirited hustle and drive at Villanova, Larry was tabbed as a high choice by the Chicago Bears of the National Football League.

After his fine play in the annual All-Star game in August of '62, the Bear coaches were convinced that Larry had the potential to fit perfectly into their defensive secondary -- the position usually rated as the hardest to fill. It was the consensus of the Bear brass that all a player with Larry's potential needed was a little experience in the pros.

Joining the Bears for the 1963 season, Larry received but little opportunity to see action, primarily due to the outstanding play that year of the starting Bear secondary. But as it turned out, Larry had been picked by the future-to-be 1963 N.F.L. champions.

In December of 1963 the Bears whipped the New York Giants for the title, 14-10. It just so happened that Larry, although he did not participate in the game, received approximately $6,000 as his share of the championship money--which isn't bad for sitting on a bench for three hours.

Gene Ceppitelli, the hustling center of the '62 squad, went on in his first year as a pro to become a member of the Canadian Football League champions, as Glueck did in the N.F.L.

SEMI-PRO BALL

Lou Retino, who with Billy Joe made up one of the most formidable fullback combinations in the nation, spent only a short period with the Green Bay Packers before he, not the Packers, decided that professional football wasn't for him. He later went on, along with Rich Richman and Bob Merenda, two other greats of the '62 eleven, to join the Newark Bears in semi-pro ball.

After last year's season Villanova once again endowed the pros with a banner crop of young men who all had the potential to become stars in the world of professional football.

Al Atkinson displayed such promise while at Villanova that the Buffalo Bills drafted him as their number 6 choice. Although Al excelled at the tackle spot at Villanova on both offense and defense, the Bills nevertheless pencilled him in for a position at linebacker, primarily because of his speed and agility.

But as so many top-flight Rookie's in the pros, the 6'2" 230-pounder was finally cut, by the Bills late this summer. The New York Jets, recognizing a good opportunity to pick up some much-needed talent, promptly grabbed Atkinson.

Al is currently a member of the Jet "suicide squad," gaining some valuable pro experience. Doubtless, the Jets are counting on Al to become a top-notch linebacker in the very near future.

Mike Strofolino was another star on last year's team, who solely by the excellence of his play in his senior year convinced the pro scouts of his potential. Drafted as a number 3 choice last year by the Los Angeles Rams, Strofolino, who expanded by the end of the season to a solid 250-pounds, was picked as a "natural" for a linebacker spot.

BOLD OFFER

"Strof," having stuck with the

Mike Strofolino

Rams for almost the entire length of the summer exhibition season, who thought his talents were not adequately appreciated, announced flatly to the Ram front office, "Play me or trade me." The Ram front office, annoyed by such brass in a rookie, promptly acted and put Strofolino on waivers -- but when three other teams quickly put in claims for Mike, the Rams promptly acted once again and withdrew the waivers. Mike, like Atkinson, is currently gaining his experience on the "suicide squad."

Tom Smith, 260-lb. tackle drafted while he was a junior by the Rams, and Bill Quigley, 225-lb. guard - linebacker drafted by the Pittsburgh Steelers, have, however, met with lesser immediate measures of success.

Early in training camp Quigley suffered a severe shoulder injury which necessitated his loss for the season to the Steelers. Smith, after being dealt to the Steelers by the Rams, decided that his family life was more important to him than professional football, and quit the team. His return to the pros is doubtful.

It seems that a few years will pass before Villanova may once again send into the ranks of professional football quite so many players of such quality.

Ken Herr Jim Frey Bill Livingood

Return Of The 'Catfish'

By Greg Peden

Bolstered by two returning All-Americans, the 1965-66 Cats Swimming team has a promising year in store. Captain Ray Donnelly, a 6'0", 165 pound senior from Waterbury, Connecticut, and Joe Panell, a junior from Newark, New Jersey could lead the team to one of the finest years in Cat-fish history.

Donnelly sprints the 100 and 150 yards and occasionally swims the butter-fly on the medley relay. Panell came into his own last year in a splash of sudden glory as a member of the freestyle relay.

The leading newcomer on the squad and a certain All-American candidate is Mike Fitzmaurice. "Fitz," from Greenwich, Connecticut smashed N.C.A.A. freshman records in both the 200 yd. freestyle and 200 yd. individual medley. He is a versatile performer and every event in which Coach Geinz utilizes his talents is sure to be crowned with the laurels of success.

Also back are Bill Livingood in the backstroke and Ken Herr in the breastroke. Both are veteran seniors and proven standouts on a medley relay team which placed fifth in last year's Eastern Championships.

The "sleeper" of the squad could prove to be John Hoffman. Originally from Ohio, John swam for the '62-63 frosh team and set school records in both the 100 and 200 yrd breastroke.

The next season, however, found him at Ohio State and consequently he lost a year of eligibility last season.

This year the schedule once again includes the most rugged teams in the East. On the slate for home meets are among others: Yale, the top team in the East, Maryland and Princeton; while the 'Cats will travel to both Army and Navy for encounters.

In making the announcement, WWVU Mgr., McCloskey thanked WDEL which has allowed WWVU to relay their broadcast to the Villanova campus through the Villanova station's facilities.

Sports Director Jack Moscardelli said, "Although this means added hours work for our personnel since the game is on a day we are not normally on the air, we are proud to join WDEL in rendering this service to our listeners."

WWVU will go on the air late Saturday afternoon with music and the trans-continental pickup will begin at 10:30 p.m.

This is the first away football contest ever covered by the student station. Bill Peiffer of the Villanova Football Network will handle play-by-play. All home games are heard on the station.

Gridders Prep For Big Test; Travel West To Meet Cougars

By Jim Johnston

Before this season started coach Bert Clark of Washington State was quoted as saying that his team lacked both the muscle and experience to have a .500 record this year.

Thus far the Cougars have knocked off two of the top Big Ten teams in Minnesota and Iowa, and lost a close 17-13 game to Idaho. It would appear that coach Clark's inexperienced ball players have matured into a fine, well balanced unit.

Although the Cougars have missed the presence of Clancy Williams, their leading ground gainer of a year ago, they have found that sophomore halfback Ted Gerela has been a more than adequate replacement. Two other halfbacks in Ammon McWashington and Huarleen Bain possess both the speed and moves to break into the open at any time.

A pair of capable quarterbacks including Tom Roth and Dave Petersen will be throwing to the

This is the team that the Villanova Wildcats will travel to Pullman, Washington to meet. After dropping their first two encounters, 9-7 to Toledo and 28-0 to Boston College, the prospects of pulling this game out are not bright.

However the 'Cats do have some things in their favor, including an idle week in which to prepare for the Cougars. The team has scrimmaged during the past week to keep their timing sharp.

CONNELL A POSSIBILITY

Those on the injured list have had an extra week to recover. This includes quarterback Dave Connell who was injured in the Toledo game and saw no action against Boston College. He has been working out this past week and should be ready for the game.

Chip Bender, with a shoulder separation and Larry Jones with an arm injury will probably not see action. However Bender's recovery has progressed and he should be back in action in the near future.

The backfield combination of Tom Brown, John Kolmer, Joe Santomauro, and Gerry Belliotti, which at times looked sharp against Boston College, will be physically ready for this week's encounter. Of course any backfield must depend on its line to give it running room.

It will be the forward wall which will face its greatest challenge of the year. Although outweighed by Boston College, the line showed ability in the second half.

BIG TEN COMPITITION

However Washington State's forward wall has had experience against Big Ten competition, and it will take a determined effort on the part of the 'Cats to contain the Cougar's running game and to open holes for Brown and company.

In the Boston game the 'Cats did find that they could move the ball through the air. Gerry Bellotti and Billy Andreiko both threw well, and Jack Shunke gave a fine performance catching five passes for 111 yards. The 'Cats could use this passing attack to advantage against the solid forward wall of Washington State.

The feeling among the players and coaches is that with the experience gained in the past two games, and the added week's practice that the 'Cats can and will give a good showing of themselves.

If the 'Cats put together their brief and sporadic moments of brilliance, they could pull off one of the biggest upsets of the grid season.

Sweet Smell Of Success

By John DiGennaro

Why doesn't the Big V go big time? Why don't you pet lions? Being an Eastern independent of neither major nor minor status makes scheduling a catch-as-catch-can proposition. How many other teams can go from the Mid-American Conference, to an Eastern power, then a Western power, swing back through the M.A.C., and on to a teachers' college and a service team?

Collegiate football in itself is big time, although in varying proportions. With our schedule we see both ends of the field. We ride the pendulum as it swings from Washington to West Chester, from the I to the T, from east to west, and we sample the different brands.

We've had our moments -- both good and bad. We've eaten some cookies, and choked on some crumbs; the only constant being the taste of victory. We've beaten Alabama, Arkansas, Clemson, Florida, Iowa State, Kansas, North Carolina State, San Francisco, and South Carolina more than they've beaten us. We also hold the edge over the Bryn Mawr A.C., the Conshohocken A.A., Hahnemann Medical, Muhlenberg, Oglethorpe, Philadelphia Dental, and St. Joe's.

On the contrary, we've suffered heavily at the hands of Army, Navy, Auburn, Baylor, Kentucky, Louisiana State, Miami, and Mississippi. The edge also belongs to the Atlantic City N.A.S., Carlisle, the Hill School, the Manhattan Beach C.G., and the Steelton Y.M.C.A.

What does all this prove? Something that Shakespeare said a long time ago -- What's in a name? That which we call a rose by any other name would smell as sweet."

The same holds true for victories.

Cross Country Squad Loses First Dual Meet In 7 Years To Penn St.

By Larry Justice

Villanova's cross country team, a perennial powerhouse, lost its first dual meet in seven years last Saturday to a well-balanced Penn State team 26-29.

Villanova Sophomore Charlie Messenger, a standout on last year's IC4A freshman championship team, came in first, covering the five-mile Belmont Plateau course in Fairmount Park in 27:53. Penn State's captain, Chuck Leuthold, finished right behind him clocked at 28:01 while Villanova's Ian Hamilton took third.

But from there the 'Cats could only manage sixth, ninth, and tenth places, thus enabling Penn State to hand them their first defeat after six straight undefeated seasons. It was the opening meet for both teams and the Wildcats, all sophomores except captain Noel Carroll, will have to exhibit a more balanced team effort if they are to regain their championship form.

It must be noted, however, that the sophomores have never run the five-mile varsity distance in competition before and their unfamiliarity with the longer race may have given Penn State a costly advantage.

On the brighter side, Villanova's Steve Gentry set a course record in winning the three-mile freshman event in 14:57 while leading his team to a 22-34 victory over State. Finishing just behind Gentry was teammate Tom Donnelly who managed the course in 15:02.

These fine runners, along with Irish import Frank Murray, form the nucleus of the freshman team which hopes to keep the IC4A freshman title at Villanova.

Maff's Musings

By Joe Maffongelli

Should a stranger have happened to walk through the area between Sullivan and Sheehan halls some two weeks ago he probably would have been amazed. On that Thursday night a large group of ardent Villanova fans happened to be congregated in the area better known as the "Quad," for the apparent purpose of a pep rally. Was this really a pep rally? Although no one can discern for sure, it does not seem as though team support was the true purpose for the demonstration. It so happened that just one week prior to the incident the stage had been set for an official rally. Now the fact that the attempt had been almost a total failure seemed to display a rather strong sense of apathy on the part of the students toward their club.

It must be a terrible thing for a group of athletes, who also double as students and classmates, to take the field on a Saturday afternoon feeling as though nobody cares. It is true that for the first time in some five years the 'Cats' won lost record is on the losing side of the ledger, but the old traditional standby "you can't win all the time" seems to best express the fact that the measure of success regarding ball games won is not always a true indication of the time and energy spent in preparation for the contests.

Surely if someone must be blamed for the way the record reads at the present time it is not necessarily the team. They are on the field each day carrying out their assignments and learning the same old plays. No, the blame must lie somewhere else. The student who figures he will not attend a game unless his team is the heavy favorite gives little to the school.

If such an attitude persists those in authority cannot be blamed for their reactions against spontaneous pep rallies. The true and loyal follower of a team will see it through its trials and tribulations as well as its successes and glories. Villanova is blessed with a great deal of young talent which could come of age at any time and the student body should be there to help celebrate the "birthday" when it occurs.

SGA Calls For Early Posting Of Exam Dates, More Tickets

by Tom Dabney

The student Government Association met last Wednesday night and made several important announcements, passed two motions and withdrew one pertaining to the female student population.

Frank Eck made the announcements that the SGA would take over the sale of hoagies, donuts, etc., as a means of treasury income. President Eck also noted that he had made some progress in his discussions with Father Gill on the possibility of residents not wearing coats and ties to the breakfast and lunch meals on Saturdays and that research into book-sales procedure was still in progress.

He commented on the successful outcome of the SGA intervention to aid the Band and announced that Band will be prepared to perform Homecoming halftime festivities as a result.

Robert Dean, senior A-S day-hop representative, was elected to fill the vacancy on the Student Senate. In lieu of the previous meeting's committee progress oral reports, all reports were written and attached to the minutes and business reports.

Only two motions were passed on the agenda of four. One was read and will be debated and voted upon at the next meeting pertaining to underclassmen elections and the other concerning liberalization of female social regulations was withdrawn on the basis of irrelevance.

The first motion passed called for the posting of the final exam schedule by November 1 to facilitate early travel arrangements for students going home for the holidays. The other motion dealt with the promulgation of a new ticket policy allowing students with matric cards to get more than one but less than five tickets.

The chief spokesman for the motion, Jeff Radovich, said that the Administration was only prepared however, to give a limit of

Tate Invites Area College Heads To Sit on Panel

The Very Rev. Joseph A. Flaherty, OSA, president of Villanova University, was one of the presidents of seven colleges and universities in the Philadelphia area to accept Mayor James H.J. Tate's invitation to help study problems of governing Philadelphia.

"It's a pretty amorphous thing right now," said Father Flaherty, "but we're perfectly willing to cooperate. What extent the faculty is involved will depend on how the work is set up." Father said that he thought that sociologists and economists would be among those faculty members sought for the project.

In issuing the invitation last week, the mayor called on the "best professional brains" in higher education to examine the city's revenue-raising system, its services and governmental structure, and to decide whether changes are needed.

Mayor Tate sought the help of the colleges and universities after Frederic A. Potts, board chairman of the Philadelphia National Bank asked for establishment of a panel of business leaders, economists and others to examine the city's fiscal year for 1966 and later.

The mayor rejected this idea saying that the college and university representatives would be "ideally equipped to bring all their intellectual resources to bear in an unbiased and objective way."

Other colleges and universities accepting the invitation are Temple University, University of Pennsylvania, La Salle, St. Joe's, Drexel, and Community College.

Library Hours Extended

Rev. Louis A. Rongione, OSA, University librarian, has announced that Sunday library hours will be extended from the present 2-5 p.m. to 1-6 p.m., beginning November 7.

The hours are being increased at the formal request of the Student Government Association.

Also on the team are two Washington members: Mr. P. Delker and Miss Lighbody.

An information booth is set up in Dougherty Hall where students can obtain information and applications forms.

Peace Corps tests will be given today, tomorrow and Friday at 3 and 7 p.m. in Vasey Hall Auditorium. The exam is non-competitive and open to all students.

A Peace Corps movie will also be shown every day in Vasey Hall at 5 p.m. A question and answer period will follow. Juniors and Seniors interested in the Peace Corps should take the exam.

Asked how he liked the Peace Corps, Mr. Silvester replied, "The Peace Corps was a wonderful experience. I would do it over again if I had the chance. Every Senior should consider it."

Former Faculty Member Donates Books to Library

by Walt Baginsky

Dr. Paul J. Fitzpatrick, former faculty member of Villanova's Commerce and Finance college, has donated to the Falvey Memorial Library well over 1200 books and pamphlets. Most items contain material in the fields of statistics and economics.

More specifically, a rare set of Ph.D. dissertations in Economics which he collected during his 38 years of teaching at Catholic University of America is included. Also, books and pamphlets on financial statements which he frequently used in his lectures at C.U. are included. Many of these books and pamphlets are out of print and rare.

After retiring in 1960, from a 38 year tenure as faculty member of the Catholic University of America, he joined the faculty of the School of Commerce and Finance, Villanova University, in September, 1960. He taught for two years here, 1960 - 1962, as a lecturer in Statistics.

Dr. Paul J. Fitzpatrick

He received a Master of Arts in accounting from Benajmin Franklin University in 1928, a Master of Arts degree in finance from George Washington University in 1929, and a Ph.D. degree from the Catholic University of America in 1931.

He served as Head of the Department of Economics of the Homecoming Weekend Features Dance, Ferrante & Teicher

Homecoming weekend, a traditional celebration welcoming the return of Villanova's Alumni, will take place Friday and Saturday, October 22 and 23.

A concert will be presented Saturday evening at 8:15 p.m. featuring the Rooftop Singers and the dual pianos of Ferrante and Teicher.

Homecoming Preview

This year's Homecoming weekend is primarily the function of the Senior Class. Vice-President Jim Morgan is the general chairman and those working with him are Greg Galland, Nick Basca Dance; John Barrow, football activities; and John Fenlon and Rick Berry, concert.

Tickets for the dance and the concert will be sold in both the Bartley Hall Cafeteria and the Pie Shoppe starting October 11. Sales were opened to seniors only on Monday and Tuesday. Tickets go on sale today for the rest of the student body.

Concert tickets will cost $3. and $3.50. The dance tickets are set at $2.50 in advance and $3 at the door.

Cecil B. Moore to Address Political Union Monday

Cecil B. Moore, president of the Philadelphia Chapter of the NAACP, will defend a Johnson Administration labor bill before the Villanova Political Union on Monday, October 18 in the east lounge of Dougherty Hall at 7:30 p.m.

The civil rights leader's address will trigger a student debate on the Johnson proposal that states be forbidden to pass so-called "right-to-work" laws, forbidding the union shop. The debate is open to the public.

While Moore's civil rights activities have covered a broad area he has led campaigns against alleged discrimination in certain labor unions. This action included demonstrations at the site of the new Philadelphia City office building in Reyburn Plaza just before the 1963 mayoralty election.

The right-to-work repealer is an exception to the general rule in Washington this year that Congress will give President Johnson whatever he wants. Led by Senator Dirkson of Illinois opponents of the repealer are mounting an effective campaign which will probably put the bill over to the 1966 session of this Congress.

They are defending Section 14-b of the 18-year old Taft-Hartley Act, the section which says that state legislatures can pass "right-to-work" laws.

In their October 4 debate, the first of the year, the union members heard Arlen Specter Republican candidate for District Attorney of Philadelphia call for a change in party rule in that city. In the vote at the end of the debate a substantial majority of the Union members present voted to support the resolution which Specter endorsed. The vote was 49-14 with 6 abstentions.

Marketing Society Opened To All Interested Students

Steve Kearney, president of the Marketing Society, announced that the Society has won its battle to open membership to the entire student body.

The original proposal for membership was advanced by the club's moderator. His proposal was that the club accept only selected members, based on their academic and extra-curricular background. It was his contention that the Marketing Society should be selective because it has rapidly become the best known club in Bartley Hall.

In as much as all other C&F clubs prepare men for careers which will be supported in large measure by Marketing, it was felt that the club should limit its membership.

Kearney pointed out that because the club conducts the most extensive guest speaker policy on the campus, it should be open to all interested students. He went on to point out that although all other major fields of study have similar clubs, it is Marketing which controls all phases of business activity from product inception to the point of consumption.

"All other fields of study serve to feed knowledge to the marketing man so that he can make the final business decision," Kearney told the VILLANOVAN. "Because of our essential place in the overall business scheme, I felt that it was essential that membership be open to all students."

When asked if he felt that this represented a victory for the club over its moderators, he replied, "No. There was never any question of victory or defeat. It was only a case of the officers and members of the club wanting to open membership to all qualified students. If we had not done so, we would have lost them to other groups, or, much worse, they would have avoided all such activities.

I feel that it is especially important to reach the freshman class as these are the students who will be here to gain the final rewards from the extensive planning that we have done."

He concluded by saying that he felt that although the new membership policy was a good one, there was a limit to the number of members to be accepted, with special preference for the few remaining places being given to the underclassmen. His main concern was that some students would not take advantage of the new membership policy.

If this were to happen, then the old closed door policy might be resumed and the club would be forced to accept no new members. Kearney said that interested students should consult the Bartley Hall bulletin boards for further information.

Five SGA Representatives To Attend ASG Convention

Five Villanova students, four seniors and one junior, will attend the Associated Student Governments of the USA Convention, starting tomorrow and lasting until Saturday at Purdue University in West Lafayette, Indiana.

Villanova's SGA is represented by David Banmiller, ASG representative; Franck Eck, SGA president; Brian Banmiller and Prentiss Yancey, SGA vice-presidents; and Brenden Brett, Junior Class representative.

ASG's facilitates student government activities and projects by offering a national convention to discuss pertinent topics without political, religious, or racial overtones. ASG also publishes a monthly news letter about student affairs and a student government reference manual.

Approximately 100 schools will attend the convention. Forums on topics in every area of student government will be held.

Villanova has been a member of this organization for two years. Last year Dave Banmiller represented the school at the convention in Oklahoma.

WWVU Forms Network With Penn and Drexel To Exchange Reports

WWVU, the Campus radio station has joined with college stations at Penn and Drexel to form a news network.

The first news exchange took place late last week with all three stations sending reports on campus happenings to the other members of the network.

The idea was first presented by WWVU station manager, Bill McCloskey.

Don Casey, campus news director for the Villanova station contacted the other stations and arranged a meeting. News Directors of the stations met at the studios of WXDT at Drexel. Arrangements were made at that time.

In addition to phone reports, the stations agreed to exchange tape recordings of speakers on campus. The reports from WXDT and Penn's WXPN will be heard throughout the broadcast day on the hourly news according to Casey. In turn Villanova student's reports will be heard on the other campus stations in their regular newscasts.

Tentative plans are to add WRTI at Temple to the network when they return to the air later in the scholastic year.

ICG Increases Membership; Coming Activities Planned

The Intercollegiate Conference on Government opened its new year with the election of Sam Cucinotta, '66, as chairman. Cucinotta, at the last meeting expressed pleasure at the overwhelming turnout and participation by the incoming Freshmen.

"This will definitely facilitate the active program planned for the I.C.G. Students are realizing the necessity of the organization for a polished knowledge of their political heredity," said Cucinotta. At present, membership has increased 100% over last year's quorum.

The I.C.G. which participates in a program including over 40 colleges and universities in Pennsylvania, is now in the process of rewriting its constitution in order to keep it up to date with the organization's needs.

Also on the present agenda the I.C.G. will be investigating the different proposals presented by its members in preparation for the Southeastern Regional Convention, held before the state-wide convention in April.

This year each member of the Villanova delegation will present a bill concerning the Pennsylvania Commonwealth. They may deal on all aspects of the State, from re-apportionment to state excise taxes.

Each member, who gets approval in a final vote by the I.C.G. convening as a body, will then have the opportunity to go to Harrisburg to defend his bill once again, but this time before over 600 delegates from Pennsylvania colleges participating in the I.C.G. program.

The culmination and goal of each member will be the survival of his original bill through a committee and the subsequent passage of it by the State Conference of the I.C.G., run under the auspices of Genevieve Blatt for the past 25 years.

During this preparation for the Harrisburg Convention, each member is acquainted with parliamentary procedure, governmental procedure (including a knowledge of "back room" politics), speaking ability and powers of persuasion.

"It is in these areas that the true benefits of the I.C.G., as an organization, can be found," says Mr. Cucinotta.

The next meeting of the I.C.G. will be in 106 Vasey Hall at 10:30 a.m., tomorrow. Cucinotta will report on the decisions reached at the first Southeastern Regional Executive Meeting of the I.C.G. at Rosemont.

The Southeastern Region consists of delegations originating from Temple, Rosemont, Immaculata, West Chester, Pennsylvania University, and Villanova. Anyone interested is invited to attend.

Faculty Wives Club

The Very Rev. Joseph A. Flaherty, OSA, president of Villanova, will be the principal speaker at the first meeting of the Villanova Faculty Wives' Club to be held tomorrow at 8:30 p.m. in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

Mrs. J. Walter Harrington, III, president of the Club, will conduct the meeting at which new members will be welcomed and plans for the year will be adumbrated.

PSE Seeking New Pledges; Meeting Set for Tomorrow

Pi Sigma Epsilon, National Professional Fraternity for students in Marketing, Economics, and other business and administrative sciences will accept new pledges until tomorrow morning, when they will hold their Pledging Organizational meeting in room 116, Bartley Hall.

PSE is the fastest growing fraternity on the campus. Its membership has more than quadrupled in the year and a half that it has been on campus. Villanovans are represented by the Alpha Zeta chapter, which held elections for new officers prior to beginning new fraternity activities.

Frank Fleming was elected president of the chapter. The unique business orientation of the fraternity is demonstrated in its corporate structure system, which includes two vice-presidents: Stephen Kearney, vice-president for Marketing and Charles Griffin, executive vice-president. Robert Kenin was chosen as treasurer and Joseph Kiel will serve as secretary.

Michael J. Farley, sergeant-at-arms, has announced that all pledges must register by tomorrow's meeting. He went on to point out that students from all divisions are welcome in the fraternity.

Eugene M. FitzMaurice announced that the fraternity would continue to conduct its regular professional meetings, in addition to featuring noted guest speakers from many fields. The chapter's executive coordinator went on to point out that a number of social gatherings will be held this year. He concluded by pointing out that Pi Sigma Epsilon is one of the two nationally affiliated fraternities on campus.

Pi Sigma Epsilon installed its new members in an initiation on Sunday, October 3. The 20 new members make the fraternity the largest on the Villanova campus.

(Ed. note: FitzMaurice's highly controversial article on the Villanova fraternity system has been reprinted in DOTTED LINES, Pi Sigma Epsilon's national magazine.

Prospective pledges who are interested in the fraternity may obtain copies of the informative, but admittedly pro-PSE, article from the fraternity.)

The advisability of chartering the organization with the National Committee at the present time was considered by the members. Arguments for and against this affiliation are now being studied.

In Memoriam

The VILLANOVAN wishes to offer its condolences to the family of the late Dr. James Bonder, a great football coach and a great man. As mentor of West Chester's gritty football teams, Dr. Bonder at all times exemplified the true spirit of sportsmanship. Gridiron records are only traces on mankind's blotter; Dr. Bender will stand out as a man long after his fame as a football coach dies.

When the Villanova Wildcats take the field against the Rams of West Chester, Coach Bonder's familiar figure will not be there. But his memory will be, and both teams can derive inspiration from his dedication to the game and to his ideals. Villanova's Homecoming will be tinged with sadness because of the passing of this distinguished rival.

SGA On The Move

A school's greatest enemy is stagnant leadership whether it be in the fields of administration, education or student government. Therefore, the VILLANOVAN welcomes the opportunity to praise a constructive, active course taken in this instance by our Student Government.

Today, five Villanovans - four seniors and one junior-are leaving for Purdue University in Indiana in order to attend the Annual Associate Student Governments Convention. This Convention will run for three days ending this Saturday and over 100 major colleges are expected to attend.

Many might make the assumption that this is going to be one wild time for all concerned, but the agenda of speeches and meetings at the Convention clearly indicates that evenings as well as days are to be taken up by conferences. The list of topics for discussion and presentation is large and dynamic in scope and potential.

The key issues which our Villanova delegates should concentrate on are: Course Evaluations, a possible Honor System, School Public Relations, avenues of contact with area high schools and improvements in our Student-Faculty Relationships. One issue which might be explored in depth would be the refinement of our present cheerleader program with a specific aim of expanding it in operation and quality.

There has been some contention over the amount of money being spent on this trip but it is our feeling that the projection of Villanova into national organizations and national prominence and at the same time the reaping of practical beneficial programs for use at Villanova more than justify this present trip and future affiliation with this national conference of colleges.

Villanova is looking forward to the return report from the delegates and we are sure that the delegates will keep the business side of the Conference above the pleasurable.

On Literature

. . . If by great authors the many are drawn up into unity, national character is fixed, a people speaks, the past and the future, the East and the West are brought into communication with each other—if such men are, in a word, the spokesmen and prophets of the human family, it will not answer to make light of literature or to neglect its study; . . .

Letters to the Editor

To The Editor:

In his letter of September 29, the President of the Young Democrats made the statement that the Young Republicans cater to the "reactionary fringe." Having often been labeled as such, it is with personal concern that I challenge his use of labels. It is a sad commentary on our society that those who advocate limited central government, individual liberty, and the sacredness of basic human rights, should be labeled REACTIONARY!

Indeed, have the Democrats brought us so close to Orwell's 1984 that to advocate freedom is to advocate something of the past?

From its beginning the American experiment has been one based on the concept of strictly limited government . . . the great virtue of our Republic has been the fact that it's primary goal as government is to provide the individual with the opportunity to chart his own course, to plan his own future, in short, to run his own life . . .

It is the Democrats who today advocate the centralization and concentration of power in Washington. It is the Democrats who today seek to control the lives of the citizens of this country through an innumerable variety of collectivist economic and social programs.

Whether these programs be in the form of medicare, rent and agriculture subsidy, or undefined FCC regulations, they are all designed to create and maintain a Big Brother situation, to perpetuate the type of paternalistic, all-knowing, all-powerful central government that we allegedly threw off in 1776!

Indeed, is it not, our Democratic brethren who are marching back into history? Mr. Bruderle, if there is anyone deserving of the title REACTIONARY, it is those DEMOCRATS, Old or Young, who are working so successfully to turn this Republic into the economic dictatorship of a welfare state.

William J. Clark, III
Chariman, Conservative Club

To The Editor:

After reading Tom Bruderle's Letter to the Editor in the last issue of the VILLANOVAN, I realized that he was absolutely correct in his observations on the campus Young Republican Club. In my high school days I was active in the Teen-Age Republican movement but expected to move on to bigger and better things in the college Young Republican Club.

What did I see at my first orientation conference but a Young Democrat pamphlet on my seat? What did I read about in the VILLANOVAN, Young Democrat meetings? Where the devil are the Young Republicans?

Remember we lost the last election; we are the minority party and can't afford to be cheesy in membership. The present officers and membership must decide whether they are conservative Republicans or Republican conservatives. If you choose the latter organize a William F. Buckley Fan Club and leave the Young Republicans to Republicans. If you don't decide soon and act on your decision then I will act.

Harry Williams 1969

Ed. Note: The following letter was written to the Rt. Rev. Msgr. Anthony L. Osthelmer, Ph. D., editor of the Philadelphia CATHOLIC STANDARD AND TIMES, by a VILLANOVAN reporter, Joseph Sassani, after seeing the ad in question in an edition of the paper. A similar letter was sent to the advertiser. When no reply was received from either the STANDARD or Mr. Brady, the VILLANOVAN decided to print its reporter's letter. With the ecumenical spirit of the Church at its highest ebb, per achial appeal such as this has no place in Catholic Journalism.

Dear Monsignor:

I am writing concerning an advertisement which appeared on page 5, of the August 27 edition, of the CATHOLIC STANDARD AND TIMES, for the Leo Brady furniture store.

I find this ad in bad taste, at best, in its statement that, "More Catholics buy from Leo Brady than any other furniture store in the Philadelphia area." This claim not only seems difficult to prove but also injects religion into the arena of common commerce.

Such an attempt to sell furniture simply on a religious basis is especially distressing in that it takes the Faith that I hold as sacred, founded by God Himself, and relegates it to the level of a common denominator among furniture buyers and a huckster for Mister Brady's wares . . . an idea which smacks of sacrilege.

The most shocking thing of all is that a Church which so often emphasizes the story of the money changers in the temple should allow its newspaper to publish such a commercialization of religion.

In this ad Mr. Brady says, "There must be a reason" why Catholics buy at his store. I would like to know what that reason is. Does he admit that he gives preferential treatment to Catholics; thereby, discriminating against other religions?

I, as a Catholic, no more desire privileges because of my Faith than I wish to be persecuted for it.

It is my belief that advertising, such as Mr. Brady's, which plays on religious or any other prejudice has no place in our society since it serves to perpetuate feelings of isolation which Americans of good faith are striving to eliminate. I trust that such advertising will no longer appear in as influential and respected a newspaper as the CATHOLIC STANDARD AND TIMES.

Respectfully
Joseph Sassani

'Status'

By Bill McCloskey

Cholly Knickerbocker of New York newspaper fame is no more. Now it's Suzy Knickerbocker who covers the Society scene (when papers are printing) in Gotham. But Cholly is back, on slick paper with color pictures and all the other things publishers go overboard on in their first issues.

Cholly, of course, was really Igor Cassini, and he was canned from metropolitan newspaper when the U.S. government started bugging him about some ties with the Trujilio regime in the Dominican Republic which he hadn't told the Feds about. He was doing some public relations work, Uncle Sam said that made him a foreign agent . . . and so on.

His new vehicle is STATUS a 75¢ an issue 100 page offering obviously aimed at high society and those who think they are on the way up.

Salvador Dali painted the cover . . . that's not bad for a staff artist.

Art Buchwald submitted a column, he's a good staff satirist.

James Baldwin is represented by a short story and that's ok for a first edition.

"We want to talk directly to our readers pleasing or irking them, we must catch their interest, amusement, or anger so as to create a true dialogue between writer and reader", says Cassini in "Collage" his brief introductory column. They weren't talking to this reader.

Aim Unclear

What is STATUS going to be like every month? Well, apparently it won't be like last month's and according to the internal promotion page Cassini himself isn't even sure.

You've got to admit, any magazine with the brass to call itself STATUS has got be something just the other side of the line.

A cursory reading of the first edition makes you feel it's aimed at the same people who read the NEW YORKER, with the exception of those not on the middle to upper rungs of the social ladder. Social climbers are acceptable though, since they must know all of the "camp" sayings, places and goings on.

One article informs us "The Main Line" (that's the noisy trains that run behind the campus) is more fashionable now than Rittenhouse Square in Philadelphia. "The Square had its day in 1905, says STATUS. Those who've been near that landmark recently should be able to see why.

The principal offering in this edition, is "Who is the American Woman." Rona Jaffe says the American woman is unromantic, William Goyen says she is romantic.

Graham Greene's "The Overnight Bag" is a short, short story which adds another top literary name to the masthead.

"Faith, Hope and the Charity Ball", is a spoof on Charity Balls (obviously) and the whole idea of charity being an excellent excuse for a society show off session.

The rest of the magazine, this issue, is turned over to an impressive group of advertisers, some good photographic work and the standard "in crowd" features on travel and what to do in The Big City, plus a few little funnies.

From this first issue we THINK the magazine is aimed at both men and women, even though the majority of the advertisements are aimed at the fair sex.

Just how many will plunk down their $7 yearly to have this STATUS symbol sit on the coffee table at their house parties is unclear. However, there seems little other reason to invest that amount unless you are really in the chips and want to read an expensive version of almost any other magazine of its sort.

Prognosis: poor.

Time to Live: 15 issues, maybe.

'Sneaky Fitch' Falls Short; Play More Of A Burlesque

by Joe Linsalata

James Rosenberg's THE LIFE AND DEATH OF SNEAKY FITCH opened amid the blaze of gun fire Friday night to inaugurate the 1966 season at the Villanova Playbox. Between the clearings of gun smoke I viewed a play that was enjoyable but it fell far short of an outstanding play in the American theatre.

The play is a satire on the mythical legends of the Western frontier towns. Envisioned on the stage are all the stock characters of a Western TV series; a town doctor, a "courageous" sheriff, a salacious bar room trollop, a preacher, and the town's fastest gunman. Added to these are some gabby old wives and a few extra townsfolk.

But what makes this town of Gopher Gulch different from a normal frontier town is Sneaky Fitch, the town's drunk, "a low-down, lousy rotten son of a . . ."

Sneaky does nothing heroic as most frontiersmen are thought to have done. The most heroic thing he does is to destroy the "code" of the West. He's too "yeller" to draw his rusty old gun and fend himself. He would much rather turn his back and say "I'd rather not."

The play evolves from the efforts of the townspeople to rid themselves of this major tourist distraction -- Sneaky. He obliges them by supposedly dying but then unexpectantly he comes back to life. Their belief in his immortality allows him to seige control of the town and rule it with a tyrannical hand.

LOW COMEDY

The production of the play is probably as good as the script could allow it to be. Mr. Rosenberg attempted to write a satire on the old West. However, his play in this production goes far below a witty satire and turns into a low form of comedy or burlesque. It could be said to be a parody of television's Gunsmoke in script, but it turns out in production to be a spoof of the old west.

I feel that the major reason why the satire fails is from the neglect of real people on stage. Instead of being people with genuine emotions, most of the characters on stage excel as caricatures. Rackham - the quickest gun, the undertaker, the preacher, the trollop, and most of the other characters appear as exaggerated distortions of character traits.

The theme in the play is completely deflated. However, this alone can lead to good satire. But by adding caricatures to the already ridiculous plot, everything is deflated to such an extent that the whole idea seems farcical.

The use of caricatures whether intended or not by the director, Thomas Nevins, seems to enhance the comic elements of the play while it detracts completely from the satirical value of the play.

CAVANAUGH CREDIBLE

Dick Cavanaugh in the title role created possibly the only credible character in the show. He seemed extremely comfortable in the dual-natured part evoking both laughs and sentiment as a drunkard and and then as the ruthless mayor.

Rosenberg adopted the stage manager from Thorton Wilder's OUR TOWN by presenting a narrator to retell his spoof. Dressed in cowboy boots and singing with his guitar, Tom Fennessey gives the role and the play a friendly touch.

A Journey To The Pope In New York

By Jim Brennan and Bob Elschner

It was a cold, windy day last Monday that greeted the Pope on his arrival from Rome. But the adverse weather conditions were easily overshadowed by the warm hearts of millions who lined the streets of New York to welcome Pope Paul. This fact can be verified by the two VILLANOVAN editors who covered Pope Paul's historic trip to the United States.

Though we had not made any previous plans to attend the activities, we decided at 11:30 on Monday morning that we might never again have a chance to see the leader of our faith in person; so, we left for New York via car and arrived in midtown Manhattan at 2:30 p.m.

By the time we reached New York, the pope's motorcade from the airport had already reached Saint Patrick's Cathedral where he addressed a large crowd and the Waldorf Astoria Hotel where he met with President Johnson. After his stop at the Waldorf Pope Paul returned to the residence of Francis Cardinal Spellman.

We checked an itinerary of the Pope's travels and found that he would be leaving the Cardinal's residence at approximately 3:15 for the United Nations. We decided to take up positions across the street from a side entrance to the Waldorf on 50 Street between Lexington and Park Avenue, for he was scheduled to take this route to the U.N.

After about twenty minutes of standing behind the police barricade, we noticed some activity at the Waldorf's entrance. A black limousine had been parked there and the police began to chain off the side walk. A few minutes elapsed and then Cardinal Richard Cushing, Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy, Senator Robert Kennedy and his wife and Senator Ted Kennedy and his wife emerged from the Waldorf, entered the car and drove off.

Approximately twenty minutes later, a police motorcycle escort roared by followed by official cars carrying security men and radio, television, and newspaper representatives. The black Lincoln Continental with the glass bubble top then came into sight.

Seated in the back was his Holiness clad in white robe with a white skull cap; next to him was Cardinal Spellman in the traditional red of a cardinal. As the car went by the Pope acknowledged the shouts and cheers of the crowd by raising his two hands, palms upward.

After this brief glimpse of the Pope had ended, we were determined to attend the Papal mass at Yankee stadium.

We realized that it would be impossible to get near the Pope at the United Nations, so we joined about 150 other people at a Sylvania television showroom on Lexington Avenue. The television people were very generous and didn't seem to mind everybody sprawled over their rugs.

The only anti-Pope feeling that we observed all day occurred at this time. A young man shabbily dressed came into the store, took one look at the Pope on T.V. and said "Ah! you Christians."

With the hope of securing tickets to the Mass, our next stop was at Yankee Stadium. Both of us have attended Yankee ball games but the crowd at the stadium was like a riot on the Pike multiplied twenty times. For once the ever-present scalpers were not to be found and the possibility of getting tickets was dim. We tried to talk our way in at one gate, but this failed, so we thought we would try and get press passes at the executive offices of the stadium, but this met with no success.

Fifteen minutes before the Mass was to start a limousine pulled in front of the executive offices and a man started to hand out unused tickets. This almost caused a riot, and a police officer quickly took the tickets into his possession and refused to give any away. After things quieted down, we approached the officer, explained our circumstances to him and received two tickets.

The stadium had been transformed into a cathedral. Here where great athletes drew cheers and jeers now were heard the reverent cries of long live the Pope. As we looked out on the field, a huge altar stood surrounded by flowers of white and yellow, the papal colors. When the Pope began mass, the entire stadium became silent except for the response to the prayers.

At the end of the mass, the Pope blessed the assembly and walked to the four sides of the altar with his palms upward acknowledging the deafening roar. As he left the stadium some spectators waved handkerchiefs or rosary beads, while others reached for his hand.

Though this unique day was both historic and joyful, we left considering the seriousness of the Pope's plea--peace or perish.

College Editor Calls For Legal Marijuana

Ann Arbor, Mich., (UPI) Oct. 9

A senior editor of the University of Michigan student newspaper called today for legalizing the sale and use of Marijuana in the United States.

Two UM students were arrested by federal agents earlier this week on narcotics charges involving marijuana. Susan J. Briggs, 18, daughter of a UM professor, and Mike McClatchey, 18, son of a UM employe, face a hearing on the charges October 14.

Jeffrey Goodman of Milwaukee, Wis., a senior editor of the Michigan Daily, said that making legal the use of Marijuana would "eventually cause a decline in the high incidence of alcoholism" and bring about a decrease in "Narcotics abuse" among teenagers.

'You're On Your Own, Pal'

by Barry Evangelist

An interesting innovation this fall at Lake Forest College is a program in which 24 freshmen won't have to attend classes and won't receive any grades for four years.

These students won't be barred from any classes but if they feel they can learn more on their own they are welcome to do so. This experiment, the idea of Dr. William Graham Cole, is also being conducted at Allegheny College in Meadville, Pa. and Colorado College in Colorado Springs.

INDEPENDENT ACTIVITY

Tests indicated that these freshmen were especially capable of independent activity, though not necessarily the smartest students. At the beginning of the academic year, students in the special program were told what they would be held responsible for in their various subjects.

The students will not be without guidance. This comes from faculty advisers called preceptors who will counsel the students.

The students are required to take a comprehensive examination in general education. If they do not pass this test they can take it again at the end of each year, for this examination is one of the requirements for graduation.

COMPREHENSIVE

The students will have to demonstrate proficiency in math and foreign language, and pass the general comprehensive exam in social sciences, natural sciences, and the humanities in order to graduate. Also they will have to pass another comprehensive in their fourth year in their major subject as well as submit an acceptable thesis in that field.

An important feature of the unusual program is that the faculty at Lake Forest will not determine if the Lake Forest student graduates. This task will be left to faculty members of the other colleges in the program, who will review the students' written work and examinations.

How to Avoid the Draft

By Joseph Linsalata

Editor's note: In last week's VILLANOVAN, reporter Linsalata discussed the possibility of students' being drafted. Graduate schools, law schools, and other modes of deferment were mentioned. Most of the material in this article was gathered from Mr. Edward Murray of the Selective Service Office of Villanova.

In August, President Johnson announced that a massive increase of man power would be required as a result of the Viet Nam conflict. Most of the increase will be coming from the drafting of young men between the ages of 19 and 26 years of age.

These draftees have a two-year obligation to the Army (the Navy has recently asked for 4800 draftees.)

The most eligible draftees are recent college graduates. Soon, you, as a potential graduate, will be high on the local draft boards list.

Do you want to go ...?

If you still want to be patriotic and at the same time, remain a civilian, you can receive a deferment if you qualify in one of the categories below.

MARRIAGE -- AN OUT?

President Kennedy had given deferments from the draft to all married men. President Johnson's call to arms in August overruled this deferment by stating that all married men without children were eligible for service.

As of now this ruling has not been put into effect. However, Mr. Edward Murray of the Selective Service Office of Villanova has stated that married men without children will be inducted into the service around December or January.

The major qualifying issue in a marriage deferment is that there be a child. Previously this was not needed.

Drew Pearson mentioned in his column that when news of this qualification reached certain red-blooded American males, they immediately claimed paternity to some recently-born illegitimate children. A speedy wedding with the female companions and the young men were free of the draft.

DEFERRED JOBS

Any position one holds which the draft board feels is in the best interest of the nation's health, safety or welfare is eligible for deferment. Those positions include those people working in science, engineering, mathematics or teaching level in an accredited educational institution.

PHYSICAL DEFERMENTS

Some hopeful males feel that they have certain physical deficiencies which would warrant them a 4-F clasification. How would one go about having this ailment confirmed?

You will have to wait until your induction physical. There is no way that you can be offically examined until your notification comes from your local board.

According to statistics from 1964 your chances of passing the physical are about 50%. Last year, 847,511 men were examined and of them only 47% were accepted into service.

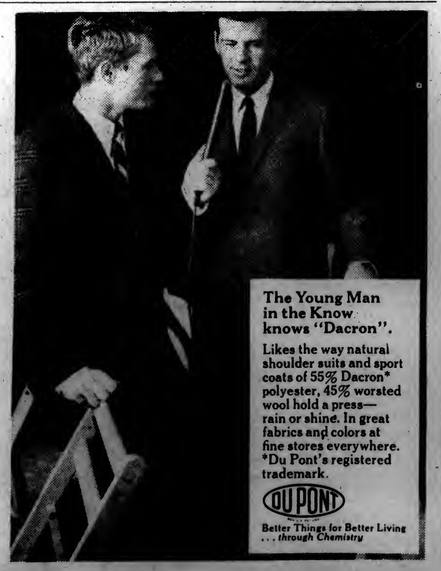
For those with confidence in their disabilities there is a way to find out immediately if you are eligible. Volunteer for immediate induction in the Army. Get your physical the same day that you sign up.

If your physical disability is serious enough you will be rejected from active duty and "home free." But if your ailment isn't as serious as you thought... it's the Army life for three years.

Perhaps you could call the game "Russian Roulette."

WORTHY COMMENTS

In conclusion Mr. Murray made a few comments which should be taken seriously.



He first stated that every type of deferment is awarded at the discretion of your local draft board in respect to their ability to fulfill their required quota. Thus, each draft board might vary somewhat in specific requests for deferments.

It is important to remember that these deferments are not rights of individuals but are privileges bestowed upon these individuals for your own good and also that of the nation.

The most important advice that Mr. Murray could offer a student is to avoid, if possible, an interruption of your four continuous years of undergraduate work. The Selective Service is going to allow students to finish their education if they can do so in the allocated amount of time.

Any student who has questions concerning his own present or future classification can have them answered by Mr. Murray in the Selective Service Office in 102 Corr Hall.

SHULTON

The Story of Leo Goodreau

By Bill Nott
Spirit Committee

Over the years, Villanova University has produced many fine young Catholic men who have gone on to make their mark in the world. Villanova is rich in worthwhile memories of truly outstanding individuals who have given their best to the school and have received much more in return. One of the finest of these memories is the story of a man whose name is fast becoming a legend, that is, the story of Leo J. Goodreau.

To most of us, Leo Goodreau is little more than a name to be seen at the entrance to the stadium or a dedication to be found in the VILLANOVAN each week. But to those who knew him and were a part of his life, Leo Goodreau was in every respect a scholar, an athlete, and most of all, a gentleman.

When Leo entered Villanova in the fall of 1927, many great things were expected of him. In high school he had been an All-New England interscholastic quarterback, and he immediately became a prominent member of the freshman football squad. Noted for his hard, fast, clean, and agressive play, he was already being groomed for the starting post at quarterback on the varsity the next fall.

WINNING SEASON

The freshman team enjoyed a winning season under Leo's leadership. He consistently played a rough brand of ball, and his combination of spirit and ability forced frosh Coach Callaghan to keep him in every game as much as possible. Only when he was knocked unconscious in the Beckley game did he leave for more than a few moments.

The fall of 1927 marked a new era in Villanova football. The new "Villanova" or "Main-Line" Stadium was opened after three months of hurried preparations. Leo marched with the student body in the pregame festivities that rainy day in early October, as the Wildcats celebrated opening day with a 32-7 triumph over Lebanon Valley. Little did he know that his fate was to be decided on that very same field within the short period of a year.

Leo became a vital part of the Class of 1931 during the remainder of his freshman year. He was instrumental in conducting the freshman dance in the spring of 1928. Under his leadership and determination the dance became the most successful in the history of the class. In recognition of his hard work, the class elected him to the position of Secretary for the coming year.

SCHOOL SPIRIT

While still a freshman, he joined the Epsilon Phi Theta Fraternity and was distrubed to find that it had not met in over a year. Largely through his efforts, it was revived and soon became one of the most active organizations on campus. The subsequent rejuvenation of the other frats caused school spirit to flourish as it never had before. Leo had shown that a lack of spirit had no place on the Villanova campus.

As a catcher on the freshman baseball team, Leo played well enough for his coach, Charles A. McGeehan, to predict that he easily had a major league career before him if he wanted it. Leo Goodreau was truly a great all around athlete.

Despite this unusually heavy schedule, Leo maintained a scholastic average that placed him in the upper half of his class. His coach, Harry Stuhldreher, figured on him as potential All-American on the gridiron and a shining light in the Villanova football picture. It was a sure thing. But he was never given the chance to show his All-American calibre to the rest of the sports world, for the Lord had other and far greater plans for Leo J. Goodreau.

On the field Leo never gave up digging. and ironically this hustle cost him his life. He played hard, and perhaps on that brisk September afternoon he tried too hard. As a sophomore, he was calling offensive plays in a varsity-frosh scrimmage preparing for the opening game against Loyola. The frosh lined up, determined to prove their worth against a larger and more experienced varsity. As the ball was snapped to the halfback, Leo "a demon at both leading interference and carrying the ball," according to contemporary sports articles, sprang forward to clear a path. The frosh line charged, and the two teams piled up. It was Leo Goodreau's last play.

When the players unpiled, Leo was lying on the ground, face down on the truf. A fellow player attempted to assist him to his feet, but the injured boy shrieked with pain. His back had been brutally broken.

FIGHT FOR LIFE

He was given no chance of survival by the specialists called in on the case. Paralysis set in, and although suffering greatly, he remained conscious and rational most of the time. His back was broken all right, but his spirit was hardly dented. No longer was he fighting for his school, he was fighting for his life. He refused to give up. He insisted on hearing all the football scores that grim Saturday; his wish was not denied. He assured everyone that some day he would be back in the Villanova "line-up." This was not to be.

When it was recognized that he was not going to pull through, there was talk of postponing the entire football schedule, but Leo would have nothing to do with this idea. He movingly complained that it was not only unfair to the team which had worked so hard for so long, but even unfair to himself.

It is merely an anti-climax to state that the Villanova football team, inspired by this tough plucky youth swept on to an undefeated season, crushing all opposition.

Leo fought the inevitable for four days, but the struggle was too much against too terrific odds. He confided to Coach Stuhldreher, "I've given the best that is in me, I'm tired out, I can't hold out much longer." Death was near. He was given the Last Rites and soon lapsed into a coma. While in this coma, he began to call football signals and continued until early Tuesday afternoon, October 2, 1928, the spark of life in Leo Goodreau flickered out.

TRUE VILLANOVAN

Father O'Leary who was present at the time of the death had this description: "It was a beautiful but sad scene. Outside were teammates and classmates, and inside priests and doctors. To the last Leo maintained that same staunchness of heart which marked him on the football field."

At the funeral in Villanova's College Chapel, the casket was carried by his former teammates. The entire student body was present at the Solemn High funeral Mass.

On Wednesday of Junior Week, 1930, the Class of 1931 dedicated a bronze plaque as an everlasting memorial to their beloved classmate, Leo Goodreau. This was their final tribute of a true Villanovan. Surely this spirit of Leo J. Goodreau is an ever present inspiration to higher standards of sportsmanship and duty.

Leo Goodreau, the man who has become a legend, is seen in an old newspaper photo on the left. The plaque is at the entrance to the Stadium, and it has this inscription: In Memoriam: Leo Francis Goodreau: Scholar-Athlete-Gentleman: To One Who Gave His Life for Villanova College—Dedicated By His Affectionate Classmates. The Stadium, itself, is not dedicated to Leo Goodreau.

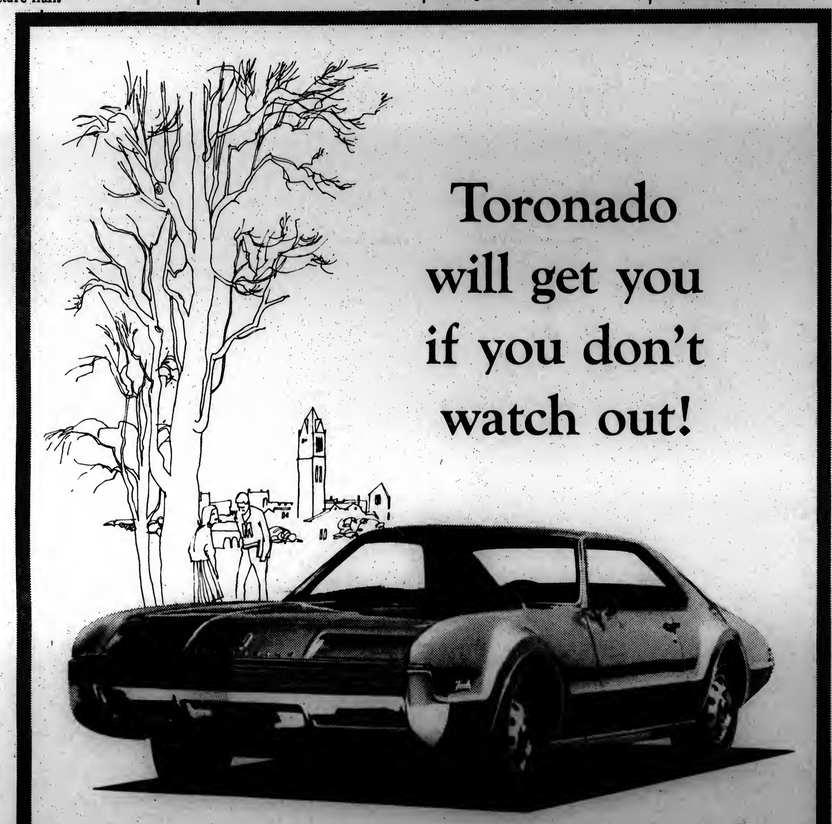
He was countered immediately by several students notably Jim Griffin and Pat Mahady, on the basis that to accept the compromise would be a contradiction of the SGA's purpose.



The arguments stated that according to a poll of students on the matter 89% were in favor of the policy and that a compromise would be unfair.

FIVE YEAR PLAN

An Approach To Superiority At Villanova

By Nick Rongione

For all who are concerned about Villanova as an academic community, this essay is intended. To these administrators, faculty members, and students, one question should be presented: How can Villanova move from its current position as an average or good institution of higher learning to one of superior merit?

With my five year plan, an idea of an approach to superiority, I think that our school will take a fundamental and necessary step in that direction. The outline of the program is as follows:

First of all, grant a raise of $1000 to every faculty member. Also, double the yearly increment to the salaries of all faculty members who have their Doctorate Degree or who have begun working on it.

This measure is fundamental, necessary, and based on the principle that students need guidance. The author readily admits that there are some excellent teachers with Masters' Degrees; but the fact remains that if a man possesses a Doctorate he should be able to give more and better guidance than a man with a Master's. So, let the odds fall in favor of the student and seek, by financial means, to keep and obtain as many Ph.D's as possible.

Secondly, accept for admission no student who has less than a combined score of 1050 on his college boards.

To paraphrase McGeorge Bundy, formerly a Dean at Harvard; this measure is based on the principle that the most important thing an undergraduate comes in contact with are his fellow undergrads. While I admit that SAT scores are not the whole story, I also wish to emphasize that they tell a large part of it.

In the third place, the administration should launch a three-pronged attack upon the library in order to: (a) build a library extension; (b) double the number of personnel working to get books on the shelf circulated; and (c) expand the number of hours in which the library is open.

Everyone realizes the need for a larger library; perhaps one large enough to facilitate open stack privileges for all students. Everyone also will agree that many more volumes are necessary and that the library should be open for longer periods of time - especially on weekends.

It should be noted, of course, that if there is more room and if there are more and better books in the library, then more students will want to be in the place for longer periods of time. After all, the library is the core of the University and nothing should be too good for it.

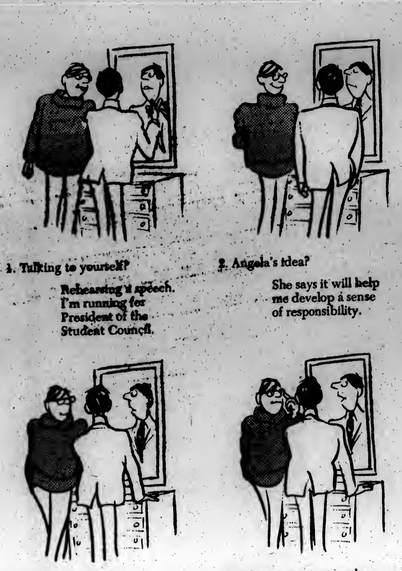
These first three items are basic. Once they are effected, we will possess competent faculty members who can communicate effectively with intellectually curious and zealous students.

This dialogue will take place in an excellent library.

In short, we will have established a truly academic milieu in which we can spend four years. This atmosphere, this truth-seeking community can be much improved on Villanova's campus.

In addition, there are a number of other measures which would strengthen this Five Year Plan. Fourthly, a dormitory for graduate students should be erected and placed in a strategic position on the campus.

By strategic position, it is meant a place where graduate students, undergraduates, and faculty members are easily accessible to each other. They should be easily accessible for frequent intellectual interchange, so that faculty, undergrads, and grad students may share intellectual experiences and seek after the significant.



Fifth, there should be a forthright effort made to better the ratio of faculty members to students.

Presently, there are approximately 4300 undergraduate students and 350 faculty members. This means for every 12 students there is one faculty member. If the academic community is to function effectively, there should be a ratio of no more than nine or ten to one. Indeed, an excellent ratio for Villanova would be 4000 students and 500 faculty members.

The Sixth point in this Plan is:

Every department on campus should continue to strive to improve itself academically so that it can grant the Doctorate.

I'm not advocating that Villanova become primarily a Graduate School. However, if a department has all the requirements necessary for a Doctoral Program, then even the Freshmen taking courses in that department would receive a better education.

The Adventures Of Symbol Simon

By Mike Soroko

Late for an 8:30 French class the other morning, I was speeding down Lancaster Avenue when I ran into a distinguished-looking, elderly hitchhiker.

"Sorry about that, sir," I apologized, wiping a tread mark from the front of his shirt.

"That's perfectly all right, young man. No fault of yours. Just another symbol of my useless existence."

Still, I was feeling sort of guilty about the whole thing, so I offered him a ride as far as Villanova. He accepted.

"This is a fine-looking new car you have here," said my companion, pointing to my fine-looking new car. "You know, just by looking at this car I can tell not only why you bought it, but what kind of person you really are. You bought this car because this car is you."

"Not really. I bought this car because I got a little bit big for a bicycle. Besides, how can this car be me? I don't have a bucket seat."

Personality Symbol

"No, no, (He sounded slightly annoyed.) The car's not really you, but it is a symbol of your personality. It's an external expression of your internal feelings about yourself. Now just take these bucket seats and that floor-shift lever there..."

"Better not," I advised. "They're not paid for yet."

Apparently he didn't hear me, for he kept right on. "... do you know what those are? They are a releasing of your subconscious Freudian desires!" He leaned back with a triumphant glare. I was still unimpressed.

"Listen, fella. Maybe those bucket seats are releasing my subconscious desires, but they're also sure cramping my conscious desires. You ever try going to a drive-in and sitting on one of those steel consoles with a gear-shift on it? Puts the hurt on you after a while. If that's a symbol of anything, it's a symbol of the Berlin Wall, is what it is."

Listen Friend

I could see that he was really getting angry now, but he was determined to give it one more try.

"Listen, mein friend," he said. (It was here that I first started to get worried.) "Look. Can you tell me what these are?"

"Sure I can. They're seat belts. Any idiot can see that."

"Wrong, wrong. You're all wrong." He was tearing at his hair now. "Those are the laws and traditions of society, keeping you from the fulfillment of your secret desires."

"I get it now," I figured I might as well humor the old nut. "Those cigarette butts in my ashtray are a symbol of my burned-out desires in the cavern of my mind, right?"

"That's it! That's it! You've got it now. Now stop the car and give me your wallet."

"Hey, that's a good one," I said, getting the hang of the game at last. "What's that symbolize: man's inhumanity to man?"

"No," he said, "I mean it. I really do."

Wildkittens Edge The Rams; Frosh Defense Looks Tough

by Jerry Bruderle

Villanova's freshmen football team started its 1965 season with a touchdown but needed a second chance on a conversion try to eke out a 22-20 come-from-behind victory over West Chester at Villanova last Friday.

Villanova's Frank Boal took the opening kickoff on the 15 yard line, and raced up the middle of the field 85 yards to hit paydirt before the season was 15 seconds old. West Chester came back to score twice in the first period and once again early in the second period to take a commanding 20-6 lead.

From here on, however, the 'Cats defense dug in and the Rams didn't get close to the Villanova goal. Meanwhile Villanova scored two touchdowns, the last one coming midway through the third period to tie the score at 20-20. Villanova who had had a kick blocked before, nevertheless elected to kick again for the extra point, and the Rams again rushed in to block it.

But this time a West Chester player, (not the one who blocked the kick), was detected offside, and Villanova had another chance. This time they ran for it and were successful as halfback Barry Werkhouser crashed over tackle for the margin of victory.

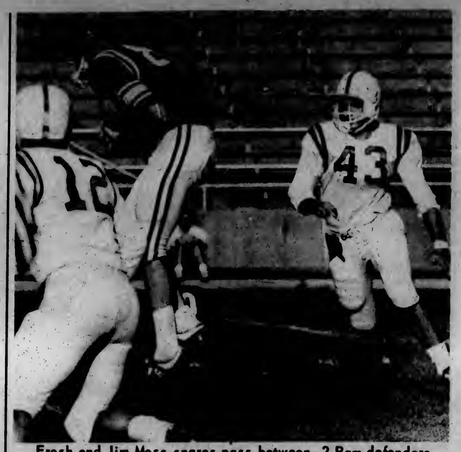
West Chester had one last gasp in the Fourth quarter as they started a drive from deep in their own territory. But before the Rams could get very far defensive halfback Denny Kelly intercepted for Villanova on the West Chester 30, and put the game on ice.

EARLY DRIVES

Following Boal's stunning kickoff return, West Chester marched three times in a row over 60 yards on long TD drives, and it looked like it was going to be a long afternoon for Villanova head coach Eddie Michaels charges.

Ram halfback Burt Nye climaxed the first drive halfway through the first period with a three yard scamper into the end zone to tie the score at 6-6. The conversion attempt was blocked, but West Chester came back again minutes later on another drive which began deep in Ram territory.

This time it was the other halfback, Bill Kelly, who scored for the Rams on an eight yard run, and Kelly also kicked the extra point to make it 13-7 at the end of the first period.



The Villanova offense stalled again early in the second quarter, and once again West Chester would not be denied. Nye again scored from two yards out at the end of a 60 yard drive, and Kelly's conversion put the Rams up 20-6.

Villanova finally got going after that touchdown as Denny Kelly scampered in from three yards out near the end of the first half. Quarterback Mickey Behelja hit Boal with a pass for the two-point conversion to put the Cats back in the game at 20-14 at the half.

In the second half, Villanova took the kickoff and marched the length of the field to tie the score at 20-20. End Jim Moss made a couple of fine catches on the drive, including a 30-yarder, as Behelja mixed his plays nicely. Moss scored the TD on a 10 yard pass as Behelja picked apart the Ram secondary.

On the all-important conversion try, Villanova got the kick off but it was deflected and sailed off to the side. One of the West Chester defensive backs, in his anxiety to block the kick, apparently guessed wrong on the count and jumped offside.

He still didn't get close to the ball, but he got Villanova a yard-and-a-half closer to the goal (half the distance), and the Cats elected to run for the points. Werkhouser easily followed the right side of the Villanova line into the end zone.

Frosh end Jim Moss snares pass between 2 Ram defenders en route to 22-20 opening game victory.

TOUGH DEFENSE

During the rest of the game neither team could get going offensively, and the ball changed hands numerous times. But the Cat defense, which the Rams had marched over earlier, would not give in.

The Frosh showed a lot of promise in this their first encounter as Villanovans, and they have a couple of players who will see a lot of action in the next couple of years.

A lot of attention went to 6'7, 250 pound tackle Richie Moore, who played well, mostly on offense, and showed a lot of agility on the field. Quarterback Mickey Behelja passed and ran well, and end Jim Moss showed himself to be a fine receiver.

This Friday, in the Stadium the Frosh entertain Bullis Prep at two o'clock, in what promises to be another interesting football game.

Ruggers Win Two Of Three Defeat Lehigh, Temple Owls

By Don Campbell

Coach Francis Coughlin and his ruggers were looking forward to a big day on Saturday. They didn't want to be content with only one victory so the team scheduled three games. Jefferson Medical, Temple and Lehigh all came down to Villanova's beautiful campus with high hopes. Anyway, the "looking forwards" won two and the "high hopes" managed to get one.

VILLANOVA 12-LEHIGH 0

This was the big game since it matched Villanova's famous "A" team against a highly regarded Lehigh agressor. Seeing that they were outweighed in virtually all positions, the team looked to Haller La Rue for instructions.

It came in the form of one word "RUN", and run they did. The first "15" was led by Joe Forn's running inside, John Thomas' running outside and Vic Sarcission and Pete Conserva just plain old running. The result was an unstopable, or as the "engineers" found out, unbeatable offensive attack.

The big score was the result of three goals with Rich "the toe" Crawford adding the conversions.

The forwards of Villanova, who like their lineman counterparts in football, are known as the "unspoken heroes", received their recognition on Saturday. The big crowd issued forth a long line of "oohs" and "ahs -- and an occasional "sigh" -- as one bone crushing tackle followed another.

As the game neared its waning moments the fans broke into an appreciative ovation for the forwards that lasted several minutes after the final whistle. The forwards were in Lehigh's backfield so much that their backs were afraid to touch the ball.

JEFFERSON MEDS 6--VU 0

. This was just one of those games Villanova's "B" team outplayed and outhustled the "docs" from Philly and it looked that at any moment they were going to break the game wide open.

They didn't and the visitors walked away with a gift. A free kick, the result of a penalty, accounted for all the scoring of the game.

The second team of the Rugby Club, comprised mainly of freshman of sophmores, showed good promise for the future. Their lack of finesse was far outshadowed by their spirited play. The newcomers can be proud even if they did finish on the wrong end.

CATS 9--OWLS 0

A bit of nostalgia and sentiment pervaded this match which was played on Bryn Mawr's Polo Field. A few old stars of bygone days stopped in to wish the new team luck.

Coach Coughlin, with a cough and a tear, quickly ordered the alumnae into their uniforms since he was a little short of talent. As their dates looked on in horror, the "Beast" and the "Fidge" gladly joined in with the last "15" to help trounce the visitors from Temple.

It was a wild, wide-open game. The spirit of youth counterbalanced by two wise old technicians provided that magic touch.

Everything just seemed to go perfect for the wildcats as they were able to make this a winning day with their second victory. The attack, closely resembling the first game, consisted of keeping the defense on the offense. The forwards did their job so nicely that it was the Villanova backs who did the complaining. Mike Cain is probably still out on the field yelling "Somebody give me the ball."

Wildcat Booters Tied By St. Joe Bearcats; Play E. Baptist Today

by Tom Willson

The Wildcat Booters opened their season with a hard-fought tie with a tough Bearcat squad.

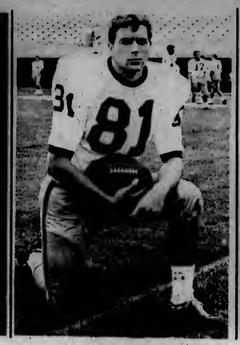
St. Joseph's Bearcats (2-2) who play in the Delco Soccer League and boast of one of the best passing teams in the state, tied the game with 30 seconds remaining on the clock. The visitors scored first as J. Phillips, a highly talented forward, blasted through the Wildcat "Bomb-Squad" to place the visitors in front 1-0.

The Wildcats roared back as Dietmar Parchinger slammed one through the nets to tie the score. Midway through the second half, Karl Danz hit another goal for the Wildcats, shooting from the 12 yard line against a goalie that resembled Jim Washington.

Like the former Villanova basketball star, the visiting goalie stopped many assaults and scoring attempts.

A tough defensive battle followed in which Pete Stenner played his typical rugged game with Walt Helderman, Cliff Herbart, Kevin O'Malley, and Jan Montero playing fine ball defensively.

With the Wildcats substituting freely throughout the second half, it appeared that the depth of Villanova squad would contain the Bearcats offensively. Switching from a 4-2-4 to a 4-4-2 and back to the standard 5-3-2, the versatility of the Wildcat defense crushed all offensive efforts.



But with 30 seconds left, J. Phillips, who scored 35 goals last season and was by far, the Bearcats' outstanding player, broke through to tie the game at 2-2.

The soccer squad has been working out daily from 3:30 p.m.to 5:30 p.m. on Sullivan field on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday afternoons, and will play a total of four different defenses against the opposition this season with a powerful forward wall that returned almost intact from last season.

The remaining Wildcat soccer schedule is as follows:
Oct. 13 E. Baptist Col. (A) 4 p.m.
Oct. 18 University of Penn (A) 4 p.m
Oct. 20 E. Baptist Col. (A) 4 p.m.
Nov. 2 Haverford Col. (A) 4 p.m.
Nov. 9 St. Joe's Col. (A) 4 p.m.

Van Grofski To Test 'Cats; Blue Hens On Victory Trail

by Bob McIntyre

The Villanova Wildcats travel to Newark, Delaware to take on the University of Delaware, a perennial small college power, on Saturday afternoon, October 16.

This is the same Delaware squad that went from the National small college championship in 1963 to a 4-5 record last year. However, last year was considered a rebuilding year, and the victory flag is currently flying over the Blue Hen's campus.

Villanova has played Delaware only four times and has beaten them thrice, including last year's 34-0 drubbing. The Hens lost their opener to Hofstra 17-6, but rebounded for a 15-0 victory over defending conference champion Gettysburg two weeks ago.

COACH

The Delaware football team is coached by one of the most respected men in collegiate athletic circles, David M. Nelson, who in his college days was a standout player at the University of Michigan. He has been head coach of the Blue Hens since 1951. Nelson has built Delaware's gridiron dynasty on his now famous Wing-T system.

Tom Van Grofski, is perhaps the best of the Hens. He is a triple-threat quarterback, is an excellent passer, a fine runner and currently sporting a 43 yard, per-punt average.

Van established a new Delaware record for completions in one season (85) and also a new record in total offense (1,043) yards last year as a Junior. He also tied a school record with four T.D. passes against Rutgers.

Brian Wright is a sophomore starter who is outstanding in the backfield at right-half. He is 5-10 and 167 lbs. and comes from Rockville Md. He is quick and agile due to his tremendous speed which he also uses to advantage in Track.

He is a hard running 6'0, 190 lb. from Springfield, Pa. Mike McCrann, a 6-1, 204 pounder from Amityville, N. Y., fills out the fullback spot as he has been doing for the past two years.

GOOD ENDS

Mike Purzycki, a 6-2, 198 lb. from Newark, N.J. is one of the top offensive ends in the Conference. He hauled down 20 passes for 248 yards and three touchdowns last year as a sophomore. Along side of Mike at the other end position on defense is Bill Drueding.

He was a second team All-Mac tackle choice last year despite the fact he played the entire season at defensive end. The 6-2; 200 lb. from Trevose, Pa. will be out to win all-league honors at his normal position this year.

Another outstanding defensive end is Ed Sand, a 5-11; 187 lb., Montclair, N.J. native who was hurt in the spring but has been healthy ever since the opening of fall practice.

The tackles are led by Jim Freebery, a 6-0, 220 lb. Junior, who somtimes goes both ways and is out to challenge All-Mac honors. He is backed up by Dave Stewart, 6-4; 228 lb., Stan Ogden, 6-0; 220 lb., and Jay Gibbons, 6-2; 225 lb.

Art Christensen is a quick guard, and one of the best blockers on the team. He is 6-1: 205 lb. and hails from W. Englewood, N.J. Denny Toddings is a 6-1; 220 lb. senior from Buicktown, N.J. who was second team All-Mac last season at his favorite position, center.

LINEUP

The offensive lineup then of the Hens will most probably be Muller and Purzycki at the ends; Jim Lasser and Jay Gibbons at tackle; Anderson and Hackney or Christensen at guard and Denny Toddings at center. The offensive backfield will be Van Grofski at quarterback; Wright and Mason at the halfback posts and Mike McCrann at fullback.

The defense will most likely line up with Ed Sand and Bill Drueding at end; Freebery and Stewart at tackle and Bill Neiger at middle guard. Herb Stattery and Bill Csatari are the linebackers with Bills, Carlyle, Hoopes and Keister in the defensive secondary.

The offensive line averages 209, while the backfield goes 184 lb. On defense they drop to 208. Their schedule includes not only the Wildcats but Buffalo, Boston University and MAC teams such as defending champ, Gettysburg whom they have already beaten and Lambert Cup winner, Bucknell.

Cross Country Team Bounces Back

by Ken Coniglio

Last week Villanova was handed defeat for the first time in six years of varsity dual meet competition.

Penn State was a strong, confident group of veterans determined to dethrone Villanova as the kingpin of the cross country circuit. Track buffs were beginning to wonder if the burden of varsity competition was to much to ask of a group of young sophomores.

They had never run the five mile course and the success of their outing was in doubt. As a result, they lost 29-26 in a hotly contested and spirited run.

Some wrote off the loss to lack of experience, others prepared themselves for a losing season.

Coach Tuppeny and the team members themselves knew their abilities and what they were capable of doing. They felt that last week's loss to Penn was absolutely no indication of what they could produce in future encounters.

They were anxious for an opportunity to redeem themselves. They, if no one else, were confident in their ability and determined to return with victory. They got their chance.

Captain Noel Carroll

Park to face a spirited St. Joe's squad. The weather was fair, but there was a strong wind blowing in from the East. The course is difficult and a fine test of ability and endurance.

The Wildcats swept the first six places attaining the lowest possible score in a cross country meet. In addition to the first six places, the Cats also garnered eighth and ninth. This means, that since Villanova ran only eight men, only one St. Joe's trackman was allowed to score in the top nine places.

The Villanova cross country team boarded the bus Saturday morning on their way to Fairmount

Dave Patrick and Charlie Messenger, the keys to last year's IC4A freshman championship team once again led Villanova, this time the Varsity squad, to victory. Both men breasted the tape in identical times of 28 minutes 11 seconds, Patrick, just inches ahead, was given first place.

Following Messenger was Al McCafferty, running 29:23 with Paul Sanborn, Craig Nations, Jack O'Leary running 29:28, 29:30, 29:36 respectively. Rounding out the Villanova scoring were Noel Carrol 29:52 and Harry Degenhardt running 30:12. The best St. Joe's could do was sixth and places tenth through eighteenth. This gave Villanova a 29 to 15 win.

This was the Wildcat's second outing and their first victory of the 1965 season. It was an important victory. It was not just one to be entered into the record book, it was a moral victory as well. This young team needed something to bolster their confidence.

It is one thing to know your ability and another to display it successfully. The Cats now have a solid basis on which to build a winning season. It is easier to build on victories than it is upon defeats.

They had better be ready, for next Saturday, October 16, they face an extremely tough Quantico squad. Since the season opened Quantico has won ten trophies.

Two weeks ago their squad placed first and second in the two man ten mile relay at Washington D.C. They sport the likes of Tom Bache, 9:02 two miler and Keith Forman, a sub-four-minute miler.

Villanova has a slight advantage as they will once again run on their home course. This may very well be the factor that decides victory or defeat. Following Quantico, Villanova faces La Salle, once again at home and then St. John's away.

What makes a track man? Doctor Roger Bannister, the world's first sub-four minute miler said, "I sometimes think that running has given me a glimpse of the greatest freedom a man can ever know, because it results in the simultaneous liberation of mind and body ... Running is creative. The runner does not know why he runs, He only knows that HE MUST RUN."

Wildcats Suffer Hex, Warned of Cougars

Two Minute Magic

With about four minutes left in the game Saturday night. Owen Johnson, sports director of Washington State campus station KWSC reminded Bill Peiffer, who was doing play-by-play on the Villanova Football Network, that Washington State had come from behind in the closing minutes for their two Big Ten victories.

Peiffer, whose broadcast was heard locally on WWVU and WDEL-FM chided the State student for his optimism.

Johnson apologized, half-heartedly, for his faux pas and went on doing color for the transcontinental broadcast.

Minutes later Johnson was an expert, Villanova was a loser.

WDEL-FM will air this week's game with Delaware and WRCP, Philadelphia will carry the game on the standard (AM) band to the local listening area.

'Cats Play Brilliant Game; Lead Till Last Two Minutes

by John DiGennaro

Last Friday at 6:45, to the thunderous applause of a thousand snores, the football team left their sleeping fans, and started their trip to the West Coast. Some fifteen hours later they arrived in Spokane, got a 45 minute break to get ready, then reported for a pregame workout.

Approximately 24 hours later they took the field to be "battered" by the "big time" Cougars of Washington State. Well they sure let everybody down, because they played one helluva great football game.

The line hit, the backs ran, the quarterbacks threw, the receivers caught, only the clock and the final score failed to show the heart that otherwise was all over the field. Exactly one play, 10 seconds on the clock, was the only difference between the "big time team" and "mediocre" Villanova.

In the out of the way confines of sunken Joe Albi Stadium, the team proved, to themselves, and hopefully to their followers, that the material is there, the maturity is coming, and the season is a long way from over.

Villanova received, and Joe Santomauro returned the opening kickoff 22 yards to the Wildcat 31. Gerry Bellotti, starting at quarterback, ran two keepers; the first for 1 yd., the second for 10 yards and a first down. Villanova's running game was then stopped cold, and on 4th and 8 Connell dropped back to punt.

EILMES GREAT

Willie Gaskins returned the kick 5 yards, and W. S. U. took over first and 10 on their own 27. Eight plays later, seven of which were run by their great fullback Larry Eilmes (Ell-mess), the Cougars had a first and 10 on the V. U. 35.

The next play was again to Eilmes, he went off right tackle picked up a couple of yards and then was really jolted by several defenders, the ball squirted loose and Don Koshlap fell on it for Villanova (the first of 5 W. S. U. fumbles).

The Cats again on offense marched from their own 22 down into Cougar territory, the big play being Joe Santomauro's 28 yard scamper around left end. Here the drive stalled, and Dave Connell aiming for the far corner turned in what had to be one of the prettiest kicks ever.

The ball hit inside the 10, took a couple of bounces, then rolled out of bounds some three inches from the goal line, actually hitting the goal line flag on the playing field side.

Here both defenses stiffened, and the rest of the period saw an exchange of punts, plus one, as the quarter ended with Santomauro returning the plus one to the V. U. 32.

The Wildcats, hurt by a couple of penalties, found themselves with a third and 18 from their own 21. Connell dropped back to pass and hit Shunke, who made a beautiful catch grabbing the ball as he fell off balance to the ground.

The 'Cats now had a first down at the Washington State 40, but once again the Cougars toughened and Connell was forced to punt.

Gaskins fielded the kick on his own goal line and returned it to the 22 where the offense took over first and 10. Led once again by Eilmes (40 yds. in 4 carries on the drive) the Cougars pounded down to a first down just inside the Wildcat 15.

On the play, however, Washington State was detected for a personal foul and pushed back 15 big yards. The 'Cats defense held, but on fourth down Ted Gerela kicked a 32 yard field goal and State had the lead 3-0.

3-0 AT HALF

Each team had two more cracks at it before the half, but neither was able to mount much of an offense, and the Cougars took the three points in with them at half time.

Washington State received to open the second half, and in six plays banged down to a first down on the V. U. 27. Three plays later Eilmes took it around right end for 22 yards and a touchdown. Gerela converted, and the Cougars led 10-0.

The 'Cats were unable to move at all, and on third and 11 Connell punted, a booming 63 yarder down to the W. S. U. six yard line. The Cougars started right back up field, picked up a couple of first downs, and seemed to be rolling toward another score.

Tom Roth, Cougar quarterback, with his running game moving nicely, tried to cross up the 'Cats with a pass, but Tony Ferrainolo cut in front of the intended receiver, picked off the throw, and scampered 35 yards up the side line cutting nicely off the last two defenders at the five and going in for the score.

Case's attempt was good, and suddenly the 'Cats were right back in there.

The Cougars started back, but suddenly, deep in their own territory, the 'Cat defense toughened. Paul Sadowski diagnosed the option and really rocked T. C. McClellan as he took the pitchout. T. C. fumbled, and the Wildcats recovered on their own 36.

At this point Billy Andrejko came in to Quarterback, and he really got the offense moving. He hit Tom Flandera twice for 30 yards, mixed in some running plays, and finally on a third and eight hit Shunke on the five where he (Shunke) spun off two tacklers, and took her in for the score.

Case's kick made it 14-10, with 13:33 left on the clock.

The Villanova defense really came alive at this point, and on a pitchout to Bob Simpson, really cracked him and forced a fumble. The 'Cats started a drive of their own, but fell short when Willie Gaskins intercepted a Connell pass on the six yard line.

Once again the defense held, and the Cougars were forced to punt.

The 'Cats picked up a first down as they now attempted to run out the clock. The Cougars finally stiffened, and with 2 1/2 minutes left the 'Cats were forced to punt.

With 2 minutes and 15 seconds left in the game, the ball on his own 22, second and 10, Roth dropped back to pass, hit Bob Simpson some 30 yards away and Simpson sprinted the rest of the way untouched. Gerela converted, and suddenly it was 17-14.

The 'Cats had one more chance, but the Cougars in a prevent defense had Willie Gaskins pick off an Andrejko pass and sprint 40 yards into the end zone for the icer.

Maff's Musings

By Joe Maffongelli

When the Minnesota Twins took the field against their national league counterparts last Wednesday it was more than a historic moment. It was a fable come true. Can anyone say for sure that Harmon Killebrew isn't really a middle-aged real estate insurance man named Joe Boyd? Is there not some diabolical mystery attached to the fact that the magnificent Sandy Koufax was knocked out of the box in his first series appearance against the club from the Twin cities? Perhaps not, but the old adage, "truth is stranger than fiction" must certainly apply.

Many people have probably forgotten the fact that these same Minnesota Twins were, but a few short years ago, the Washington Senators who could hardly buy a ball game let alone a pennant. It was during one of these futile campaigns for the Capitolers, mid 1950's, that John Douglas Wallop put together a series of paragraphs about, THE YEAR THE YANKEES LOST THE PENNANT.

Rather than transform Joe Boyd into a Joe Hardy, Applegate (the devil) chose to revise the name of the club from Senators to Twins. But no one knows for sure that Jimmie Hall doesn't have a girl named Lola. Also, perhaps the showing which the Twins made against the coasters was that last chapter which Mr. Wallop forgot to write.

Now that the Yankee domination has come to an abrupt halt, "Can they come back?," seems to be the question in the back of the minds of most ardent diamond fans. Although we were wrong in predicting their continued success at the outset of the current campaign, we need not err again. The Bronx Bombers still cannot be considered a mediocre team. Surely the key injuries which the ex-champs suffered were a major contribution to such a dismal year. A club doesn't play day after day with only five regulars and expect to have balance in all departments. A pitcher who wins twenty-one and eighteen games in successive seasons, and then sinks to four victories, cannot be written off as ineffective after one bad season. The dreadful truth to this statement was attested to by Cleveland's Ralph Terry, an ex-Yank.

In any event, Applegate will be about his business.

Girls Field Hockey New Intramural Sport Games Played Friday

by Jim Proud

The intramural athletic association on campus has approved a new and totally different type of competition among students. Girls field hockey is the new and lively addition to student sports.

The girls went ahead on their own and formed teams among themselves and then applied to the intramural committe for authorization and also equipment. The committee itself felt the idea to be an excellent one and therefore supplied the girls with the necessary equipment.

Games in this new competition will be played every Friday at 2:30. Frank Helies, a sophomore, is in charge of this sport from the intramural side and expects the season to be a success both for the girls and the fans who will be on hand for every game.

The intramural cross country meet that was rained out last Thursday will be held tomorrow. Last year's winner Mike Mulvey will not be competing this year and instead he will be supervising the meet in his position as Vice-Presdient of the Intramural Committee.

Leo Geisz, the director of the intramural sports, is in the hostital for an emergency operation. He, like the President, had his gall bladder removed. The operation was performed last week and he is recovering satisfactorily.

RALLY, DANCE, GAME, CONCERT

'65 Homecoming: Spectacle City

Homecoming weekend, a traditional celebration welcoming the return of Villanova's Alumni, will take place this Friday and Saturday.

The weekend's activities will begin with the traditional Nick Basca Dance on Friday evening at 9 p.m. in the Field House. This dance is held every Homecoming in honor of the former Villanova gridiron star who was killed in action during World War II.

Paul Judge and his orchestra will provide the music for the third consecutive year.

The Fat City Four, a popular and lively rock group will provide entertainment during the intermission of the dance.

The Homecoming Queen, who will reign over the entire weekend's activities, will be selected at the dance by a vote of all couples present. This is an innovation this year in an attempt to achieve a greater participation and interest in the selection of the queen.

Preceding the dance there will be a bonfire rally on Mendel field at 8:15 p.m. The five finalists in the queen competition, whose pictures appear below, several Wildcat footballers including Coach Alex Bell and Captain Tom Brown, and a probable guest speaker will be presented to the crowd.

Saturday's festivities begin in Villanova's football stadium. The Villanova Wildcats will meet the always stubborn West Chester Rams in a renewal of a hard fought and intense local rivalry. Fraternities, classes and various organizations will present floats during the halftime intermission.

The theme of this year's halftime ceremonies will be "Animal Fantasyland." The float best presenting this theme will be given an award by the Intramual Department. The Queen and her court will circle the playing field as the bands of both Villanova and West Chester present their halftime entertainment.

By Mike Mullen

A competition will exist among the dormitories on campus with the best judged dorm being the recipient of the Nick Basca Award.

A concert will be presented Saturday evening at 8:15 p.m. featuring the Rooftop Singers and the dual pianos of Ferrante and Teicher. "Walk Right In" and the theme from "The Apartment" will be among the numbers to be presented by these entertainers.

This year's Homecoming Weekend is primarily the function of the Senior Class. Vice-President Jim Morgan is the general chairman. Working with him are Greg Galland, Nick Basca Dance; John Barrow, football activities; and John Fenlon and Rick Berry, concert.

Concert tickets are available in the Pie Shoppe for $3 and $3.50. The dance tickets are set at $2.50 in advance and $3 at the door.

After Friday Night's Dance, the Villanova Wildcats and the West Chester Rams will take over on the football field Saturday afternoon. This action took place in last year's game which the 'Cats won.

David Banmiller Elected ASG President At Purdue

By Bill McCloskey

David Banmiller, Villanova representative to the Associated Student Governments of the United States (ASGUSA) was elected president of the national organization Saturday.

Election came at the end of a three-day convention at Purdue University in West Lafayette, Indiana. Banmiller won by a 2-1 majority in the poll of some 71 delegates.

In addition to the 71 there were 31 schools with observers. In all there were close to 300 representatives from colleges throughout the nation.

Other Villanova representatives, in addition to Banmiller, from Villanova were Frank Eck, acting-president of the SGA; Prentiss Yancy, vice-president; Brian Banmiller, vice-president; and Brenden Brett, the junior class representative.

One of the main issues in the effort to have Banmiller elected was whether Villanova would be a worthy national seat for the organization. There were arguments against the school's geography (most ASG schools are in the mid-West) and its size. The national organization represents statistically almost 600,000 students across the nation.

In his speech accepting the nomination on Friday night, Banmiller defended Villanova and pointed up his hopes for the organization.

"AGS's sole purpose in existing is to help student government leaders ... in their search for answers to their problems," said Banmiller.

Banmiller announced at the convention that the Villanova SGA was ready to support the national organization with monies in the thousands of dollars.

Questioned after the convention was over, Banmiller said, "Villanova's SGA will back the organization completely, but students

Printing of Stationery Plus Parking Permits Sparks SGA

By Tom Dabney

Villanova's Student Senate met last Monday, October 11 to consider several motions that will be considered tonight for final passage by the SGA. One motion was withdrawn and another was passed while the remaining five were recommended for passage.

Two motions were for appropriations for payment of debts incurred by SGA committees. One was for the payment of the bill for parking permits and the other for the payment of the stationery bill of the SGA. A third monetary appropriation passed was to pay a one-year subscription to Weekly Intercollegiate Press Newsletter.

A motion was proposed to enable the Blue Key to have a full-vote status on the SGA. This motion has been brought up several times in the past couple years, but despite the fact that it always passed the Senate it was defeated on the floor of the SGA.

The major argument against its passage was that it did not warrant this privilege, because the election of officers is not a general one as are the other offices.

Other motions that passed were that the Young Republicans Club be granted a half vote on the Council. Also recommended for passage was a motion to secure a trophy in honor of the late West Chester State College football coach, Dr. James Bonder, who died recently. The trophy itself would be presented at the conclusion of this annual match and "would be transient in nature."

New Transmitter Installed As WWVU Studio Changes

The studios of WWVU Radio are undergoing renovations and a new transmitter has been installed to improve service to the campus.

The re-building process, underway since the beginning of the summer has been virtually completed during the last week.

In addition to the installation of a new transmitter, Station Manager Bill McCloskey announced the following improvements:

-- Repairs to the Dougherty Hall console to take the buzzing sound out of the speakers in the Dining Halls.

-- Complete re-organization of the news facilities including moving of the United Press International Newswire into the news studio. In effect this moves the entire Complete Campus Coverage news operation into one newsroom.

The transmitter, which has more power and a cleaner signal, was built by Sophomore Electrical Engineering student Ray Baker, whose parents donated the equipment. Mr. Baker, of Linwood, New Jersey is an Electrical Engineer working for the Government.

The signal has now been improved sufficiently so that it now covers portions of dormitories in which reception was previously marginal.

The control board in the Master Control Room of the station, located on the top floor of Dougherty Hall, is also being rebuilt to accommodate two automatic tape cartridge machines. Cartridge machines are some of the newest broadcast equipment on the market. Their use by WWVU will increase the quality of production work at the station.

The installation of the new equipment and renovations were under the direction of Chief Engineer Jim Briggman and Chief Production Engineer Dave Buscher.

Soph Weekend Featured By Concert and Dinner Dance

Villanova's Sophomore Weekend will commence on Friday, November 5 with a concert by the Four Seasons. Tickets for the 8:15 performance will be $2.50, orchestra and $2 balcony.

Saturday afternoon will be highlighted by the Villanova vs. Quantico Marines football game. A special section has been reserved for the sophs and their dates. The evening will feature a dinner dance at the Falcon House with music by the Critters ... the price $12.50. Although this price may seem high at first glance, John Cary, chairman of the soph weekend was quick to point out that the actual cost to the sophomore class for the affair will be $17. This year's dance is unique in that it will be the first time the dance has been held off campus and the first time it is exclusively for the sophs and their dates.

A Sunday morning brunch is tentatively planned to give the sophomores an inexpensive occasion to say farewell to their dates. Tickets are $3.

Villanova's Folk Group Offers Diversified Song

By Sam Cucinotta

Within the Villanova Singers is a group of twelve men who specialize in the folk field. This group, known as the "Spires," was organized six years ago for the specific purpose of singing music "on the lighter side."

In the past the group's repertoire consisted mainly of popular selections and barber-shop arrangements. Three years ago, however, this image was changed and the Spires became a folk chorus.

The Spires have a repertoire which includes both modern and traditional folk songs and their own material. They use only original arrangements and almost invariably learn and perfect their numbers without the aid of written or pre-arranged material. This is an indication of the individual and collective versatility which is possessed by the members of the group.

Bassist Frank Romano is the group's director and arranger. Members of the Spires are guitarists Jeff Richard, Jay Dugan, and Paul Sessions, who provide the background instrumentation. Other members are Jan Montero, Dick La Bella, Jim Debesis, George Norton, Stan Lockitski, Ed Stepien, Fred Butler, and Terry Toland.

Each member of the Spires is chosen for both vocal as well as instrumental ability. Each Spire is a talented entertainer in his own right, but together this multi-voiced aggregation has developed into an integral part of the Villanova Singers' concerts.

Schweiker, Stubenbroker Address Young Republicans

Following the first meeting of the Young Republicans, Bill Rovere, program chairman, announced a tentative schedule of speakers for the Fall Semester. On November 3 Congressman Richard Schweiker, who has been mentioned as a possible Republican gubernatorial candidate for Pennsylvania, will speak on "A New Faith for Republicans."

On December 1 the Honorable Edward Holl, senior assemblyman from Montgomery County, will speak on the problems facing Republicans on the grassroots level. Although a specific date has not been set, Mr. Fern C. Stubenbroker, special assistant to J. Edgar Hoover and agent of the F.B.I., will speak on "The Growing Menace of the U.S. Communist Party."

Chairman, Don Franz, has announced that a membership drive will be forthcoming within the next month. In conjunction with this membership drive, Jocko Connolly, publicity chairman, announced that the publicity committee will expand its functions and activities.

University Night Set For October 21; All Alumni Welcome

University Night is devoted to all alumni of Villanova who live in areas where membership is not large enough to constitute an alumni club. The main purpose behind alumni activities is to bring the alumni and undergraduate parents up to date on all events and happenings of Villanova University.

The alumni program will be brought into 15 different sections throughout the country, the first of which will be held in the Wilkes-Barre area on October 21. Representing Villanova on this night will be the Rev. William E. Farrel, OSA, Edward P. Geisz, and Dorothy Boyle. On November 9, the second University Night will be held in Trenton, New Jersey.

Belle Masque Society Set For Thomas More Production

The Belle Masque Drama Society has embarked on one of the largest and most concentrated efforts of its history in the production of A MAN FOR ALL SEASONS. Under the leadership of Mike Sutherland, its President, and Mr. Kenneth L. Resinski, the play's director, Belle Masque is attempting the cultural surprise of the academic year.

The play is in essence about one all-consuming idea, the self of each man.

Thomas More, the protagonist of the play, must choose between the gifts and pleasures of society and his own self, his own soul. More is not a social misfit, not a person who by nature withdraws from society.

He is a man who truly enjoyed all aspects of life. More has wealth, social position, a loving family, influential friends, and an intellectual reputation that was known throughout Europe.

But when all these factors are weighed and measured he finds that the one prize he must hold onto is the integrity of his mind and conscience. For his grasp on spiritual integrity Thomas More finally forfeits his life.

TIME MAGAZINE says of More the man, "He did not choose to lose his life, but he did choose not to lose his soul."

The production staff includes Mike Sutherland, production manager; Rick Galli, stage manager; Mike Gotwals, technical manager; Ed Hagan, business manager; and Father Gill, Society Moderator.

The cast will have Brian Morgan, as Thomas More; Jack Anthony as Thomas Cromwell; Mike Curran, as Richard Rich; Rick Galli, as The Duke of Norfolk; Bonnie Lucas, as Alice More; Shelly Daly, as Margaret More; Jerry Bober, as Thomas Cranmer; and Jim Cahill, as Cardinal Wolsey.

Don Kelly will be featured as the Spanish Ambassador; David Reese, as the Ambassador's attendant; Gene Gleason, as William Roper, Betty Kelly, as Catherine Anger; and as The Common Man, John McPeak. The dates for the production are November 11-14. Ticket sales will soon begin in The Pie Shoppe.

Villanova Forum Lecture

By Dale Pappert

Marguerite Higgins, journalist and author, will lecture on the United States involvement in the Vietnam war at the field house Thursday, November 4, at 8 p.m.

In 1944 Miss Higgins became a war correspondent and chief of the Berlin and Tokyo Bureaus in 1947 and 1950 respectively. For eight years she acted as a correspondent in Korea until 1958.

Her literary career achieved its peak in 1951 when she received a Pulitzer Prize for reporting, and the publishing of one of her three books. "WAR IN KOREA - REPORT OF A WOMAN COMBAT CORRESPONDENT" was the forerunner of her recent series of articles on Vietnam for the New York Tribune. These articles were supplemented by Miss Higgins' personal visit to the combat area.

Born in Hong Kong, she received her AB at the University of California in 1941 and M.S. at Columbia University in 1942. She became a reporter for the New York Herald Tribune in 1942 and is currently a syndicated columnist with offices at the National Press Building in Washington, D.C.

This vast amount of journalism enables her to make an informative evaluation of the Vietnam crisis. Whether the U.S. is losing in Vietnam is answered in this third lecture of the Villanova Forum Series.

Dr. Malik Speaks Tonight On Kashmir War Policies

Dr. Hafeez Malik, of the Political Science Department, will address the Villanova History Club and the public on the controversial issue of "Why a Kashmir War?" on Wednesday, October 20, 1965, at 8 p.m. in 110 Bartley Hall.

Dr. Malik will lecture from a broad background of personal experiences that have taken him from Iceland to Italy, and have come to make him fluent in several foreign languages, including the unusual Persian and Urdu tongues.

Dr. Malik is a foremost student in Asian affairs and he was awarded a Bachelor's Degree from the Government College in Lahore, Pakistan in 1950, and a Graduate Diploma in Journalism from the University of Punjab, also in Lahore.

Thereafter, Dr. Malik entered Syracuse University in 1953 where he remained for eight years to complete his studies leading to a Master of Science in Journalism and a Master of Arts and Doctor of Philosophy in Political Science, the latter awarded in 1961.

Also, he is a member of several learned societies, among which are the Association for Asian Studies and Pi Sigma Alpha, the National Political Science Honor Society.

During his journalistic career, Dr. Malik has served as a White House Correspondent for two major Pakistani newspapers, between 1958 and 1961. He is the author of MOSLEM NATIONALISM IN INDIA AND PAKISTAN and THE GROWTH OF PAKISTANI NATIONALISM.

Lawyer Samuel Lane Opens V. U. Law Forum With 'Coif' Lecture

Samuel Morse Lane, will give the fourth annual lecture of the order of the COIF on the topic "Thirty Years As A New York Trial Lawyer" at the opening Villanova Law Forum on this Friday at 8:30 p.m. in Garey Hall (the Law School).

Mr. Lane is a partner of Casey, Lane, and Mittendorf of New York City. He is a graduate of Harvard College (A.B. 1931) and Harvard Law School (L.L.B. 1934) and after graduation commenced practice with one of the oldest law firms in New York, Alexander and Green.

He became a partner in the firm of Baldwin, Todd, and Lefferts and founded his own firm in 1952. Mr. Lane's practice has been largely trial and appellant counsel, although, he has served as General Counsel and Executive Director of the New York-New Jersey Waterfront Commission (1954-55).

The faculty and the students of the University are invited to attend the lecture.

Chaplain's Office Announces Policy Of Closed Retreats

A new policy of closed retreats for Villanova students was announced today by the Chaplain's Office.

The retreats will be held on campus at the Augustinian Seminary known as St. Mary's Hall. Beginning October 29, 30, 31, 1965, the retreats will be held for the three successive weekends following that date. For the second semester, another schedule will be announced later.

The retreats will begin at 7:30 p.m. on Fridays and close at 3:30 p.m. on Sundays. Those students who make closed retreats will not be required to make retreats with their respective classes. However, only those students who are sincerely interested in making a good retreat are asked to apply.

Reservations may be made by contacting Father Hopkins at the Chaplain's Office, 219 Tolentine Hall, or by contacting his secretary at 223 Tolentine Hall.

Father Hopkins pointed out that a closed retreat is an excellent method of retiring from the noise and distraction of daily life.

The retreat will include private interviews, discussion periods and ample use of the facilities of the seminary for periods of recreation. In order that expenses of the retreat may be covered, a donation of $15 is asked of each student. Students who do not have the money now may make other arrangements.

During the second semester, a retreat free of charge will be held in the seminary for all students who wish to learn more of the religious life and the priesthood.

Letters to The Editor

To The Editor:

It was with a great deal of satisfaction that we noted the fine turnout for the film The Making of the President - 1960, Thursday, October 7. Despite the slight confusion regarding the room location of the movie and the gross inclemency of the weather, the attendance was truly remarkable as approximately 150 people were in attendance.

Perhaps the only disappointing feature of the evening was the small number of faculty members present. Unlike our opposition, membership in the Villanova Young Democratic Club is not open to those with only one out-moded point of view. The sole requirement for everyone, be they faculty members, undergraduates, or nurses is a positive interest in the Democratic Party.

Notices of future meetings will be forthcoming and your support is earnestly solicited.

Three-Fold Mission

The three weeks which have passed since the historic barnstorming trip of Pope Paul VI to New York City and the United Nations gives us an opportunity to assess it with that certain sense of confidence offered by retrospect.

Whether or not the intention of the Vatican, the Pope's trip took on at least three major dimensions. First it was a diplomatic mission; an attempt to bring the prestige and even the political power of the Papacy to bear in rejuvenating and refreshing a tired, power-dwindling world organization. In this it is perhaps significant that the UN -- as the "last best hope" for world peace -- found its own last best hope in the Supreme Pontiff of the Catholic Church.

Second, his mission was one of peace; a dramatic reassertion to the whole world of history's greatest lesson: that man must learn to solve his problems across the bargaining table, not on the battlefield. And that he must learn that lesson now -- before he becomes the victim of his own self-created scientific terror.

Finally his mission was religious. This hemisphere still holds the title "New World." And though the 473rd anniversary of its discovery was celebrated only a week later, Pope Paul's trip was the very first Papal venture to the Americas. Nothing could be more in keeping with the spirit of the Ecumenical Council; to bring the Church up-to-date in the modern world. For the true key to that modern world lies neither in the European politics of old, nor in the Great Crusades to the Middle and Far East. It lies instead here in the Western Hemisphere -- in the United States and throughout the Americas.

It was best summed up by a jubilant spectator at the unprecedented ball park Mass in Yankee Stadium. "Now," he said, "America too has a Pope."

Hazing Is Good, But...

Fraternity pledging this year is underway. LKD, the Pre-Med social organization is the first to hold a series of initiation practices.

Admittedly, some hazing practices are harmless and useful. Unfortunately, before the scholastic year is over, we are sure we will hear and see evidence of inane hazing practices, which some people think somehow show a student's loyalty to his brothers.

This should not happen.

There have already this year been incidents which by their very nature turn the stomach.

Forcing a pledge to eat relish and shaving cream does nothing more than test the strength of his stomach, not the endurance of his fraternal relations.

The position of brotherhoods on the Villanova campus has been up and down during the past several years. Further poor reports of fraternity hazing activities will only result in banning such organizations on campus, thus destroying whatever brotherhood the pledgemasters think they are instilling.

Beware of too Much Control

When Cecil Moore speaks more often than not people turn their ears away without a second thought. The local director of the NAACP has earned for himself many times during the past two years the reputation of being one of Philadelphia's most outspoken radicals. But recently Mr. Moore has made a statement that may contain more than just what appears on the surface.

Speaking at a hearing held by the Philadelphia Anti-Poverty Action Committee on September 28, he vehemently opposed the Planned Parenthood Association's proposal to employ over ninety thousand dollars of Federal Funds for "education" of North Philadelphia's slum area residents, most all of whom are Negroes.

The plan would include providing information and instruction to Negro residents on the availability and use of birth controlling methods. Moore claimed that the idea of singling out one section of the population, notably the largely Negro section, for birth control campaigns was to his way of thinking an attempt to promote "the suicide of the Negro race."

Perhaps the extinction of our Negro population is not within any foreseeable future but the idea of practicing birth control on "poor citizens" in order to relieve their poverty is riduculous. By encouraging such birth restrictions more likely the only notable socially acceptable increase would come in the form of promiscuity, that seeming to be preferable than more children.

The whole idea of public supported birth control is wrong. Birth control, being the most private of the citizen's affairs, should not be exploited by any minority groups tampering with the law. For as it stands now, federal funds are not permitted to be spent for the promotion and establishment of birth control programs, although there are exceptions where this has been overlooked by local authorities. The office of the Philadelphia Archbishop has condemned this proposal on the grounds of its morality; certainly, the Catholic elements in the proposed area could not comply with the plan if effected.

In effect, then, what Cecil Moore has decried as "suicide" may be, if not literally, still regarded as a very serious threat to our freedom as individuals.

Picture Techniques

The Theatre Department has inaugurated a film series showing the development of the motion picture technique with special emphasis on its historical and educational significance.

Four programs are left on the series which are shown at the Playbox on Sunday afternoons at 3 p.m. Series subscriptions can be purchased from the Theatre Department for $1.50. Dr. Jackson Berry is the director of the series.

"Art Movements in Film" will be shown this Sunday with the program consisting of three films, ENTR'ACTE (Clair), SYMPHONIE DIAGONALE, and THE CABINET OF DR. CALIGARI.

The third program in the series concerns itself with "The Development of Film Technique in America." EASY STREET with Charlie Chaplin and BROKEN BLOSSOMS with Griffith are on the agenda for this program to be held November 7.

The fourth program will focus on "The Technique of Film" on November 21. The following excerpts and short films will be shown: POTEMKIN, OLYMPIA, THE MAKING OF A MOVIE, TREADLE AND BOBBIN, YOU ONLY LIVE ONCE, and RAIN.

"The Poetic Film" is the last scheduled program to be given December 5. Experimental films from Villanova cinema students and documentaries are scheduled: NIGHT MAIL, IN THE STREET, and N.Y., N.Y.

Music Notes

Three young Philadelphia musicians, a choral group, a prominent concert pianist, a guitarist and two Japanese dancers will perform during the 1965-1966 season at four special Philadelphia Orchestra concerts in the Academy of Music for students between the ages of 16 and 22.

Eugene Ormandy will conduct one performance; Assistant Conductor William Smith the remaining three. The Senior Student concerts are to be sponsored for the fifth consecutive year by the Philadelphia Saving Fund Society.

Performances begin at 8 p.m. Series tickets for students ranging in price from $3.00 to $7.00 may be purchased by mail order only from the Box Office in the Academy of Music. Those ordering as a group for the first time this season are urged to call the Association (Kingsley 5-3830) for additional information.

Mr. Smith will conduct, and Marylyn Mulvey, Allison Lee and the Philadelphia Orchestra will perform, at the season's first Senior Student concert on Monday, October 25.

Miss Mulvey, a 23-year-old student of Dorothy DiScala at the Academy of Vocal Arts, will sing the aria "A vos jeux, mes amis," from the opera "Hamlet" by Thomas and "Trois Chansons de Ronsard" by Darius Milhaud. Twenty-one-year-old Miss Lee, who studies with Eleanor Sokoloff at the Curtis Institute, will play the Concerto No. 1 in F sharp minor for Piano and Orchestra, Op. 1, by Rachmaninoff.

ON SECOND THOUGHT

Homecoming

By Gene FitzMaurice

It is a time to be selfish. We have given over our childhood to cooing and billing relatives who amused us more than we did them. We have given over our adolescence to guidance counsellors and Latin masters who could not find the heading in the textbook which would tell them what page we were on.

We gave the Tild Ball to the sophomores; our Sophomore Cotillion to the freshmen; and we must share our class weekends with our parents: one luncheon and one athletic smoker make them full participants in these four years, and we have little left to call our own.

We cannot be disturbed in Homecoming. The dance is ours: the underclassmen our suffered guests. The alumni will not be seen. They will be too racked with the decisions of whether the new VW should be red; should the next glass of gin contain an olive or an onion as they whisper "Vermouth"; "Shall I part my hair behind? Do I dare to eat a peach?"

They will not come until Saturday, when they will so eagerly jockey for position under the canopy across the road that they will forget the size of our rooms; they will laugh, forgetting that the anecdotes were painful when they were being set down; they will forget that we do not find our clubs, our affiliations, our aspirations as schoolboyishly humorous as do they.

Perhaps in time, when we have what, (matured?), we will. But now we do not.

Now we know only that after three years we can claim a day and hold it against all others. We know only that after fifteen home games we have finally been guaranteed a seat from which the game can be seen. It's our game. They have to let us see how it's played.

We are being given one moment in five quarter centuries. And we are too busy winding our watches to set them right.

We must now reach out and grasp whatever may be left for us on the pole because the attendant will soon demand more tickets, and when he does he will be stunned, amused, angry, bitter, ultimately sad that our ride has carried us up, down, around, in one circle now made so deep that we may never be able to climb up from it.

As our ride slows down, let us be as selfish as we can with what remains of it. Let us make it completely disproportionate in time and memory. If we do not, the remembrance of a thousand revolutions going nowhere will sicken us until we almost forget what it is that torments us so.

We might do well to appropriate, with some change and comment, some lines from "P.S. Wilkinson" by C. D. Bryan. In a way, they represent his homecoming.

"If you don't like the way I dance you don't have to dance with me."

"Yes, I do. My daddy said that if P.S. Wilkinson cuts in on me or asks me to dance I have to dance with him. So that's why I have to dance with you."

"Well, my father said I had to dance with you, too. And if you--if you don't want to dance with me you don't have to either."

"True."

"P.S. Wilkinson?"

"Yes?"

"They sure fixed the gym nice, didn't they, P.S. Wilkinson?"

"Yes, they did. The old gym really looks nice and everything. I particularly like the way they painted all the basketballs different colors."

"Umm."

"You know what?"

"What?"

"No, guess. You gotta guess."

Maybe she wanted him to be selfish.

Playhouse

"THE GLASS MENAGERIE," the gentle drama by Tennessee Williams, will open the season at Society Hill Playhouse - West, (the former Neighborhood Playhouse) tomorrow at 8:00 p.m. This is the first production under the Society Hill Playhouse management at 22nd and Walnut Sts.

"THE GLASS MENAGERIE" ranks as a classic in American drama. It is studied in high school and college English classes, and Society Hill Playhouse - West will make an additional number of student tickets available for this production.

First performed in New York in 1945, "THE GLASS MENAGERIE" is celebrating its 20th birthday. It is considered to be one of Williams' finest plays. The many successful productions, including two New York revivals, have varied greatly in concept.

Some interpretations stress the haunting poetic qualities of the script; others like the recent production at the Guthrie theatre in Minneapolis, approach it as a realistic look at a family.

The Society Hill Playhouse - West production features Ruth Burrison as Amanda, Susan Turlish as her daughter, Laura, John Raymond as her son, Tom, and Frank Freda as the Gentleman Caller. "GLASS MENAGERIE" has been staged by Herman Osterneck with settings by Robert Donner and costumes by Jacqueline Weiss.

"THE GLASS MENAGERIE" will play on Friday and Saturday evenings only through November 27. All reservations may be made at PE 5-0574.

Dean of Women Gives Senior Girls 11 P.M. Nightly Permission

Senior girls who are resident students may now stay out on week nights until 11 p.m. No special permission is necessary for this privilege.

Announcement of the new policy was made last Thursday by Miss Dorothy Boyle, Dean of Women.

Previous policy allowed female seniors out until 10 on week nights, but only with permission slips. There was also an understanding that this was for a maximum of three nights a week.

The weekend one o'clock (with permission) policy remains unchanged.

Alabama

By Gene Kearney

It would appear that "justice" has run amuck again in the good old land of Dixie. Last week, in good old Lowndes County, Alabama, for reasons unbeknownst to all but Ku Klux Klansmen and Segregationists, a man, Tom Coleman by name, was found not guilty in a murder case.

Mr. Coleman, is without a doubt a grand patriot. He is not one of those Southerners who discriminate. Mr. Coleman would probably shoot white men before black men, if he thought such an action would be a contribution to the preservation of the status-quo in the place he calls home, Lowndes County, Alabama. We ask you now, Greater Love could any man Hath, than to lay down another's life for his friends.

As you may have figured out by now this is the same Tom Coleman indicted for manslaughter, in Alabama defined as killing "intentionally but without malice," in the murder of Jon Daniels, an Episcopalian seminarian, and Father Rickard Morrisoe. Mr. Coleman, after a long and arduous trial of one hour and twenty nine minutes, was pronounced "not guilty" by the ever objective all-white jury impaneled in forty minutes.

We would also like to extend out best wishes to one Mr. Leroy Wilkins who will return to the Lowndes County Courtroom later this month in a re-trial in the murder of Mrs. Viola Liuzzo. We feel that it would be only just that he get off scot-free too. Because it is written ... in the books of Alabama law, that it is only proper for Klansmen to exercise their civil rights of murdering, when encountering anyone exercising their God-given right of living. Or in the words of the Klan's Father Divine, George Wallace, Amen.

The Great Johnson Snow Job

By Bill Keane

With the recent passage of the bill to establish a National Foundation on the Arts and Humanities we have another example of the Johnson attempt to establish a "Great Society."

Costing in the neighborhood of twenty million dollars, the bill provides support for a NATIONAL repertory theater, a NATIONAL opera company, symphony orchestras, and an American film institute.

Such legislation can be instrumental in producing some very worthwhile accomplishments in the arts. The desire for a "Great Culture" is a commendable one but the means being used to achieve that end are not so desirable.

This bill shows once again that the American people are being "snowed" with the philosophy that big government on the federal level is the possible source for prosperity and achievement.

LOCAL POLITICIANS

It is obvious that there has been an unfortunate disintegration of initiative and responsibility on the individual and community level. The local politicians have shirked their duties and passed the buck to the big boys in Washington with the big money.

Hence, there has been a concurrent rise in the power and duties of the federal government which, if left unchecked, can have a serious effect on the American political system.

Too much power in too few hands isn't desirable in any organization, especially American democracy.

While we cannot brand any particular person or organization with the blame for this unfortunate situation, we cannot deny that there has been a gradual distortion of the originally-conceived American way of life.

We also cannot deny that the legislation program of the present President of the United States has been extremely effective in stripping the American citizen of his sense of responsibility and individualism.

For Mr. Johnson the end does justify the means. The American people are getting big government stuffed down their throats whether they like it or not.

Such "radical" assertions demand proof before they can be recognized and proof is very easy to come by these days. Consult your Congressional Record if you demand to see it in writing and consult your daily lives if you demand to see it in action.

WAR ON POVERTY

Government today reaches down into every home, every business, every farm, and every neighborhood. There are now federal registered and federal officials to prevent discrimination.

As part of the "war" on poverty, there is federal relief money for the indigent, dependent children, and the physically disabled, as well as community redevelopment projects.

Along with free medical, dental, and maternal care, there are programs of free food and subsidized housing included in the "war."

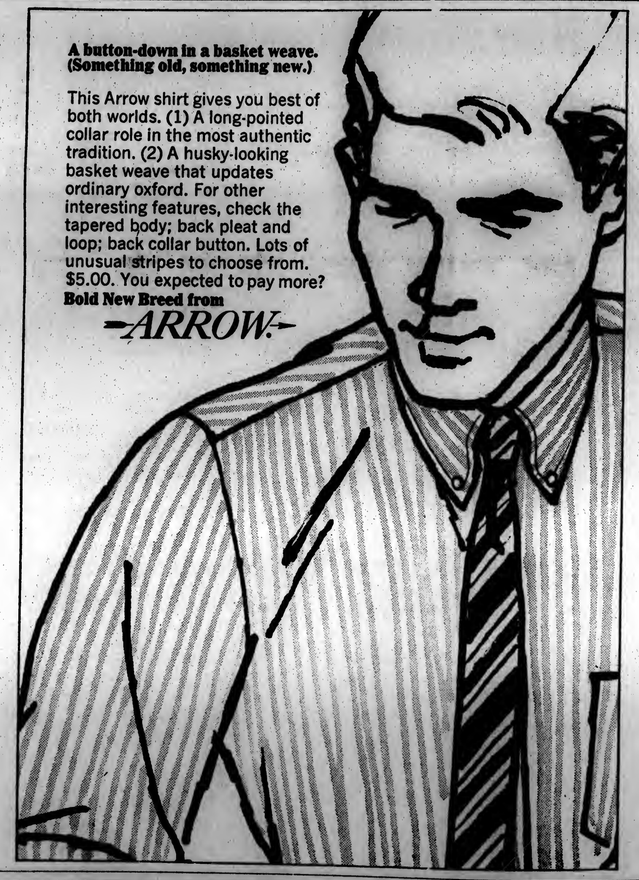
There is a subsidized program of medical care for the aged and nursing homes are being subsidized. Federal money is moving into all phases of education from teachers salaries to building construction.

The recent establishment of a Department of Housing and Urban Development is a perfect example of how the federal government is assuming the power and duties formally held by the cities.

Federal money is going into all facets of urban life including slum clearance, housing, air pollution, parks, transportation, water, and sewerage systems.

GREAT CULTURE

Now I have nothing against adequate housing, proper medical care, quality education, beautiful highways, clean water, or a "Great Culture." My concern is with who is assuming the responsibility for such matters and where it is ultimately leading us.



To achieve such measures on the local level requires, of course, more money which means more and higher local taxes. The vote-conscious politicians have failed to do so for fear of getting the big boot in the next election.

In their failure to assume what were once local responsibilities, they have opened the door to a big central government.

Today, given great impetus by the Johnson revolution, the federal machine is rolling full steam towards an ultimate end totally incongruous with the original American values and ideals.

It's time that Americans wake up to reality. Of course our problems are more numerous and complex than ever before, but is big central government and big central spending the answer?

In the long run the Johnson way of doing things is not the best. If a Great Society is ever to be achieved, it will by by the collective initiative, hard work, and sacrifice of the individual citizenry, not by one free-spending, free-giving politician in Washington D.C.

AUTOMATIC CHARGE FOR ALL VILLANOVA STUDENTS

OPEN WEDNESDAY & FRIDAY Until 9 P.M.

October 20, 1965

Dear Senior:

With the school year barely a month old, you may find this an odd time to be hearing about Senior Weekend, scheduled for March 25-26.

This year, rather than arbitrarily choose the theme and direction of the weekend, we are turning to you to ask for your cooperation in the planning of our last class function. You will soon receive a guidance control form, asking your preferences for the Senior Concert, Dinner Dance Orchestra, and several other phases as well. There is also space for your general comments and ideas, which will be welcomed and adapted.

Frequently, the expenses of a formal weekend are more than can be met on an immediate basis. For this reason, you will soon be contacted regarding the Installment Payment Plan. Coming in mid-Lent, the dance will not be one of several such weekends coming in quick succession, but will stand alone. The University's permission to hold the weekend at this time is not only appreciated, but a definite advantage.

The purpose of such long-range planning, which was begun last May, is to insure the most enjoyable and memorable time possible. Our hope is to have the largest possible number of seniors attend this class function. It is the last time that we will be able to share the University Experience as undergraduates. If poor planning and the absence of choice were to keep some seniors from attending, the weekend would be a failure for us all.

By filling out and returning the control form, you will be helping the class to take the first step toward a successful weekend. Hopefully it will be the finest such weekend in University History.

Very truly yours,
Eugene M. FitzMaurice
General Chairman,
Senior Weekend

Hot Summer

By Ron Javers

The long hot summer is ended. The rioters have put down their bricks and Molotov cocktails. The police have taken off their steel helmets. The citizens have unloaded their shotguns and heaved a bitter sigh of relief.

Emotions have been cooled to a lukewarm state of indignation on the part of the whites, and to a slow simmering frustration among the blacks.

While the Southern Negro marches quietly, the Northern Negro riots viciously. Both are protesting, but in different ways.

In the South, the Negro knows where he stands (How could he forget?), what with the White Citizens Councils, red-necked police chiefs, and carryings on of the sheet and pillow case crowd.

SHADE OF DIFFERENCE

In the North there is a shade of difference. Perhaps Yankees are more hypocritical by nature. They don't speak of "runnin' the nigger outa town." They just click their tongues at the poor savage Black Man, while subtly ingraining their children with the same prejudiced generalities that mar their own thinking.

The white man is still, in his pathetic way, trying to understand the Negro. He hands out relief checks with one hand, and jail sentences with the other, in the faltering hope of "rehabilitating" the Negro. Obviously this doesn't help. The white man persists in treating the Negro firstly as Negro, and secondly as man. The conflict arises here before it ever gets to the picket line.

The black intellectuals also exhibit disturbing cancers in their own thought patterns. The rise of novelists and artists like Baldwin and Le Roi Jones, with their parables of frustration and seething resentment, typifies the model of the depraved and intellectually mutated artist.

Their works portray the world as sick. Their error lies in mistaking ignorance for disease, fear for contagion. They would repay hatred with hatred, one hundred years of disillusion with an other hundred of revenge. Their answer to the challenge is a gigantic echoing NADA shouted into the sea of white faces around them.

MASSES

What of the rank and file masses of Negroes in our country today? Where do they stand? What do they want? The story has been told over and over again of the white man who boasted that his colored cook was against integration. (She'd better be!) We hear constantly the old refrain that most Negroes are content with their lot.

"It's only the hotheads and agitators that rile up the imaginations of our good nigras." It is an historical fact that revolutions are carried out by "hotheads" and "agitators." Man would still be huddled around a fire pounding stones together if it weren't for agitation of this kind.

It seems that freedom is much like the weather, everyone talks about it, but only a few, a very few will do anything about it. In short, the great mass of American Negroes truly want their rights, but will be content with having a small few lay their reputations, their jobs, and even their lives on the line to secure these rights.

SUCCESS

Probably one of the most unpublicized, but one of the most successful "agitations" this summer was the Mississippi Students' Project. Hundreds of college students from some of the best schools in the North traveled to Mississippi to teach Negro History, and basic skills to the almost unimaginably backward sharecroppers and laborers.

THEY CAME

These students came, put up with horrible conditions, insults and humiliations, in order to show white Mississippi that the idea of freedom is something more than the president's signature on a Civil Rights Bill in Washington. Three young people gave their lives.

It is curious to note that there is not one active group on the Villanova campus functioning expressly in civil rights activities. It WAS Christ who said, "Love thy neighbor," wasn't it? But that's old fashioned anyhow ... Besides, its football season, and what the heck.

ABC Plans To Broadcast Villanova's Jazz Festival

The American Broadcasting Company (ABC) has announced plans to offer the finals of the Sixth Annual Villanova Intercollegiate Jazz Festival to its hundreds of radio network outlets.

The announcement came in New York this week. According to plans announced by ABC Producer Luke Alexander, the Villanova Festival will be offered to stations along with the Mobile Jazz Festival which is holding its first performance this year.

No decision has been reached on whether to air the Villanova Festival live or offer it via tape recording to the stations at a time after the February 26 finals.

Last year the network carried the Villanova Festival live and provided a hook-up to Armed Forces Radio and other international broadcasting agencies.

ABC says it is attempting to get a sponsor to buy commercial time on both the Villanova and Mobile presentations. It is for this reason that the Festivals have been paired by the network.

Negotiations are also underway to have the jazz competition televised locally, probably via videotape. The festival has not been televised since two years ago when WRCV and WHYY taped it for use on Channel 3 in Philadelphia and on the National Educational Television network.

You Can Go Home Again

BY DON MONTANA AND FRANK MILLER SPIRIT COMMITTEE

The first Homecoming, November 2, 1929 is a proud date in Villanova History. There was a game and dance for the Alumni who had helped to rebuild Villanova after a storm of adversities in 1927. The Alumni had a dinner dance and a speaker and this was to become an annual event.

There wasn't another official homecoming, however, until 1956. From 1930 through 1940 there were alumni games, but there was no official homecoming.

During the war years there were no alumni weekends and from 1946-1955 Senior weekend replaced Alumni weekend as the biggest event of the fall semester. In 1956 things changed greatly and Homecoming as we know it today was originated. The first queen was elected that year and dormitory decorations and floats also became part of the festivities.

The dorm decorations which are associated with Homecoming weekend date back to the first game of the Temple series played in 1928. The dorm with the most original or elaborate ornamentations was given the Connolly plaque.

The award was renamed the Nick Basca trophy following World War II in honor of the Villanova All-America football star of the 1938-40 seasons who gave his life on the field of battle.

In recent years Fedigan and Sullivan Halls have been battling for the honor. Fedigan won it in 1962 and tied Sullivan in 1963, with Sullivan winning the laurels in 1964.

HOMECOMING

The only way that the homecoming grid contests can be described is that their results were sometimes totally unexpected. Upsets have been commonplace.

In 1960 the Wildcats were bogged down with an 0-6 log and were to face Rutgers for Homecoming. This was Rutger's glory year and they were the pride of the East with their 6-0 record.

They left Villanova Stadium smarting from a 14-12 loss. In 1932, however, the Cats weren't so lucky.

They had a solid 6-1 record and were playing a mediocre Detroit team, but the Titans whipped the Main-liners 28-12 to start a rivalry that ended last year, when the 'Cats smashed Detroit 34-0.

A Homecoming oddity occurred in 1937. In the Bacardi Bowl in Havana, Cuba, the Wildcats had tied Auburn 7-7 in the post season classic. It was decided after the game that the trophy would go to the winner of 1937 Villanova - Auburn clash.

Again there was a stalemate 0-0. This tie was the only blemish on a perfect season for the Blue and White.

In the 1939 clash the 'Cats knocked off a strong Arkansas team 7-0 on a 79-yard gallop by Joe Behot in the final stanza.

In the last ten years, Villanova has won eight Homecoming games while losing only two. In this string the Wildcats whipped Iowa State 26-0 in 1956, Florida State 21-7 in '57, Detroit 7-0 in '58, Rutgers 14-12 in '60, Buffalo 28-6 in '61, Detroit 14-0 in '62 and Detroit again 34-0 in 1964. The only losses were inflicted by Buffalo and Virginia Tech.

WEST CHESTER

The 'Cats have a proud Homecoming record behind them. This year West Chester is seeking to even their all time won-lost record against the Blue and White at 4-4.

The last time the two teams met was in 1962 when the Wildcats prevailed 31-6. The series started on November 28, 1895 when West Chester, then known as West Chester Normal School, smashed the 'Cats 24-0.

The Rams also posted wins in 1896 and 1959. Villanova scored big in 1933 (45-0), 1958 (28-14) and 1961 (40-13). This year's fray should uphold the tradition of excitement that has been generated through the years.

Homecoming seems to bring out the best in the Wildcats. This year every alumnus and undergraduate should leave the stadium feeling proud of the Villanova spirit.

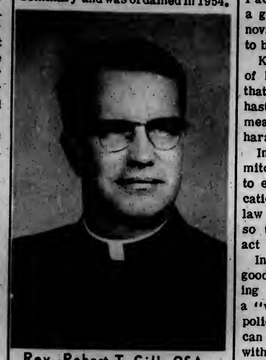
Dean Of Men Aims For Maturity

By Bill Keane

The principal goal of Villanova's new Dean of Men is to create an atomsphere of maturity.



With the emphasis on fairness, The Rev. Robert T. Gill OSA points out that "those who choose to disobey serious rules will meet with severity, and those who are sincere in making the most of their opportunities and develop their talents will meet with respect and good will."

It is not the purpose of the Dean of Men to play warden or official whip-cracker to Villanova students. Rather, keeping in mind the real objectives of Villanova, it is the duty of Father Gill to regulate and enforce school policies to best insure that the product will be educated Catholic gentlemen.

Although dormitory life can be very frenzied and noisy at times, Father Gill intends to "create a place to live in peace."

A native Philadelphian, Father offered the proof of his experience. "My training in the Navy proved to me that men can live in close quarters in peace; there is no need for noise."

After graduation from St. John's high school in Manayunk in 1943, Father Gill enlisted in the United States Navy. He saw action overseas in the Atlantic and Pacific. In 1946 he entered the Augustinian seminary and was ordained in 1954.

Rev. Robert T. Gill, OSA

For several years Father taught English at nearby Monsignor Bonner high school. Prior to his Villanova appointment Father Gill was principal of the Augustinian Academy at Staten Island, New York.

Concerning his new appointment Father said that it's "not a job one would volunteer for but one I accept with a determination to do a good job." He feels that Villanova is a "very challenging place to be."

Keenly aware of the complexity of his duties, Father pointed out that he doesn't intend to act in haste or do anything in anger. "I mean business but I'm not out to harass anybody."

In his program for peaceful dormitory life, Father Gill is trying to engender a spirit of communication with the various priests and law students who act as prefects, so they speak with authority and act with restraint and fairness.

In regard to the sale of edible goods in the halls during the evening hours, Father has adopted a "walk softly and don't scream" policy. Those who are vendors can do their job and not interfere with study time.

It should be noted that the sale of hoagies and other items is now under the supervision of the student government association. Any criticisms or suggestions should be directed to the SGA and not to the office of the Dean of Men.

Banmiller Elected

must remember that the presidency of ASGUSA is a separate entity. Support from Villanova was promised at the convention to insure the delegates that the Villanova SGA was completely behind the organization."

When asked what good the association with ASGUSA will do Villanova, the new president said, "The presidency of an organization composed of student government leaders across the nation stationed at Villanova will enhance the University's position."

Banmiller said the ASG's main source of revenue comes from corporation grants. The Villanova SGA will not be expected to supply revenue for the national organization. But Villanova's Student Government will be counted on for full support in backing ASG's fund raising campaigns.

As suggestions for the organization, the new president offered expansion of the filing system at the national office and further development of the group on the local and regional level. "We will fail in our overall objective," said Banmiller, "if we do not develop ASG on a regional, state and even local basis."

He pointed out the necessity of keeping in touch (through these regional offices) with those schools whose budgets do not allow them to attend the national convention.

Banmiller told the delegates he feels there is a need for a full time office for the group with a regular staff.

In addition he announced that Frank Eck "plans to re-group certain sections of the Student Council in order that we may have all the assistance we require in the administration of our affairs. He also promises immediate financial support when necessary in the form of donations. This support is to be in the thousands of dollars."

There was no explanation in the speech where the Villanova SGA was to get this money.

All five Villanova delegates returned on Sunday with reports of glowing praise for the organization and indications that they had learned much about ideas other schools have in relation to problems faced by the Villanova SGA.

In addition to the election, there was other excitement at the second annual conclave. The Rutgers (N.J.) delegation walked out of the convention when the group refused to back a proposal endorsing academic freedom. ASG reasoning was that the group was set up for non-political reasons and New Jersey politics did not enter into the scope of the convention. (At issue in the current New Jersey gubernatorial battle is the case of a Rutgers teacher who some think should be censured for certain views he has made known.)

WWVU radio has invited all five V.U. delegates to participate in a press conference to be aired on the station Wednesday evening, following the SGA meeting scheduled for broadcast at 6:30 p.m.

Ford Motor Company is:

responsibility

Stephen Jaeger
B.B.A., Univ. of Pittsburgh

A key dimension of any job is the responsibility involved. Graduates who join Ford Motor Company find the opportunity to accept responsibility early in their careers. The earlier the better. However, we know the transition from the academic world to the business world requires training. Scholastic achievements must be complemented by a solid understanding of the practical, day-to-day aspects of the business. That is the most direct route to accomplishment.

Stephen Jaeger, of the Ford Division's Milwaukee District Sales Office, is a good example of how it works. His first assignment, in January, 1963, was in the Administrative Department where he had the opportunity to become familiar with procedures and communications between dealerships and the District Office. In four months he moved ahead to the Sales Planning and Analysis Department as an analyst. He studied dealerships in terms of sales history, market penetration and potentials, and model mix. This information was then incorporated into master plans for the District. In March, 1964, he was promoted to Zone Manager—working directly with 19 dealers as a consultant on all phases of their complex operations. This involves such areas as sales, finance, advertising, customer relations and business management. Responsible job? You bet it is—especially for a man 25 years old. Over one million dollars in retail sales, annually, are involved in just one dealership Steve contacts.

As a growth company in a growth industry, Ford Motor Company offers an exceptionally wide spectrum of job opportunities. The chances are good that openings exist in your field of interest. See our representative when he visits your campus. We are looking for men who want responsibility—and will be ready for it when it comes.

Villanova Booters Roll Up Wins Over Fords, E. Baptist

By Tom Willson

Flashing more muscle and finesse than the opposition expected, the Wildcat booters clipped Haverford 1-0.

A devastating defense sparkled by halfbacks Kevin O'Malley and Cliff Herbert, shattered all the opposition's hopes. A hardnosed defense, combined with a speedy, elusive forward line started the Wildcats on the victory trail.

As the tense drama unfolded on the Haverford field, the Cats improved steadily as the game progressed, with goalie Steve Carney blocking all scoring attempts that Haverford attempted from outside the penalty box.

The Wildcats attacked the Haverford defense with short passing and fast breaks, but the "Fords" sought to battle the Cats on even terms with their own defensive set-ups. The end of the first half saw the two teams deadlocked in a scoreless tie.

The second half proved to be even more rugged than the first, and both squads were playing a more aggressive brand of ball. Switching from a 4-4-2 to a 4-3-3, the Wildcats stopped the Haverford offense cold, while the forward line hammered away at the opposing goalie.

Suddenly the Cat's left wing, Victor Cardoso, broke through the Haverford defense to score the winning goal to give the 'Cats a 1-0 victory.

Determined to prove to the soccer world that they would be a power within a few years, the Wildcat booters journeyed to Eastern Baptist College with hopes of snatching their second victory in the young season. In their most impressive performance thus far, the Wildcat booters smashed the opposition 3-0 and dominated the game both offensively and defensively, while rolling up their second victory.

Eastern Baptist started to pressure the Wildcat defense at the outset, but the 'Cats quickly adjusted to a running-type offense. Following the change in strategy, the tough Wildcat defenders broke up the opposing offensive plays and were constantly on the attack with the forward line.

Halfbacks Walt Helderman and Pete Collins forced the Baptist squad into numerous ball-handling errors, converting enemy scoring drive into Wildcat fast breaks. With the aid of star playmaker Karl Danz, Dietmar Parchingar scorched the nets for two goals, as the Wildcats thundered to a 2-0 lead at half-time.

Desperately, the opposition sought to score in the second half, but the Villanova goalies, Steve Carney and Neal Feldman blocked all scoring attempts as Victor Cardoso hit another goal to give the 'Cats a commanding 3-0 lead.

The Wildcat defense turned more tenacious than ever, as fullbacks Petie Stenner and Jan Montero rolled over the enemy's forward line, crushing all scoring thrusts before they even passed mid-field. The final whistle blew with Villanova defensive players hitting away at the Eastern Baptist goalie.

On Campus with Max Shulman

(By the author of "Rally Round the Flag, Boys!", "Dobie Gillis," etc.)

TWELVE IS A MANY-SPLENDORED THING

Today I begin my twelfth year of writing this column in your campus newspaper.

These dozen years have passed like a dozen minutes. In fact, I would not believe so much time has gone by except that I have my wife nearby as a handy reference. When I started this column, she was a mere slip of a girl—supple as a willow bough and fair as the morn. Today she is gnarled, lumpy, and given to biting the postman. Still, I count myself lucky. Most of my friends who were married at the same time have wives who chase cars all day. I myself have never had this trouble, and I attribute my good fortune to the fact that I have never struck my wife with my hand. I have always used a folded newspaper, even during the prolonged newspaper strike of 1961 in New York. During this journalless period I had the airmail edition of the Manchester Guardian flown in daily from England. I must admit, however, that it was not entirely satisfactory. The airmail edition of the Guardian is printed on paper so light and flimsy that it makes very little impression when one smacks one's wife. Mine, in fact, thought it was some kind of game and tore several pairs of my trousers.

But I digress. For twelve years, I say, I have been writing this column. That is a fact, and here is another: I shave every morning with Personna Stainless Steel Blades. I bring up Personna Stainless Steel Blades because this column is sponsored by the makers of Personna and they are inclined to brood if I omit to mention their products.

". . . only fleeting enthusiasm among the coaches."

Not, let me hasten to state, that it is any chore for me to sing the praises of Personna—as you will agree once you try this sharpest, smoothest-shaving, longest-lasting blade ever devised by the makers of Personna Blades—now available both in Double Edge and Injector style. Personna, always the most rewarding of blades, today offers even an extra reward—a chance to grab yourself a fistful of $100 bills from a $100,000 bowl! The Personna Stainless Steel Sweepstakes is off and running, and you're all eligible to enter. Visit your friendly Personna dealer soon to pick up an entry blank (void where prohibited by law).

And, by the way, while you're at your friendly Personna dealers, why don't you ask for a can of Burma Shave? It comes in Regular or Menthol; it soaks rings around any other lather, and it's made by the makers of Personna.

But I digress. For twelve years, I say, this column has been discussing, forthrightly and fearlessly, such burning campus questions as "Should students be allowed to attend first-hour classes in pajamas?" and "Should deans be retired at age 25?" and "Should foreign exchange students be held for ransom?".

Today, continuing the tradition, we take up the thorniest academic problem of all: the high cost of tuition. Let me tell you how one student, Lintel Sigafoos by name, solved this problem.

Lintel, while still a boy in Straitened Circumstances, Idaho, had his heart set on college, but, alas, he couldn't afford the tuition. He applied for a Regents Scholarship but, alas, his reading speed was not very rapid—only two words an hour—and before he finished even the first page of his exam, the Regents had closed their briefcases crossly and gone home. Lintel then applied for an athletic scholarship, but he had, alas, only a single athletic skill—balancing an ice cream cone on his chin—and this, alas, aroused only fleeting enthusiasm among the coaches.

And then he found the answer: he would get a student loan! Of course, he would have to pay it back after graduation, but clever Lintel solved that, too: he kept changing his major, never accumulating enough credits to graduate until he was 65 years old. Then he repaid the loan out of his Social Security.

Where there's a will, there's a way.

Maff's Musings

By Joe Maffongelli

With the inauguration of a new administration there is always a great deal of hearsay about such things as athletic policies. The man entrusted with the administration of this aspect of the university life at Villanova is Athletic Director Arthur L. Mahan. During a recent visit with this busy gentleman we learned of the changes which will and will not occur.

Mr. Mahan stated that the overall policy of the new administration on athletics will be to maintain the status quo. One of the main reasons for the emphasis of this point is the unfounded rumor which has spread to various sections of the campus regarding the supposed dropping of baseball. Villanova has established a respectable tradition on the diamond; and surely last spring's dedication of the baseball field would not have been warranted for a mere two weeks of play.

Another controversial topic on the campus has been the game with Washington State. Although the entire athletic department was overjoyed by the play of the 'Cats in the coast contest, no further plans have been made for the establishment of any big time rivalries. The game was merely a filler for the open date which resulted when Detroit dropped football.

The case of Virginia Tech is somewhat different in that they were scheduled at a time when such contests were a bit more feasible.

A further note on football is that, due to a request by the Student Government Association, any student will be able to present two matriculation cards at the ticket office and receive tickets on each of them for Homecoming.

Another Student Government motion has presented the idea of a James Bonder memorial trophy to be maintained by the victor of the VU - West Chester game each season. This idea has received the full approval of both Mr. Mahan and athletic director Robert W. Reese of West Chester.

There are no major innovations planned for basketball or track. The long semester break has made it possible for a majority of the season on the road to be played at a time when no valuable class time will be lost by the cagers. Most of the home games will be played during school time. The Holiday Festival will highlight the season for the 'Cats.

Ruggers Take 2 By 6-0 Scores

By Don Campbell

It was a beautiful day for the Villanova Rugby Club. Saturday was blessed by ideal Autumn weather and amidst Princeton's spectacular campus, the Cats walked away with two shutouts, both with an identical scores of 6-0.

"A" TEAM VICTORY

The "first 15" proved that the best defense is the best offense. Unable themselves to move the ball forward, the Main Liners, by keeping the pressure on the tiger backfield, let the tigers move it backward.

Seeing that his forward wall kept crumbling under a strong push by the home team, Captain Haller La Rue called his secondary in and ordered them to blitz.

Using lateral persuit and blitzing backs, the V.U. club spent all afternoon in the Princeton backfield.

Time and time again as their backs would touch the ball, several Villanova players would greet him with a sneaky smile and a thump.

After a couple of thumpings, the Tiger back would only need to see a smiling face, before he would lateral the ball.

This process was repeated over and over again until Princeton would run out of backs.

The last Tiger back would find himself about twenty or thirty yards behind the line with a bunch of grinning guys coming at him.

It was only a matter of time until this powerful offense which gained an average of 20 and -30 yards a try, eventually found themselves with no more yards to go.

This is when the Cat's were able to score. And this is when it would be time for Joe Forns to dive on a loose ball to put V.U. on the scoreboard.

He did this twice, both times in the second half.

Joe, who at 5'3" is usually the smallest man on the field, plays like he is 6'5" and 275 lbs. Unlike most small men who tend to run under people, the "immigrant" prefers to run through them.

Setting Joe up were Jerry Donavan, Bill Clark and Andy Sears who were all smiling the whole game.

"B" TEAM VICTORY

Seeing as to how seccessful the first team's strategy of defensive ball was, the "second 15" decided to match them. And match them they did, even winning by the same score.

This game was a wide open, up and back, standstill until the closing minutes of the game. Then the fine work of Mike Kain, Bob Gallo and Pete Conserva paid off.

Lightning struck twice and the score was 6-0 to make it a clean sweep for the visitors of Villanova. NOTES: Rich "the toe" Crawford is now being called "Oedipus" by his teammates ... Seems Rich missed 4 conversions and 9 field game attempts as he played both games ... the team shows quarter improvement with each game, their record is now 6 - 3 ... Coach Francis Coughlin is taking a leave of absence from the team. He needs the time in order to work on his doctorate thesis. The Rugby team wishes him luck ... Spring scheduling is complete and it lists 8 games including Villanova's own Seven-A-Sides tournament. Several carloads of Villanova fans accompanied the team and rooted them on ... Next, week the team plays Lafayette at 10 o'clock to start off the Homecoming atheletics.

Wildcat Runners Fall To Quantico; Marines' Experience Prevails, 33-22

By Ken Coniglio

The Villanova cross country team traveled to Fairmount Park Saturday to meet a strong and well balanced Quantico squad.

The Villanova team, lacking in experience but not in courage and determination lost to Quantico 33-22.

The Marines have had quite a successful season thus far and were determined not to let Villanova spoil their established marks. Quantico has always been a tough team to beat and this year is no exception.

It seems that they come up with a crack team every year. It must be noted that all their men have already had four years of college training and competition.

These are a strong, experienced group of veterans who know what it means to run. Experience is something that can be relied upon and be brought to use when the occasion arises.

No matter what the sport or how good the individual athlete may be, there is still no substitute for experience. When you have run for nine or ten years like many of the Quantico squad have done, you develop quite a background. This Saturday the Marines showed ability, and endurance. Defeats are always difficult to face: they tend to eat a team psychologically, especially when the team is composed of a group of young sophomores whose experience is minimal. Experience is not everything, but it helps. The Cats ran hard and gave their best.

It must be said that the Villanova team ran faster than ever before and their overall times have been improving week by week. This in itself is an indication of progress.

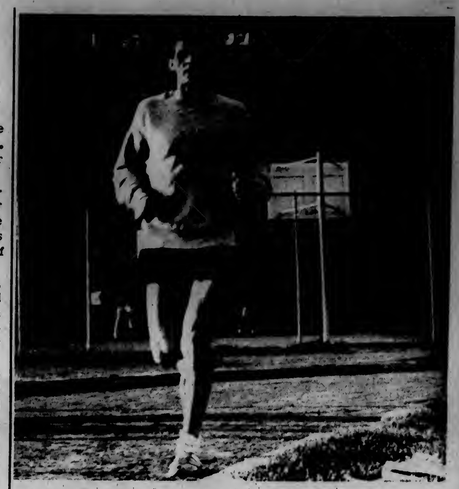
Losses may be hard to take, but in the final analysis they tend to harden and condition a team for the better. This, if nothing else is some consolation, if any consolation can be given.

Quantico swept the first three places in addition to seventh and ninth. The best the Cats could garner were fourth, fifth, sixth, eight and tenth. Tom Bache, formally of Purdue University and Bob Bruillet of the University of Mass. both breasted the tape in the identical time of 26 minutes and 41 seconds.

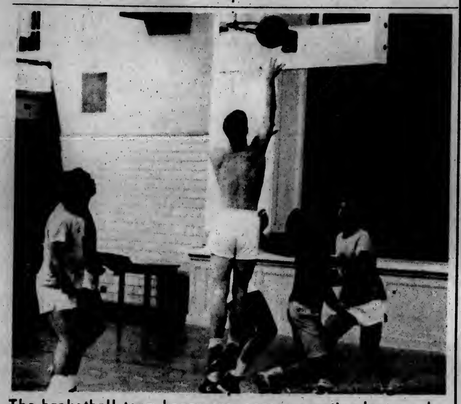
This time not only created a new meet record, but bettered the old course men like Vic Zwolack, Dave Hyland and Pat Traynor ran that same course for three years.

Mike Manley who hailed from the University of Wisconsin was third in the time of 26:52. Tom Sigguns, a graduate of Manhattan College was seventh in 28:12. Rounding out Quantico's scoring was Keith Forman from the University of Oregon, covering the course in 28:33.

Charlie Messenger, Villanova's top cross country man to date, was a close fourth, running the distance in 26 minutes 53 seconds. Dave Patrick followed fifth in 27:07, Jack O'Leary sixth in 28:00, Ian Hamilton eighth in 28:29.



Hamilton has just returned to the track from an illness which prevented him from competing in last week's victory over St. Joe's. Rounding out Villanova's effort was Al McCafferty, running 28:44. The entire scoring for Villanova was accomplished by sophomores.



Looking on the brighter side, the freshmen team, led by Steve Gentry, scored their second straight dual meet victory by defeating St. Joe's.

Their first win came from Penn State, two weeks ago. With a lot of hard work and perseverance this squad has the nucleus of becoming a fine team.

Next week, Villanova hosts a very fine St. John's team at Fairmount Park. They will provide quite a bit of competition in the person of Larry Furnell. Meet records have been falling left and right to Furnell. He has already proved he is worthy of his All American title.

Villanova will have its work cut out and it will take a good team effort to defeat St. John's.

The basketball team began pre-season practice last week.

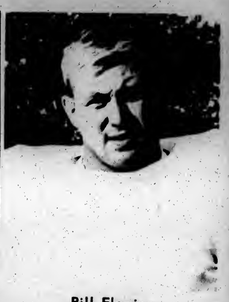
West Chester Rams Invade Villanova for Homecoming



Homecoming day should be tinged with an added amount of sentiment this coming weekend. The Rams of West Chester will come into the Stadium with a loss in their hearts due to the recent passing of their beloved coach, Dr. James B. Bonder.

So far, the effect of this loss has been one of intense inspiration as evidenced by their latest swamping of Bloomsburg State College last Saturday.

The Rams began the season with a mere thirteen lettermen returning off a 6-2 record, their main problem being at tackle where all the beef had departed. This weakness, though greatly reduced, still remains. For this reason, the Purple and Gold has relied on the ability of their fleet backs to supply the Rams with the needed yardage.

Being a traditional attraction on the Main Line, this will be the ninth in a series which finds Villanova holding a 5-3 edge in victories. The last meeting of the two clubs took place during the 1963 season when the 'Cats won a hard-fought 21-9 decision.

Overall the setting seems to be perfect for the homecoming crowd. The added incentive of the Rams measured against the 'Cats search for their first win should create quite a battle.

It would seem that last week's Delaware contest brought the Wildcats to life as they finally gained offensive punch. However, the desire to win will be satisfied fully by anything less than a victory.

Wildcats Suffer 4th Straight Loss; Drop 24-21 Decision To Inspired Hens

By John DiGennaro

Last Saturday the Wildcats traveled to Newark to take on the Blue Hens of Delaware, at their home stadium, before 12,288 paid admissions. After two grueling games against major powers, the 'Cats supposedly in the downward swing on their schedule, took the field looking for their first victory of the '65 season. They'll do the same next weekend.

Their running game hampered by injuries to Tommy Brown, and Joe Santomauro, they just didn't have enough to cope with the fired-up Hens led by senior quarterback Tom Van Grofski.

The cool veteran constantly came up with the big play, hitting on 12 of 19 through the air, as he led the Hens to 17 first downs and 353 yards total offense.

Villanova, behind by two touchdowns at half time, fought back gamely in the third quarter to tie the score, but the hustling Hens came back with a fourth quarter field goal by Mike Zauzig to take the lead, and the ball game.

John Kolmer, seemingly the 'Cats bread and butter man this year, scored three touchdowns; and John Shunke, area "player of the week" last week, and a sure bet to smash all Villanova pass catching records before the season is over, broke two single game marks with seven catches good for 133 yards.

It was the third straight game he has gone over the hundred mark in pass catching yardage, and it brought his season's totals to 16 catches for 363 yards.

Tony Ferrainolo returned the opening kick off to the 21, where the 'Cats put the ball in play first and ten. Trying to establish their running game the 'Cats were stopped cold by the rugged Delaware defense, and on fourth and 12 were forced to punt.

Delaware took over on their own 36 and methodically marched down field, in nine plays, for 64 yards and the touchdown. Ed Mason scored it on a four yard plunge off right tackle, and Buddy Luby's kick was good, giving Delaware an early 7-0 advantage.

BAD FIRST QUARTER

The rest of the quarter was dominated by the punters as neither team could get much of a threat going, and the Wildcats changed sides with only 22 net yards in total offense to show for their 15 minute effort.

John Kolmer en route to one of his three touchdowns.

Early in the second quarter, behind the passing of Billy Andrejko, the 'Cats came to life. With the big play being a 43 yard pass, Andrejko to Sodaski, the 'Cats marched 66 yards in 10 plays, with Kolmer ramming off right guard for the score. Case's attempt was good, and it was all tied up at 7-7.

Wright returned the kick-off to his own 31, and the Blue Hens were off and running again. Twelve plays later the 69 yards were behind them, and Mason, once again hitting off right tackle, broke the tie with his second six pointer. Luby converted, and Delaware led 14-7.

Following the kickoff, Villanova fumbled on the third play from scrimmage, Delaware recovered, and put the ball in play just over the mid-field stripe. The 'Cat defense toughened, and four plays later Joe Greco returned Van Grofski's punt to the Villanova 23. Now it was Delaware's turn again, and Don Keister picked off an Andrejko pass, and returned it to the Villanova 35.

This time Delaware took advantage of the break, as Van Grofski, on a beautiful effort, scrambled out of his pocket, broke away from several tacklers, and hit Brian Wright on the 12 where Wright made an even better effort, catching the ball, and then zig zagging his way into the end zone for the score. Luby's conversion was good, and Delaware now had a commanding 21-7 lead.

The Wildcats had one more chance before the half, as Ray Covi covered a Spangler fumble, and Andrejko hit Shunke for a first and goal from the three. However, Delaware stiffened, and on third and goal, this time from the five, Bill Neider and Herb Slattery made the big play as they blitzed through and spilled Andrejko for a 14 yard loss.

Dave Connell alertly picks off a Van Grofski aerial.

'CATS REBOUND

Case kicked off to start the second half, and Spangler returned to the Delaware 25. Some 30 yards, and two first downs later, the 'Cat defense held, and Van Grofski dropped back to punt. On the first play Shunke took a deflected pass as it bounced off the helmet of a fallen player, and rambled 58 yards down to the Delaware 18 yard line.

Three plays later Kolmer bulled his way off right guard for seven yards and a touchdown. Case converted, and suddenly the Wildcats were back in the ball game.

Wright returned the kick off to the 20, where on the first play George Hunt fell on another Spangler fumble, and the 'Cats were off and moving again. On a clutch third and 10 Andrejko reversed to Santomauro, who turned the corner for 16 yards and a first down on the six.

Two plays later, Kolmer once again hit right guard, this time diving over, for his third score of the afternoon. Case's kick was good, and it was a brand new ball game.

That's exactly how it stood until well into the fourth quarter, when Van Grofski led the Hens down to a first and goal on the Villanova eight. Here the 'Cat defense dug in.

Led by Ray Covi who twice broke in, spilling first Mason, then Van Grofski for losses totaling 15 yards, the 'Cats forced the Hens into a fourth and 14 from the 14. Buddy Luby had handled the kicking chores all afternoon for the Hens, but now Coach Davey Nelson sent in Mike Zauzig, a sophomore end, to try the field goal.

Zauzig, making his first varsity appearance at a rather unenviable time, came through with a 21 yarder with only 4:44 left on the clock, and sent Villanova down to its fourth straight defeat.

Wildkittens Roll To Second Straight; Balanced Attack Crushes Bullis 38-0

By Charlie Haryslak

The stocks on Villanova's future football fortunes went up about twenty points last Friday afternoon as a mauling 'Nova frosh team ripped through a dazed Bullis Prep squad 38-0.

Just to get the incidentals out of the way, the Bullis offense stepped no further than the Blue and White 22-yard line as the fired up Wild kittens turned a predicted tight game into a rout.

Things got off to a bang early with the help of a 5'9", 185 pound pile driving half back by the name of Barry Werkheiser. The stocky frosh started off a great day with a 25 yard jaunt around right end for the 'Nova first six pointer early in the first quarter.

While Werkheiser was given the Prep defense ulcers, another wildkitten work horse in the form of 5'11", 180 pound Denny Kelly was getting scoring ideas of his own. Hard hitting Kelly went off tackle for 4 yards for the next 'Nova T.D. after a picture perfect engineered drive by quarterback John Sodaski.

Sodaski completed to fullback Mike Zizzo for the 2 points and the unstopable wildkittens took what was to be a relaxing 14-0 lead.

But the 'Nova eleven was just starting to roll. After a good-looking defense, lead by a mangling defensive end 6' 1", 205 pound George Martin, handed the ball back over to the Blue and White; Den Kelly once more crossed the Bullis goal on a 1 yard plunge, and gave the Wild kittens a commanding 20-0 half time lead.

The half-time break did nothing to the 'Nova momentum as Barry Werkheiser broke loose on a dazzling 64 yard run for another Villanova score early in the third quarter. A trace of jealousy began to show on the wild kitten defense and two minutes later, Wayne Wiggins, a 6'1", 215 pound tackle took a blocked Bullis punt 24 yards for another 'Nova tally to widen the gap to 32-0.

The prepsters could do nothing right and the Wildkittens could do no wrong and they were far from finished showing off some of their devastating prospects.

Frank Boal, 5'9", 170 pound half back snagged onto a Bullis pass and gave the Blue and White another opportunity for a score. In the drive, Boal was on the receiving end of two Villanova aerials that set up the final Sodaski to Werkheiser 20 yard touchdown tally.

The 38-0 score was impressive, especially against a usually tough Bullis Prep squad but the sparkling performance by a well rounded Wild kitten team was even more impressive.

Barry Werkheiser crossed the Bullis goal three times and ripped through their defense for a half decent season's worth of yardage, most of the time taking a few defenders along for the ride.

Den Kelly also chalked up some impressive yardage along with his 2 T.D.'s. Quarterback John Sodaski moved the 'Nova eleven like a man possessed (with winning).

The 'Nova defense backboned by George Martin, Tom Braun and Rich Moore had all the characteristics of a brick wall.

Rumor has it that this is one of the best Frosh grid squad that Villanova has been blessed with in many a year. Give this Wild kitten squad a football and you can bet that rumors are going to spread real fast.

Marguerite Higgins Speaks On Viet Nam Confrontation

Marguerite Higgins, Pulitzer Prize journalist and author of three books, is scheduled to answer the question, "Are We Losing In Viet Nam?" in a Field House lecture tomorrow evening, Thursday, November 4, at 8 p.m.

The journalist is currently a syndicated columnist with offices at the National Press Building in Washington, D.C. Her column appears locally in the PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER. She is a frequent guest interviewer on Metromedia's "Opinion in the Capitol" broadcase on WIP-Radio and WHYY-TV.

Miss Higgins' lecture will be enhanced by her immediate proximity to the Viet Nam scene. She has experienced not an outsider's view but an involved insider's reaction to the combat as evidenced by her recent accompaniment of a Marine patrol.

"Maggie," as she is affectionately known to fellow correspondents, soldiers and general alike, graduated from the University of California in 1941 and from Columbia University's school of journalism in 1942.

The Pulitzer Prize winner became a staff member of the NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE in 1942 and a full time foreign correspondent in 1944. During World War II, she was chief of the Berlin and Tokyo Bureaus, respectively.

Hong Kong is the birthplace of this talented correspondent. Her American Army officer father and her French mother sent her to school in France and England, thus beginning her world wide experiences.

The Pulitzer Prize for Reporting was awarded to Miss Higgins in 1951 for her work in Korea. For 23 weeks she reported all aspects of the fighting -- including the Inchon landing, where for the first time in history the Marines allowed a woman to join them in a beachhead invasion. When General Walker ordered her back to the rear lines for her safety, she stood her ground by saying, "I am here as a reporter, not as a woman." General MacArthur consented to her desire and she went into the thickest fighting.

Since then Miss Higgins has reported from all corners of the world with her present assignment in Viet Nam paralleling in importance her work of eight years in Korea.

Christmas Cards Sent to Viet Nam By V.U. Students

Under the auspices of the SGA, Villanova students are sending Christmas cards to soldiers in South Vietnam. The cards were sold in Dougherty Hall Monday and Tuesday last week at the price of a penny per card.

Over 20,000 cards have been purchased on which the students wrote their own personal messages. Rev. George Lawless, OSA, initiated the idea and the SGA assumed responsibility. The cards were paid for by the Dean of Student Activities, Father Ryan, and they will be sent to Vietnam by an organization in Bryn Mawr who is paying for the postage.

Frank Eck, acting president of the SGA said that he was very pleased by the response of the Villanova students. "It certainly cannot be denied that Villanova is in favor of the present policy of the U. S. in South Vietnam."

Several students were interviewed on this Yuletide project. Among these are senior, Don Franz "... something like this is needed to boost the morale of the soldiers;" junior nurse, Marie Gadren "... it shows that the college students are behind them;" Lynn Davis, freshman nurse "... all

Belle Masque to Present 'A Man for All Seasons'

A MAN FOR ALL SEASONS, Robert Bolt's award winning masterpiece will be presented next week by Belle Masque.

The play is in conjunction with the Villanova Arts Forum.

This production will be the first in recent years to be presented in the Villanova Field House. This will be one of the first off-Broadway showings of this hit play.

The epic production depicts the later life of Sir Thomas More, basically, symbolizing a man's choosing between the spiritual and the mundane. More, in his position as Chancellor of England, is constantly plagued by the egotistical king Henry VIII. Henry seeks to coerce his Chancellor into petitioning the Pope for an unlawful annulment. More's refusal in the light of his moral obligation results in his martyrdom.

16th century costume, valued in excess of $1,500, has been procurred especially for the Belle Masque.

The lead role of Sir Thomas More, will be done by Brian Morgan. The rather large cast is mainly composed of experienced Belle Masque dramatists such as, John McPeak in the versatile role of the Common Man and Jerry Bober as Archbishop Cranmer.

Past and present presidents of the Belle Masque each have roles in this years production, Richard Galli, last year's president, as the Duke of Norfolk and Michael Sutherland as King Henry VIII.

Several new faces appear in the cast. James Cahill and Don Kelly are freshmen who "no doubt will be seen in many future Belle Masque productions," according to an officer of the group.

The female roles are equally well staffed. Bonnie Marie Lucas, Cabrini college senior, is the veteran of many a Belle Masque play. As Lady Alice More she has an opportunity to show her talents once again. Rosemont is also well represented by freshman Shelley Daly in the role of Lady Margaret More. Finally Villanova's Betty Kelly has the role of Catherine Anger.

Already several hundred tickets have been sold. Tickets will be available in the Pie Shoppe anytime until the show dates of November 11, 12, 13, and 14. Ticket prices range from $2 general admission to $1.25 for students. The curtain goes up at 8, nightly.

Early Frosh Elections Out As SGA Passes Three Motions

by Bill McCloskey

Student Government meets tonight at 6:30 p.m. to hear a report from Frank Eck on the student-faculty committee meeting last Wednesday. In addition, two motions will be voted on and two constitutional amendments read for consideration.

The meeting is scheduled for the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall and will be broadcast to the campus by station WWVU.

To be considered are motions on INVESTIGATIONS into the possibility of getting vending machines for dormitories and the filing of a syllabus for each course in the Falvey Library.

The amendments to the 18-month-old constitution would change two Senate procedures. One allows campus news media freedom of access to judicial proceedings, the other is designed to give Senators more time to consider motions by setting an earlier deadline for their submission.

While tonight's meeting prom-

Australian Diplomat Defends Viet Nam Policy Before VPU

A high-ranking Australian diplomat will defend Allied policy in Vietnam before the Villanova Political Union Monday evening. The debate meeting, which is open to the public, will be held at 7:30 p.m. in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall on the University campus.

The Union's guest will be Robert H. Robertson, Counsellor of the Australian Embassy in Washington. Counsellor Robertson has served his country in Pakistan, at the United Nations and in Canberra, as well as in Washington. In Pakistan he served as Third Secretary in the Australian embassy. At the UN he was Second Secretary in the Australian Mission.

R. Gregory Leonard, '66, Union President, says that the meeting will be unusual, if not unique, in having a non-American official defend Allied policy in Vietnam.

While South Vietnamese and Americans are bearing the brunt of the fighting in that country there is a significant Australian contribution. As usual members of the Union's three parties, Liberal, Conservative and Moderate, will take part in the debate.

At the Union's last debate, on October 18, the Union supported NAACP leader Cecil B. Moore in opposing repeal of Section 14-b of the Taft-Hartley Law which permits state "right-to-work" (i. e. open shop) laws. Moore's position surprised the Union and probably helped the Conservatives and their allies to win an unusual 3-1 victory.

To an audience of 175, the largest in the Union's history, Moore said he would oppose repeal of 14-b until "the umbrella of organized labor is big enough to cover Negroes." He said that the union shop had often been used as a technique for racial discrimination.

Vamp to Kick Off Third Campaign Meeting Nov. 8

The Villanova University aid to Mexico project will kick-off its third year's campaign, Tuesday November 8, 1965, at 7 p.m. in 113 Corr Hall.

Also, each Tuesday evening thereafter at the same time and place there will be a meeting of this group. All people interested in spending the coming summer working in Mexico are invited to attend.

During the coming months, several speakers are slated to address this group, notably, a former Villanova undergraduate, Thomas McMahon, currently of Jefferson Medical School, who was last year's field leader in Ixhautlan De Madero, Mexico. Presently, Mr. Cornelius Carr, Fulbright Fellow, 1965 Villanova graduate and former VAMP group leader in Alamo, Mexico will coordinate the Mexican VAMP effort while studying at Guadalajura, Mexico.

The proceeds of a student government association mixer have started VAMP on its way in the fund raising field. Moreover, money raising projects, Spanish language and Mexican culture classes will be the groundwork of this year's VAMP meetings. The Villanova aid to Mexico project is student originated and attempts to be student financed, your support and participation are welcomed. The project is open to all Villanova University students, men and women. The Villanova aid to Mexico project chairman for '65-'66 is Patrick Mahady who can be contacted in 314 St. Rita's. Hall; and, Father Michael Gallagher, OSA is the moderator.

Bishop Hyland to Celebrate Annual Law School Red Mass

On Friday evening, November 5, at 7 p.m., the Annual Red Mass for the students and alumni of the Villanova University School of Law will be celebrated in the Church of St. Thomas of Villanova on the campus. The Mass is traditionally celebrated to ask the blessing of the Holy Spirit upon the students, faculty and alumni of the School of Law.

The Mass is known as the Red Mass for two reasons. The vestments of the clergy and the altar cloths are of that color which has always been associated with the Holy Spirit. Likewise the robes of the English judges were red, and in the popular mind this fact was associated with the Mass which the judges attended as a group, attired in their robes.

Rev. Lane D. Kilburn, CSC

Pontifical Mass will be celebrated by the Most Reverend Francis E. Hyland, former Bishop

Playbox's 'Miss Jairus' Debuts Friday Night; Will Run Three Weeks

The second presentation of the Villanova Playbox season will be Michel de Ghelderode's "MISS JAIRUS." As a statement of Ghelderode's own brand of Christian pessimism, the play celebrates the mystery of death through a keen awareness of the senses. The great Flemish playwright himself called "MISS JAIRUS" his climactic work, a macabre perusal of death in life and life in death.

Mr. Richard A. Duprey, Chairman of the Graduate Theatre Department at Villanova University directed "MISS JAIRUS." Thomas F. Nevins, assistant professor in the department, designed the set.

Judy Bell portrays the title character, a young girl who arises from the dead. Her distraught parents are played by Louis Lembo and Phyllis Restaino. Leslie Lee appears as the girl's crazed fiance and Frank Pennypacker and Tom Fennessey as the unscrupulous vicar and doctor in the Flemish town where the show is set. Julie Bell plays Mankabena -- the witch -- and Sandra Salvana, Cara Saylor and Carolyn Nicosia the three harpies who come to mourn. Also included in the cast are Howard Becker, Harry Guy and Bernard De Koven.

Drill Show of Whiskey Co. To Highlight Navy Weekend

by Dale Pappert

Navy weekend and Fall Review will be held on separate dates this year, with the activities starting on November 2. The review will follow on November 6 with the performance of the Whiskey Co. at the Villanova-Quantico football game. The Navy dance will be held November 12 to commence the weekend.

The Navy review was yesterday at 3 p.m. on Austin Field. The purpose of this annual review is to culminate the Fall drill practices. The review consists of the entire midshipman battalion, which is comprised of 300 men. The reviewing officer is Father Flaherty, president of the university.

Highlights are the march at 3 p.m. followed by the Officer's Center, in which the officers present themselves to the Battalion Commander, Midshipman First Class Brett.

After this the Awards Ceremony takes place. Recipients receive awards for outstanding achievements on past summer cruises. Other awards go to the NROTC pistol team, who succeeded in attaining first place for the second year in a row at the Secretary of the Navy Pistol Match. The last event is the Pass and Review for Father Flaherty, highlighted by Whiskey Co.

Navy weekend begins November 6, starting with the Military Mass at 9 a.m. in the Chapel. After the mass and the blessing of the colors, the battalion marches to Bartley Hall for breakfast ceremonies. That afternoon the Battalion marches at Halftime of the Villanova-Quantico game. Again the highlight is Whiskey Co.'s performance.

Due to circumstances the Navy Dance is on November 12 this year. It is being held at the George Washington Country Club in Valley Forge.

LKD Fraternity Takes Youths To Zoo; Editorial Criticized

By Jeff Radowich

On October 17, 1965, Lambda Kappa Delta Fraternity of Villanova University embarked on their Annual Orphans' Outing.

In the five year history of the undertaking, the LKD men have visted many area orphanges and have provided many happy hours for the children involved.

This year they journeyed to St. Edmund's Home, located in Bryn Mawr. Twenty children were transported in the fraternity's private cars to the Philadelphia Zoo.

Eighty brothers and pledges took part in the six hour outing. The children, age four to twelve, were provided with various souvenirs and snacks, including several spilled sodas, numerous overturned popcorn bags and an amazing number of very sticky taffy apples.

VERY HAPPY

They were returned to the nuns very tired and happy after a very successful orphans' outing.

Rich Andrejkovics, a sophomore A.B. Science major, was LKD's coordinator. Although the work involved was great, Rich was able to label the outing: "A very satisfying service to the community."

Pledge David Pergola, a soph social science major who attended the outing, reported that "It felt good doing stuff for the kids. I had a crippled child as my orphan and, though it may sound silly, it really made me feel pretty good. I think it was a real worthwhile experience."

Commentary in a different vein was provided by Lambda Kappa Delta's President, Vic Flagiello: "Three days after our orphans' outing, that contrived editorial appeared in the VILLANOVAN which blasted us for unsuitable hazing.

"I wish whoever wrote that article could have been at our orphans' outing. It's amazing the way a biased writer can leave out half the facts and so totally misrepresent the issue.

ERRORS

"It seems to me that that editorial is an excellent example of inaccurate and uninformed journalism.

"First of all, it contained at least two serious errors. LKD is not a pre-med frat, not by Constitution, not by practice and certainly not by spirit. And it's not a purely social organization. We maintain study hours, tutor programs, a file of tests and notes; we emphasize the orphans' outings and our other community service projects.

"Secondly, I can't agree with his hazy conception of hazing. He seems to feel the only purpose is to 'show a student's loyalty to his brothers.' It's much more than that. The elementary issue of sacrificing for a desired end and the ability to withstand an unfavorable atmosphere for the greater good, these are factors. The strength of the pledge's perseverence, the depth of his character, these are involved in a very basic way.

HASTILY WRITTEN

"Thirdly, it is perhaps typical of this sort of editorializing that no suggestions were made, no guidelines proposed, no constructive criticism tendered. It strikes me that this article was hastily written and inadequately researched.

"So it is probably true that 'the positions of brotherhoods ... has been up and down during the past several years,' but not, as the writer suggests, because of hazing or any other fraternity project.

"The reputation of fraternities, like newspaper writers, suffers from biased, short-sighted, incomplete reporting.

"I would be willing to wager a good deal that the unfortunate writer of that totally unjustified piece of journalism is not a member of a fraternity. And I think I know why ..."

Quick Exchange

by Matt Roche

The news has been pouring into the VILLANOVAN office at a floodgate speed. The mating by machine mania has spread from Purdue where the university held an I.B.M. card dance to Saint Louis University. Students filled out questionnaires several days ahead of time listing their dating preferences.

When a student reports to the gym, he receives his data-processed card and reports to a student center where he'll receive assistance in finding his date. Undoubtedly, dates with holes in their heads can be traced back to a hole in the I.B.M. card ...

St. Louis U. has an outstanding lecture series for this academic year, including Theodore C. Sorenson, and Jules Feiffer ... All this is one more example of the greater attention that is being paid to things of the mind which properly belong at a university.

Students are becoming increasingly concerned with life outside of the narrow pages of the text. Perhaps this is a partial explanation of such varied things as: Temple's Film Society featuring Bergman's WILD STRAWBERRIES, a discussion at the University of Maine on "Is the world run by machines?", the scandal at Penn of the speculators who are investing in land which is most likely to be bought by the Redevelopment Authority, the $200,000 which is being spent by Temple to erect a 100-foot high bell tower.

The tower is going up while Temple students are holding their breath hoping that tuition will go down after the school becomes a satellite in the state school constitution ...

Schools such as Bonaventure have provided a much-needed example of procuring interesting films for students. After the nuns complained to the Director of Student Activities that the films were too "candy coated," the university has scheduled such movies as: THE L-SHAPED ROOM, THE PUMPKIN EATER, LILITH, AND HUSH ... HUSH, SWEET CHARLOTTE.

Incidently, the last film is scheduled for Hallowe'en ... Religion on campus is receiving renewed questionings with such articles appearing as "Is Retreat Defeat?" ...

A sign of the times appeared in THE VILLAGE VOICE advertising "Sensuous ear piercing" ... that is the end of the line for the corresponding papers. Until next time ...

Viet Nam Letters

Editor's Note: The following letters have been received in response to Villanova's activity in "Mail Call Vietnam." The Villanovan suggests that students write these individuals and thank them for their letters.

To The Editor:

Enclosed is a clipping which appeared in the SAIGON POST of today's date. As an alumnus of Villanova University, I was very proud to read this article. It seems ridiculous in this age of advanced communications that one could fail to see the necessity of our presence here in Vietnam.

Our purpose here has been explained in the United Nations, United States and to the world. It is incredible that a supposedly educated college student or faculty member could call for a U. S. withdrawal from Vietnam. Not only would it condemn to ruthless communism the South Vietnamese people who have bravely fought for their freedom for over 20 years, but it would mark a responsible world power retreating from its duty in this so-called age of the "cold war" and "peaceful coexistence."

No one wants to "end the war in Vietnam" any more than I do (and I think I speak for all who are away from their homes and families). But not at any price; especially the price of our self-respect. In the eyes of the Asian we "lost face" in Korea, but at least we achieved a status quo. If we quit in South Vietnam, the loss of face will be complete.

I know of at least two other alumni here in Vietnam. Don Anderson, a classmate of mine is here and the local director of Catholic Relief is from the Class of '57, I believe. Please extend my sincere thanks to Student Council president Frank Eck, Mrs. June Orsteen and the student body of the fighting Wildcats (judging from the football scores this year it looks like a good basketball year). Keep up the good work.

Warmest regards,

My Dear Villanova Students:

Enclosed is a clipping that made me feel very happy -- because of the recent demonstrations against Viet Nam, I thank God Villanova so far is neutral.

I have sent this same clipping to my son Edmond J. Smith a graduate of Villanova Class of '64. My son will be very happy to read about Villanova students and their planned efforts.

Please may I beg of you not to demonstrate, which I'm sure you won't. They have it hard enough, let's not hurt them more.

I have asked the same question of my son "Do we belong there?" He said only one word, "Yes."

I will be ever grateful to you in this situation. May God bless you all.

I had a letter from Edmond this week and he said, "How I wish I were back in Villanova." Would it be possible to send him a Christmas Card? He would be most grateful.

His address is:

Father Ryan Evaluates SGA As Student Activities Dean

by Bill McCloskey

Rev. James D. Ryan, OSA, was appointed Dean of Extra-Curricular Activities during the past summer. In his first few months in what seems to many the busiest job on the campus, he has had a chance to look into and evaluate many organizations.

On Wednesday night, October 20, Father Ryan gave his views on the most important student organization on campus, the Student Government Association.

Speaking to the full Congress gathered for the bi-weekly meeting, he assured the SGA that the current administration of this University has no issue with the students. He asked that Congress members divorce from their mind any thoughts that SGA-Administration relations must be a fight.

He assured the organization that the Administration was willing to work with the students and asked for student support for the administrators.

APATHY HIT

In his speech, Father Ryan pinpointed apathy as the primary problem facing the SGA. "There are some on this campus who are simply not involved; not involved academically, religiously or socially.

"The SGA and the classes are working hard to dispel this apathy. In particular, I'd like to point out the SGA newsletter, and the Sophomore and Junior Class steering committees as aiding in getting people involved."

The Dean said he felt "any failure of the SGA would be my failure" and continued "the only way the Student Government can fail is if it does not make mature decisions. If this would happen, people would lose respect for the organization and would therefore ignore it."

Father Ryan then warned SGA about following the SGA opinion poll blindly.

After mentioning the polls as one of the vehicles used to counteract apathy, Father said "the students elect you to make decisions. By taking this poll you get their feelings on matters, but it is up to you to decide if things are feasible."

LIKE A ROSE

Frank Eck, who introduced Father to the meeting spoke briefly after Father Ryan's address to concur with the tenets of the speech.

Just back from the highly successful Associated Student Governments meeting at Purdue, Eck noted that after considering the things that other large universities have to face, "Villanova comes up smelling like a rose."

In addition to being Dean of Extra-Curricular Activities, Father Ryan is also a member of the Theology department, offering one of the televised courses and is Moderator of the Class of 1967.

The Critters will provide the entertainment with the Villanovans playing at dinner and intermissions. Chairman Chip Koepenick reports that there has been a tremendous class reaction to the dance, the first of its nature to be held off-campus by a sophomore class.

The gala weekend concludes on Sunday with a brunch in the dayhop cafeteria, following a Mass in Corr Hall Chapel. Guest speaker for the brunch will be WIBG's Bill Wright Sr.

Another innovation for the class will be the selection of a "Weekend Queen." The five finalists are: Janey S. Johnson, a freshman at George Washington University and the date of Edward H. Malley; Pat Harron from Mt. Vernon Junior College, the date of John Iambesi; Helene Roebuck, a secretary for Bell Telephone and the date of John M. Shea; Kathy Terry, a freshman at Cortland State and the date of Bob Evans; and Michele Cournoyer from Franklin and Marshall University, the date of Mike Gurda.

Tickets for all events are on sale in the Pie Shoppe and the SGA office.

Dale Anderson
B.A., Willamberg University

At many companies the opportunity to work on challenging projects comes after many years of apprenticeship and a few grey hairs. Not so at Ford Motor Company where your twenties can be a stimulating period. There are opportunities to prove your worth early in your career. Dale Anderson's experience is a case in point.

After receiving his B.A. in Physics in June, 1962, Dale joined our College Graduate Program and was assigned to our Research Laboratories. Recently he was given the responsibility for correcting cab vibration occurring on a particular type of truck. His studies showed that tire eccentricity was the cause of the trouble. Since little change could be effected in tire compliance, his solution lay in redesigning the suspension system. Tests of this experimental system show the problem to be reduced to an insignificant level.

That's typical of the kind of meaningful assignments given to employes while still in the College Graduate Program—regardless of their career interest. No "make work" superficial jobs. And, besides offering the opportunity to work on important problems demanding fresh solutions, we offer good salaries, a highly professional atmosphere and the proximity to leading universities.

Discover the rewarding opportunity Ford Motor Company may have for you. How? Simply schedule an interview with our representative when he visits your campus. Let your twenties be a challenging and rewarding time.

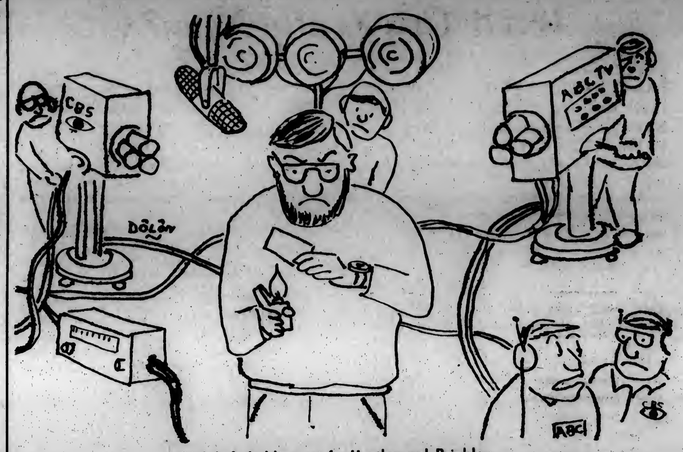
Where Have All the Followers Gone?



The Senior Class of Villanova possesses one quality which has grown consistently and reached its apex this year -- leadership. It is indeed a class of leaders. The University can be just proud that this class which has for the past three years surpassed all others in spirit, loyalty and participation has culminated its four years here by producing such outstanding qualities of leadership in its individual members.

Unfortunately, with this strong emphasis on the fostering of leadership, the class has neglected to produce any followers. This point was driven home by the recent Homecoming weekend which was designed by many and produced by few. An unusually large steering committee planned the weekend and divided itself into subcommittees to handle the various aspects. Each committee had a chairman who ironically enough was faced at the last minute with a mammouth task and only a handful of workers to complete it. The help of the underclassmen had to be solicited in an effort to finish the work in time.

It was only through the unfaltering loyalty of these few that the Senior Class had anything at all to show for its efforts. Congratulations are in order for the chairmen of the Homecoming dance, the float committee and the concert committee and all those who gave of their time to do an outstanding job despite the lack of participation of their classmates.

Is it the function of a leader to delegate authority through the chain of command until the burden of responsibility rests on the shoulders of one individual or is it rather not only to direct but also to participate as a member of the class? And what has become of the great spirit of the Class of '66; that same spirit which produced the largest voting turnout and the most spirited elections? Does it only exist for the glorious aspects of class activities?

If this is an indication of the participation to be expected in the future, Senior Weekend had best be undertaken by the Juniors.

I think he's holding out for Huntley and Brinkley.

The Complacent Majority

The right to question governmental policy through petition and demonstration has, over the past few weeks, been overworked by a small yet staunchly dissident minority.

This relative right is guaranteed by the Bill of Rights and thus must indeed be protected and preserved. Yet, those who protest America's present position in Viet Nam by exercising this right present to both the Free and Communist world a seeming projection of the average American citizen's attitude toward his government's policy.

This use of a Constitutional right, ironically enough, is helping to mar United States prestige in the world let alone bolstering the morale of the enemy while lowering the morale of our own men.

It appears that this right to demonstrate is becoming a specious entity in our democratic society. Maybe in this very right democracy does possess the seed of its own destruction. Though indeed we sincerely hope that this is not the case.

Thus it appears, more than ever, the obligation of America's lethargic citizens to awaken and express their views, instead of standing aside as the placards of dissent continue.

It's about time for the complacent majority of Americans who favor our present policy toward Viet Nam to make themselves heard to the rest of the world and expecially to our boys in Viet Nam.

Letters to the Editor

To The Editor:

I have been asked by the members of my fraternity to say a few words concerning hazing practices in fraternities.

We are behooved to stop senseless hazing and act as mature adults. I doubt that any such suggestion given to the fraternities will do any good at all. Maybe such criticism has a solid foundation, I admit that.

It would really be great for fraternities to act in a complete mature manner, but it should be remembered that most STUDENTS HERE ARE NOT MATURE, by definition they are students all learning about maturity. It should further be noted that maturity is not a have or have not quality. It is an ever-developing process. I do not consider myself as mature, but maturING.

Hazing, whether it is constructive or not, is with us to stay. It has been a natural precipitate of student life since Plato. And to see the possibility that students can act in a non-youthful manner (mature), is naive.

Instead of avoiding a student's youthful enthusiasm, let's direct it.

Sam Cucinotta
Lambda Kappa Delta '63-'66

Editor's Note: Please speak for yourself when evaluating the maturity of "most students here."

To The Editor:

I feel forced to take issue with your editorial of October 20 re: Cecil Moore's views on introducing birth control methods to residents of predominantly Negro North Philadelphia.

First of all, it must be pointed out that no one is forcing any people of any race to use any of the methods of birth control taught in the program.

I am sure it is the idea of those favoring this educational effort to simply give to these impecunious North Philadelphians the same opportunities of planned parenthood as others with better environment may have.

There is no threat to the freedom of these or any other individuals until such time as someone forces them do do something. Giving all the same right to free choice was called Civil Rights in 1964. It seems grossly unfair to label an aspect of Civil Rights suicide now.

By this plan the public would not be supporting birth control as your writer suggests, the public would be supporting freedom of information.

Bill McCloskey
Class of 1966

To The Editor:

With all due respects to the author of the recent article, who chose for some reason to remain unnamed, I fail to perceive any cogent criticism, any valid, objective argument behind his overt dismissal of hazing.

It seems his views have been expressed solely out of a subjective reason -- a subjectivity which admits of the author's own inability to endure the minute flagellations of pride conducive to the forming of the bond of fraternity, of brotherhood and equality.

This joins and solidifies each pledging class in a union. Although it may be beyond the comprehension of short-sighted individuals, it is well within the grasp of those humble enough to reach out for it.

William J. Baldwin LKD

Editor's Note: All editorials are unsigned. It is a matter of policy.

To The Editor:

It seems to this student, and I think many others will agree, that the Sunday library hours are highly inadequate. Sunday is probably the most demanded day of the week for library use by Villanova students, since most of them reserve Sunday to study, foreseeing little time to accomplish what they want in the five following class days. The present library hours on Sunday are from 2 p.m. until 5 p.m, poorly chosen since these hours are the best of the day for outdoor recreation.

I propose to the administration and to the S.G.A. that Sunday library hours should be extended to six hours, preferably between the hours of 4 p.m. and 10 p.m. Monday hours could be sacrificed to accommodate an increase in Sunday library hours.

During the week, also, the library should be open until at least midnight, as it is during examinations. The University of Pennsylvania library, for instance, closes at 3 a.m. on weekdays.

The library is the most important building on campus and it should be available during the critical hours when students most desire to study.

Joseph Jones '68

Editor's Note: Sunday Library hours, beginning November 7, will extend from 1 to 6 p.m. The University of Pennsylvania Library closes at 1 a.m., not 3 a.m. as indicated in the above letter.

To The Editor:

Nick Rongione is to be highly commended for his article, "An Approach to Superiority at Villanova." He sets down, I think, a very sensible plan for the development of academic excellence at this university. However, his last statement on the desirability of establishing a doctoral program in every department is open to question.

The establishment of a doctoral program on a sound basis necessitates the tremendous expansion of library resources, the acquisition of primary research material, the hiring of new and expensive specialists for the faculty, in short, the expenditure of huge quantities of money which Villanova probably does not have. And a poor doctoral program is worse than none at all.

Neither does it necessarily follow that the establishment of a doctoral program would result in better education for the average Freshman. It would result in increasing pressure for research and publication which might stifle the teaching excellence which Villanova aspires to attain.

In short, I think Villanova should aspire to be a relatively small, excellent liberal arts university, and a feeder school for established doctoral programs in larger and more wealthy universities throughout the country.

Donald Brooks Kelley
History Department

To The Editor:

It is with much regret to find the young democratic organization on campus sagging into an old and tired mold set by its elders -- namely a puerile use of innuendo and labeling. If the YD's consider the Republican Party's ideals of individuality and sensible use of government as an example of an "outmoded point of view," then we gladly accept this appellation.

As a somewhat older organization on campus the Young Republican Club feels it is a much better policy to talk TO the student body rather than talking DOWN to them.

Is All This Really News?

Villanova's "Mail Call Viet Nam" response has been amazing. Letters from boys in Viet Nam and parents of men involved in the war effort show our Christmas greetings will be appreciated.

The Americans fighting in the jungles of Southeast Asia now need a "shot in the arm" from a project such as "Mail Call Viet Nam."

It is not because the war effort is going badly that they need this boost; lately, American effectiveness has increased. No, it is a small minority of our fellow students who demonstrate against the war in Viet Nam who point up the urgency of this project.

However, we must never lose sight of the fact that peaceful demonstration is a right in this country, guaranteed by the Constitution. What then has been done by people in this country to demoralize the boys on the front line?

We say, with our head hanging in shame, it is this nation's news media, these "knights of the keyboards" who insist on giving these non-conformist demonstrators the front page headlines, who have let our fighting men down.

We are at times ashamed of those great journals we are supposed to emulate. Can they not realize that these demonstrators are to a large degree the type of people who thrive on publicity. Without publicity, their "cause" would be ignored and they would perhaps seek some more worthwhile idea to champion.

Even though most newspapers and some broadcasters have slapped the "Vietnicks" editorially, this is not enough. Those on the city desk and before the microphones and cameras should weigh the news more carefully.

Demonstrating is not illegal, why then is it news?

One of America's greatest assets is a free press. It is a news media with great power, power of which few editors seem to be cognizant.

We urge our mentors of the fourth estate to use their power to squelch these reports, since they are not news and direct their efforts to helping those involved in the Vietnamese conflict.

The Role Of The SGA

By James D. Griffin
Senior Class President

A great controversy recently has centered around the location of the SGA in the administration-student relationship. The term "administration" is amorphous, including all those from maintenance to the executive. However, let no one doubt that every member of the administration is for the goals of the SGA, we need only agree on the means.

Some SGA members argue that the SGA should reflect student opinion, regardless of the circumstances. I think that the SGA was elected to represent student opinion, but within reason. For this reason, all motions must be properly investigated before they are passed, whether this takes five minutes or five weeks.

The case in point is the motion the Senate passed October 25 calling for the SGA to investigate the possibility of food machines in the dormitories. The makers of the motion did not bother to consult Fr. Curran as to the possibility of such an idea. They blithely announced that they were reflecting student opinion.

I am for this idea just as much as anyone else, but I honestly don't know if it is possible. If we are merely to reflect student opinion, students all favor no tuition, why not ask for this even though we know it is impossible?

Some say that you need the permission of the SGA to investigate, but we all know that a letter from the President would give this authority. The interested party should secure such a letter and then ask those in authority if his idea can be done. If it is possible, then a motion should be presented for acceptance or rejection by the SGA, representing the students.

Then the SGA should work out a specific solution which they then ask the authorities to implement. This is much different than one student asking if it is possible, yet the SGA is still the voice of the students and the meaningful force behind the idea.

A system such as this would save the President the embarrassment of coming back to the Congress which passed a motion and explaining that the authorities cannot do it (will not being a rare case). In the motion in question, a five-minute conference with Fr. Curran would determine the possibility without a motion.

Omitting this pittance of work makes the motion unacceptable to me, and I cannot see how other members of the Senate could vote on a measure whose practicality was challenged and doubted. I hope they don't have to be reminded that we are here to get something done for the students, and not just to have our names on nice-sounding motions.

Letters To The Editor

To The Editor:

A few comments on last week's editorial (October 20) "Beware of Too Much Control," might help to clear up some statements which were not supported by any evidence, not even the 'evidence' of reason. The purpose of making methods of birth control available to "poor citizens" is NOT "to practice birth control on them in order to relieve their poverty." While the object is, in part, to help alleviate their poverty, there is no intention of "practicing" control on them since this implies force.

The purpose is merely to enable the poor and ignorant to have the freedom to choose between increasing their broods or restricting the number of children by the use of methods which are available to the rest of the population. Insofar as they are prevented from having this freedom, they are being discriminated against.

As for the "increase in promiscuity" which would supposedly result: judging by the large number of undesired children many of these people have, it would seem that pregnancy itself and not the fear of it, as implied in the article, is the only hindrance to promiscuity. The choice involved is not one of promiscuity vs. children, but of promiscuity plus children vs. promiscuity without kids.

I can't help but feel that the use of pills ... is more favorable than the procreation of unwanted and uncared for children.

Last and most important, it seems that the author is really advocating too much control rather than deploring it. Birth control "being the most private of the citizen's affairs" should be left up to the persons involved who should not be kept from acquiring knowledge about it by "any minority group's tampering with the law."

Forcing everyone to conform to the moral code of the Philadelphia Archbishop, as the author desires, is actually the same tampering and control which he pretends to oppose.

Robert Cappa '67

To The Editor:

In his letter of October 13, William Clark brought to task the President of the Young Democrats for stating that the Young Republicans catered to a "reactionary fringe." In the same issue I, a Republican, had a letter published supporting the contention of the Young Democrats. I will precede in this letter to analyze Mr. Clark's letter and I believe affirm my first opinion.

First, Mr. Clark in his letter supposedly defends the Young Republicans, but, in fact, he only used the word Republican in reiterating the Young Democrat statement. In the body of the letter he says not a single word about the Republican Party or the Young Republicans. It is indeed typical of Mr. Clark and his cronies to talk negatively about the Democrat Party but NEVER say anything positive about the Republican Party.

In his letter supposedly proving the Villanova Young Republicans are not radicals, Mr. Clark implies that the Democrat Party is part of a gigantic conspiracy to enslave the American people. He supports his contention with some strange examples; Federal Communication Commission regulations, definitely sinister. Then he charges the Democrat Party with creating and maintaining a Big Brother image and of turning this country into Orwell's 1984. No radical statements there. Finally Mr. Clark signs himself as Chairman of the Conservative Club but not as a Young Republican or has that become synonymous on campus?

For my final proof look at the minutes of the last Young Republicans: They had a film called UN ATROCITIES IN KATANGA. If that's not a radical film then the Birch Society is liberal and, Democrat.

Again I ask Mr. Clark and his supporters to leave the Young Republican Club. Don't let Villanova's Young Republican Club become a captive of Welch's wonderful world of anti-Communism.

To The Editor:

While I am grateful for the space according (sic) the Rugby Team in your October 13 issue, and for the enthusiasm of your reporter, I feel obliged to correct some false impressions contained in your report of the Games on October 9th. In the first instance, the score over Lehigh A was 11-0 in Villanova's favor, and the B game score was 5-0 again in Villanova's favor. The game lost by our ranking B team was with TEMPLE MEDICAL SCHOOL not Jefferson and the score was 3-0, not 6-0; a good result for this was Temple's A team.

Lest the mothers of our female students are worried, it was not the "Alumnae" who were pressed into service but the "Alumni." Rugby remains a male sport, the second most popular sport in the World, and while women are enthusiastic fans, they have not adapted themselves to the game for reasons clearly evident to anyone who has seen a game.

On a more joyful note, the Villanova teams A and B, both won their first games against Princeton, since the club was formed in 1959, and in all their athletic contests last Saturday, Rugby was only one in which Princeton was defeated.

Finally, I have been elected a member of the Board of Governors of the Eastern Rugby Union, which controls Rugby east of the Mississippi, not the President.

I must conclude by unhappily pointing out that my name has been misspelled consistently by your paper for years.

The VILLANOVAN would like to thank the Editorial board of the College News (student newspaper of Bryn Mawr College) for their support of a stand taken in a recent VILLANOVAN editorial entitled "Scholarly Co-Operation." This editorial proposed that the area colleges open their library facilities to students from neighboring schools presenting letters of introduction from their own libraries.

The editorial also proposed an inter-library card system which the College News termed a good idea, but not "immediately feasible." Should the Bryn Mawr Library open its doors to Villanova students, we hope that those taking advantage of this privilege will not abuse it.

Perhaps the strongest opinion was expressed by Gene Fitzmaurice, "I believe that by this action our men overseas are made aware of the fact that the vast majority of American college students support them in their struggle. This also re-establishes Villanova's position as a leader in the forming of strong political opinion."

Cong. In 1955 the chapter he headed was selected the most outstanding chapter in the United States. He was awarded an honorary Doctor of Laws Degree by Ursinus College on November 3, 1963.

Preceeded by a "Tea" at Rosemont for Cong. Schweiker a delegation from Rosemont will attend this meeting. Future joint meetings will be held.

SGA Passes Three Motions

ises to bring some interesting debate on the basic tenets of Student Government purpose, the last meeting was good in that congress members stuck to the issues.

Nary a "nay" was noted as the Student Government Association passed three motions, read 18 pages of reports and heard a speech by Rev. James Ryan, OSA, Dean of Extra-Curricular Activities, on October 20.

In his speech Father Ryan emphasized to the membership that the Administration "has no contest with you", in an attempt to squelch any possible attitude that Student Councils are in a toe to toe battle with administrators. (See separate story page 5.)

Among the motions passed was one sponsored by George Valva, Election Committee Chairman, and John Graziano. They called for a constitutional amendment eliminating the Freshman elections usually held early in the second semester. There was no negative debate on the measure. Under questioning, Valva pointed out there would be no drop in representation from the first-year students. During the regular campus elections two day-hops and two residents will be elected.

Although no format has been officially set for this election, the Chairman said it was probably the pair in each category with the highest vote totals would be declared winners.

Senior Class President Jim Griffin suggested that each Freshman be allowed two votes for SGA representative to make the voting more representative. Valva promised to consider the suggestion.

In related discussion, it was decided to amend the motion to change the word "men" to "Students" to avoid confusion over whether female members of the student body would be permitted to hold the office. (Debate in the SGA last year settled this point.)

The Republican Club was granted a half-vote in the Congress, thus becoming the first partisan political group so enfranchised. This was approved after Vice-President Brian Banmiller asked the GOP's student representative if there was any deliberate attempt to entice students away from the film "The Making of A President, 1960" by holding a Y.R. meeting at the same time. The representative of the organization said he was unaware of the conflict.

The other motion, proposed by Tom Krause and Student Government Vice-President John Graziano, established the Dr. James Bonder Memorial Trophy to be kept by the winner of the Villanova-West Chester football contest. The trophy will be presented to Wildcat coach Alex Bell following the Quantico Rally.

The legislation was passed unanimously.

In other congressional action, Ward Williams, with the approval of Jim Griffin and John Graziano, withdrew a motion regarding ex-officio members of the SGA. The motion had been recommended for passage at the Senate meeting October 11. In withdrawing the motion, Williams read a letter from Blue Key Society President Paul Dixon, one of those who would be affected by the motion, asking that it be dropped. He said in the letter that he would like to be present at the meeting at which the motion was debated

At the Congress meeting it was announced that the Finance Society would be allowed no further social activities for the rest of the school year.

Maff's Musings

By Joe Maffongelli

Villanova has enjoyed a long and illustrious tradition on the gridiron.

This fact is made clear in the comprehensive and artisitc statistical history of Wildcat football history which the Rev. Michael J. O'Donnell, OSA, of the Villanova community compiled in 1964. After many long years of tedious research and review Father O'Donnell put together a volume which will live on as a memorial both to the history of the sport at Villanova and the author himself.

A recent reading of the work exposed to us the fact that the grid 'Cats of 1937 were among the cream of the nation's elevens. According to Father O'Donnell's account, the "Clipper," Maurice J. Smith (Notre Dame '21), piloted the 'Cats to their first undefeated season while they logged one tie. Only powerful Auburn was able to contain the powerful Main Liners' attack to produce a scoreless deadlock.

The victims which the 'Cats managed to claw included the likes of Temple, Boston University, Bucknell, Detroit, and Marquette. The most startling result of the season was that the seven points which Marquette was able to post against the 'Cats were the only ones posted on the opposition's side of the ledger all year. Some eight opponents, including Auburn, were unable to push the pigskin over the goal line.

The PHILADELPHIA EVENING BULLETIN listed the '37 'Cats among the top three in the East. The others were Pittsburgh and Fordham both of whom had sustained merely a tie against no losses and 9 and 7 wins respectively.

Professor Litkenhouse, the BULLETIN's pollster at the time, ranked the local club ninth in the nation.

The Williamson Ratings gave the 'Cats the fourth spot in the land, while the Associated Press poll showed Villanova in sixth place nationally.

Coach Smith, feeling obligated to come up with an appropriate encore, led the '38 'Cats to an identical 8-0-1 record, only this time Auburn also succumbed. South Carolina was the "giant stopper" this time around, as they held the 'Cats to a 6-6 deadlock. This was the sophomore year of the great passer and runner of Villanova fame Nick Basca. His name has since become a part of a glorious Homecoming Legend.

Villanova Football

When Xavier got the ball again the fleet-footed Walt Mainer started picking up 7 and 8 yards at a crack until he put the Musketeers on the Villanova 25 yard line. From there, Williams hit Jim Barrett for the fourth Xavier touchdown. Dankel's placement was good and the bad guys were out in front by 28 points.

Villanova mounted a scoring threat in the late minutes of the first half in the form of a picture perfect 51 yard touchdown bomb, but once more the Wildcat receiver couldn't find the handle, so the Musketeers floated into the dressing room with a comfortable 28-0 edge.

In the beginning moments of third quarter the Musketeers got the ball on the Villanova 12 yard line with the help of a fumbled punt and four plays later Williams sneaked into the end zone from the one for the final score. The conversion was good and the Musketeers were on the top by 35 points.

The 'Cats were in good scoring position twice after that with first down and goal to go at the 3 and then at the six yard line but the Musketeer defense showed too much to cope with.

Although the scoring was over, their was never a dull moment as the Cats and the Musketeers began pairing off in personal fueds. One such rivalry resulted in 'Cat Joe Nolan and much bigger opponent Dennis Deneen being ejected for throwing five fingerered blocks.

One bright spot showed in some good defensive work by Wildcat junior Ray Covi

Wildcat Harriers Hit Victory Trail Against LaSalle By 16-46

By Frank Miller

The Wildcat Harriers, paced by a record setting performance by Soph Charlie Messenger, swamped LaSalle 16-46 last Saturday at Fairmount Park.

Messenger won with a time of 26:37, which eclipsed the old record of 26:42 which was set by the Quantico Marines two weeks ago. Three more sophs placed right behind Messenger as Ian Hamilton, Dave Patrick, and Al McCafferty notched the second, third, and fourth places respectively.

Rounding out the top ten from Villanova were Harry Degenhardt, sixth; Craig Morton, seventh; and Paul Sanborn, ninth.

St. John's fell before the 'Cats a week earlier by a 21-39 count. In this clash it was Dave Patrick's turn for glory as he placed second. His time of 25:49 was only bettered by All American Larry Furnell, and was better than the IC4A record time of Vic Zwolak.

Finishing right behind Patrick in the top five were Messenger, Hamilton, and Jack O'Leary in that order. Sanborn and McCafferty rounded out the scoring by taking the seventh and eighth places.

These two wins boosted the 'Cats season's record to 4-2. The soph laden team could take all of the IC4A laurels in the big meet November 15. Their last tuneup before this meet will be against Georgetown, this coming Saturday.

Basketball Club Time Again!

By Irish Moore

Nobody knew why, but the feeling was all over campus -- a certain sense of awe, followed usually by disbelief. The first reports from the field house were such that this trend was reversed again. Then the magazines began to appear. Most Villanovans liked the ones that said the Main Line miracle was a reality: Villanova -- Number One! It was the dawn of the 1963-64 season.

That same season that saw greatness on the court witnessed a strange phenomenon in the stands. A group of students with the common purpose of spirit were united in their cause. The Basketball Club became a reality.

It was something new; ideally, there could be no reason for criticism. But in practice, everyone knew there was a need for modification.

The main problem was that there was no past from which to learn. Unexpected situations arose, and were dealt with by the best possible means. In short, neither the team or the club became number one, but they sure impressed a lot of people by trying.

Right now it's time for the third version of the Basketball Club, one which should, with cooperation, prove its worth. It's not easy to build the greatest basketball spirit in the country, But We Want Nothing Less.

We're not waiting for the best team to begin our work. But when the team is ready - and make no mistake that time is pretty near - you can bet that this student body will be giving all they deserve in the way of spirit.

There is one important quality needed for membership in the Basketball Club - and that is DEDICATION. - Dedication to a school, a team, and a club. This club will not merely function as a go-between for the ticket office.

Attendance at games is but one of many means to attain our goals. The specific arrangements for membership are as follows:

1) All classes will be included, without restriction on numbers.

2) Dues are $7 for the year. This money is substantially less than it would be if each ticket were purchased at the field house.

3) Club members will not be able to purchase tickets for the basketball games at the ticket office. The club itself will distribute them to its members.

4) The seating arrangement will be in a position so as to make the Club a nucleus for the whole Villanova cheering section.

5) Each member will have a laminated card with a picture for identification purposes.

6) Everyone must participate in the activities (trips, rallies, send-offs, etc.) There will be work, such as making signs and attending to clerical duties. Violators will be reported by sub-chairmen to the club chairmam.

A board composed of the S.G.A. Chairman, the Executive Vice-President for Student Affairs, the Spirit Committee Chairman, and the Basketball Club Chairman will reprimand or expel these people.

Applications can be picked up in the SGA Office, starting today. Dues may be handed in November 4, 5, 8, and 9 in the Pie Shoppe. The initial meeting will be held Thursday, November 11, at 10:30 a.m.

These dates will be the only times to gain membership this year. All those who do join at this time will receive special consideration next year.

Wildcats Beat West Chester, But Shut Out By Musketeers

By Charlie Harysiak

The Wildcats put an end to a six game losing streak and chalked up their first victory in 5 starts with a 28-13 win over the Rams of West Chester only to be pummelled 35-0 by a rough, rockem-sockem type Xavier squad.

The 'Cats saw to it that Nick Basca weekened ended on a happy note by playing the same brand of ball they've been playing all year. Only this time the most points stayed on their side of the score board.

The Rams threw a scare into the Blue and White right off the bat as they took the opening kick-off and drove 71 yards in 8 plays with Jim Haymie throwing a 32 yard T.D. bomb to Roger Grove. Grove's point after touchdown was good and the Rams popped into an early 7-0 lead with only 2:25 gone in the first quarter.

Since it was too early to leave and they had already put out the money for their date's ticket the fans stuck around and wound up being glad they did.

Tom Brown took the Rams kick-off and returned it to the V.U. 29 yard line. On second down Dave Connell threw to John Kolmer for a big nine yards but after a loss on the next play Connell had to drop back in punt formation.

The West Chester linemen dropped back to block for the return a little prematurely and the running 'Cat quarterback saw some day light and decided to run it, picking up the first down and then some to the mid-field marker.

Connell got on the running kick and picked up 19 more yards then another 18 and finally scored on a 5 yard scamper around right end. Jim Case kick was good and the 'Cats tied it up and took the momentum.

ANDREJKO PASSES

After a few ball exchanges the 'Cats found themselves deep in West Chester territory with the help of some fine passing by junior Bill Andrejko, Connell once more got the call and rambled into the end zone from the two yard line. Case's P.A.T. was good and V.U. took a 14-7 lead.

West Chester wasn't finished yet but it took them 16 plays to go 80 hard fought yards before Lou Neebe could score from the 4 yard line. Grove's conversion attempt was blocked and the 'Cats still kept the lead 14-13.

It only took Villanova one play to go their 80 yards with the help of some fine blocking and soph Denny Ditze who took the Rams kickoff on the Cat 20 yard line and went all the way on a run that brought the fans to their feet. Case's kick was good and the 'Cats turned on the steam.

The 'Cats wanted more so John Fry picked off a Ram pass that was blocked by Fred Levinsky and returned it to the West Chester 39 yard line. The 'Cats drove to the 1 yard line and from there Tom Brown took it in for the final score of the ball game. Case's kick was good and the score board read 28-13 in favor of the good guys as the half ended.

The 'Cats settled down to playing good ball control the second half and at the end of the final stanza, the Blue and White walked off the field with 28 points, over 300 yards gained, 19 first downs, 4 interceptions and a well deserved Homecoming victory.

XAVIER

Seven days later the Musketeers of Xavier decided to have their Homecoming. The only opinion the 'Cats have about the Xavier's big weekend is that the floats were nice.

The Musketeers were out for revenge and blood. They got their revenge, but the blood flowed both ways in one of the roughest (to use the term loosely) grid contest this individual has ever witnessed.

Xavier was good, whether they were 35 points better or not is another story. Their offense revolves around a 5'10", 171 lb. Junior quarterback by the name of Carroll Williams. Prior to game time the combined Villanova quarterbacks had completed 42 of 85 passes for 644 yards.

Williams who ranks in the top 10 passers in the country had 77 completions of 145 passes for 13 touchdowns and close to 1200 yards. (Who invited him?) Williams had a mediocre Saturday by completing 10 of 19 for 129 yards with two interceptions but he justified the situation by turning 3 of the completions into touchdown tosses and scoring one six pointer by himself.

The 'Cats took the opening kick-off but were stalled on the first set of downs and Connell was forced to punt to Walt Mainer an Xavier speedster and No. 2 headache for the Wildcats.

Mainer returned the punt from his own 36 yard line to the Villanova 12 and on the next play went in for the score. Ray Dankel's conversion was good and the Musketeers moved out in front with less than two minutes gone in the game.

The 'Cats stalled again after the next kickoff and Williams started to go to work. He ran and passed his way down to the Villanova 6 yard line where he connected with Ty Anthony for his first T.D. toss of the afternoon. The conversion counted.

Villanova then got their initial first down on an Xavier personal foul penalty but four plays later the ball was once more in the devastating hands of Williams.

However by this time the Wildcat defense was able to shake off the shock of the early Xavier blitz and were able to hold the Musketeers to an attempted field goal that missed.

The 'Cats were in control again but an intercepted pass brought the ball to the V.U. 17 yard line with the Musketeers in possession. Another Xavier 15 yard penalty, this time for holding, moved the ball back to the 32 yard line, but it didn't really matter.

Williams just had to throw a little further, this time to end Bill Hill for the third Xavier score. The P.A.T. was a bullseye and the Musketeers jumped to a 21-0 lead, still in the first quarter.

OVER THE BENCH

With the 'Cats offense finally on the move, Dave Connell was racked up on after the whistle tackle. He was already out of bounds and the tackle sent him over the bench and sprawling backwards into the coaches table.

Jerry Bellotti took over at Quarterback, but was soon wishing he had stayed in bed.

The bigger and more experienced Xavier linemen didn't bother toying with the Villanova blockers but went in to feast on Bellotti. When the V.U. quarterback got the time to throw the 'Cat receivers had some trouble finding the handle.

'I Hear...'

By John DiGennaro

I hear the Eagle's coaching staff has been working overtime with King Hill lately. They've been trying to teach him how to get the angle on a defensive back speeding down field toward the goal line.

I hear the finals of the "come out smelling rosiest" contest has been narrowed down to the Dodgers, Washington State, and the Chuggers.

I hear Bill White is going to have a tough time cracking the starting lineup at first base - it seems tough to get Dick Stuart to move.

I hear the Esquire Belt Company turned down Sonny Jurgenson's application for an audition.

I hear they use the word bush to describe; Phillies fans, Eagles fans, local sportscasters, and certain Xavier University football players.

I hear the man you would least like to talk to at present is Darrell Royal.

I hear when Sonny Jerguenson first signed with the Eagles they offered him a bonus for touching his toes.

I hear Dean Martin's stomach gurgling.

I hear Y. A. Tittle, Warren Spahn, and Dick Groat are being sued by Vitalis.

'Cats Ready For Tilt With Quantico Marines As Prospects Darken

Like Viet Nam and the Dominican Republic, Villanova will be invaded by the Marines this Saturday, which only goes to show what can happen to a losing team. This time it's only the Quantico Marines and it's only a football game but for the Wildcats it's a chance to salvage something out of a disappointing season. Two years ago when the Cats had bowl hopes. Quantico downed the Cats 16-0 and ended any hopes of post-season play.

However, the Marines will be no pushovers having won their last three games after dropping their first three (including losses to Toledo and Xavier), In their past three games, the Marines have hung up two shutouts while outscoring Dayton, Pensacola and Camp Lejeune 83-12.

First year coach Joe Caprera has a number of former collegiate stars in his lineup, as he hopes to bounce back from last season's 2-6-1 record which was the worst at Quantico in 20 years.

Quarterback Mike Cotton from Texas University, leads the Leathernecks high-powered offense which has scored 37 and 36 points in the last two games. Cotton runs and passes equally well and his favorite target is end Hank Hatch from Harvard. Halfback Granny Amos, who played against Villanova when he was at V.M.I., is the Marines main rushing threat and has tremendous speed.

The Marines defense, led by former All-East linebacker Ed Conti (Syracuse), is big and agile. Only 54 points have been scored on them all year and 28 of those came in the Xavier game.

'A Man For All Seasons' Debuts

Belle Masque Presents Drama About Life of Sir Thomas More

Tomorrow night at 8 the curtain will go up in the Field House on a Belle Masque production. After weeks of preparation, Robert Bolt's A MAN FOR ALL SEASONS appears ready. This play represents the largest and most concentrated efforts attempted by the club in recent years. Indications are that the quality of this production will excell all expectations of the Belle Masque, according to the officers of the society.

The play is, in essence, about one all-consuming idea, the self of each man. Thomas More, the protagonist, must choose between the gifts and pleasures of society and his own self, his own soul. He is not a social misfit, nor a person who by nature withdraws from society. Instead, he truly enjoys all aspects of life.

More has wealth, social position, a loving family, influential friends, and an intellectual reputation known throughout Europe. But when all these factors are weighed, he finds that the one prize he must hold onto is the integrity of his mind and conscience. For his grasp of spiritual integrity, Thomas More finally forfeits his life.

In short, the action of the play is best described as a series of collisions between More and a group of powerful and able men who would have him deny his selfhood to serve the wishes of his king.

In this masterpiece, Robert Bolt characterizes the work of almost all the new playwrights of Europe in the fact that this play expresses the contemporary theatre's profound concern to find a metaphor for universal modern man.

Bolt looks for a metaphor that is symbolic of the inalienable part of every man - that irreducible part of each of us which exists after all the differences have been stripped away, and which is beyond and beneath all that is social, political, economic, religious, and ideological. In short, he is searching for a metaphor of man left face to face with himself.

TIME magazine says of More the man, "He did not choose to lose his life, but he did choose not to lose his soul."

Heading the cast of thirteen is Brian Morgan of Villanova as Thomas More, and Bonnie Lucas, a Cabrini Senior, as Alice More.

Ticket sales are now well under way in the Pie Shoppe and several of the nearby campuses. The prices, if not bought at the special group rates, are $1.25 for students and $2.00 for general admission. The dates for the production to be held in the Villanova Field House, are tomorrow through November 14.

Villanova Students Needed For Work in the Cafeteria

By Jeff Radowich

Frank Eck, Acting President of the Student Government Association, extends an appeal to the undergraduate student body of Villanova to work in the cafeteria.

The SGA, in attempting to implement the proposals pertaining to the cafeteria, found one rather large problem, a problem that has hitherto prevented any significant dialogue in this area.

This one obstacle is personnel.

Villanova is too far from Philadelphia to use the city as a source of labor. It appears that not enough competent help can be secured from this immediate area.

Many of the proposals for cafeteria improvement (for example, milk machines) demand an increased amount of competent help as a prerequisite.

OWN HOURS

Thus, Acting President Eck makes his appeal.

You can name your own hours: morning, afternoon or evening. Time will be arranged according to an individual student's schedule. The pay is $1.25 per hour.

Interested undergraduates are urged to apply in person to the SGA office as soon as possible. There will be a form on the bulletin board which should be filled out.

Once this problem of personnel is overcome, then the other improvements can be more meaningfully discussed.

On a different note, Eck also announced that Mr. Spescha, the Director of the Cafeteria, will see to it that the menu for the entire day's meals will be posted one day ahead of time. The SGA wishes to thank Mr. Spescha on behalf of the Villanova undergraduate student body.

Concert by Mantovani Highlights Activities Of Parent's Weekend

Paul E. Dixon, president of the Blue Key Society, has announced that the annual Parents' Weekend will take place November 20, and 21.

Opening event for the affair will take place Saturday morning at 9 A.M. when all parents will register for the remainder of the weekend's activities, At this time the students' mothers will receive a favor as a remembrance of the weekend.

Immediately thereafter there will be a meeting with the deans. Here the parents will have a chance to discuss the advancements of their offsprings with the respective department heads.

Highlighting the waning hours of the day will be a concert presented by the world famous Mantovani Orchestra. A variety of light and popular music will spotlight the concert to be presented in the Field House at 8:45 P.M.

Tickets for the Concert can be purchased for $3 in the Office of the Vice-president of Student Affairs.

Student-Faculty Committee Has 'Very Candid' Meeting

By Bill McCloskey

The second Student-Faculty meeting will be held today to discuss course evaluation, Senior examination exemption, and class attendance.

Frank Eck, acting president of the Student Government Association, told last week's Congress meeting that the last meeting of the committee had been "very, very candid."

Also at the SGA meeting, it was announced that Father Driscoll, Vice-President for Academic Affairs had sent a memorandum to the Deans of the Colleges asking their cooperation in getting the examination list for this semester posted as soon as possible.

Prentiss Yancy, Vice-President of the SGA, commenting on the Student-Faculty meeting and comprehensive examinations told the Congress "schools which presently have them are moving away from them."

On the Senior examination exemption, which would have seniors with an "A" average in a Second Semester course not required to take the final exam, Eck told the Congress, "It is safe to assume this would be on a department level." He ex-

Ineligible SGA President Reports 3.0 Mid-Term

SGA President Steve Freind, unable to participate in extra-curricular activities because of a decision of the Academic Board of the College of Arts and Sciences, told the VILLANOVAN that his marks at midsemester were "at the least, a 3.0 cumulative average."

Asked about the possibility of his return, Freind replied, "It is entirely up to the decision of the Academic Board. The Board does not usually meet at midsemester but I would love to get back in as soon as possible."

Frank Eck became acting president of the SGA when the student government constitution did not provide for the resignation of a president.

Outdoor Bulletin Boards Add Information and Illumination

Several additions to the campus terrain have been made recently. Two of these were gifts of the classes 1965 and 1966, and two others were introduced by Father Curran, Vice-President for Financial affairs.

Those who tread daily down the drive past Dougherty Hall can now get a quick glimpse of coming attractions of general interest, such as concerts, lectures and athletic events on a new outdoor bulletin board. Now installed near the annex, the weathertight, illuminated unit was a gift of the Junior Class of 1966, during Junior Week last May.

A similar board, a gift of the Senior Class of 1965, has been installed at the Lancaster Avenue entrance to Bartley Hall.

The new bulletin boards, each costing 800 dollars, will be used only for items of general University interest, i.e., excluding club meetings and specific class functions. For such information, students are referred to the bulletin boards located in Dougherty Hall, across from the University Shop.

The outdoor bulletin boards, as well as the indoor boards, are under the direction of the Student Union Committee of the SGA.

Father Curran's innovations are of a different nature. First, a large, mercury-vapor flood lamp has been placed near the Ithan Avenue guard house. This unit offers more than adequate illumination at a spot which has been poorly lighted in the past.

The second of Father Curran's improvements is the lighting of the steps of Dougherty Hall. The campus electrician, Mr. Dan Hennessey, said that these will soon be moved down onto the grass in front of the building, and be hidden by bushes. The intent will be to 'wash' the entire face of the building with light.

The lights are connected to timers, and are turned on and off automatically.

Dedicated Director

By Vic Ferrante

A familiar figure of Villanova Theater is again a vital part of another Villanova production. Directing this fall's production of A MAN FOR ALL SEASONS is Kenneth Resinski.

In September of 1959, Mr. Resinski entered the halls of Villanova and received his B.A. in English in June of 1963. He then entered the Villanova Graduate Theater and received his M.A. in Theater in 1965.

Ken joined the Belle Masque his junior year and was elected president of this organization in his senior year. During his undergraduate years here, he appeared in such plays as, TIME OF YOUR LIFE as Kit Carson, THE DETECTIVE STORY as Simes, the lawyer, and in THE IMAGINARY INVALID he played the part of Berolds, the wise brother.

Also, in his senior year he began his career as a director. Belle Masque, various contests, and even Parent's Weekend, had the Resinski touch in many of their productions.

As a graduate student he was versatile enough to design sets, as well as direct. Anyone who saw THE BIRTHDAY PARTY would be able to acknowledge his ability in this field.

Professionally, he was in the Playhouse In The Park here in Philadelphia. He also has been the stage manager for the Bryn Mawr Repertory's productions.

Mr. Resinski feels he owes Villanova very much and he hopes that in his work with the Belle Masque he will partially repay this debt. Anyone who sees this year's production of A MAN FOR ALL SEASONS will no doubt agree that the debt owed is from Villanova to this fine director.

Orphans Outing Weekend Set for December 3,4,5

As the Thanksgiving holidays draw near, the Junior Class appeals to the student body to do good for others less fortunate by participating in the annual Orphans Outing. The Juniors are urging everyone to take part in one of the few university activities open to all.

The outing is scheduled to take place over the weekend of December 3 starting with the "Missing Link" Contest. This yearly contest is encouraging all classes and fraternities to put up candidates for the missing link, thereby creating a more diversified backing for the orphans weekend. The contest runs from November 29, ending on December 3 when the winner is picked. Friday night, December 3, is the Charity Ball. Tickets are $3 a couple, and the entertainment is provided by the Critters and the Villanovans.

Saturday afternoon is the outing itself, which takes place around the 69th Street area. Tickets again are $3 a couple and $2 stag. That night the Junior Class Party takes place, the only closed event of the weekend. On Demcember 6 an Orphans party is scheduled for all the committees and their chairmen.

Anyone interested in working on this weekend can contact the following committee heads under General Chairman Brenden Brett. Brendan Moore, head of the "Missing Link" Contest, John Zoubeck, head of the Charity Ball, and Jim Dunegan, head of the Orphans Outing.

Senior Career Conference Set For Field House November 30

The 13th Annual Career Conference for all seniors will be held in the Field House on Tuesday, November 30, 1965, at 9:45 a.m. It is sponsored by the Placement Office. The conference will cover the course of the whole day with speeches by a panel of three noted personnel men on the subjects of job-hunting and the important points of a job interview.

Other activities include a speech by Father President, informal discussions with 50 invited recruiters, and a luncheon.

The panel discussions will be preceded by a welcoming address by the Very Rev. Joseph Flaherty, OSA. Following this the members of the panel will speak on their specific topics. Professor Emil Amelotti, Chairman of the Math Department will head the panel.

Lloyd Hamilton, College Relations Officer, Richardson Merrill, will deliver a talk on "Preparation for the Interview." He will be followed by Robert Schaffer, Manager of Employment, Campbell Soup Co., and William Culp, Professional Employment Representative, American Laboratory Electronics.

Their respective topics will be "What Does the Employer Expect from the Interview" and "What Information Should the Student Expect from The Interviewer."

At the conclusion of the speeches a question and answer period will be held to entertain written questions from the students. The questions may be directed to either of the major speakers or to anyone of the 50 employer representatives present.

The nature of these questions may cover anything from the topics previously discussed or queries of a specific nature, e.g. jobs, selective service status, earnings, etc.

A special luncheon will begin at 1 PM hosting only the 50 guest representatives. Father President, and other honored guests. Father Flaherty will deliver the main address.

John Moritz' Villanova Placement Director, made special note of the fact that quite often Liberal Arts students feel that the conference will only be beneficial to members of the other schools of the University.

These fears should be dispelled immediately, he said, since many of the recruiters are just as interested, if not more so, in the Liberal Arts student for his background as an asset to their firms.

Seniors are reminded that they are excused from classes between 8:30 and 2:20 on the day of the conference.

Young Democrats Hear Thomas C. McGrath On Aspects of Congress

The Young Democratic Club of Villanova University will sponsor a talk by United States Congressman Thomas C. McGrath, Jr., of New Jersey on Thursday November 18. The topic discussed will be "Important Aspects of the 89th Congress." The talk will be held in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall at 8 P.M.

The next scheduled activity of the Young Democrats will be on December 7 with the showing of two movies. ONE THOUSAND DAYS, A TRIBUTE TO J.F.K. will be the keynote film and will be followed by A QUEST FOR PEACE.

Both of these films will be remembered for the stirring reaction they produced at the 1964 Democratic National Convention Atlantic City.

Anyone interested in joining the Young Democrats should contact Terry Mills, Publicity Director or Dick McMenamin, Secretary.

ICG Resolution Supports Commitment in Viet Nam

by Sam Cucinotta

The Villanova delegation of the Intercollegiate Conference on Government held a meeting on Thursday, November 4. At this meeting a motion was presented to the body in the form: Resolved, that this house supports our government's policy in Viet Nam.

After considerable debate, in order to secure a vote of unanimity, the resolution was passed. The resolution was presented with the hope that other campus organizations would do the same.

The I.C.G., is now on record as supporting our Viet Nam policy. The minutes of the November fourth meeting were sent to many public bodies including the U.S. Congress and the Pennsylvania State Congress. The resolution was passed in response to a flyer accusing students of an "irresponsible academic detachment," and it challenged the members of the student body to voice their opinion at the meeting. To separate Villanova students from this viewpoint, the I.C.G. decided to present the resolution. This is a unique move for an organization which has been continuously non-partisan.

Model Convention

At the first State Executive Meeting, held in Harrisburg on October 17, it was decided that the model State Convention will be held on March 31 and April 1. It was also decided that students will present their bills to a total of nine committees. These are: 1) Agriculture and Natural Resources; 2) Health and Welfare; 3) Education; 4) Highways and Transportation; 5) Judiciary and Civil Rights; 6) Labor and Industry; 7) Local Government; 8) State Government, and 9) Taxation and Finance. The student, who has his bill passed in a committee, will present his bill to the Model State Congress for passage.

Also, at the Executive meeting, Mr. T. Bruderly, moderator of the Villanova delegation, was appointed to determine the areas and fields to be covered by each committee.

On November 13, the Southeastern Region of the I.C.G. will hold a party in West Chester. I.C.G. members from Penn, Immaculata, Rosemont, Temple, P.M.C., West Chester, as well as Villanova, will attend. The revenue from the party will be used for political advancement of the Southeast Region in the State Convention scheduled for the Spring.

Austin Hall Petition Results in Folk Music On 'Campus Beat'

WWVU has announced the scheduling of more folk music as part of the continuing "Campus Beat" series.

Folk music has been chosen as the standard backup music for the 7:30-8:30 slot usually filled by Student Government meetings and other specials. A good portion of Sunday will also be programmed with the ethnic and popular types of folk music.

The reason folk was picked, according to WWVU program director Pete McCarthy is a petition passed through Austin Hall. When it arrived at the station, it had over 100 signatures on it.

"We are always glad to hear from our listeners about their tastes in music and would also like to know their reaction to special programming we do such as the broadcast of the S.G.A. meetings," said McCarthy.

He continued, "We are also planning to air the 'Havenears' and other on campus musical groups on Tuesday nights in this 7:30-8:30 time slot. With this and student government joined by the various lectures either pre-recorded or live, we feel that we are offering the Villanova campus resident a truly unique 'sound.' This is one of the preliminary aims of the station."

WWVU is at 640 on the campus standard broadcast (AM) dial.

A Request for a President

Six weeks ago, an unprecedented event took place on the Villanova campus. Complying with an order of the Academic Board, the Student Body President of Villanova University relinquished the powers of his office. The situation precipitated a campus-wide controversy concerning the penalty imposed upon Steve Freind.

The exact circumstances will probably never be fully known. But it is known that Freind, while he did not agree with the decision of the board, reacted in a manner beneficial to the entire University. Realizing the heated passions running throughout the student body and the disastrous results which could occur, he yielded the Presidency in such a fashion that the Student Government Association was able to retain a great degree of unity among its members and a workable rapport with the Administration. We feel that the time has now come for Steve Freind to reassume the duties of Student Body President.

The VILLANOVAN does not see how Freind's continued absence from the SGA will benefit anyone. It will not benefit the Academic Board members, whom we are certain take no pleasure in penalizing a student. It cannot benefit Freind himself since in academic performance this first quarter he has demonstrated his total compliance with the spirit of the Board's ruling. Nor does it benefit either the student body -- for whom he has worked tirelessly for three years, or the members of the Student Government Association who made him their President. The absence of an organization's duly elected leader can only prove detrimental to its own success.

The SGA is obviously not the same without Freind. The many brilliant programs which he initiated in May and during the Summer need his direction if they are to succeed. And, more importantly, the SGA needs to rekindle the dynamic drive which Freind's leadership inspired, if it is to harness the respect and support of the student body.

When Freind was faced with the prospect of giving up the position that he had worked so hard to earn, he acted both with maturity and in good faith. It is obvious that he has paid the penalty for his mistake and learned a lesson. The VILLANOVAN now respectfully requests those in power to allow Steve Freind a fresh start -- for himself and the student body.

Letters To The Editor

To The Editor:

The enclosed photographs (below), previously unpublished, are of Count Villan II, the first live Villanova mascot after World War II. I was one of the two trainers, which is a highly euphemistic term if there ever was one.

The other trainer (the only one in any photographs with the cat) was a Marine trainee whose name was Austin if my memory is right.

The cat arrived at Villanova on a Saturday when almost everyone was on the way off-campus. The two of us volunteered to take care of the animal because no one else seemed to WANT to lose a finger or two. The photos seem to show that the cat could be petted. This is technically correct but it was necessary to keep a taut leash and to sneak up behind them. Retreat (the only correct term) from the act of petting was done in reverse order.

The cat was a Florida bobcat and was sent to Villanova without advance notice by an ex-Villanovan. At this late date I don't know if the donor was an alumnus or a transfer.

Regrettably the poor animal did not survive very long. Facilities provided for his care were haphazard at best and we two were amateurs in wild animal handling. He (the kitten) died the same Fall of infection resulting from a broken shoulder acquired from fighting his leash and harness.

His successor, Count Villan III, was the last live mascot to date, I believe.

Count Villan II appears with one of his trainers in the top photo. The bottom photo reveals his ferocity.

To The Editor:

The off-year elections just completed seem to leave several questions unanswered in regard to the conservative position in the Republican Party.

Last year, following the Goldwater fiasco, the spokesman for the conservatives termed as deplorable the actions of those Republicans who did not support the Arizona Senator.

Yet, this year, when the Republicans finally have a chance to win the mayoralty race in New York with a liberal, John Lindsay, the right wing decides to cut down Lindsay simply because he is liberal.

In other words, the liberals should support the conservative even if it means going down the drain with him, but the conservatives feel no obligation to support anyone else, even for the good of the Republican Party.

Fortunately, this attempt failed and although I do see Lindsay's election as a Democratic defeat, I also see it as a triumph for reform and liberalism and another defeat for the conservative minority whose importance is felt only in their own midst and not in the world of practical two-party government.

To The Editor:

While the Republican victory in last week's contest for District Attorney in Philadelphia was impressive and seemed, to some observers, to mark an in-road into solidly Democratic city, a similar occurence, in favor of the Democrats, happened not 20 miles away.

In the Borough of Norristown, the County Seat of that bastion of Eastern Pennsylvania Republicanism and the home of Congressman Richard Schweiker, Montgomery County, a Democratic mayor was elected for the first time in anyone's memory.

In addition, the Democrats elected the tax collector and five of the six seats in the contests for borough council. It would seem that Republicans are not the only ones making in-roads.

Paul Thomas '67

To The Editor:

Post-election conversations with Republicans and Democrats are closely similar to those heard after a World Series. Both sides acknowledge the winners and losers and congratulate one another accordingly.

Just as the professional animosity of the baseball diamond usually dissipates at the end of the series, so too, in politics, as members of both parties exchange pledges of cooperation and other trivia.

A recurring theme after last week's municipal races in Philadelphia and echoed frequently by Republican big-wigs, was that the election of Arlen Specter and the showing of James Cavanaugh in his losing effort for City Controller would begin to provide a so-called "return" to the two-party system in the City.

They seem to forget that the present 15 years of Democratic rule was preceded by more than three times as much Republican rule, but that is not the point to be made here.

While such notables as Senator Hugh Scott and State District Attorney Walter Alessandroni spent much verbosity in explaining the benefits Philadelphia would now receive with a Republican DA in a Democratic Administration, the mind could not help but wander to the political situation in Delaware County.

Their comments on this County, where the Republican Party has been in power since the turn of the century would be interesting in light of their statements in Philadelphia. Doesn't a return to this same two-party system seem more urgent in a county where one party has dominated for nearly seven decades rather than one that has been so ruled for a decade and a half?

Dry Bones...Dry Bones

By Ron Javers

What about the barrenness of contemporary American society? We have been, and are being told repeatedly of the drying out of our cultural and artistic mainsprings, and of the ever increasing encroachment of the mechanical and automatic into our lives.

The theme of many modern artists and writers is continually concerned with the "Wasteland" image of the American scene. Even before Eliot lent a name to the dilemma, others felt the profound implications of its manifestations in their own lives. Shaw and O'Neill ably expressed their feelings of the nihilism growing up around them.

NIHILISM

The theme has been expounded even more recently in the pessimistic works of the Beat Generation. Writers like Allen Ginsberg, the foul mouthed poet laureate of the Beats, espouse a policy of detached oblivion. Nothing matters but Kicks, Chicks, and keeping cool in a world as totally depraved as this one. Henry Miller, one of the most gifted and unrewarded writers of the New Generation, sums up the problem as he sees it in the title of one of his collections of essays: "STAND STILL LIKE THE HUMMINGBIRD." He would do nothing -- merely stand still in society-- This is his way of fighting a growing cultural malaise.

The pressure towards a total conformity perhaps accounts for what these critics see as "barrenness." The idealization of a standardized American man, complete with three button suit and intellectual blinders, tends to sanction a comfortable state of oblivion.

But is this oblivion built into our Society? Is it the American man's manifest destiny to be slowly castrated into a lukewarm mediocrity? Many outspoken critics say yes. They want to give up, to stand still. This is their protest, if it can be called a protest.

COMMITMENT

Perhaps the solution to the "Wasteland Question" is to employ a simple, day by day process of commitment. Few Americans are able to give themselves to something. They always instead want to be GIVEN something. "Give me, buy me, and let me take." -- The Credo of so many!

No, our society is not inherently barren. Rather, it is in a state of self imposed sterility. The case lies with the individual. He must become more than a shadow in a grey suit, more than an echo in an empty hallway, less of a symbol, more of a man.

And where are the great men of our Society? James Bond, Robert Shelton, Hugh Heffner, George Wallace, Cassius Clay. Are these Hereos? Where are the people who create, rather than destroy? It seems the truly creative are often unknown. This is the tragedy, for creation is the only cure; only by a constant creation can we rise above the dead and decaying, can we realize our almost unimaginable potentialities.

Today, landing on the moon is our goal. That barren, empty, silent moon. We don't know the earth. We don't know ourselves. Perhaps we know the moon better than we think. Perhaps it is our ideal.

The New Republicans

By James Brennan

"Republicans must be conservative with policies that have proven sound, liberal with policies that have proven unsound and moderate with policies that are not yet proven." These words were spoken before an enthusiastic gathering of approximately 65 Young Republicans from Villanova and Rosemont College by Republican Congressman Richard S. Schweiker at a recent meeting of the two-year old Villanova Collegiate Young Republican Club.

POSSIBLE CANDIDATE

Congressman Schweiker, a possible Republican Gubernatorial candidate, represents Montgomery County which has the highest per capita income, highest per capita level of education and probably the highest growth rate in the state.

TRADITION BROKEN

Commencing his lecture, Representative Schweiker stated that in the election of 1964 the Johnson-Humphrey slate received nine million more votes than the Kennedy-Johnson combination. The blueprint for the 1964 election disaster can be seen in a number of aspects which occurred for the first time in 16 years.

In the '64 election a majority of college graduates voted against the Republicans; a majority of professional and businessmen voted against the Republicans; a majority of white collar workers voted against the Republicans; a majority of farmers voted against the Republicans; a majority of people over 50 years of age voted against the Republicans and a majority of independents voted against the Republicans.

With results like these, Schweiker said, "The Republican Party was successful in doing only one thing - putting itself on the road to oblivion."

MINORITY PARTY

Continuing, he said that the Republicans have been a minority party for 32 years and today only 26 per cent consider themselves Republicans. Among young people the Republicans are a minority by a two and a half to one margin.

Schweiker further stated that a major problem among Republicans is that they always tend to label themselves as either conservative or liberal, and this causes factions and conflict within the party. The Democrats are much more tolerant of their differences and can put a Joe Clark and James Eastland side by side without causing any problems. With the Republicans trying to solve problems by labeling them they enable the party to be divided and conquered instead of united - "our opposition encourages this labeling."

Richard Schweiker

DIVERSIFIED

The Republican Party has room for both Negroes and Whites, for Protestants and Catholics, for a Goldwater and a Javits, and for a Tower and a Lindsay. The party can unite these diversified groups as was done during Lincoln's time to save the union.

Summarizing, Schweiker said "We need a modern Republican policy based on the old principles of Lincoln."

STATE

Turning to the state picture, Schweiker said that the administration of Governon Scranton illustrates a party of action, inclusion, and one that proposes. Under his leadership, the state's unemployment rate has been lowered to below the national average and the state's economy is growing faster than the national average. No Democratic governor can make these statements.

Schweiker ended by stating that the people will find the Republican Party, when the Republicans present a faith that says we care, we can, we will, we do and we believe.

QUESTION -ANSWER

A question and answer period followed the lecture. One question dealt with his opinion about Republican William Buckley running for mayor in New York City against Republican John Lindsay. Answering this, Schweiker said that all Republicans have a right to dissent but that the place to work out these differences is in the primary. Another question concerned the growing strength of the Democratic party among young people. To counteract this, Schweiker said the Republicans must take positive action in presenting attractive programs and candidates to young voters.

An interesting note: A complimentary remark was heard from the chairman of the Young Democrats on the lecture.

Letters From Vietnam

Editor's Note: The following letters were written concerning "Mail Call Viet Nam." Students who wish to write these men are urged to report to the student activities office for their addresses.

To Frank Eck:

Enclosed is a clipping which appeared in the Armed Forces STARS AND STRIPES newspaper in Viet Nam. I am sending it to you and the students of Villanova with this letter of appreciation.

It is demoralizing to read of the many demonstration and rallies being held against our government's position in Viet Nam. We all know the people involved constitute only a small minority of public opinion, and most Americans are behind us 100 percent.

Your plan to send 20,000 Christmas cards to G.I.'s here, is indeed a morale builder. I would like to thank you for such a noble gesture and I'm sure many more G.I's will as well.

Larry S. Hager
Medical Co.

Dear Students of Villanova:

... I've been here in Viet Nam since May 7, 1965 serving with the Third Marine Division: I've seen 18 and 19 year old men get shot down by Viet Cong gun fire (He is 21). I've also seen how the Viet Cong blinded a 13 year old Vietnamese girl to show the rest of the people what might happen to them if they wouldn't cooperate with their Communist ways.

We're fighting here in Viet Nam because of one reason. If Communism isn't stopped here, it could very well, within the near future, wind up on our beloved soil of the United States.

I read in the Daily News Briefs published for servicemen in Viet Nam of the projects which you students have taken up such as Mail Call Viet Nam plus students quoted as saying: "Let's hope that our words will speak louder than the actions of so many malcontents."

Just by reading your quoted words, they have spoken louder than the malcontents and I write this letter to say thanks to you, Mr. Frank Eck, and your students because Mail Call Viet Nam will surely be appreciated.

Thanks again Villanova students.

Roger Carter
USMC

To Frank Eck:

I am glad to see someone is on our side, I was beginning to think that no one was for us.

I am a Marine here in Viet Nam and it gets pretty lonely sometimes but after reading what you're going to do, I feel much better.

If only the other people would realize what we are doing is right. They may think that they know waht Communism is, but let them come over here and see what it is really like and what it is doing to the people. We must stop Communism here in Viet Nam. If we don't, it will spread to all of the other countries nearby.

I'm glad to see you are with the President of the United States. You are a true American. I know if I die, it will be for the good of our country.

Keep up the good work.

Erich W. Krummrei
USMC

To The Editor:

I've been out of touch with the moods of Alma Mater and her flock long enough to disqualify me from even speculating as to the strength and direction of student opinion on international topics. But I'm confident that the much-publicized attitude of "self-righteous protest" against our country's foreign policy in Viet Nam has found little voice and less support among the Villanova student body ...

Election Views

By Tom Dabney

One of the most evident things to most people, to Democrats and Republicans alike, the most apparent deduction to be drawn from the elections of the past week was that the old political machine of yesteryear was dealt two possibly fatal wounds of the five that could violate its exterior.

This post mortem, however, was plainly not an objective one since the Republicans were renounced in one case by the candidate and sought in another. The laurels of victory then rest not with any party but completely on the shoulders of the victor.

What is evident is that now the American political party system is faced with a Renaissance, a new lease on life. Thus "today we have not a victory of party, but a celebration of freedom." A political phoenix rises from the embers of one already decaying system and another that shows the marks of erosion.

One can see that the election portrays a profile that is not based on factionalism and petty conflicts, but is an attempt to bring into unity the people under two banners of allegiance.

The people have been brought to a new awareness of civil responsibility that is fostered by the strife caused by civil rights, bureacracy and national image. It is an effort to move in a positive vain and not a negative.

The new lines have been drawn on a clean slate. The blame therefore can not be traced to either of the two parties although it is true that in one election the populace sought a new leader, while in the other they were not hounded enough.

'Miss Jairus' Stuns Reviewer With 'Nightmare of Death'

By Joe Linsalata

Still stunned from seeing MISS JAIRUS at the Playbox, I must begin by stating that it is more powerful then Poe, more artful than the Absurdists' and it makes Alfred Hitchcock look sick!

A BAD DREAM

To horrify is the only description available to MISS JAIRUS. As a deplorable and morbid play unfolds itself on the Playbox stage it sends the audience home with a nightmare -- a nightmare of death.

A rarely-produced playwright, Michel de Ghelderode gives the graduate theatre a chance to explore the lower depths of peoples' emotions. An exposition of fear is the ingredient, but one of fear which normal people wish to avoid -- death.

De Ghelderode wrote a ritual for the theatre. Its idea was conceived in a dream and re-written in horror.

The plot of the play can be summarized only by death of Miss Jairus, her resurrection, and her subsequent re-death.

The production of the play is beautiful at times and very weak at others. However the weakness can be overlooked because of the grotesqueness and the power of the script which makes the Absurdists' plays seem like fairy tales.

ACTING ACHIEVEMENT

The most stunning figure on stage is Miss Jairus played by Judith Bell. She has a quality and a presence on stage that is rarely seen in the Playbox. Enhanced with classical beauty and a remarkable voice, she easily dominneers the entire production.

Lou Lembo as the elder Jarius has the physical power to give the most difficult role in the play a fine quality. His portrayal in the third and fourth acts was masterful while it took him two acts to warm up.

AT SOCIETY HILL

The twin bill of LeRoi Jones' DUTCHMAN and Arthur Kopit's CHAMBER MUSIC excells as a success and a failure.

KOPIT SUCCEEDS

Kopit, who is more famous for his OH DAD, POOR DAD, etc., offers a bright and lively comedy in the Absurdist tradion. Finally through his ingenuity, the theatre of the Absurd has been placed in its proper atmosphere --a nut house.

Here eight old ladies firmly believe that they are historic figures; Joan of Arc, Queen Isabella of Spain, and Amelia Erhart are a few.

With a remarkable lyrical quality, Kopit has transformed the nonsensical language into a musical composition. An amazing play and a fine production.

A TERRIBLE PRODUCTION

However, Society Hill Playhouse performs an abortion on DUTCHMAN. The play presented resembles in a small way the same play I read last year.

By having no continuity of the set, by failure to create the given situation and by changing the ending, a powerful script turns into a series of weak episodes.

The story of the innate hostility between whites and colored receives professional acting but amateur technical achievement.

Villanova's concern with excellence, academic and otherwise, is reflected in the newspapers received from other colleges. The Temple University NEWS informs the reader that unlimited cuts for all students beyond the second semester with a 3.0 or above cumulative average will go into effect immediately.

A new brainstorm for that campus this year was to issue a handbook to all students, not just Freshmen. At Lehigh University, Junior and Senior honor students who have earned a 3.0 average or above will be exempted from rules governing class attendance. Rutgers and Penn adopted a policy not to close regularly scheduled classes because of weather conditions. Last year Villanova adopted the same policy.

An article in TIME recently stated that "only 17% of the nation's college libraries meet the 100,000-volume standard that is considered minimum for good undergraduate instruction." LaSalle doubled its library's contents in an eight-year program to improve the library. Their program sought systematically to evaluate the holdings in an effort to compile master lists of essential, useful, and desirable resources in each academic area. Perhaps a similar study by Villanova's Library staff might yield amazing results in hopeful acquisitions.

The latest protest in California is not over academic freedom, Viet Nam, or school policy, but over "The Granny," a long gown in cowboy 1890's print that covers the girl from neck to ankle. TIME magazine dubbed it "a kind of zipped-in Mother Hubbard." At the university of Santa Clara The Granny is allowed inside the dorms only, while the coeds are pushing for permission for date and classroom use.

Will Villanova nurses be the next ones to take up the fad? Women are not allowed in the dorms on campus. But this does not ban the possibility of Grannies in Mendel Hall. While attention is focused on California, we may as well mention the requirement at San Francisco City College for admission to the sorority that prides itself on its scholarship: a C average.

To raise money for a scholarship fund, students at the University of Nevada have planned a "Penny Night." Women students will be able to "buy" extra time after hours by donating money to the fund. Freshmen and Sophomores can buy a whole hour for sixty cents, but Juniors and Seniors will be able to buy only a half-hour for thirty cents. The SAGEBRUSH continues, "No fraction of time will be sold to anyone."

YOU, TOO, CAN BE INFERIOR

The second gravest problem confronting college students today is inferiority feelings. (The first gravest problem is, of course, the recent outbreak of moult among sorority house canaries.) Let us today look into the causes of inferiority feelings and their possible cures.

Psychologists divide inferiority feelings into three principal categories:

1. Physical inferiority.
2. Mental inferiority.
3. Financial inferiority.

(A few say there is also a fourth category: ichthyological inferiority—a feeling that other people have prettier fish—but I believe this is common only along the coasts and in the Great Lakes area.)

Let us start with the feeling of physical inferiority, perhaps the easiest to understand. Naturally we are inclined to feel inferior to the brawny football captain or the beautiful homecoming queen. But we should not. Look at all the people, neither brawny nor beautiful, who have made their marks in the world. Look at Napoleon. Look at Socrates. Look at Caesar. Look at Lassie.

What I mean is you can't always tell what's inside a package by looking at the outside. (Sometimes, of course, you can. Take Personna Stainless Steel Blades, for example. Just one glance at that jolly blue and white package—so bright and pert, so neat but not gaudy—and you know it has to contain blades of absolute perfection. And you are right! Personna gives you so many shaves per blade it takes a math major to count them. And they are luxury shaves—smoother, comfortabler, kinder to the kisser. Moreover, Personna comes both in Double Edge and Injector style. And as if this weren't enough, Personna is now offering you a chance to grab a fistful of $100 bills from a $100,000 bowl! The Personna Stainless Steel Sweepstakes is off and running, and you're all eligible to enter. Visit your friendly Personna dealer today to get details and an entry blank.)

But I digress. Let us turn now to the second category—mental inferiority. A lot of people think they are dumber than other people. This is not so. It must be remembered that there are different kinds of intelligence. Take, for instance, the classic case of the Sigafoos brothers, Claude and Sturbridge, students at a prominent Western university (Dartmouth). It was always assumed that Claude was the more intelligent just because he knew more than Sturbridge about the arts, the sciences, the social sciences, the humanities, and like that. Sturbridge, on the other hand, was ten times smarter than Claude when it came to tying granny knots. But no matter; everybody looked down on "Stupid Sturbridge," as they called him, and looked up to "Clever Claude," as they called him. But who do you think turned out to be the smart one when their granny almost got loose and ran away? You guessed it—good old Stupid Sturbridge.

We arrive now at the final category, financial inferiority. One way to deal with this condition is to increase your income. You can, for example, become a fence. Or you can pose for a life class, if your college is well heated.

But a better way to handle financial inferiority is to accept it philosophically. Look on the bright side of poverty. True, others may have more money than you have, but look at all the things you have that they don't—debts, for instance, and hunger cramps.

Always remember, dear friends, that poverty is no disgrace. It is an error, but it is no disgrace.

Unknown V.U. Bridge Club Lacks Much but not Spirit

By Don Peters

In the basic obscurity of the basement of Corr Hall, "music" provided by the campus laundry, the little known and even less renowned Villanova Bridge Club meets every Monday night at seven o'clock.

Even without any publicity the club has survived the last two years with relative ease. Some good players have come and gone, but some of the best ones are still there.

Last year's winners John Duston and John McKeon ended their partnership with the decision of John McKeon to enter a New York Monastery. The team of Gerry Bosworth and Joe O'Donnell is back this year as strong as they've ever been.

Art Walsh and Joe Predham are two other top contenders for the championship this year. The newest threat though seems to be coming from two first year men. The new team of Regan and Connors hasn't won yet but they've placed well in every game so far.

With a combination of playing tricks and point count, the championship team of two years ago, Don Peters and Jay Crockett, has opened a commanding lead in the race for that number one spot. Winning the last two weeks, they are both confident that their Overcall System will survive any onslaught that the competition can muster against them.

There is still a need for bridge players of any caliber, size or shape to add to the club's membership. Unlike some clubs on campus the only cost involved in joining is time.

The time it takes to play one session every Monday night, starting at seven o'clock in Corr Hall. The Bridge Club is still waiting for approval from the University to join the American Contract Bridge League (ACBL), and this means that there will be master points awarded for the first time.

The Villanova Bridge Club welcomes any and all students who wish to compete for that number one spot.

John Osborne's play, INADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE will have its American premiere tonight at the Walnut Street Theatre in Philadelphia.

It is written by the same author who brought to the stage LOOK BACK IN ANGER, EPITAPH FOR GEORGE DILLON, and the controversial LUTHER. Last year it was acclaimed as one of the outstanding plays in London.

It will play in Philadelphia through November 27, which is prior to its New York premiere November 30.

MADELEINE SHERWOOD STARS

Nicol Williamson and Madeleine Sherwood star in this character study of an aggressive lawyer with problems, of indecision, frustration, and licentiousness.

Miss Sherwood was last seen on Broadway in the dual assignments of Morgan Le Fey in CAMELOT and in THE NIGHT OF THE IGUANA. She made her Broadway debut in THE CHASE, and was subsequently seen in the originals of THE CRUCIBLE, CAT ON A HOT TIN ROOF, and SWEET BIRD OF YOUTH. Off Broadway she has been in BRECHT ON BRECHT and won an Obie Award for her performance in HEY YOU, LIGHT MAN.

The show is being produced by David Merrick and Anthony Page is responsible for the directing.

REPERTORY THEATRE

Philadelphia's only permanent resident Repertory Theatre opens its second season next Tuesday night, November 16. The Theatre of the Living Arts will begin with Chekhov's UNCLE VANYA.

Playing the title role will be David Hurst with Lois Smith in the part of Yelena.

Subscriptions are available for students to attend this and the remaining four plays at a cost of less than $1.50. Information or applications can be obtained in the Dean of Student Activities Office on the second floor of Dougherty Hall.

Better Things for Better Living ...through Chemistry

Fraternity Haze

By Mike Soroka

Well, it's that time of the year again. The leaves on all the foliage are changing color, and the nuts are starting to fall from the trees. Some of them have apparently landed in Dougherty Hall.

It is twelve-thirty on a crisp autumn day. You are seated in the cafeteria, hunched over a bowl of spaghetti. You hear the tramp of approaching feet and the sound of laughter, so you turn around. "We're the Bobbsey Twins! We're the Bobbsey Twins!" and two fellows (?) go skipping by, arms linked.

Another stands on a table-top reading aloud, from a "Dear Penny" column, the sad tale of a teen-aged girl in trouble. Two others are racing through the Pie Shoppe, engaged in a spirited game of cowboys and Indians. The fraternities are pledging again! Oh goody!

At this point, before I get any more involved, I would like to point out that this article DOES NOT deal with the value of the fraternities themselves. Fraternities are a fine idea, and I imagine that they do play their own unique role in fostering better social relations.

What I am objecting to -- and am writing about -- are the antics involved in pledging. I only mention this to insure my own safety, as I would hate to be attacked by a bunch of people who have misconstrued my article as a criticism of the basic ideas of the fraternity. If this point is now sufficiently clear, we may as well proceed.

If you were to stop for a minute to think about the whole business of pledging (being careful, of course, not to let anyone catch you thinking and perhaps judge you odd), you would be struck by two rather large questions.

First, why does the fraternity require such practices as are involved in pledging; or, rather, why do the pledges willingly submit themselves to these contrived tortures? Pledging, I am told, gives prospective fraternity members a chance to prove that they are worthy to join the brotherhood, that they have something worthwhile to contribute to its benefit.

As far as I can see all pledging does accomplish is to prove that the pledges are willing -- if you'll pardon the expression -- to make public asses out of themselves. And if such is the material out of which fraternities are made, I'll gladly relinquish all my chances of ever joining one.

Of course, once you're actually in the fraternity, you can enjoy all its dances, parties, etc. But does such "comradeship" really compensate for the initial humiliations? If all you are out for is partying, why not join the Young Democrats or Young Republicans? At least there you can get in without all the high-school stunts.

Secondly, why does the University tolerate such carryings-on? Some of the pledging stunts -- and here I refer to the shaving-cream sandwich type of thing -- have no place at all in a University setting. It's hard enough to maintain an intellectual atmosphere around here as it is, and the illusion is completely shattered when you have a bunch of people running around the campus wearing funny hats and carrying pumpkins on their shoulders.

Besides, some of the stunts, while seemingly innocuous (whew!) could perhaps lead to someone getting hurt. There are enough normal hazards in the cafeteria without adding that of having someone running around to trip over a tray and come crashing into your soup or something.

I suppose that by now you've gotten the idea that I am against all childish pledging stunts and that I feel they should be eliminated completely. But I realize that the traditions of fraternities are not going to crumble just because of one article. I am willing to compromise, to meet the fraternities half-way. They can pick whatever type of pledging they want to, if I can choose the time and place for them: say 6 p.m., in the middle of Lancaster Avenue?

V.U. Band Has Majorettes

Villanova's predominantly male band, under the direction of Mr. C. W. Lowden, Director, Father J. Doherty, Moderator, and Alfred Bingham, President, has now extended its ranks to include several talented majorettes. These girls made their debut at the Villanova Homecoming Football game against West Chester, held October 23.

The bannerettes consist of Sue Hayes and Carol Rosenberger. The Majorettes are: Marge Cawley, Sue Chianese, Maureen Gallagher, Sue Houghton, Irene Riso, Beverly Smiarowski, Veronica Dankel, and Kathy Welsh.

The uniforms, provided by the University, consist of white letter sweaters, dark blue flared skirts, and white boots.

The girls will provide a pre-game and half-time performance at each home and away game. By the presence of these girls the hope is fostered that they will provide the color and spirit necessary to increase band participation.

The 1965 Wildcat Band performed at its best for Villanova's Homecoming game. The show was due to the increased membership in the band and the first appearance of the Villanova majorette corps.

In order for the band to continue to be the "Pride of the Main Line," it needs more support. A school with the size and spirit of Villanova should not find it difficult to have a 100-piece marching band, yet it was difficult to get even 50 members.

There is a lot of spirit for the teams so why can't this spirit be shown even more effectively with a marching brass band?

It was a good show for the Homecoming and Quantico audiences. But the show could be improved if the band membership increased to 100. Villanovans with school spirit are needed.

SGA Asks for Food Machines in Dormitories

plained that some courses and some departments consider the final to be an entirely necessary part of the course.

SATURDAY ALLOWANCE

Another announcement notified residents that coats and ties would no longer be necessary for Saturday breakfast and lunch.

The meeting itself, the shortest of the semester so far, passed two motions after flurries of debate on semantics.

A motion to investigate the possibility of installing food machines in various resident dorms was amended to call for their establishment and then passed over the dissenting vote of Senior Class President Jim Griffin. He felt the motion had not been sufficiently investigated prior to its submission to the Congress.

Although "food machines" is a relatively minor issue, the bill was used as a political football as many of the basics of student government were debated.

Griffin's objections, outlined in last week's VILLANOVAN, were based on his feeling that a "letter of permission to investigate" a motion is all that is necessary for a person to check into its feasibility.

Rick Holwell, while agreeing with Griffin in part, argued that the job of the Congress was "to voice the desires of the Student body."

Two members of the SGA argued that their past dealings with members of the administration had shown the administrators to be less interested in an idea unless it had been specifically called for by Student Government. This was listed as the principal reason for the motion being worded "that the SGA INVESTIGATE."

A motion by Tom Conway, Sophomore Class President, also got lost in verbose debate. Calling for each teacher to submit a syllabus for file in the library, Conway asked that these list assigned texts, outside reading and a basic outline of the work to be covered in the course.

It was Conway's contention that this could be used by students to check into the desirability of taking a course before registering for it. Again Griffin wondered about the necessity of the motion, arguing that a booklet is printed with this information available. Pat Mahadey argued that there is no such booklet.

Bob Dean, former Vice-President of the organization, joined Griffin in negative debate noting that the motion was superfluous since much of the information is already obtainable.

NEWS MEDIA MOTION

Two amendments to the Constitution were read and will be debated next week. One calls for a representative of the VILLANOVAN and Radio Station WWVU to be present during judicial hearings of the Student Senate. The other would make the deadline for submission of motions to the Secretary of the Congress earlier to allow Representatives more time to study them before debate.

Dick Behrens, chairman of the Student Union Committee, whose duties include most of the ditto printing done on campus and almost all of the publicity on a campus-wide basis, submitted his resignation so he could accept the post of Special Assistant to the National President of the Associated Student Governments of the USA, David Banmiller.

The resignation was accepted by Vice-President Brian Banmiller who announced that Behren's recommendation for a successor, Jim D'Agostino, had been approved.

A warning was also issued from the committee that classes stand the chance of losing the right to use the Elliot addressing machine. The warning however did not spell out the reason for the "displeasure" of the committee.

Greg Fusco's appointment to head the Basketball club was announced.

The meeting closed after the announcement that there would be no excused cuts issued for participation in Senior Day at the Alumni House, scheduled for tomorrow between 11 a.m. and 7 p.m.

Intramurals Need Your Support

By John Digennaro

Each year Villanova has a rather extensive intramural program.

Mr. Edward P. Geisz has been Director of Intramurals at Villanova for the last fourteen years. During that time it has been his job to successfully coordinate a system of athletics catering to the general student body. The program is designed as an extra-curricular outlet to counteract the physical complacency so often attached to a serious pursuit of scholarship.

Running a program trying to please a number of people with a farrago of interests is by no means an easy task. As a matter of fact it is a very real problem, but one being viewed very realistically by the department officials. They realize fully there are some very evident shortcomings, and are presently working to smooth over the wrinkles.

Ed Geiz

A man with a broken arm is handicapped, but by no means useless. Someday his arm will heal and he will be 100% efficient again, but until that day comes he doesn't just roll over and play dead - he takes advantage of what he has.

I've grunted and groaned just as much as anyone else but if we all stop and think for a minute where does the actual fault lie? The facilities, equipment, and organization are available, it's the participants and the interest that are lacking.

TOUCH FOOTBALL

The fall intramural season starts with the touch football league. Every year some 1200 players representing 70 to 80 different teams sign up for the season. However, there are more non-participants than actual entrants and these are the ones that the department would like to reach.

Granted, there are problems; scheduling, time, weather, and classes to name a few, but these can be worked out if desire to do so is expressed. At present there are four leagues on two fields, but this can be very easily expanded at the request of the students; that is, if enough boys are interested, morning or early afternoon games can be added to the schedule.

For example, if a large enough turnout is exacted to allow practicality, a day hop league could be started, where the games could be played at earlier hours or duirng breaks.

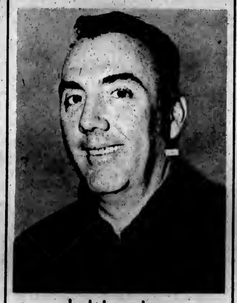
This offer holds true not only for football, but for any activity on the agenda. Mr. Geisz has come right out and expressed a particular desire to extend the program so that the day hops too can become an intricate part.

He has offered to sit and consider any suggestions, or possibilities, and if possible, make them realities. He has promised shower facilities in the field house for those who still must attend classes after the games.

Aside from organized events like the cross country and swimming meets, and the golf tournament, there are many opportunities available for those who don't wish to join any team, or compete in any individual event.

Alumni Gym, for so many years a tradition, yet badly in need of repairs has finally been refinished. A lot of money has been spent to completely do over the walls, floors, lighting, baskets, or in short the whole place, so as to make it a more than adequate court not only for the upcoming basketball leagues, but also for general use any day between 10 a.m. and 8 p.m. with special late hours on Friday and Saturday.

FIELD HOUSE OPEN



The Field House will once again be available, except during practices or scheduled events. There are several outdoor basketball courts behind the Field House as well as down by the railroad tracks. Also down by the tracks are tennis and handball courts always open to students for use.

Adding to the incentive for participation are the new awards to be presented to the various winners this year. In the past winners were presented with the traditional intramural Key, but this year handsomely engraved individual plagues will be presented them instead.

At present a special league has been set up for law students, and can be broadened and expanded in proportion to participation. Nurses too have been given special consideration to further their interest and participation in the program. Recently, a field hockey league has been started for their benefit. Also Alumni Gym and the swimming pool can be theirs for the asking, and teams or events set up.

For that matter the pool is open to all students every day between 10 and 2:30. Any and all equipment at the department's disposal is also available for use at any time. This equipment can be picked up at the intramural office in Alumni Hall simply by leaving your matric card until the stuff is returned.

This week the finals of the football league open up. In a couple of weeks the basketball season will once again be in full swing. The spring brings softball and the outdoor track meet. Throughout the year there are also Checkers, chess and bridge tournaments which can be entered. Add to this the numerous facilities available for every day use, and we actually have a gold mine, but no prospectors.

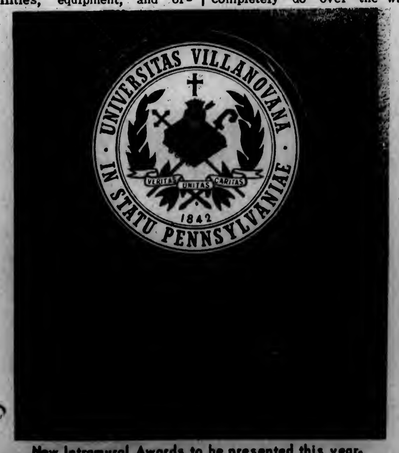
Jack Lumsden

GOLF TOURNAMENT

So far this year several events have already taken place and been completed. The golf tournament, a relatively new addition, was won by Paul McHugh, a freshman, with a very respectable 77 for his 18 hole effort.

The swimming and diving championships, held last month, saw some pretty good individual efforts, and also some new meet records. Dick Raughbaugh took the 50 yard backstroke in 29.4. Jeff Farrell set records in the 50 yard breastroke and the 100 yard individual medley with a 30.9, and 1:03.6 respectively.

Joel Burns captured the butterfly, Bob Hartye the 100 yard freestyle, and Bill McDonough the 50 yard freestyle. Denis Dean, with 28.45, won the diving competition.



Both relay events saw new records. The 200 yard medley relay of Lee, Farrell, Burns, and Boehmcke swam home in 1:51.5; while the 200 yard freestyle team of McDonough, Hartye, Campbell, and Bur covered their course in 1:35.9.

Intramurals as a necessary and efficacious aspect of campus life cannot be realized unless the students themselves make it such. The planning and desire for success is there in the persons of Mr. Geisz, Mr. Lumsden, and Mr. Moran, but the actual advantages are directed toward the students who to become benefactors must first become partakers.

Maff's Musings

By Joe Maffongelli

Can a perennial winner become a loser over night? All things are possible, but this seems to be a rare occurrence. One realm in which this seems to be especially true is that of professional football. While a college or high school club may go through sporadic periods of starving because the talent is confined to the classrooms rather than the grid iron, the pros are paid to do only one thing-win.

The job of coaching a winner is always a tedious task, but that of building a winner can seem utterly impossible. When Allie Sherman took the reins of the New York Giants he was dealing with a true winner. He had to sit back therefore each Sunday and watch his "old men" invariably take the field and do what their salaries warranted. But all of a sudden the Giants stop winning or rather the coach loses. The man of the hour is now on the spot. Why can't the old boys pull out just one more division title as they have been doing for the past three seasons?

It so happens that a great coach was born after one losing season. But perhaps this was not the case. Perhaps rather the coach who had gotten so much more out of a club for a few years than anyone else could have is now without the necessary material.

When this happened to Allie he started renovating. As the Giants take the field each Sunday afternoon in 1965 they bear little resemblance to the championship clubs of a few years ago. If it were not for their unmistakable battle caps they would probably be taken for a local college club due to their youth. The so-called "baby bulls" who have replaced the "old men" seem to be winners also. Is it the uniforms that do this to the Bronx Gladiators, or is it rather the coach?

Sherman has been accused of many things in the past, not the least of which has been the selling of green quarterbacks down the river, but he has only been charged with being a loser once. We can attribute this to the fact that winners usually remain winners, but there is also the possibility that good coaches must work with a free hand despite public opinion. Perhaps the Giants won't win the title this season, but at least they do win once again.

Wrestling Club Initiated Practice Starts Monday

By Bob McIntyre

For the past three years, wrestling has tried to break through tradition and become an integral part of Villanova's ever growing sports program. A sophomore, named Jack McGarvey, has taken up the banner and is continuing the effort to have organized wrestling recognized on campus.

McGarvey has held several meetings in his effort to find out if there is sufficient student interest for the sport of wrestling at Villanova. He now has over 75 applicants, including five football players who feel this could help them greatly during the layoff after the football campaign.

ADMINISTRATION

He has been in constant contact with the head of Student Activities, Fr. Ryan, keeping him informed of all the happenings that have taken place. Fr. Ryan is all for having grapplers on the campus and all that remains is an okay from Art Mahan, Athletic Director.

Practice if everything goes according to schedule will start on Nov. 15 and recess when Christmas vacation begins. McGarvey asks that all interested students keep an alert eye open for flyers on the Campus Bulletin Boards for the time and place of practice.

It is most likely that practice will be held in the afternoon, after classes, and underneath Bartly Hall Cafeteria if it is procurred as planned. The basement is ideal for wrestling conditions, being about 85°. Other facilities are available if the quarters in Bartley can't be secured.

WEIGHTS

The wrestling team will be run as a club with expectations of becoming a Varsity sport in the near future. The weight classes that will be included in the competition will probably be 127, 137, 147, 154, 165, 171, 181, 191, and the Heavyweight division. The 120 weight can be added, depending on the meets to be held.

There will be approximately eight to ten meets during the months of December, January, and February.

Villanova Lionesses Join Intramural Set For Field Hockey

By Gene FitzMaurice

John Fenlon, chairman of the intramural program at Villanova, has announced that for the first time in sports history, distaff Wildcats will take the field.

Villanova Lionesses will appear on Mendel Field at 2:30 Friday afternoon thanks to the joint efforts of two freshman Nurses, Kate Sullivan and June Rigby. Miss Sullivan, a graduate of the Country Day School of the Sacred Heart, and Miss Rigby, who played at East Hampton School felt that the introduction of intramural sports for the Nurses would be an invaluable contribution to the extracurricular program open to the Nurses.

Both gave full credit for approval of the program to Rev. Richard Appicci, OSA, Vice-President for Student Affairs.

Although the team will begin with only an intramural schedule at this time, it was felt that the Lionesses might eventually move out to take on off-campus competition.

Fenlon said that he felt that this was needed to make the intramural program complete.

After approval came from the Administration, Mr. Moran and the Maintenance Department went to work on setting up the field and constructing the goals.

Miss Sullivan announced that students interested in joining the Lionesses could contact her or come to Mendel Field any Friday afternoon.

Villanova Booters Beat Eastern Baptist Record Stands at 3-3

By Jerry Bruderle

Sophomore Dietmar Parchinger scored three goals last Wednesday to help Villanova defeat Eastern Baptist 3-1 in a soccer match, after the 'Cats had lost to Haverford earlier in the week by the same score. This evened Villanova's record at 3-3 with yesterday's game against St. Joseph's closing out the schedule.

Villanova led 2-1 at halftime against Eastern Baptist, and clinched the game when the Austrian-born Parchinger rammed home his final goal. At the same time the Villanova defense, led by Karl Danz, Jim Benivuto and co-captain Jan Mantero, held Eastern scoreless.

Parchinger also scored the only goal against Haverford as the teams were deadlocked 1-1 at the half. Haverford got two quick goals in the second half and held on as the 'Cats offense couldn't get going.

Villanova played without the services of one of the co-captains due to an injury. Tom Wilson, co-captain with Mantero, has been on crutches for two weeks since he collided with the goalie in a game wth Pennsylvania.

Actually the soccer team is searching for a coach if anyone on campus is qualified. Although in its second year, the team has not yet achieved varsity recognition and they are trying to build up interest in soccer around the campus. Both games this past week were exciting games played before good crowds, although both were played away from home.

Ruggers Notch Seventh Win As 'Cats Rout Quakers 14-0

By Don Campbell

Erupting after a scoreless first half the Rugby Club of Villanova notched its seventh victory against the visiting University of Pennsylvania team.

The Saturday morning crowd saw a keenly-fought first half in which the defenses ruled. The offensive drives of Penn were limited by some bone-crushing tackles and cross field covering by the guardians of Villanova's goal line. The only advantage to be gained during this stalemate was field positioning which was accomplished by some good kicking by both sides.

The Penn Club seemed to be on the verge of scoring on two occasions. Both times the visitors were within inches of paydirt as the Wildcat scrum looked as though it was going to be pushed into the ground. But the 'Cats held and then waited for better things in the second half.

As the second half got under way the injuries began to mount as did the Villanova offensive machine.

Joe Forns started the scoring barrage on a neat 40 yard gallop after being set up by some sharp passing and running by Bill Cameron. Rich Crawford made his first PAT of the day to make it 5-0.

With about 15 minutes to go in the game the Main Liners started to capitalize on some sloppy ball handling in the Penn backfield. This is when the game turned into a rout.

Climaxing his superior play throughout the game, forward Bill Clark picked a fumble and charged into the paydirt to make it 8-0.

After about 30 seconds the Cats again had the ball as Pete Conserva turned left end and pulled off the longest run of the day with an 65 yard trot. Next, Jerry Donovan got in on the fun by returning a kick 35 yards and this made the score 14-0. Crawford added another free two pointer to wrap up the scoring for the day.

Only the final whistle kept the Cats from pouring more on as the Club looked its best since the victory over Princeton two weeks ago.

NOTES: Don Guerrieri playing A team for the first time turned in a fine performance ... Vic Sarcissian played the whole game despite injuring his knee several times ... Starters Jim McCusker and Rich Ward are out with injuries ... Notably present on the sidelines was the famous Michael Muschal and notably absent was "The History Department" ...

Strong Marine Defense Stops 'Cats for Sixth Loss, 32-7

A well-placed block by a Quantico Marine forces John Kolmer out of bounds as the 'Cats drop a 32-7 contest to the Marines.

By Al Villari

Last Saturday 7400 disappointed fans witnessed a funeral at Villanova Stadium. The 'Cats lost all but their last chance to salvage something out of a disappointing season, as the Leathernecks drove the proverbial last nail into the coffin.

Although the Marines, who unofficially sported the nation's 5th best defense on entering the tilt with the Wildcats, were generally expected to win, the game seemed like anything but a wake for the first 15 minutes of play, as the 'Cats battled to a scoreless tie for the first quarter.

At the outset of the contest, Villanova received the opening kickoff, which Tom Brown returned for 27 yards. But the following series of plays were abortive, and Connell was forced to punt. The Marines also saw their first try at offense meet with little success, and were also forced to punt.

The rest of the first quarter continued as it had begun, as both contestants found it rough going on offense, and could do little more than trade punts.

Interceptions were also traded, as the Marines' Snider picked off an errant Connell toss intended for Kolmer, and the 'Cats Greco snagged a Cotton pass, which he returned for 23 yards. Neither team, however, was able to capitalize on the thefts.

The second quarter seemed at first to be little more than a continuation of the scoreless duel of the first quarter, as Connell and Snider were forced to continue exchanging punts. But everyone knew that something had to give.

QUANTICO SCORES

On a 4th and 10 situation on the 'Cats 7, Connell boomed a punt which was downed on the Villanova 37. On the following play, the Leathernecks' Amos took a pitchout from Cotton, which he carried over right tackle for 37 yards and a touchdown, with 7:15 of the quarter gone. Ross's kick was good, and Quantico pulled out to a 7-0 lead.

On the following kickoff, however, the Wildcats looked like they might start rolling, as Joe Santomauro returned the 60-yard boot from his goal line to the Villanova 27, where Quantico was penalized for a face-mask infraction, bringing the ball to the 'Cats' 42.

But again the Villanova offense sputtered, as the strong Marine rush forced Andrejko and Bellotti to rush their throws. Connell punted once again, and Quantico started another drive from their 27.

Via a drive which took nine plays and consumed 72 yards because of the sharp passing of Cotton and the nifty running of Schmidt and Amos, Quantico found itself on the Wildcat 1.

Again Amos took the handoff, and this time cracked over the middle for the final yard and the Marines' second score, this one coming with 13:18 elapsed. Ross's conversion attempt was wide this time, and the half ended with Villanova on the short end of the 13-0 score. The handwriting was now on the wall.

Early in the third quarter, the Wildcat's hopes were again boosted as Jerry Strid pounced on a Schmidt fumble on the Villanova 47. But once more Villanova was unable to move the ball. After another exchange of punts, a Bellotti pass was intercepted by Stuckrath on the Quantico 46.

POINTS ROLL UP

After the Leatherneck's Benson went for 5 to the Villanova 49, Fitzgerald cracked up the middle and went all the way for the score, on a beautiful 49-yard gallop. Ross failed again to convert. Score: 19-0.

The rest of the game was formality, but the Marines wouldn't let up. Hatch ran a punt 36 yards, to the Wildcat 7. Evans proceeded to run around right end for the touchdown, with 12:45 gone. Ross's kick was good. The third quarter ended with Quantico leading 26-0.

But the 'Cats were determined to spoil the Marine shutout. Villanova's Geary alertly recovered a Quantico fumble on the 'Cat 46, which set up Villanova's first and last score.

With 4:22 of the fourth quarter gone, Bellotti took the ball in himself, and Case's conversion was good. The Marines added another touchdown later on, but it didn't really matter.

Georgetown Drops Cats In Dual Meet Competition

By Ken Coniglio

Fairmont Park was the scene as the Villanova Cross Country team closed out its season of dual meet competition by losing to a strong Georgetown quintet, 25-33.

Georgetown's Eamon O'Reilly set a new meet and course record in covering the five mile run in 25 minutes and 38 seconds. O'Reilly's time erased the old mark of 26 minutes and 25 seconds set by Villanova Soph Charlie Messenger only last week in Villanova's victory over LaSalle.

Messenger and Soph Ian Hamilton tied for second for the 'Cats in the identical times of 26:25. Fourth and fifth places were both taken by Georgetown. Rick Urbina ran 26:35 while Ron Ziemenski ran 26:47. Sixth place went to Dave Patrick of Villanova in 26:48.

Seventh, Eighth and ninth were all taken by Georgetown, Jim McDermott 27:13, Tom Mizzone 27:15 and Bill Perry 27:31. The best Villanova could do from here was tenth and twelfth. Rounding out the scoring were Paul Sanborn running 27:34 and Jack O'Leary 27:36.

The dual meets are over, but next week Villanova competes in the IC4A Cross Country Championships. No doubt the 'Cats will be rated as underdogs. However, you can never count a Villanova team out of the running.

Georgetown and Notre Dame loom as the favorites for this years team championship while Larry Furnell seems the likely candidate to run off with the individual honors and possibly a new record.

Furnell has been running like a ball of fire all year and looks like All-American material again this year.

As was said many times before, Villanova has a young team. They started off this year a group of inexperienced sophomores who had never run the five mile Varsity course.

They closed the season with a 3 and 3 record with victories over St. Joe's St. John's and LaSalle, while losing to Penn State, Quantico and Georgetown.

This year was one of building in confidence and in strength. The same men that competed this year will return for two more years of Varsity competition. A framework was established this year which can be relied upon in the years to come.

A young team develops into a group of veterans through hard work and experience. The 'Cats show that they have the ability and it is only a matter of time before they explode.

Virginia Tech 'Gobblers' Set For Wildcats As Main Dish

By Joe Marsh

During the course of a football season in which a team has been exploded by "Rockets," clawed by "Eagles," ripped by "Cougars," pecked by "Blue Hens," sliced by "Musketeers," and destroyed by "Leathernecks," the possibility of being "gobbled" does not cause any great concern.

But, as any truthful piece of turkey food will tell you, to be "gobbled" is a truly frightening experience.

On Saturday, the Wildcats will be travelling down to Blacksburg, Virginia, the home nest of the Virginia Tech "Gobblers." If the Wildcats are expecting any great manifestation of Southern hospitality, they are in for a great surprise.

At the beginning of this season, prospects were dim at Tech. Virginia lost 17 lettermen at graduation. Last year's seniors were responsible for 200 of the 224 points that Virginia Tech scored last season.

18 BACK

The 18 returning lettermen were not expected to equal the 1964 squad's surprisingly strong record of 6-4-0. Tech beat such tough teams as Tampa, George Washington, Florida State, William and Mary, and North Carolina State in 1964.

Virginia Tech dropped out of the Southern Conference in order to improve the quality of their competition. Playing a major schedule this year, Coach Jerry Claiborne's team has achieved a very respectable five and three record.

Tech opened the season by beating a tough Wake Forest team 12-3. Gaining momentum, they rolled through Richmond, William and Mary, and George Washington. After losing a tough one at Vanderbilt, 21-10, Tech bounced back and trimmed Virginia 22-14.

Tech made a surprisingly strong showing at Florida State a week later only to lose in the closing seconds 7-6. Virginia took a real physical beating from the big tough Florida team, which could account for their loss to West Virginia on Saturday 31-22.

QUARTERBACK OWENS

Tech's Wing-T offense revolves around 5'11", 173-pound quarterback Bobby Owens from Richmond, Virginia. Owens is a scrambler who can run as well as pass. In the game against Virginia, Owens passed for two T.D.'s and ran for a third.

In Tech's losing effort against West Virginia, Owens passed for two more scores, threw for two points after the second touchdown, and ran twelve yards for another score. Owens is joined in the backfield by lettermen Tommy Francisco, Sal Garcia, and Eddie Buhlheller and a host of good sophs.

Tech's real strength lies in their defense. In their first seven games, they yielded a stingy ten points a game average. The upfront contingent is led by such stalwarts as Bill Edwards, an end, guards John Sheehy and Mike Saunders, tackles Sands, Don Bruce, and Woody.

Although lacking game experience, the defense has shown great improvement. By winning close games early in the season, the many sophomores picked up confidence and now they are tough to beat. Tech has won both games played in the series with Villanova which began in 1957.

Coach Claiborne's Gobblers are tough and it will be a long ride home from Blacksburg, Virginia.

Remedial Reading Program Needs Villanova Volunteers

The Philadelphia Archdiocesan Tutorial Program for remedial reading again needs students to participate in this charitable work.

Last year 55 Villanovans participated in the program, which gives the college student the opportunity to assist grammar school students who have difficulty in reading and reading comprehension.

No experience is necessary and transportation will be provided when necessary. Those who participated in the program last year found the work rewarding.

One student who taught in a Archdiocesan grammar school in West Philadelphia said:

"Although the kids were restless at first, they reacted splendidly to the program, and it seemed that their reading skill improved. A few of them even went to the library at my suggestion, and they began to enjoy reading for the first time (they were in the seventh grade)."

The Rev. Richard Appicci, OSA, vice-president for student affairs, asked that Villanovans lend a helping hand and give as little or as much time as they can spare.

Applications can be picked up in Father Appicci's office on the second floor of Dougherty Hall, the SGA office, or 311 Sheehan Hall.

Nigerian Diplomat Speaks To VPU on Rhodesia Monday

A Nigerian Diplomat will ask members of the Villanova Political Union to back economic sanctions against Rhodesia at a regular debate meeting of the Union on Monday (November 22nd) at 7:30 P.M. in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall on the University campus.

The speaker Mr. B.A. Clark, of the Nigerian UN Mission will indicate why his country was opposed to the November 11, 1965 Declaration of Independence of the white-settler dominated African nation. The Rhodesian issue has moved to the center of the United Nations stage since the failure of British Prime Minister Wilson's attempt to talk the Rhodesian leadership from making the break.

During his trip to Rhodesia Wilson made it clear that Britain was prepared to use stringent economic sanctions against Rhodesia.

Critics of the Rhodesian regime point out that all effective political power is in the hands of the 250,000 whites and that the 4,000,000 non-whites, with over 90% of the population, have little or no voice in political affairs.

Critics also say that if it is successful independence will freeze white supremacy in Rhodesia as it has in neighboring South Africa.

At its November 8th debate, the Union supported by a vote of 33-22 "current Allied policy in Viet Nam." With the help of guest speaker, Australian Counselor Robert Robertson the Union majority beat back the Conservative Party's contention that the Union should express its displeasure with what Conservative Bob Beatty called "a no-win, no-lose war."

Intern Teaching Program

Liberal Arts graduates have an opportunity to earn a Master's degree at Temple University while they hold a full-time teaching position in the Philadelphia City or suburban schools. Salaries in these positions are at least $5500 per year.

The Intern Teaching Program for College Graduates is an on-the-job training program leading to professional certification, placement and tenure. Depending upon the individual student, work toward this degree may be completed in two or three years.

Those who are accepted in the Program participate in a summer orientation session at Temple University. In the fall each candidate holds a salaried teaching position in a local school. Interns continue to take courses until they fulfill the requirements for the Master's degree.

The total cost of the Program, over the three-year period is approximately $1700. Income during this three-year period is estimated at more than $16,500.

In order to qualify, a person must have a bachelor's degree, a liberal arts education, and preparation in a specific subject area. Education courses are not necessary.

Upon completion of the Program, teachers will have earned a Master's degree, professional certification, placement and tenure for service.

Miss Anne E. Carroll, a staff member of the Intern Teaching Program, will be on Villanova campus on December 6 at 9:15 a.m. Contact the Placement Office for further information and an appointment.

Annual Career Conference Set For Seniors November 30th

The 13th Annual Career Conference for all seniors will be held in the Field House on Tuesday, November 30, 1965, at 9:45 a.m. It is sponsored by the Placement Office. The conference will cover the course of the whole day with speeches by a panel of three noted personnel men on the subjects of job-hunting and the important points of a job interview.

Other activities include a speech by Father President, informal discussions with 50 invited recruiters, and a luncheon.

The panel discussions will be preceded by a welcoming address by the Very Rev. Joseph Flaherty, OSA. Following this the members of the panel will speak on their specific topics. Professor Emil Amelotti, Chairman of the Math Department will head the panel.

Lloyd Hamilton, College Relations Officer, Richardson Merrill, will deliver a talk on "Preparation for the Interview." He will be followed by Robert Schaeffer, Manager of Employment, Campbell Soup Co., and William Culp, Professional Employment Representative, American Laboratory Electronics.

Their respective topics will be "What Does the Employer Expect from the Interview" and "What Information Should the Student Expect from The Interviewer."

At the conclusion of the speeches a question and answer period will be held to entertain written questions from the students. The questions may be directed to either of the major speakers or to any one of the 50 employer representatives present.

The nature of these questions may cover anything from the topics previously discussed or queries of a specific nature, e.g. jobs, selective service status, earnings, etc.

A special luncheon will begin at 1 p.m. hosting only the 50 guests representatives, Father President, and other honored guests.

Father Flaherty will deliver the main address.

John Moritz' Villanova Placement Director, made special note of the fact that quite often Liberal Arts students feel that the conference will only be beneficial to members of the other schools of the University.

These fears should be dispelled immediately, he said, since many of the recruiters are just as interested, if not more so, in the Liberal Arts student, for his background as an asset to their firms.

Seniors are reminded that they are excused from classes between 8:30 and 2:20 on the day of the conference.

WWVU Covers Power Failure; Interviews Shocked Citizens

WWVU covered last Tuesday's power failure in the Northeastern United States with Villanova Students in mind. Their coverage included direct reports from cities many professional stations were unable to reach.

Included in the activites of the WWVU staff was providing coverage to Metromedia's WIP in Philadelphia from areas which the Villanova students reached by telephone.

Using a little known priority system of the telephone company, WWVU newsmen and engineers were able to secure reports from New York, Rochester, Buffalo, Boston, and Washington.

Keeping in mind that many students in the dormitories lived in the affected cities, the WWVU news staff relayed pleas to stay off the phone lines to the Northeast so that high priority calls could be completed.

REPORTS RELAYED

Many of the news items broadcast were gleaned from WNEW in New York which was monitored during the evening by WWVU station manager Bill McCloskey who was at home. In addition, one of the reports from New York came from Harvey Glascock, Vice-President of Metromedia, and General Manager of WNEW. His report was relayed by WIP in return for the reports fed them by the campus station.

In the early hours of the blackout, WWVU was one of the few area stations able to get reports from the area. Attempting to deal with other college stations where possible, realizing they would be the least busy with requests for reports, John Lellis, Chief Scheduling Co-ordinator for WWVU contacted Fordham's WFUV Radio.

This, and a report from WKBW in Buffalo were fed to WIP which used them on the air.

DARKNESS PREVAILS

As it became apparent later in the evening that power would not be returned to the Empire State until almost dawn, three WWVU reporters took a tape recorder and accompanied by a photographer headed for New York City.

There they interviewed people on the street for a "special" aired the next day on the station.

Station Manager McCloskey told the VILLANOVAN "I was at home when I first heard of the situation. After monitoring a few newscasts to determine its seriousness, I called the station to see what they were doing. I was not surprised to find they had already begun to handle the emergency in a thoroughly professional manner.

"The use of the priority telephone arrangement is another example of the fine training in broadcasting technique which WWVU staffers have absorbed through their association with the station," commented McCloskey.

THREE WHO DARED

The three who went to New York were Al Norcott, "Buz" Buznoski, and Mike Almy. Almy is an evening division student.

Throughout the period, WWVU attempted to confine their coverage keeping students informed of the situation "back home."

While participating in "pool" interviews, the WWVU men managed to get in front of an ABC network camera and were seen on television.

While at home, McCloskey continued to monitor WNEW and network broadcasts to glean information for the WWVU broadcasts.

In an effort to keep Villanovans informed, the station stayed on the air until 3:30 a.m., far beyond their normal sign-off time.

Pete McCarthy, WWVU program director, took charge of the operation in the absence of Bob Schaumann, News Director who was at home.

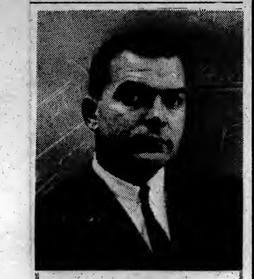
Station Faculty Moderator, Ray Wilke, himself a broadcast student in college, commented, "it is quite gratifying to see how well these student use WWVU as a supplement to their education here at Villanova. The kind of experience they get from a college station will be invaluable to any of them contemplating a career in professional broadcasting."

WWVU presents Complete Campus Coverage news twice every hour.

Orphan's Fete, Missing Link Feature Charity Weekend

By Mike Mullen

Charity weekend this year will be held Friday and Saturday, December 3 and 4. The weekend is an event sponsored by the Junior Class under the general chairmanship of Brenden Brett. Although most of the committee workers and all of the committee chairmen are Juniors, this weekend should not be thought of in terms of a closed or restricted weekend for the Juniors.



Starting with the Missing Link Contest which commences Monday, November 29 an appeal will be directed to the entire student body for support of the charitable aspects of the weekend. All profits from the weekend go to a scholarship fund for the children at St. John's Orphanage.

The class hopes that all classes and fraternities and even the Freshman dorms will be more active in supporting a Missing Link candidate. Coupled with the penny a vote Missing Link contest, money for the weekend will also be collected from classes possibly during the Theology periods.

On Friday night, December 3, a Charity Dance will be held from 8:30 to 12:30 with music being provided by the Critters and the Villanovans. The price for this event which will be held in the Field House is $3.

On Saturday December 4 the children with their "parents for a day" will leave to go on an event packed outing to the 69th Street area. There, they will visit Penny's department store where a gift will be bought for the children by the "parents," a lunch will be served at a local restaurant and a movie will be shown to the group at a nearby theatre.

Senate Recommends Motion On Presidential Succession

By Bill McCloskey

Deemed by some observers the best prepared motion in recent memory, the Student Senate has approved and sent on to tonight's Congress meeting, a bill setting up a system for Presidential Succession.

The subject of an hour long debate and close to a hundred skillful parliamentary moves, the amendment will be read tonight and voted on at the meeting December 1.

If approved, the legislation sets up machinery for an SGA president to be replaced (see box).

Jeff Radowich, one of the makers of the motion spoke for his co-signers Ward Williams and Don Serafano. The trio said they have been researching the motion for most of the semester. Bob Dean, submitted an amendment to the motion about mid-way through the debate, and was voted down by his fellow Senators.

Radowich explained the motion was submitted "to avoid the problems we faced in the Summer and early Fall." He pointed out there was nothing in the present constitution to deal with absences which are judged to be temporary.

The makers of the motion say their idea solved three problems which may crop up under the current constitution:

A) What kind of absence is temporary.

B) How can continuity be provided for the SGA.

C) What happens if a vacancy occurs at times when the Congress would not be in session for a long period of time.

Absense Considered

Under the machinery suggested by the amendment an absence would be considered temporary until adjudged permanent by a 2/3 vote of the Student Government. One weak point of the motion was pointed out by Jim Prodd who asked, "What if it were in reality a temporary absence but was judged to be permanent?"

Radowich admitted, "I never thought of that."

Under questioning, Radowich explained the order of the Vice-Presidents was "just about arbitrary." However, he pointed out, based on the Constitution, every

BE IT MOVED THAT the SGA Constitution be amended by striking out Article IV, Section 6, Part D, and by inserting the following Section 10 in Article IV: Section 10. In the event of the President's absence, for whatever reason, from his assigned duties: A) He shall be obliged to inform the Congress at the earliest possible opportunity of this absence and its estimated length. If the will of the Congress, determined by a two-thirds roll call vote, is that this absence is "permanent", then the individual replacing the president shall have the option of forming a new cabinet and exercising the other perogatives peculiar to the office of the President.

B) the order of succesion shall be the following: first the Executive Vice-President for Student Government, then the Executive Vice-President for Student Affairs, the Executive Vice-President for Educational Affairs, the Treasurer, the Secretary and the Parlimentarian.

C) The Dean of Student Activities shall have the option of appointing an Interim President, according to the order of succession outlined above in "B" if, in his opinion, the absence of the President seriously impairs the functioning of the SGA. In all such cases, the Dean's actions must be explained to the Congress at the earliest possible opportunity, at which time the machinery, outlined above in "A" must be implemented.

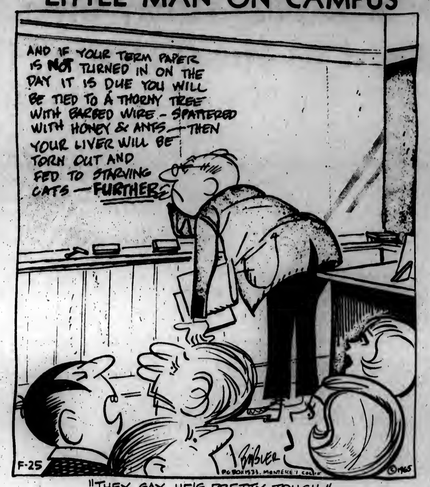
We Stand Corrected



To the Editor:

Thank you very much for your excellent reporting on the activities of the VILLANOVA FORUM. I should like also to commend you for your supreme efforts to make the VILLANOVAN a literate, articulate and meaningful medium of communication.

I must unhappily point out, however, in reference to the front page article of November 3rd, that the SGA played a wholly negligible role in sending Christmas cards to South Viet Nam. The radio announcer for the Villanova basketball games used to say AD NAUSEAM: "Let's give credit where credit is due." The Mail Call Viet Nam enterprise was exclusively the work of the twenty-nine undergraduates of Delurey Hall. Owing to considerable inconvenience, personal sacrifice, time that refused to be measured, superb organization and execution, residents of Delurey Hall deserve the kudos, not Frank Eck and Co.

Letters To The Editor

To the Editor:

Who is Harry Williams?

Harry Williams is an American.

Harry Williams is a Republican (despite what some may say or think).

Harry Williams is a Republican first and a conservative second.

Harry Williams is a Republican who is one because he believes in the policies of the GOP. Not just because he is rich (which he is not).

Harry Williams is a man who believes that the Democrat Party is not evil only stupid.

Harry Williams is a conservative who is not bound to his ideology. He supports liberal proposals if they benefit the country and does not oppose it simply because it is liberal.

Harry Williams is a Republican who realizes we are in the minority and is working to increase the size of the party not make it more exclusive.

Harry Williams is a Republican who believes that you only have to tell a Democrat the facts and he will turn Republican.

Harry Williams is a Republican who believes that the College Young Republicans must strive continually to convert college students at this time when they are forming their political opinions. Which the Villanova Young Republican Club is not doing.

Harry Williams really exists. He lives in Newtown Square and would be glad to talk to any fellow Republicans or pagans who wish to return to the fold. Call EL 6-8712.

To the Editor:

In Joe Maffongelli's article, (October 6 edition of the VILLANOVAN), he stated that, "It must be a terrible thing for a group of athletes, who also double as students and classmates, to take the field on a Saturday afternoon feeling as though nobody cares."

Mr. Maffongelli goes on to point out that the 'Cats won and lost record is on the losing side of the ledger for the first time in some five years, and the students of Villanova should stand behind their team till it "comes of age."

I am in complete agreement with Mr. Maffongelli and would like to commend him on the article, but it seems as though he should begin preaching to some of the members of the VILLANOVAN staff before presenting a plea to Villanova students.

Joe Marsh, in the November 10 edition, pointed out that the 'Cats have been "exploded by 'Rockets', clawed by 'Eagles', ripped by 'Cougars', pecked by 'Blue Hens'," etc. He ended the article with the loyal and inspiring statement that "Coach Clairborne's Gobblers are tough and it will be a long ride home from Blacksburg, Virginia."

I would like to say that I am sure Joe Marsh's article would truly inspire the "gobbling Virginia" football squad, but he is writing for the Wildcats, so I do hope his attitude changes in future "true and loyal" predictions.

As far as commenting on Mr. Alex Bell's public statements about the football team, I would not like to comment because my opinion of these statements is as bad as his sarcasm of his own football team.

It's a funny thing Mr. Marsh and Mr. Bell didn't get together and burn Matric cards in a "stay out of Washington State" protest.

Statement on Policy

This statement of policy was requested by the members of the Board after the appearance of last week's editorial.

Last week's editorial support for the reassumption of the SGA Presidency by Steve Freind, has created considerable campus-wide controversy. Any strong statement is bound to generate strong feelings -- on both sides.

The VILLANOVAN Editorial Board is composed of persons who hopefully are representative of a fairly accurate cross-section of student opinion. This is desirable. And because of this, it is unlikely that any statement of editorial opinion can be expressed which has the full support of the entire editorial board. Editorials must and do represent ultimately the feelings of the one man who is in the end responsible for them: the Editor-in-Chief. He acts on the advice -- but not necessarily with the consent of the Editorial Board. To act with the complete approval of everyone would be to say nothing. And that is the worst thing this paper could possibly do.

But while controversy was expected, misinterpretation was not. Last week's editorial had a singular purpose: to request those in authority to allow Steven Freind to rightfully reassume his office as SGA President. The SGA has suffered this year because of the absence of its duly elected leader -- as any organization would.

This is NOT saying that we are attacking Frank Eck, or the job that his administration has done. It is merely pointing out that the factional strife which Spring elections are intended to resolve, is, as a result of the present situation, both ever-present and debilitating.

Frank Eck must be congratulated not only for the job he has done, but because he worked admirably in making the best of a bad situation. He has been thrust into a very difficult position and has done very well.

Intelligent Dialogue

Villanovans have for some time been denied the opportunity to actively and intelligently participate in political activities on the college level. Even the most casual observer has noted the failure of campus political clubs to provide an outlet for such participation.

The Young Democrats and Young Republicans have both been content to engage in a running feud, using the "Letters to the Editor" column of this newspaper as their battleground. They have been concerned more with questioning the motives and sincerity of their counterparts than they have in offering to the student body at large the chance to join in the political processes of the nation as only the college student can.

The two clubs have seen fit only to issue press releases, not under the legitimate title of such, but rather as back-biting letters to one another in this paper. While the Letters column serves to reflect the great diversity of student opinion which we hope to find on the campus, it should not be staked out as the propaganda column of the two organizations, both of which are equally guilty.

A further condemnation must be laid at the feet of the Young Republicans for letting themselves become the tool of the Conservative Club. The Democrats have concerned themselves more with perpetuating only the better parts of the story of JFK, but the Republicans have apparently devoted themselves to spending the next three years fighting a rear guard action against the mainstream of GOP thought. Neither group can be congratulated for its stand.

The politically literate student body which it is Villanova's good fortune to house should be served by public-minded political groups. Instead they have found that they are surrounded by student politicians who have contented themselves with rapidly deteriorating into a collection of party hacks, unsure of the ideological footing beneath them, unconcerned by the needs of the students about them.

We call for these two potentially dynamic groups to stop building political empires on a foundation of invective, innuendo, and philosophical pandering.

If these clubs act soon, then they may very well be able to serve the Villanovan as he deserves to be served: with knowledge and informed opinion, intelligently presented.

If they do not, they will rapidly become a gathering place for crackerbarrel politicans.

Belle Masque Society Gives One of Its Finest Efforts

By Joe Linsalata

What is the major criticism of college dramatics? Certainly if you have ever seen any college productions your only reply could be, "Well, the lead was great, a fine actor, but the rest of the cast was terrible."

An area college presented Richard III last year. The entire production was so poorly directed that it was impossible not to feel embarassed when the actors had to deliver their lines. This production was certainly definitive of college level dramatics.

This past weekend, Brian Morgan and the entire company of A MAN FOR ALL SEASONS did not fulfill this definitive characteristic.

After a span of about five years, scuffling in and out of Vasey Hall Auditorium and the Playbox, the Belle Masque Association returned to the Field House and presented one of their finest efforts.

A MAN FOR ALL SEASONS certainly could be said to have re-established the organization in the light of the administration, the SGA, the Villanova Arts Forum and definitely the 1100 or so people who viewed the show.

Gone from this production was that typically collegiate star quality -- one good actor. Gone also was that ever-present embarassment of collegiate actors on stage.

Instead, there were several excellent individual performances, several pleasant performances and a general acceptable quality.

There was a feeling of continuity of actors throughout the production which caused very few things to stick out like a sore thumb.

MORGAN PERFECT

Brian Morgan as Sir Thomas More was perfect. His portrayal was intelligent, credible and not overly emotional. Morgan gave the part a subtle dignity which was important to the understanding of the character. He clearly brought to light the vehement quality of More in his defiance of King Henry VIII and his human and emotional control of his family.

The story of More has been told in endless ways and by both good and poor writers. Robert Bolt who wrote A MAN FOR ALL SEASONS, dwelt in one major area -- More as an intellectual and righteous person. His conflict was not only King Henry but with his friends and family.

Shunned from all angles in his refusal to consent to King Henry's annulment, More became an instrument of introspection. He searched within himself to forsake those material pleasures which even his wife had accepted.

Bolt uniquely wrote on the verge of sentimentality which was perfectly portrayed in this production. Bolt also wrote a very lengthy play which at times could be excessively boring. The director, Kenneth Resinski, adaptly deleted 45 minutes of the script in order to keep the show moving at a professional pace. It eliminated the normal collegiate tendency for a show to drag.

The only thing that disrupted the show was an inadequate sound and lighting system and some character interpretation.

WWVU tried desperately to improve the sound projection but in spite of their efforts, it took a great amount of concentration to understand many of the lines in the show.

The failure to have enough proper lighting equipment caused scene transitions to be jerky and a shadow of darkness to infiltrate the upstage area.

If I may say, I heartedly disagreed with several character interpretations. Lord Cromwell, played by sophomore John Anthony, was more arrogant than vicious and Cardinal Wolsey, played by James Cahill was more pleasing than disgusting.

However, almost everyone on stage showed a definite objective to what they were doing and only a few characters were not fully drawn. This is a situation rarely seen in collegiate drama.

John McPeak presented an outstanding portrayal of the Common Man. His relaxed and friendly quality in the role was a high light of the production.

Both Mike Sutherland and Bonnie Marie Lucas were more than sufficient in the parts of King Henry and Lady Alice More. Other commendable presentations were done by Richard Galli, and Shelly Daly in the roles of The Duke of Norfolk and Lady Margaret More.

Singers

"The Swingle Singers" will be heard in a concert in the Field House at Villanova University on Tuesday, December 7 at 8:30 p.m.

This unique group of musicians from Paris presents classical music in a style that is true to the composer yet has a modern sound. Reinforcing their voices with Drums and Bass, they lend a fresh interpretation to the great masters of the past. The Swingle Singers sing the vast library of instrumental music rather than the usual choral composition.

The Swingle Singers are being presented by The Arts Forum, now in its second year. Money raised from this Benefit Concert will support its program.

Comedy

CACTUS FLOWER, a new comedy by Abe Burrows starring Lauren Bacall and Joseph Campanella will have its premiere performance on Monday evening, November 22 and will play through December 4.

Mr. Burrows has served the theatre as director and/or author in such hits as GUYS AND DOLLS, CAN CAN, SILK STOCKINGS, and the Pulitzer Prize winning HOW TO SUCCEED IN BUSINESS. His most recent venture is the co-authoring of the new television farce O.K. CRACKERBY.

In the words of the author, "Cactus Flower comes from the fact that the ugly, prickly cactus puts forth an extremely beautiful flower. Our heroine (Miss Bacall) is a typical spinster who works for a man who is a woman-chaser (Mr. Campanella).

She is constantly irritated by his shenanigans, but finally gets voled within them. Then, like the prickly cactus, the lady goes into full blossom."

Miss Bacall made her stage debut in 1959 in George Axelrod's GOOD-BY UNCLE CHARLIE, and recently returned from Hollywood where she co-starred with Paul Neumann in THE MOVING TARGET. Her presence has been felt both on stage and screen by her incendiary personality, her sultry delivery and her candid off the cuff remarks.

Joseph Campenella is more renowned for his television work, specifically in THE DOCTORS AND THE NURSES. He has also played opposite Judy Holliday in the musical HOT SPOT.

The show is being produced by the "Mister Money-Bags of Broadway," David Merrick, who has commissioned Oliver Smith to design the set.

James Joyce Adaptation

THE COACH WITH THE SIX INSIDES, Jean Erdman's award-winning adaptation of James Joyce's FINNEGAN'S WAKE will be the next presentation of the Arts Council of the YM/YWHA, Broad and Pine Streets, on December 4.

It will star Miss Erdman and will feature the original off-Broadway cast of actors and musicians that scored with the production in Paris, Tokyo, Dublin and Spoleto. Tickets are available by mail or phone KI 5-4400.

The play opened in New York three years ago, to the acclaim of critics and audiences. Now on a road tour of university cities throughout the U.S., it last year took Tokyo by storm and played to warm audiences at Italy's Spoleto Festival.

THE COACH WITH THE SIX INSIDES is a combination of dance, drama, mime and music. It has been called "total theater" and according to the NEW YORK POST, it "emphasizes the slapstick humor of Joyce's work and also includes touches of mysticism, sadness at the fall of man..."

Production of the "COACH" was made possible by a grant from the Ingram Merrill Foundation and by other gifts to the Arts Program of the Association of American Colleges. The poetry of Joyce's language, the action and choreography, and music by Teiji Ito give the play a unique range through several of the creative arts.

Ito and two other musicians will

Viet Nam

By William Whittemore

Are Americans concerned because there is a war going on in Viet Nam, or do they simply feel so far removed from this Southeast Asian catastrophy that it only strikes them as a crisis from which we should withdraw? Too many people living in the United States have not faced up to the fact that our country is actually in a war, which is technically no different from any other past war.

It's too late to think about what might have been done to prevent the situation in Viet Nam, or about withdrawing and saving the United States' name from being labeled as overly and unjustly aggressive. We've made a strong commitment, and "Monday morning quarterbacking" is useless.

In the past, the spirit Americans have displayed for their country during national crises has been the unique and admirable quality which made the U.S. the strong nation it is today. In past wars, the overwhelming support and drive American patriots exhibited, whether in public speaking, the newspaper, or the radio, has been one of the crucial factors in keeping the spirit of freedom flowing in the veins of our fighting men. Well, if it existed so strongly then, why doesn't more than just recognition of a bad state of affairs exist today?

Why are college students in areas of the nation demonstrating to get out of Viet Nam or to refrain from too much aggression? In World War II something like this would not have fallen far short of treason.

Admittedly, the Viet Nam war is no world war, and geographically it's on a smaller scale, to say the least. However, as deceivingly insignificant as it seems compared to twenty years ago, it still involves the biggest powers in the world, and the impending danger of a third world war.

Today there exists a young but increasingly important generation of Americans, the post-war babies. Some of them are in college; some of them are working; but an awful lot of them are fighting a war in Viet Nam, and are giving their lives everyday for our country.

This being so, why isn't there a more enthusiastic spirit and desire to win this war.

Just Three Words for You - Little Boy Blue

by Bob Elschner

Once upon a time there was a little boy named Little Boy Blue. The only thing in the world that Little Boy Blue wanted was a horn so he could be heard all over the neighborhood.

The only way Little Boy Blue could acquire a horn was by working very hard for it, but he didn't like to work. So Little Boy Blue wondered how he could get the horn with little work. Finally he got an idea. He though that he would get all his friends to work for him if he promised them that they could play the horn too.

All the boys and girls worked very hard and at last the day came when Little Boy Blue got his horn. Then all his friends gathered around him to listen to him blow his horn. Sometimes he let them blow it too.

It wasn't long before a very unfortunate thing occurred. Little Boy Blue was a bad boy and his horn was taken away from him. Little Boy Blue was now indeed truly blue and so were his friends because he couldn't play his horn anymore.

However, if Little Boy Blue promised he would be a good boy and behave himself then someday he would be able to play his horn again. He reconciled to this and promised to be good and behave himself.

Meanwhile the horn was given to another boy to play until Little Boy Blue had shown that he was good.

So Little Boy Blue was good. He behaved himself extremely well, but still the horn was not given back to him. It appeared that a longer time was needed in order for him to insure that he was a good boy.

Little Boy Blue became excessively impatient. He wanted his horn back and was willing to go to all extremes to get it. His friends wanted to listen to him again too. They became impatient and were willing to go to all extremes too, even of offering false friendship.

They decided that they would make Little Boy Blue appear as if he were the best behaved boy in the neighborhood by giving him the "best behaved boy in the neighborhood" award. In order to do this they made the other boy appear to be bad. When he played the horn they wouldn't listen to him. Every time he tried to play a new tune they ridiculed him. They told the other children that he didn't know how to play as good as Little Boy Blue. He was their hero, their ideal inspired by God to play the horn!

His friends got another idea. They decided to have the award given to Little Boy Blue published in the local town newspaper. They knew what they were doing was deceitful so they cajoled the printer into publishing it. Now they felt everyone would know how good Little Boy Blue was.

Little Boy Blue hasn't gotten his horn back yet despite his attempts. Perhaps someday Little Boy Blue will be able to blow his horn again, but pity the whole neighborhood if he does.

T.V. at V.U.—Education a' Go Go

By Mike Soroka

It seems as though we've got ourselves another genuine controversy here at Villanova, one rather unique in that it deals with the academic rather than with the social aspect of life. Now I suppose that if I wanted to be clever I could tritely sum up this controversy as "T.V. or not T.V.: that is the question," but since I don't feel especially clever just now, and since most of you couldn't stand it anyway, I won't do that.

But as you all know, or at least I hope you all know, educational television is now being employed here, among the psychology and theology departments. And it is the question of the effectiveness of these T.V. courses that forms the center of our controversy.

On the one hand (and you can count them on your fingers) are those who are convinced that televised lectures are a wonderful idea, a boon to learning. This group consists mainly of the instructors and proctors of the psychology and theology departments and has 25 percent fewer cavities.

Their opponents, numbering approximately 1500 members of the sophomore class, claim that televised teaching is a failure, and that the University should return at once to the more traditional methods of instruction.

A Drag

Finally, in the middle, you have me (wow!), holding that while educational television is a fine idea, it is also a drag. And since I form a minority group, I feel that it is within my rights to give you a chance to hear my viewpoint, whether you want to or not.

To put it quite bluntly, the whole problem stems from the fact that the television courses are boring. How boring are they? Well, they are so boring that last week one of the lectures drilled a hole through the classroom wall. And it's really kind of hard to get psyched up for a class that consists of nothing but watching a little man on a little screen read some notes from a cue card. At least in a regular class you could ask questions as the lecture went on -- now all you can do is watch and write. And it's tough enough to do even that, because half the time you can't even tell what's going on on the screen.

Here is where I think the administration could rectify their one serious error, that of not properly anticipating the audience's -- or student's viewing tastes; for in educational television they've got a potential winner on their hands. All that has to be done is to adapt the lectures to meet the students' accustomed level. What is needed is a change of format: make the educational shows resemble the commercial shows, and their ratings will climb. Here are a few ideas that would perhaps be suitable for a revitalized television lecture course.

First of all, the psychology course: Now while I am not really that well acquainted with the course, since I won't be taking it until the next semester, I do have a sufficient working knowledge of its defects, gathered from the comments of some of my friends who do have the course. The fault here, as I understand it, is not in the material itself, but in the unemotional delivery by the instructors. As I studied the problem, two possible solutions at once presented themselves.

Audience Participation

First, why not make the lecture series an audience-participation type of thing, with students contributing their own individual problems and maybe even putting on some "schitz" of their own? Or secondly, why not borrow an idea or two from the discotheque night clubs that are so popular today?

Redecorate the lab as the Rat Fink Room and train a few of the experimental mice to twist in their cages. Get a few of the graduate assistants together into a singing group, the "Neurotics," or something of the kind. After all, if the Beatles can do it, so can our psychology boys.

And now for the very touchy area, that of the theology course, this one I am acquainted with, having it three times every week, and I can directly determine its only shortcoming -- lack of appealing material. Let's face it: any theology course, and particularly one dealing with Old Testament writings, is apt to be a cut-and-dried affair. So what I think we could do, without altering any of the basic ideas of the Bible, is to inject a little of the glamorous, give the characters some suave.

Biblical Adventure

How's this for an opener? "We now bring you the continuing story of Palestine Place. Behind-the-scenes conflict in a typical conservative Eastern town." Or perhaps we could dress up the individual biblical hero. Give Moses a black mohair toga, equip him with a staff that converts into a snake or some other exotic weapon, bill him as the Man from H.E.A.V.E.N. (Hebrew Envoys Agitating for the Vanquishment of the Egyption Nation), and just see how lagging student interest perks up.

Some people might even be encouraged enough to actually read the Bible, although I guess that is expecting a little too much.

As I implied earlier, I expect a considerable amount of opposition to parts or all of my proposals; but I think that once it becomes apparent that everyone around will benefit in one way or another from these changes, all such criticism will cease. The Building Fund can increase its revenue by leasing out popcorn and soda concessions to outside bidders.

Present faculty members can increase their prestige by making periodic "guest appearances" on other departments' programs; and, through the judicial use of recruiting programs, more qualified instructors could be enticed to teach at Villanova. As you can see, the possibilities are endless.

Who knows: educational television just might become the biggest thing since the student demonstration! All we have to do is try.

A change in Pennsylvania's School Bus law requires motorists to stop for school buses at all times of the day and night, the Keystone - Philadelphia Automobile Club noted Thursday.

Henry L. Moffett, president of the AAA affiliate, said "Motorists have become accustomed to stopping for school buses during normal opening and closing times of the school day."

"Now," he said, "the new law makes it mandatory for motorists in Pennsylvania to stop for school buses at all times, although the vehicles could be transporting children to and from field trips or athletic events."

place where these offices appear together, "this is the order in which they are named."

It was at this point Dean entered the debate in earnest, charging the machinery "is too long and drawn out." He called for new elections to be held if a vacancy occurred. His opposition was quick to point out he had been against new elections in the Fall when Steve Freind was asked to resign.

He called for sections B and C to be taken out of the amendment.

Vice-Prexy Vote

Radowich countered that new elections would not guarantee continuity in Student government. John Grasiano, one of the Executive Vice-Presidents, noted that an Executive Vice-President does not have to hold a full vote on the Congress floor. (This is presently the case with all three Vice-presidents.)

Again Radowich was quick with an answer. "Continuity should be more important than whether or not a person has a full vote." It was his contention that a President would appoint people to the Vice-Presidencies who would be familiar and sympathetic with his ideas.

However, the proponents of the motion claimed a President who knew of this proposed ruling would make his appointments accordingly.

Amendment Wanted

Dick Behrens called for and got a slight amendment of the motion.

In a confusing but precise flurry of parliamentary appeals, Dean first challenged a ruling by Eck that his amendment was not applicable to the Constitutional change motion.

After many readings of ROBERT'S RULES OF ORDER by several of the Senators, who chose to read aloud, the chairman announced he was against his own decision. The Senate then proceeded to vote the Chair's original decision down, thereby going along with their Chairman's announced opposition to his own ruling.

Discussion Held

Under these circumstances, Jim Griffin, Senior Class President, reminded the Senate "these exact circumstances (the Freind case) will never happen again. We want to cover as many situations as possible under any amendment we pass."

He pointed out problems with both the "Dean Plan" and the original motion. With an election, he said, "the defect is there is no continuation of policy." With an appointment "there is the possibility of someone completely alien to the Congress getting the position," according to Griffin.

"Yet the original motion has the least defects," with this Griffin quickly called the question and the "Dean Plan" was voted down.

The original motion, as amended, was then recommended for passage over the sole nay, Dean's.

Motion Amended

"In order to make it formal that we want final exam schedules posted by mid-term," Jeff Radowich proposed that the SGA formally request this of the Administration. There was no debate and the motion was unanimously recommended for passage.

Stack Privileges

John O'Loughlin, speaking for the 22 member Senior SGA committee called on the Senate to endorse a motion calling for a letter to be sent to Rev. Louis Rongione, OSA, Librarian at Falvey Memorial. The letter would request open stack privileges for all Seniors.

Under questioning, O'Loughlin pointed out that almost half of the Seniors already have the privilege by virtue of having a seminar course. In addition he said he had discussed the matter with Father Rongione and was assured this motion could be implemented if passed. The Senate agreed and recommended the motion for passage.

Bob Dean called on the Senate to support his motion setting up a committee to review present judicial procedures and investigate changes and revisions. This would look toward a comprehensive SGA judiciary system according to Dean. Members for this committee would be appointed by the President of the SGA. Again, the Senate agreed, and unanimously recommended the motion for Congressional passage.

Other matters before the Senate dealt with purely internal matters.

This second of the Law Forum series for the current year will be held in the Law School building on the campus, at 8:30 p.m. Dr. Bouscaren will be introduced by Harold Gill Reuschlein, dean of the Villanova Law School. Faculty, students and friends of the University are cordially invited.

Villanova Band Hosts 500 High Schoolers For Band Day '65

For the third consecutive year, the Villanova Band will play host to five hundred high school musicians. Band Day '1965' features York Catholic High School from York, Pa., directed by Mr. A. Johnson; Bishop McDevitt High School from Harrisburg, Pa., directed by Mr. R. Williams; Trinity High School from Shiremanstown, Pa., directed by Mr. L. Schmidt; and Haddon Township High School from Haddon, N.J., directed by Mr. C.D. Lowden.

"The purpose of Band Day," said Mr. C. Dudley Lowden, director of the Band, "is to encourage music on the pre-college level and hopefully to attract some of these talented young musicians to Villanova."

The high schools will be treated to refreshments and a tour of the campus during the morning prior to the game. The combined bands will parade throughout the campus, down Lancaster Pike, and into Villanova Stadium. The Wildcat Band will present a precision pregame show for the enjoyment of the crowd.

At half-time, the bands will march onto the field, briefly displaying their musical abilities.

Liberal Arts Majors

Announcing the Professional Qualification Test for outstanding career appointments to National Security Agency

Registration Deadline: Friday, November 26

If you expect to receive a liberal arts degree before September 1966, don't miss this opportunity to qualify for a rewarding career with the National Security Agency. All liberal arts applicants must take the Professional Qualification Test (PQT) as a prerequisite to NSA interviews for employment.

THE DEADLINE FOR TEST REGISTRATION IS FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 26 . . . THE TEST ITSELF WILL BE GIVEN ON CAMPUS ON SATURDAY, DECEMBER 11.

Challenging Career Program Areas

A unique agency functioning within the Department of Defense, NSA has a critical need for imaginative people. You can make immediate use of your college-acquired capabilities without first accumulating years of "experience." Your specific academic major is of secondary consequence as long as you relish and meet the challenge of extremely complex research problems that frequently will take you beyond the known and accepted boundaries of knowledge.

You will work on programs of national importance, in such areas as:

- Cryptography . . . the making of codes and ciphers
- Analytic research
- Language research
- Data systems design and programming
- Administrative management (finance and accounting, personnel, training, engineering administration)

The PQT Bulletin at your Placement Office outlines these areas further.

Advancement, Training and Educational Opportunities

NSA promotes from within and emphasizes orderly career development, awarding substantial salary increases as you assume greater responsibility. The environment is academic, and NSA stimulates professional and intellectual growth in many ways, including intensive formal and on-the-job training in new disciplines and methodology. Advanced study at any of seven area universities is partially or wholly reimbursed through NSA Fellowships and other assistance programs.

Attractive Location and Other Advantages

Located between Washington and Baltimore, NSA is also near the Chesapeake Bay, ocean beaches, ski resorts and other popular summer and winter recreation areas. The location permits your choice of city, suburban or country living.

Policies relating to vacations, insurance and retirement are fair and liberal—you enjoy the benefits of Federal employment without the necessity of Civil Service certification.

Where to go...What to do

First, pick up a PQT Bulletin at your Placement Office, the sooner the better. It contains a brief registration form which must be received in Princeton, N. J. by November 26. You will then be mailed a ticket admitting you to the Test on December 11.

Taking and passing the Professional Qualification Test in no way commits or obligates you to anything. But we urge you—even if you are not fully certain of your career interests—to investigate NSA opportunities now. The Test will be followed by on-campus interviews with NSA representatives.

Please note: You must be a U. S. citizen, subject to a character and loyalty check.

Hawks Knock Off Cat Soccers; Local Club Has Losing Slate

By Tom Willson

The Wildcat Booters closed out their season with a tough 2-0 loss to the Hawks of St. Joseph's College.

While traveling to the Hawk campus, hopes were high for an upset and thus a winning season; for this was a do-or-die game for the the Wildcat Booters. None realized this more than Villanova's star fullback and co-captain Jan Mantero, who broke up plays and hurt the Hawks offense with his alert and aggressive defensive play.

The Wildcats' strength for the season lay in their defense, and Jan Mantero, along with Jim Beniuto, were the defensive stalwarts that stopped opposing forwards from scoring on Wildcat goalie Steve Carney.

The game was deadlocked in a scoreless tie until the Hawks were awarded a penalty-kick, which they converted. The Hawks managed to score another to go out in front, 2-0, and Jan Mantero was injured while stopping a scoring attempt.

With fullback Jim Mantero sidelined with an injury, the Wildcat defense look as if it would collapse. But the tough Wildcat defenders had other thoughts in mind and played even more relentlessly than ever, holding the Hawks scoreless for the remainder of the contest.

OFFENSE STOPPED

The Wildcat offense had numerous cracks at the other nets, but the Hawks goalie managed to stop all of Dietmar Parchingar's scoring thrusts.

This 2-0 loss to the Hawks proved to be the deciding game in determining whether the 'Cats would finish the season with a winning record.

As it turned out, the Wildcats finished with a 3-4 record. One more win would have given the Wildcat Booters a winning season in their second year of competition.

The Wildcat Booters play a fine calibre of ball in their second year of soccer. Star halfbacks Kevin O'Malley, Walt Helderman, along with defensive stalwart Pete Stenner, Dave Como, and Terry McGinley, were known for their tough and agressive brand of soccer.

Forwards Karl Denz, Dietmar, Parchingar, Pete Collins-Cons, and Victor Cardoso played on a level with all opposing forwards for the entire season, with Parchingar often double-teamed because of his deft dribbling and lightning speed.

Goalie Steve Carney proved to be one of the most colorful and hard-playing goalies in the area, with second string goalie Neal Feldman performing capably at halfback as well as in the goal.

Plaudits are due many other players on the 22-member squad.

COLLEGIATE SUPPORT

Coaches from other colleges have expressed their support of the progress that the Wildcat squad has demonstrated in two short seasons. Soccer coach and Athletic Director, Charlie Scott, of the University of Pennsylvania, hopes to see soccer firmly established on a Varsity level at Villanova.

Assistant Coach Jack Lefter of Haverford College noted that the Wildcats have have the foreign talent to form the nucleus of a strong team and praised the Wildcat booters for two close games with Haverford this season.

The soccer team is most grateful, however, to one of its foremost supporters, Rev. Richard D. Appicci, O.S.A., Vice President for Student Affairs, who has announced that plans for the construction of a field for the use of both the soccer team and the lacrosse team has been included in next year's budget.

It appears that the Wildcat Booters will have one of the best soccer fields in the area and will be able to play home games next season.

The Villanova Soccer Club will hold its final and most important meeting of the season this Thursday at 10:30 a.m. in 210 Bartley. Appointments of new officers and plans for next season, which should be a successful one, will be announced at the meeting.

Grid Seniors Bid Farewell; Careers to End on Saturday

By Jerry Bruderle

Dave Connell, 22, 6-3, 195, from Havertown, Pa. and Monsignor Bonner High School. Dave has been the starting quarterback all three years at Villanova, and has had three outstanding seasons. Last year he led the team in nearly every department, passing, scoring and punting. He was also the second best runner last year when he led the team to six straight victories. This year he missed the Boston College game due to an injury, but came back to play excellently in the Washington State game. He was outstanding in the West Chester victory, the only one result he has been on and off since then. in spite of this he has missed only two games (against Delaware and Virginia Tech) when most players would not have played at all. Tommy is an exceptionally fast fullback and the best blocking back on the team. He made the All-East team once this year after the West Chester victory.

Tom Brown

Joe Santomauro, 22, 5-9, 185 from Scranton Central High School, has been a solid performer for three years. A good open field runner, Joe is always a threat to break into the clear to break a game open. He has been used all three years for kickoff and punt returns, and this year has averaged over 20 yards running back kickoffs. Joe had an excellent junior year. He gained 225 yards for a 3.4 average, including four touchdowns. His TD sprint against Xavier last year broke open the game. This year he injured his knee early in the season, but has gained over 100 yards and averaged 3.0 yards a carry. This year Joe has also developed into a threat as a receiver where he can get into the open easier. Joe has caught nine passes for 114 valuable yards.

Rich Fabrizio, 22, 6-0, 195 from John Carroll High School in Washington, D.C. Rich has been the top defensive end on the team this year, but he was injured in the Washington State game and has not played since. Last year Rich was one of the pleasant surprises as he developed well midway through the season.

Larry Jones, 21, 6-2, 225 from Calvert Hall in Baltimore. After two years as a reserve, Larry has been the starting offensive tackle this season. In a season when Villanova was especially weak at tackle, Larry has responded with some fine work in the line. He has played up to his capabilities this season after two years of waiting to get in and show what he can do.

Harry Walter, 22, 6-1, 230 from DeLone Catholic in McSherrytown, Pa. Harry was a two year veteran going into this year but has been slowed down by injuries since the Delaware game when he injured his knee. Up until that game, he was a starter and was doing a fine job. Last year Harry was a regular second unit performer. He is a good blocker and has outstanding speed for his size.

Harry Walter

Jerry Strid, 22, 6-3, 230 from Worcester Academy and Torrington, Conn. Jerry has also been hampered by injuries throughout most of his career at Villanova. Free from injuries in the past two games, Jerry has responded with two fine games. He has had much potential but has been kept from living up to it by physical handicaps.

Dave Cappozzi, 20, 6-0, 215 from Memorial High School in West New York, New Jersey. Dave has become the full-time offensive center this season after two years as a reserve. Dave saw little action last year on the third unit, but he has played well when given a lot of action this year.

Don Koshlap

Don Koshlap, 22, 5-11, 185 from New Jersey. Don is a defensive halfback and has played well this year. He and Tony Ferrainolo lead the team with two interceptions each. Don was originally a quarterback and threw a touchdown pass to John Kelleher in the Buffalo game in his sophomore year.

Buffalo to Provide Finale; Rebuilt Backfield Shines

By Bob McIntyre

Villanova, after playing its finest game of the season in a losing cause, will have to rebound awfully hard if they want to knock off their final opponent of the campaign, the on-rushing Buffalo Bulls.

Buffalo, unlike Villanova, is having a winning season, four wins, three losses, and two ties. After losing their opener to a strong Boston College team in the final minutes of play, Buffalo has roared back knocking off four of their opponents, including shutouts in their last two games. They bulled all over Delaware, 22-0, and this past weekend they clobbered and upset Colgate (who had beaten Army a few weeks ago) by a score of 28-0.

Buffalo has been gaining momentum ever since the team snapped back together after losing their star sophomore quarterback, Rick Wells, in the University of Richmond game. The main reason for this comeback has been Buffalo's outstanding defense (sixth in the country up to last week), and the fine play by junior quarterback, Nick Capuana, who took over for Wells when he got hurt.

Villanova, which leads the series 2-1, didn't get to play Buffalo last year, reason being a sudden snow-storm came off the lakes in upper New York, making the game impossible. This year, snow is not forecast as of yet, and so it looks as though one of the two teams will get a chance to win their last game of the '65 season before a partisan Villanova crowd, which will be celebrating Parent's Weekend.

BUFFALO COACH

The Head coach of Buffalo University is Richard W. Offenhamer, who has been at Buffalo for the past ten years. He has helped the University inaugurate a grid-iron revival since he came.

This is his eleventh campaign under the "schedule now, pray later" policy. Among his assistants, Dewey Wade, has done an outstanding job forming the defense which has been one of the toughest in the East let alone the Nation.

Joe Holly, center-linebacker from Lyons, N. Y., is the captain of the 1965 University of Buffalo football team. Last year the 6'1", 210 lb. center, was selected on several pre-season All-East teams but suffered a pinched nerve in his left shoulder during the opening game, which hurt him for the rest of the season. However, this year he is almost a sure bet for post season honors.

Nick Capuana, a junior, who stands 5'9" and weighs 180 lbs., is now the starting quarterback for the Bulls. Last year he averaged 4.8-yards per carry as first string tailback and led the team in punt returns. He has been called the team's most versatile back.

ALL-AMERICAN POLES

E. Greenard Poles is a 5'10"-225 lb. senior, who was nominated four times and selected once for ECAC All-East in 1964. He is a spectacular performer with the speed of a halfback, and is considered a possible All-American candidate at defensive tackle. Poles is responsible in a great part for Buffalo's excellent defense.

Dick Ashley, a 6'2" - 200 lb., from Massena, N.Y., is Buffalo's starting left end. He was an outstanding athlete in high school and proved it last Saturday by catching three touchdown passes against Colgate.

Tom Hurd starts at defensive halfback and against Colgate proved why he is rated among the top sophomores on the team by going 70 yards for a touchdown when he intercepted a pass. He stands 6'2" and weighs 192.

The starting offensive lineup is:

LE - Dick Ashley
LT - Bill Abbley
LG - Ted Gibbons
C- Joe Holly
RG - Mike Rissell
RT - Bill Taylor
RE - Jim Dunn

LH - Jim Webber
RH - Jim Barksdale
F- Lee Jones
Q- Nick Capuana

Fullback Ditze scampers through Tech line as halfback Joe Santomauro prepares to throw a block. The 'Cats lost a 21-19 thriller to the southern power.

Season Tickets

Season tickets for the basketball season are now on sale at the Ticket Office. The book of tickets sells for $4.50, and entitles each student to attend NINE Palestra games.

The games: Oregon State, Penn, Temple, St. Joseph's Duquesne, Fairfield, LaSalle, St. Bonaventure and Memphis State. (Three of the games take place while Villanova is on vacation.)

Since the price of admission at a single game at the Palestra will be $1.50 this year, it would be worthwhile to purchase this season book if a student plans to attend only three of these games.

'Cats Drop Another Thriller; Blocked Punt Plays Big Part

By John Digennaro

Maybe Villanova should go big time. For the second time this season the 'Cats traveled to play a big game team, on both occasions they were solid two to three touchdown underdogs, and both times they responded with games that fell just a break or two away from victory.

This time Virginia Tech, aided by a blocked conversion attempt and some flag happy officials, nipped the Wildcats 21-19. It was a rather unusual game marred by close to 180 yards in penalties (120 of them against Villanova), but then again it was a rather unusual weekend.

Enroute to their Lane Stadium showdown, before some 15,000 partisan rebels, the 'Cats were treated to a nickel tour of the south. The United charter originally scheduled for a 12:30 landing at Roanoke Airport was, due to fog, rerouted to Greensboro, North Carolina.

From there it was almost a three hour ride to the hotel Roanoke, resulting in the cancellation of Friday's pre-game workout. The next morning the 'Cats were forced into an early departure in order to cover the 40 miles from the hotel to the Blacksburg game site.

After all the sitting it's no wonder the front line was dying to let loose, and the backs were so anxious to follow. The 'Cats virtually ran the Tech line at will. Gaping holes were opening all afternoon, and the 'Cat runners; Kolmer, Santomauro, Murray, Connell, and Ditze, responded brilliantly to the rather unique development, and combined for 245 yds. rushing.

OFFENSE GOOD

For the first time this year the offense really looked like one, combining the running with an 8-13 day by the passers.

They rolled to 20 first downs and three scores, and amassed over 300 yds. total defense.

In a rather ominous beginning, the game opened with Villanova being penalized 15 yards for delay of game. Case's kick from his own 25 was taken by Dickie Longerbeam and returned 35 yds. to the Tech 47. The Gobblers, even with their good field position, were unable to crack Villanova's new defense (a four-four) and were forced to punt.

The 'Cats took over on their own 17 and methodically began an 83 yd. touchdown march. Connell went 12 on a keeper, then Santomauro for 4, Kolmer twice for 5 and 7, Santomauro on a reverse for 14, back to Kolmer for 11, then Denny Ditze for 8, and the 'Cats were on the Tech 22.

Here the Gobblers momentarily stiffened, but on fourth and 1 Connell hit Sodaski for 6 yds. and the first. A personal foul cost Tech half the distance, then Dave Connell took it over on a keeper from the 7. Case made it 7-0.

Another good return got the Gobblers out to the 37 where Bobby Owens and Tommy Francisco, a pretty good one-two punch all afternoon, combined on a drive which saw Francisco, on an option pitch, cut sharply past two defenders and gallup 14 yds. for the score. John Utin's kick tied it up.

Early in the second quarter, after Tech's fake field goal attempt backfired, the Wildcats took over first and 10 on their own 38. Running almost at will, the 'Cats, with Connell, Santomauro, and Murray doing the toting, found themselves with a first and goal from the 4.

Connell sent Santomauro into the left side for 2, but a personal foul cost Villanova 15, and the chance for the score, as Case's attempt from the 30 fell short a couple of plays later.

Tech took over, and with Owens mixing Francisco's running with his own passes to 6'5" soph end Ken Barefoot, the Gobblers soon had a first and goal from the 2. Three plays later Francisco hit the right side for the final 1/2 yard. Utin gave Tech a 14-7 lead, which they took in with them at the half.

BLOCKED CONVERSION

The second half started with Villanova taking Utin's kickoff and then marching 66 yards for their second six pointer.

It was at this point that Jim Case, who had previously hit on 11 straight attempts this year, had his conversion attempt blocked by blitzing linebacker Billy Edwards, a rather pivotal play as the game turned out.

Case's kick was taken by Francisco on his own 13, where after picking up a couple of key blocks he headed down the left sideline, where only a great defensive play by last man Joe Greco, who crashed through a blocker and made a diving stop on the speeding runner, prevented the score.

The fourth quarter was a tossup between Villanova and the officials. The 'Cats had started a drive, with a 16 yard run by Brendan Murray giving them a supposed first on the Tech 20, however a holding penalty pushed the ball back 32 yards to the 'Cat 48. At this point the drive stalled, and Connell punted to the Tech 14.

The Gobblers were unable to pick up a first and the 'Cats took over, after the punt, on their own 32, being pushed back there by a doubtful clipping penalty. Thirteen plays, and two fifteen yarders later, the 'Cats pulled up with a first and 10 on the Tech 12.

On fourth and 7 from the 9 Bellotti replaced Connell, ducked under two lineman, stepped up into the pocket, and threw a strike into the end zone, where Tom Flandera made a great catch, leaping high between two defenders, and coming down just a couple of inches from the end line.

The 'Cats had to go for two. Connell kept it around the right side, cut in, but was stopped no more than six inches from the goal line, Tech in possession after the kick, and aided by Owens' 43 yard run, was able to run out the clock, thereby mullifying a good Villanova effort, and sending the 'Cats down to their seventh defeat in Eight games.

An unidentified VIP tackle appears to be losing his grip on the turf as 'Cats' Joe Santomauro takes things into his own outstreched hands.

Maff's Musings

By Joe Maffongelli

A well-known sports columnist, from the Philadelphia area, has recently passed his almighty judgment on the statement of coach Darrel Royal regarding a change in the scholarship policy in the Southwest Conference. Such a judgment is naturally a topic for controversy just as the policy innovation itself is. But in what manner do we pass judgment on another judgment? Should we merely consider the evident fact that Texas is not enjoying one of its usual banner seasons, or should we be idealistic enough to figure that this new idea is directed at a total improvement of the brand of football players who compete in the Southwest Conference and ultimately in the nation.

The sportswriter in mention has obviously taken the first of these two alternative lines of thought, and not without some grounds of justification. But whether or not the other side of the story has been considered is another question. We must always keep in mind the fact that some columnists have a way of selling papers by printing only things which go along with general opinion. Others can achieve the same objective by printing what is diametrically opposed to the current topics of discussion.

When we look at the possible reverberations of this intended policy we cannot help but see the picture of a struggling student who needs the scholarship for which he has "worked so hard" to get through school. This is probably the same boy who goes to classes all day and then heads for the dormitory or library to study deep into the night. He does all this while constantly hampered by the intense fatigue caused by such a rigorous sport as football. The thought of taking a scholarship away from such an individual is shocking.

Well, there is no doubt that near-perfect students do exist, but where are they? We should always keep in mind the fact that many college athletes do come to school only to play football. A conference such as the Southwest, chuck full of state factories boasting miserable academic ratings, is a perfect haven for such people. While the conditions in most Catholic universities and Ivy League institutions appear to be somewhat different, the South has always been symbolized by the big dumb football player. Perhaps this new policy would be a step in the right direction as far as removing such a disgusting insignia.

Wildcat Harriers Garner Fourth Spot In IC4A Championship

By Hal Croft

The 1965 IC4A Cross Country meet was held Monday afternoon at VanCourtland Park in the Bronx.

As anticipated, Georgetown and its Eamon J. O'Reilly sought and found success at the finish.

O'Reilly, last year's Penn Relay Steeplechase Champion, dazzled the field driving past the old record of 24:41.8 by his former teammate, Joe Lynch, by almost 20 seconds and fixing a new record of 24:24.2.

Georgetown's winning clique included: O'Reilly, (5) Ricardo Urbina - 25:02, (14) Bob Zieminski - 25:31, (15) Paul Perry - 25:34, and (24) Tom McDermott.

Villanova's Charlie Messenger was second in a time of 24:51.0, only ten seconds off the old record. Charlie, like the rest of this predominantly sophomore team, has developed valuable experience

Villanova finished fourth in the overall standings behind second place Notre Dame and third place Army. The 'Cat's order of finish was: 2nd - Messenger 24:51, 9th - Ian Hamilton 25:19, 17th - Dave Patrick 25:38, 43rd - Paul Sanborn, 57th - Al McCafferty, 63rd - Craig Nation, and 68th - Jack O'Leary.

Villanova's Frosh team swept to victory on the three mile course. The 'Cat Frosh seized five places in the first nine positions. Tom Donnelly finished second followed by Frank Murphy in third, Steve Gentry in fifth, Dick Buerkle in seventh, and Jim Burhans in ninth.

The top ten finishers were: 1) Eamon O'Reilly, Georgetown - 24:24.2 (new record), 2) Charlie Messenger, Villanova - 24:51.0, 3) James Warner, Army - 24:53.0, 4) Ed Dean, Notre Dame - 24:55.0, 5) Ricardo Urbina, Georgetown - 25:02, 6) Mike Coffey, Notre Dame - 25:05.0, 7) Laurence Furnell, St. John's 25:09, 8) Richard Sharkey, Michigan St. - 25:16, 9) Ian Hamilton, Villanova - 25:19, 10) Robert Macdonald, Army - 25:21.

36 Seniors Named to Who's Who

Thirty-six seniors have been selected for listing in the publication, WHO'S WHO AMONG STUDENTS IN AMERICAN UNIVERSITIES AND COLLEGES.

Pictures and school histories of most of the candidates appear on pages 2, 3, and 4 of this special edition. The entire complement is listed.

A list of semifinalists was obtained from three sources: the SGA, the Deans' Offices, and Moderators of Activities. Final selections were made by a committee of six: two students and four members of the Administration.

As far as a breakdown of colleges is concerned, 15 students were selected from the College of Commerce and Finance, 12 students from Arts and Science, five nursing students, and four engineering students.

The finalists will have their names and biographies in the national publication. A banquet is scheduled for tonight at which time the Who's Who members will receive engraved certificates.

In making the selections, the national organization suggested that the committee consider the student's scholarship, his participation and leadership in academic and extra-curricular activities; his citizenship and service to the school, and his promise of future usefulness.

Charity Weekend Approaches With Orphans Outing, Dance

The Junior Class-sponsored Charity Weekend under the General Chairmanship of Brenden Brett is being held this weekend, December 3 and 4.

The Weekend consists of a Charity Dance in the Field House on Friday night and an Orphan's outing in the 69th Street area on Saturday.

The activities of the Weekend are open to the entire University and the Weekend Committee hopes that the students' support will permit the placing of a considerable sum of money in a scholarship fund for the children at St. John's Orphanage.

The Charity Dance on Friday night will be held in the Field House which will be specially prepared with seasonal decorations. The main entertainment for the evening will be provided by a popular campus group, the Critters.

As a contrast to the music of the Critters, the Villanovans will play many popular slow dance numbers. To complete the evening the Haveners will sing a number of seasonal tunes.

There will be two highlights to the evening: the crowning of the Charity Weekend Queen and the presentation of a trophy to the organization which promotes the most successful Missing Link Candidate. The evening will run from 8:30 to 12:30 and favors will be presented at the door to everyone's date.

The donation for the night is $3 a couple with the tickets now on sale in the Pie Shoppe. The Chairmen of the Charity Dance are John Zoubeck, Steve Seitz and Frank Samer.

The Orphan's Outing on Saturday will get underway at 9:30 a.m. when the buses leave the Field House with the Parents for a Day. After the children are picked up at St. John's Orphanage the buses will then go to 69th Street where a shopping tour of Penney's Department store will take place.

Around noon a hot roast beef lunch will be served at Kosticks restaurant for both orphans and parents. At 1:30 p.m. the whole group will go to a local theatre to enjoy a full-length movie.

The entire day including lunch, movie and transportation back to Villanova will be covered by a donation of $3 a couple and $2 single. The Chairmen for the Outing are Jim Donegan and John Ruth.

How Who's Who Is Selected

By Bill McCloskey

The 36 people represented in Who's Who were chosen from an initial list of nominees numbering close to 200.

According to Frank Eck, acting-president of the SGA, the Dean of each school was asked to submit six names and moderators of organizations were asked for two names. The list was completed with some 80 names suggested by the SGA.

After these were gathered all were checked to be sure they had complied with the standards set by the University to indicate sufficient scholastic achievement: a 2.5 cumulative average.

This qualification cut about one-third of the names from the list. With duplication of names taken into account, the list was narrowed to less than a hundred.

A committee of six made the selections based on criteria of extra-curricular participation and academic excellence over and above the 2.5 average.

Griffin told the VILLANOVAN he was unable to attend the meeting because it was held at a time while he was in a class from which he was unable to absent himself. The meeting was held at 12:30 on a class day.

This committee selected the 36 nominees who were then approved by the Alabama-based organization.

Each school has a set number of students it may recommend. The college is asked not to vary more than two in either direction in making their final list. However, it is pointed out that there is no set percentage for determining this number. Villanova was allowed 35 names.

The selection process took about six weeks.

'Missing Links' Hit Campus As Fund Raisers in Disguise

By Brendon Brett

The Missing Link Contest, in conjunction with Charity Weekend, is now being held in the Pie Shoppe, and the proceeds from the votes (which cost a penny each) will be placed in the scholarship fund for the children at St. John's Orphanage.

A more personalized approach was taken by this year's Missing Link Committee headed by Brendan Moore, Bob Rhoades, and Bill Keane. Letters were sent to various classes, fraternities, and organizations on campus, asking them to support a Missing Link candidate.

The pictures which appear above are but a few of the candidates for the Missing Link. They are: Bill Frey, Junior Class; Jack Foley, Freshman Class; Joe Lovas, Delta Pi Mu; and Phil Mino, Knights of Columbus.

Although the contest is marked by levity, the winning trophy symbolizes dedication to a charitable cause. The Missing Link trophy will be presented to the highest vote-getter at the Charity Ball Friday night.

Collections will also be taken throughout the week in Theology Classes to augment the proceeds from the Missing Link Contest.

He recently published a book entitled THE HUSSITE KING: BOHEMIA IN EUROPEAN AFFAIRS, 1440-1471, and is currently doing research in religious and cultural developments in Central Europe in the late sixteenth and early seventeenth centuries.

All students are invited to attend.

Junior Class Party

The Class of '67 will hold its Junior Class Party this Saturday night at Aquarama. The party will run from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. and the entertainment will be provided by two bands: The Fat City Four and Frankie and the Soulmen.

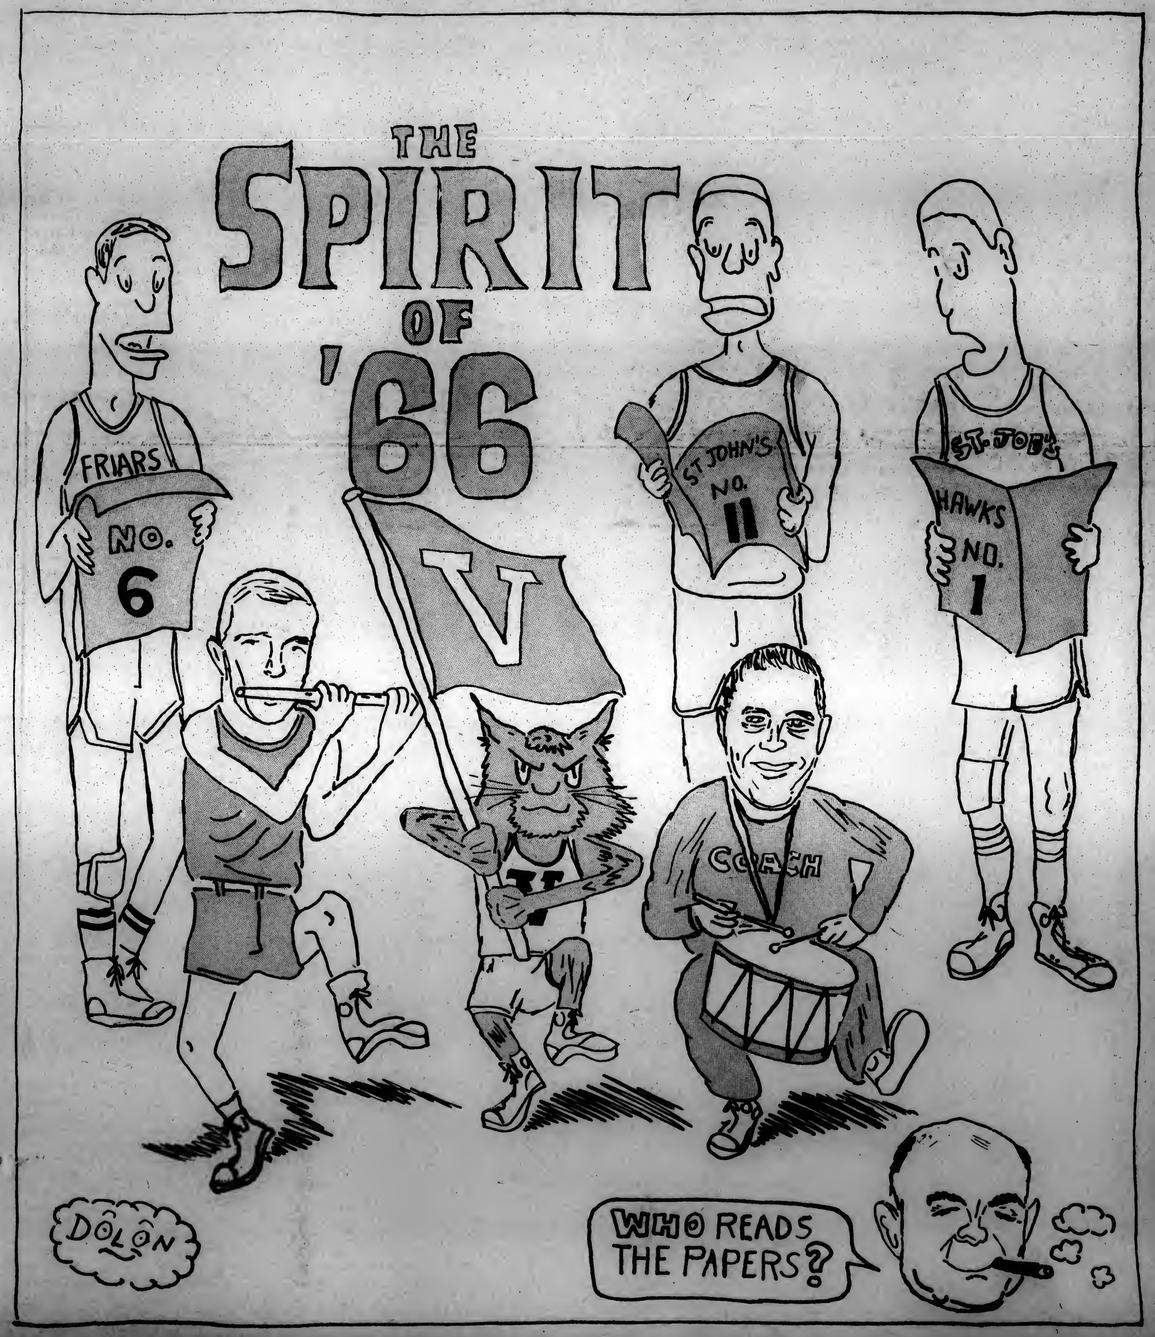
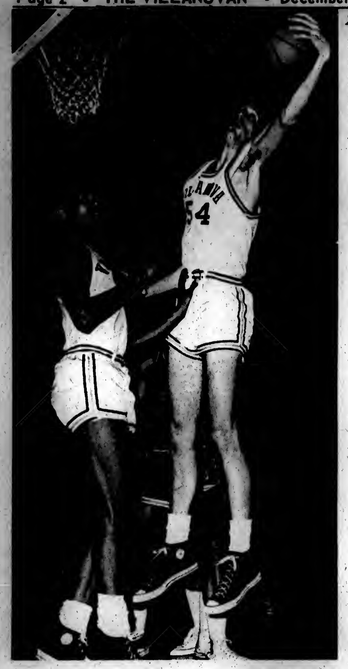
Senator Hart of Michigan To Address VPU December 6

Senator Philip A. Hart of Michigan will discuss the recent controversy over aluminum pricing on Monday evening, December 6, at a debate meeting of the Villanova Political Union. The meeting, to which the public is invited, will be held at 7:30 p.m. in Dougherty Hall on the University campus.



A native of Philadelphia's Main Line, Senator Hart was born in Bryn Mawr where his late father became President of the Bryn Mawr Trust Company. In the Senate, Hart, a Democrat and a former Lieutenant Governor of Michigan, has been especially interested in anti-trust policy and "truth in packaging" legislation.



The Senator's interest in "price policy" is reflected in the debate resolution which he and members of the Union's three parties (Conservative, Liberal and Moderate) will debate. The resolution reads, "Resolved, this house approves the recent use of government stockpiles to influence aluminum prices."

'Cats Eye Big Sights in Hoop City

Pooh To Prognosis

By John DiGennaro

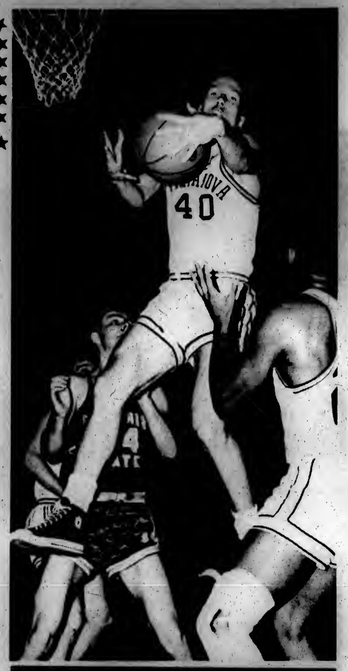
Although pre-rated 17th by a fairly reputable national magazine, and the proud recipient of a pre-season ranking in the UPI prognosis, most students realize, unlike the magazine, that Billy Soens is no longer with us, and Pete Coleman won't be for the present. Consequently, flitty Rumor adorned in its finest black robes, has spread its wings, and its ominous psst-psst can be heard whispering around campus. The result-- after the excellent records posted the last two years, everyone is preparing for what literature euphemistically defines; as that transition from the sublime to the ridiculous.

Meanwhile, stoic Reality, the champion of champions, undefeated since it first entered competition back in the Madison Square Garden of Eden, will once again put its streak on the line.

Are we to take sides, and choose so prematurely; or will we as students, and thereby necessarily versed in the practice of prudence and wisdom, wait and trust in the champion, leaving the outcome to his discretion?

Why should there be such concern over the quality of a team anyway? Is it that deep-rooted spirit which demands nothing but the best for your alma mater, or is it that less noble motive of personal gratification; the impressive record and statistics in the argument with Joe Blow from Boston College, St. Joe's, Providence or wherever, which seems to be the major premise for establishing the supposed merits of the varied institutions. On the other hand could it possibly be the headlines, the national publicity, the trip to the NIT or the NCAA's, followed by the proud wearing of your Villanova jacket as you walk down the street fancying everybody staring admirably as they make the assumed mental associations.

Granted, these are the fringe benefits provided to those students attending a school with a winning team, but do we have the right to expect these benefits?



The very fact that we have a team entitles us to the thrills of the Palestra, the cheers and screams of a packed field house, the posters, the signs, the spirit club and its unique attire, a trip to either the Quaker City or the Holiday Festival, and above all an evening of fun either by ourselves or with our dates.

We've all been spoiled the last couple of years, and with the nature of this year's club I wouldn't be a bit surprised if the trend continues, perhaps, a la the '62-'63 season.

Regardless, Villanova will once again be a well coached team, and with its hustle and desire, coupled with its famed "ball" defense, will I'm sure, provide many exciting moments before March rolls around.

All this we owe to Coach Kraft, but we also owe it to him not to sell either his efforts or his players short, and we owe it to ourselves to take full advantage of the season before us.

Let's Go Wildcats!

MEET THE WILDCATS

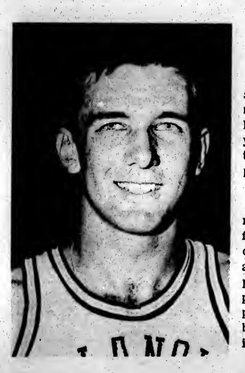
The 'Cats: Small In Number But Large In Spirit

By Jack McGarvey

CHARLIE (PETE) COLEMAN

An All-American high school player from Darby-Colwyn High in Darby, Pa., Pete saw limited action as a sophomore last year before he was declared ineligible at mid-season. He averaged 4.5 points in 16 games and proved his worth as playmaker in the Wildcat offense. This 5-11, 165 pound guard will be ineligible only until December 20, provided all goes well in classroom.

The return of this long-range bomber and good ball handler, when teamed up with Melchionni in the backcourt, will give the 'Cats a twosome capable of holding their own against anybody.

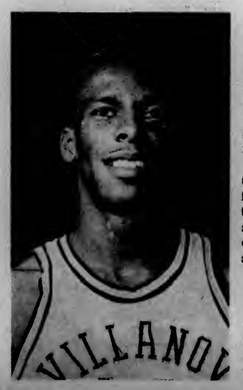


BERNIE SCHAFFER

This 21-year old senior was valuable as a sixth man on the club last year. His best performance came against LaSalle as he came off the bench to score 16 points, shooting 4 for 8 from the field and 8 for 8 from the foul line to upend the Explorers. At 6-5 and 210 pounds Schaffer is one of the bigger members of the squad.

He is a rugged rebounder, and his all-around aggressiveness has enabled him to regain the forward starting position he maintained as a sophomore.

Hailing from Haverford High in nearby Bryn Mawr, Bernie is a hard-working and dedicated player, as can be witnessed by his free throw accuracy of the last two years. Shooting 46% in his sophomore season, he improved through hard work to a 70% average from the line last year.



His experience, along with that of Melchionni's, should greatly balance the attack of the Wildcats and the mistakes of the inexperienced members of the team.

JOE TURK

A guard-forward on this year's squad, 6-2, 180 pound Turk is a native Philadelphian from LaSalle High School. As a sophomore last year he saw action in about half the Wildcat games, averaging 2.5 points in the short time he played.

Although his shooting was erratic he led the team with a 58.6 field goal percentage and is capable of improving upon this mark. He is an excellent leaper and should prove valuable in the rebound department. With a little more experience under his belt, Turk may be able to work into the starting line-up.

LARRY LIVERS

If you think you've heard this name mentioned in another sport, you have. Livers is the IC4-A hurdling champion, and his speed and leaping ability may get the ball for the Wildcats in many clutch situations. Livers will be playing his first organized basketball since graduating from Norristown High in Norristown, Pa.

At present a question mark in the Wildcat future, Coach Kraft is exposing him to action early in the year, and hoping, if he responds, that he will be the fulcrum needed to balance the 'Cat attack.

This 6-2, 175 pound senior is having trouble finding the shooting touch after such a long layoff, but as the year progresses so should he and his all-around play. Like Turk, Livers will see action at both guard and forward.

Twas brillig and the slithy toves
Did gyre and gimble in the wabe.
All mimsy were the beurogroves
And the mome raths outgrabe.

Sure it rhymes and sounds good; but what does it mean? – Nothing, absolutely nothing.

By way of analogy, pre-season picks and predictions sound good, and form a good basis for a pedantic air in game by game discussion; but what actual weight do they hold? – Very, very little.

Sure, they're accurate to a certain degree, but then – where's Sonny Liston?; What happened to "Player of the Year" Barry Kramer?; Why was the World Series in Minnesota and L.A.?; How come Michigan State was National Champion?; What was Princeton doing in the semi-finals?; and so on indefinitely.

This is your team. Take a good look at them. Most of the experts didn't like what they saw, but maybe you will.

BILL MELCHIONNI

A senior from Bishop Eustice in Pennsauken, N.J., this year's captain has been described by his coach as "a great all-around player, and a real All-American candidate." This is only half the story. Melchionni has proven himself to be one of the top guards in the nation averaging 19.4 points per game last year in leading the Wildcat to a 23-5 mark, and a position in the top ten of the country.

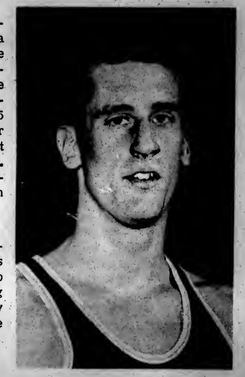
Not only a leader and a scorer, but also a 6-1, 165 pound speedster with great leaping ability, Melchionni's electrifying play in the backcourt gave Villanova victories over tough rivals like Princeton, Xavier, LaSalle, St. John's, and Providence.

His biggest point game came against Detroit, where his two fouls in the last two seconds gave him 35 points, and allowed the Wildcats to nip the Titans 72-70. This was only one of the games in which Bill's 81.6 free-throw accuracy helped the team to victory.

Melchionni's importance to the team was further shown in the National Invitational Tournament where he scored 16 against Manhattan and 28 against NYU before a virus kayoed him for the final against St. John's. A quick defensive player, Bill's many steals led to game-winning points in more than one contest last year. Melchionni is a cinch to reach the 1000 point plateau as he scored 542 points last year to bring his total to 811.

JOE CREWS

As a sophomore, Crews has clinched the other starting forward position. He's a 6-4, 195 pounder from Bishop McDevitt High, and makes his home in Glenside, Pa. He is the top performer from last year's freshman team, and the only one to be carried over onto the varsity.



Before a late season injury, he averaged 15.7 points and 11 rebounds a game. Crews is a strong, aggressive offensive player with an excellent jump shot. He is also able to drive well for lay-ups.

Lately, he has been working hard on his defensive play and his foul shooting. The prospects look bright for Crews to be one of the fine Villanova basketball stars of the future.

KEVIN TRAYNOR

Traynor will most likely team with Melchionni in the Wildcat backcourt. He is a good ballhandler and a fine defensive player from Monsignor Bonner High in Havertown, Pa. Last year this 6-0 170 pound guard saw action in over half the Wildcat games, and this experience will be valuable in running the club offense, should the defense stack up against Melchionni. Much will be expected of Traynor this year and it is the belief of many that he will do a fine job.

FRANK GAIDJUNAS

The tallest member of the Wildcat team at 6-9, Gaidjunas is a junior from Elkins Park, Pa. He attended LaSalle High in Philadelphia and was an All-Catholic league selection. As a freshman at Villanova he led the team with a 15 point average. However, last year he injured an ankle and was not able to see much game action. Gaidjunas is not much of a jumper, and needs a lot of work on his timing.

When he becomes more aggressive in his rebounding and his defense, he should be able to help the team. Right now he is fighting for a starting position with Terry McGuire, who seems to have the edge in the battle.

TERRY McGUIRE

The only non-Pennsylvanian on the team besides Melchionni, Terry is a 6-4, 180 pound forward from Cathedral Latin High School in Cleveland, Ohio. Last year as a sophomore, Terry played in only four games, but shot 50% for a 2.5 average.

He is the second best shot on the team, and a real battler under the boards. These assets will make him a valuable member of the Wildcat team. Terry has great natural abilities which need only be refined with experience, and right now it looks as though he will get all the action he can handle.

He is ahead of Frank Gaidjunas in the battle for the third starting position under the basket with Crews and Schaffer, and looks like a sure bet to be in the starting line-up on opening day.

Wildcat Opponents Mean and Many

By Joe Maffongelli and Larry Justice

SCRANTON

The Royals will face their rebuilding job under the watchful eyes of a new coach this season. Nat Volpe, former Manhattan College star, has replaced Jack Kiniszewski who posted a 8-16 record in his only year as top man. Volpe finds himself blessed with a talented crew of sophomores; and an outstanding transfer in the power of Everett Jenkins from St. Francis in Loretto.

He is a 6-3 guard. Volpe plans to take full advantage of his sophomore 'gold mine' by starting three of them. Charlie Witaconis leads the pack at center. Bob McGrath and Tim Foley are battling for one forward post, while Bob Moylan and Den[illegible]olchik will determine who [illegible]rd along with Jenkins.

The two holdovers, Tom Yucka and Bob Tardio, are battling for the other forward position. Scranton will need plenty of experience before they win too many.

PRINCETON

The Wildcats beat the Tigers in their last three successive meetings, but Bill Bradly always made it close. Now he has departed to hand over the charge to the likes of Hummer, Hoch, Walters,

ED HUMMER

Harlow, and Rodenbach. The entire Princeton season will probably be determined by the ability of these lads to play without Bill. Coach van Breda Kolf used these same words to describe prospects for the coming year.

Harlow, the captain, has the task of providing the leadership which Bradley radiated for three seasons. He is a steady and dependable ball player. Hummer and Brown are big enough to throw a lot of arms under the boards.

John Harlow, a 6-6 sophomore, will be the third member of his family to play for Princeton. Another soph who is being counted on heavily is Joe Heiser. If all goes as expected Princeton will again be in the thick of the Ivy race.

OREGON STATE

Paul Valenti, the director of basketball fortunes at Oregon State, is still looking for a dependable scorer to replace the graduated Paul Jarvis. He averaged 21.1 last year. Charlie White, a 6-4 senior guard, is getting the first crack at the job. He posted a 9.6 average last season.

Bob Franz, a 6-0 sophomore, will probably team with White in the backcount. With Loy Peterson, Gary Wilkes, and Karl Werdi in the fold, Valenti has no height problem. They stand 6-6, 6-8, and 6-6 respectively. Peterson is a transfer, but all are sophomores and lack valuable experience.

Wilkes is the logical choice to start at the pivot, while Peterson and Werdi will be the forwards. Although prospects look dim for repeating last year's 16-10 record in top competition, Valenti will be building for the future. Don't be surprised if this club explodes in [illegible] season.

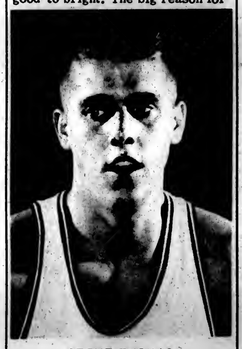
TOLEDO

Coach Bob Nichols would be glad to duplicate the 17-11 season which has marked the Toledo clubs of the last three seasons. A lack of experience, height, and depth will be the insignia of the early season. Only three experienced hands have returned to help Nichols in his second year.

Junior Bill Bachensto can again be counted on to spearhead the attack. His 18.2 points per game led the Rockets last year. Big Bob Aston will be charged with the bulk of the rebounding from his 6-8 vantage point.

The return to school of Jim Cox, who was out for personal reasons after a fabious sophomore season, could be a tremendous asset to the blue and gold. If he returns to form and 6-7 Bob Mix rounds into shape this club could be a sparkle in the midwest sky.

ST. JOHN'S



Gone is the golden era of Joe Lapchick; and gone is the great Ken McIntyre who won the MVP award in last year's NIT. But another McIntyre, Bob, seems to have been tabbed by fate to transfer the magic of great basketball from one coach to another. Lou Carnesecca will be counting heavily on this lad to lead his charges uphill through a rough schedule.

He will be joined in the frontcount by tough and agile Sonny Dove. Either of these lads is capable of all-American recognition.

Bob Duerr is returning for his third consecutive season as a forward, but he is being pressed by a 200 pound Rudy Bogard. The revamped backcount will feature two juniors named Al Schwartz and Brian Hill. Both are sure ball handlers but stand under six feet. It looks like McIntyre and Dove will lead this club.

XAVIER

Prospects for the Musketeers of Xavier University to improve on last season's 11-15 record, poorest in over a decade, seem good to bright. The big reason for this is Steve Thomas. He was averaging 28.9 until bad knees kept him out for the second half of the 1964-65 season.

He will have only half a season of eligibility this year, but all the other lads who started last year will be joining him. The sad part is that most of these veterans will be siting on the bench.

Two sophomores, 6-8 Jim Lacey and 6-6 Bob Quick, are going to play center and forward respectively. Bryan Lacey, a 6-5 boy with a 14.3 average, will be backcourt with Thomas to make room for Quick. The only other holdover who will start is 6-3 Jim Hengehold who will be up front.

DETROIT

It would seem as though the loss of some eight lettermen would leave a cage squad mighty thin. Add to this the fact that two of these eight lettermen were outstanding. But coach Bob Calihan figures that he has the horses to make up for the loss of such fine players as Terry Page and John Schamm.

One of the "big" reasons that the Titans gained their first NIT bid in quite awhile last season was 6-8 Dorrie Murray. His 17.2 points and 13.6 rebounds per game were amazing statistics. But a fellow returnee, Lou Hyatt, boasted a 17.6 points per game average.

Another starter last season was Jim Bayce. He comes back boasting 9.5 and 9.6 averages in scoring and rebounding. These three should prove some pretty stiff competition for any club. Add a pair of freshmen who both averaged over 22 points per contest and you may have a power house.

MEMPHIS STATE

The Tigers, 10-24 last season, have lost their three leading scorers and have only three lettermen back. However, coach Dean Ehlers actually feels his team will be much better this season due to the fact that he has many outstanding sophmores coming to the varsity.

Last year's freshman team, 19-2, produced the best record in State history while seven players averaged between 7 and 19 points per game. Mike Butler, Jack Romp, Mackie Don Smith, and Mike Stewart are all potential starters along with returnees B. G. Petty and Craig Alexander.

ST. PETER'S

The top field-goal percentage team in the country last year has lost three regulars. Coach Don Kennedy will start 6-4 Joe Bonner, 6-3 Joe Repka, and 6-5 Pete O'Dea up front while 5-9 Steve Day and 6-1 Richie Dreyer will handle the guard positions.

O'Dea, a sophmore, broke all school scoring records last year. St. Peter will, no doubt, continue to shoot well, but inexperience will cause a problem.

DUQUESNE

Duquesne no longer has all-time high-scorer Willie Somerset, No. 4 scorer Ron Willard and No. 8 scorer Willie Ross. This year's team will have to do a lot of shooting to make up for these losses. The Dukes have but three lettermen back and only two figure to start. Thus, three inexperienced sophmores will have to take on starting assignments.

Frank Miniotas, a 6-4 senior, is a veteran forward who averaged 14 ppg. last year. 6-6, 215 pound soph Ron Guziak will play the other corner while Phil Washington and Ed Leonarczyk, two 6-8 sophs, will try to replace the graduated Walt Lautsch.

Jim Smith, a 6-3 senior who averaged a meager 4.3 ppg. last year, must take charge in the backcourt. The other guard position is open to Pat Masterson, a 6-1 senior, or sophs Bill Reilly or Jack Kennedy. The Dukes will have a tough time matching last year's 14-10 record because of their inexperienced sophs.

FAIRFIELD

Fairfield will be tough early in the season and will get tougher by the time the 'Cats meet them when two sophs should be able to work effictively with seniors Mike Branch (6-3) and Pat Burke (6-4) and junior Jim Brown (6-3). 6-8 Art Kenney and 6-4 Bill Jones are the two sophs who will be starting. Both Burke and Brown averaged 20ppg. plus last season.

ST. BONAVENTURE

The Bonnies have lost only one regular and figure to better last season's 15-8 mark. The key man will be George Carter, a 6-5 junior, who can play either forward or center. Carter led the team in scoring (17.5 ppg.) and in rebounding (11.2) as a sophmore. Carter will probably stay at forward because coach Larry Weise wants 6-8 junior Paul Stappenbeck in the lineup. Bill Butler, a 6-3 soph, will probably be the other forward. Butler was the top freshman scorer with a 22 ppg. average.

Roger Bauer, a 6-2 senior who hit for 11.6 ppg. last year, is the backcourt standout. The other guard position is up for grabs with 6-1 junior John McLeod the likely choice.

CANISIUS

The Golden Griffins lost their whole frontcourt and will try to recoup mainly with sophs. Coach Bob MacKinnon has five big boys in Warren Plant and Norb Wessell, both 6-6, and Jim Hessinger, Mike Usdanoff and John Hassett, each 6-5, Plant, a junior, seems to be the top veteran and can play either center or forward. Hassett is a soph with great promise.

Until their forecourt matures, Canisius will have to depend upon an excellent pair of guards, juniors Andy Anderson and John Morrison, both 6-1. Terry Connors and John Human are soph guards who may be able to help out.

NIAGARA

The Purple Eagles, always a thorn in Villanova's side, will be tough again this year, especially if some of the new additions learn to work together effectively. New coach Jim Maloney inherits a potentially loaded lineup from his prededecessor, Taps Gallagher, who retired after 31 years.

Niagara, only 4-17 last year, has four regulars returning along with an outstanding soph and two junior-college transfers. Soph Manny Leaks, 6-7 and already being comopared to ex-Villanova great Jim Washington, averaged 24.1 ppg as a freshman and can play forward or center. Bill Smith and Butch Erwin, junior college transfers, are both 6-4 guards and averaged 26 ppg. and 29 ppg. respectively at their former schools.

Coach Mahoney must work the new recruits in with 6-6 center George Phillips, 6-4 forward-guard Art Coleman, 6-0 guard Pat Broderick and 6-3 forward Dave Smith -- all of whom played regularly last year.

SETON HALL

The Pirates' hopes hinge on the physical condition of 6-5 junior Terry Morawski and 6-5 soph Bill Somerset. Morawski missed the entire second half last year with an ankle injury and Somerset missed his freshman season after having a foot operation. If these key men are healthy they could give the Hall the rebounding they need. Tony Cuccolo, a 6-5 senior forward, scored 16.2 ppg. last year, while Charlie Mitchel, a 6-2 senior guard, hit for 16.6. Two sophmores, Don Gregory and Gerry Mackey, are excellent shooters and will fight it out for the remaining guard position.

DE PAUL

The Blue Deamons have lost only one starter and have some fine sophmores to give them bench strength. Coach Ray Meyer will rely on Don Swanson (12.3 ppg.), Tom Meyer (10.7 ppg.), and Erroll Palmer (10.6 ppg.) to fill the gap left by the graduation of leading scorer Jim Murphy. 6-7 sophmore center Bob Zoretich may take the job away from two-year regular 6-10 Dave Mills who has not rebounded effictively in the past.

Much of De Paul's success will depend upon sophmores like 6-3 Richard Shealy, Ken Johnston, and Bob Mattingly. Mattingly and Johnston sat out last season because of leg injuries.

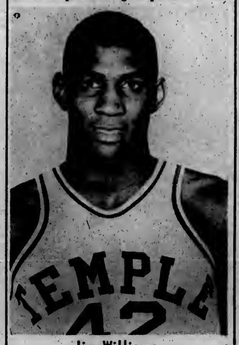
Big 5 Race Unpredictable; Hawks Favored For Present

By Jerry Bruderle

Despite the fact that St. Joseph's is on a two game losing streak the Hawks must be rated as the team to beat in the Big 5. Those two losses in the NCAA tourney last March to Providence and North Carolina State, coupled with an earlier loss to Providence were the only setbacks in an outstanding 26-3 season.

This year the Hawks have everyone back from last year but they will be hard pressed to match last year's record. Last year the Hawks were the underdogs, but this year everyone will be gunning for them. The schedule is tougher and it includes a western trip to Utah and Wyoming. Many of last year's Palestra victories will be away this year, including Davidson, St. John's and Boston College.



But when you come down to it, the only thing that can keep the Hawks from another high-flying season is the Hawks themselves. If they still have the incentive to play top-flight basketball, they will be close to the best in the country. If not they'll merely be one of the best in the East. This will be Dr. Jack Ramsey's chief problem; keeping his charges from losing their incentive.

Everybody's familiar with the starters back from last year: Billy Oakes, the hot and cold gunner guard, jump shooting Tom Duff at forward, hard-working Marty Ford at center, Cliff Anderson, who scored 36 points against Villanova and made many wish the bomb had gone off, and Matt Guokas, named to some All-America teams last year and ultimately the man who makes the Hawks go.

An improving Chuck McKenna 6-7 will fill in underneath, and Steve Chapman will substitute for Oakes when he cools off. The only sophomore on the team is Bill DeAngelis, who averaged 10 points a game as a freshman.

TEMPLE

Temple could be the sleeper of the Big 5. They have a lot of potential, have a strong front line, and have a promising sophomore in

Jim Williams

Clarence Brookins. The only thing that holds them back is the lack of a goodplaymaker.

Chris Kefalos, who played at guard for the first time last season, scored well averaging nine points a game and he should improve on that this year. The other guard position is open. Junior Don Cartwright and sophs Mike Kehoe and Jack McEntee have all been tried there.

Cartwright had a shot there last year but failed to produce, averaging three points a game. McEntee and Kehoe, who scored 12 per game as a frosh, have both looked impressive.

Up front the Owls are set with seniors Jim Williams and Ken Morgan, and sophomore Brookins. The 6-8 Williams did better as a sophomore than he did last year, as his average fell from 18 to 15 while gathering 12 rebounds a game both years. He has not yet lived up to the potential he showed at Norristown High, and many have questioned whether he was always putting out 100 percent.

Morgan, a 6-6 strongman who has been injured much of his career, is one of the forwards. He often got into foul trouble but played enough to score 12 points a game and help out with the rebounding.

But Brookins is the man to watch. A six-three jumping jack with quick moves, Brookins averaged 23 points a game as a freshman. If he comes through as well as those he is being compared to, like Cliff Anderson and Hubie White, Temple will have nothing to worry about.

Junior Joe Hindelang and sophomore Dick Davidson give Coach Harry Litwack more depth than last year. Temple should at least equal last season's 14-10 mark, and if a guard is found and Brookins comes through, they could pull a few surprises.

PENNSYLVANIA

Pennsylvania will have a host of sophomores to go with two proven stars in hopes of making a run at the Ivy League title if not the Big 5 title. Jeff Neuman and Stan Pawlak will man one guard and one forward spot respectively. Neuman is a good scorer and a dazzling ball handler, while Pawlak barely lost the city scoring title to Bill Melchioni last year.

Chuck Fitzgerald, 6-2, who saw little action last year with Penn, will probably start with Neuman in the backcourt. He is being pressed by 6-5 Bob Shannon and coach Jack McCloskey has not yet decided who will start.

Up front McCloskey has his tallest squad ever with three men over 6-8. John Hellings, 6-8, showed a lot of improvement during the 1964-65 season, and he will probably start in one corner. With Pawlak in the other corner, that leaves 6-9 Frank Burgess and 6-10 sophomore Tom Mallison to vie for the center spot. Burgess played for one semester last year and was unimpressive. He has improved considerably but still needs more experience.

Mallison, who weighs only 178 pounds, will probably be used more, especially as the season progresses. With last year's freshman Big 5 champs, Mallison showed he has the ability and if his weight improves he could be a star.

Sophs Tom Northrup, 6-0, Bill Goldstein 6-4, Sandy Kartzman 6-3, and veteran Bob Auchter 6-4, give Penn a strong bench.

As the season progresses Penn will probably improve as the sophomores get game experience. Last year's 15-10 mark is a reasonable goal to shoot for.

(Photo by Al Vendraso)

A shot of the crowd at the St. Joe's-Villanova battle last year exemplifies the spirit of the big five race. Shortly after this photo was taken, a bomb scare cleared the Palestra - proving anything can happen in the big five.

LASALLE

With only two starters returning, LaSalle will have a tough time trying to match last year's 15-8 mark. Juniors Hubie Marshall and George Paull will have to do most of the scoring. Marshall averaged 15 points a game last year and he will have to take over Curt Fromal's playmaking role if the Explorers are to go anywhere.

Paull, (12.0 ppg) will also be counted on for rebounding with the graduation of George Sutor.

Senior Jerry Marano, 6-5, will be the other forward despite his 1.9 average of last year. The key to LaSalle's success, however, may be 6-6 soph Bill Ring, the tallest player on the squad. Ring averaged 20 points and 15 rebounds a game as a freshman.

To join Marshall in the backcourt, coach Bob Walters will have to choose between 6-2 Chuck Storm and 5-10 Bill Magarity. Storm apparently has the edge, but neither one averaged more than three points a game last year. Among the reserves there is 6-4 Dave Bednarik, Chuck's brother, who averaged 19 points for the freshmen, and will see a lot of action.

Meet the Captain

By John DiGennaro

This year's varsity hoopsters will be led by captain elect Bill Melchionni; a blond, pale and frail, 6-1, 165 pound, will-of-the-wisp guard, out of Bishop Eustice in Pennsauken, New Jersey. The slight sharpshooter has come off a rather impressive junior showing, and barring injury, should receive All-East, if not All-American, recognition before the year is out.

"Cyclop," aptly nicknamed two years ago by Wally Jones, -- "because that boy's got an eye" -- poured in 542 points last year while scoring at a 19.4 clip. Add to this the 269 points he scored as a part time performer two years ago, and it's inevitable that he will not only become the eleventh man in Villanova history to break the 1000 mark, but possibly even crash the top of the list up around the Arizins and Whites.

The thing that tabs Bill as a definite All-American candidate is his tremendous all around ability; that is, he is not only an above average shooter, but also one of the smoothest ball handlers, and most tenacious defenders, you're likely to see on a college floor.

Last year he failed to reach double figures only once, shot 81.6 from the charity line, led the team in steals and assists, and was second as a defender only to the incomparable Jim Washington. He's the ballplayer's ballplayer, doing everything well, and with exciting speed, and uncanny timing and agility.

He's that rare find that on any given night can carry a team, if not by personal heroics, then as the herald of inspiration. He can drive with the best of them, hit pop shots from the key, or jumpers from anywhere on the floor. He's the one big reason why Villanova shouldn't be counted out this year. He's really that good.

Spirit Committee Sponsors Trip To Princeton For V.U.

By Bill Nott

Basketball is here at last, and the mere sound of the word should tend to raise the spirits of all true hardcourt fans. This is especially true at Villanova where basketball support has been at a maximum for the last few years.

Even though the Jim Washingtons and the George "Honeybear" Teftwitches are gone, there is really no reason for this season to be an exception as far as backing the team goes.

Anyone who has witnessed Coach Jack Kraft's teams in action knows that with such standouts as Billy Melchionni and Bernie Schaffer leading the attack, the Wildcats will provide many an exciting victory before the season is over.

Thursday night the 'Cats opened against Scranton in the Fieldhouse in what proved to be a mild invitation for them. Things were a little tougher as they journeyed to Providence on Saturday night for what turned out to be a revenge battle. The Wildcats were the first to defeat an exceptional Friar team that finished fourth in the national rankings last year.

FROSH VS. VARSITY

However, our first look at the Villanova Wildcats came Tuesday night as they met the Freshman squad in their annual scrimmage. By participating in their event, we had an excellent chance to show our support for the team. Let's hope that such enthusiasm will continue and grow as the season progresses.

The Spirit Committee is sponsoring a trip to the Princeton game tomorrow night, December 7. Anyone who remembers last year's cliffhanger can hardly hope for such a spectacular game again this year.

Although the Tigers have lost their do-everything man, Bill Bradley, they still have a very strong team returning. Certainly this game will be one of the better ones of the season.

Anyone interested in seeing the game should sign up in the Pie Shoppe between 10:30 a.m. and 2:45 p.m. The price of the bus trip is $1.50. The buses will leave the Law School parking lot at 4:15 p.m. and should arrive in time to see the entire Freshman game (yes, the Frosh are playing too).

Approximate time of return to Villanova is no later than 12 midnight. Students are to purchase their own tickets at the Ticket Office in the Fieldhouse. Hurry - there is a limited supply.

This year the Basketball Club has been reformed under the direction of the Spirit Committee and will work with the Committee in an attempt to foster general basketball spirit.

The Club will form the nucleus of the cheering section at all Palestra games. It is hoped that the rest of the student body will join in with them loudly, showing Big Five friends that the 'Cat will never die. Club members can be detected by their navy blue French berets, and by their loud voices at all basketball games.

Watch for the "Wally Jones - Jim Washington Night" coming up on March 9. The Spirit Committee is planning a trip to Convention Hall for the Hawk-'76ers game. The Basketball Club will have its own seating section at the game. This trip should show Wally and Jim, as well as the sports fans of Philadelphia, that Villanova stands behind its post-grads and wishes them well. The game should prove to be an exciting one, and the personal duel between two ex-Villanovans ... well, no speculation offered. May the best 'Cat win.

Varsity Whips Frosh 68-47 As Melchionni Bombs In 38

By Brian Banmiller

Villanova's freshman basketball squad received their first taste of "fieldhouseitis" last Tuesday night, and came out on the short end of a 68-47 battle with the Varsity. The game, an annual event sponsored by the Spirit Committee, was witnessed by a near capacity crowd, there to usher in the 1965-66 season.

MELCHIONNI SPARKLES

Senior Captain Bill Melchionni captured the high scoring laurels of the evening, scoring the first 12 points for the Varsity, and then went on to a game high total of 38 points on 19 field goals. Melchionni's percentage from the floor was an outstanding 65 per cent on 29 shots taken.

Sophomore standout Joe Cruz captured the high honors in Varsity rebounds with 6, and tossed in 17 points for second place in the scoring department. Other scoring for the Varsity was evened out among Gaidjunas, McGuire, Livers, Schaffer, Traynor, and Turk.

Jones Leads Frosh

Hailing from Blanche Ely High in Pompano Beach, Florida, 6-3 John Jones led the frosh honors with 16 points on 8 of 14 shots from the floor, and pulled down 6 rebounds. Jim McIntosh walked away a leader in rebounds, with 9, and added 8 points to the effort.

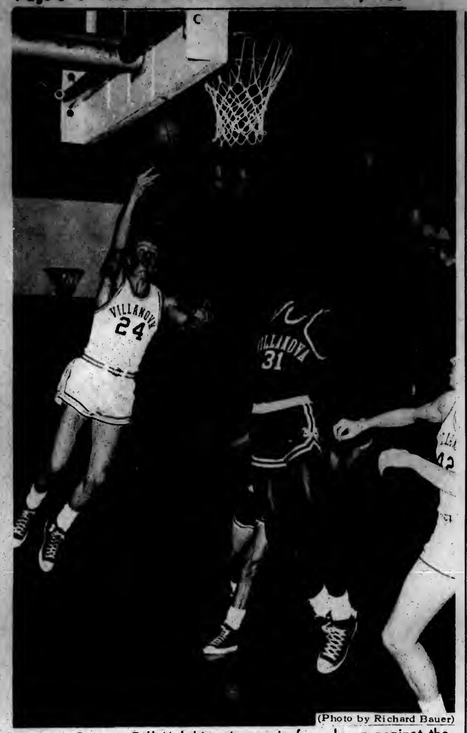
The game opened with a burst of speed and aggressiveness as the Varsity hustled off to a quick 10-0 advantage before Jim McIntosh was able to break the ice for the Freshmen, this after five full minutes had elapsed.

Sucessive shots by Cruz and Melchionni jacked the advantage to 18-2 before the Frosh could find themselves. Two more buckets by McIntosh inspired the pickup by the Frosh which led to a 41-22 half time score, with the Varsity leading.

The scoring in the first half was dominated by Melchionni and Cruz, as no other Varsity player scored until only five minutes remained in the opening stanza.

The second half saw a tighter game, with the Varsity outscoring the Frosh by a mere 2 points, 27-25. McGuire took the initiative after two minutes of no scoring to kick off the second half.

FROSH PICK UP



The frosh, becoming more used to game conditions, settled down to a more deliberated effort.

For the most part, the remaining minutes of play were even. Bernie Shaeffer, who felt sickly during the first half, was sent to the showers early, and Cruz fouled out with only minutes remaining.

By the time Coach Kraft replaced Captain Melchionni with two minutes to go, the game was out of reach for the Freshmen.

Freshman Coach Jack Devine, approached after the contest, seemed pleased with the Frosh showing. However, he added, "Our defense could not stop Billy (Melchionni), but as the season progresses, we should jell more, and be able to put on a more unified defensive attack."

Coach Kraft was optimistic, pointing to the fine showing as an example of the hustle and desire "If the team keeps up the hustle and desire they showed tonight," Kraft went on to say, "I will be more than pleased with the outcome of the season." Kraft also complimented the fine show of spirit and backing which the student body exerted at the opening exhibition of the season.

Wildkittens Stimulate Students

By Jim Proud

There has been much speculation among students concerning the forthcoming season for the Villanova freshman basketball team. These speculations have mostly been on the hopeful side and indeed they should be for this year's team is perhaps the best one ever to wear the uniforms of the 'Kittens. Spearheaded by eight scholarship players, the team presages all the qualities of greatness.

The honors received by the eight frosh range from All-State to Honorable mention All-City. Their abilities range from fine shooters to excellent rebounders. Underneath the 'Kittens are relying on Jim McIntosh to do most of the rebounding but he will not be alone for he will be assisted by such players as Frank McCall and George May.

McIntosh is a 6, 6-1/2 center from Lincoln High School in Philadelphia. While in high school, McIntosh led his team in rebounds and was one of the top scorers on that team. Last year McIntosh attended Prep school where he gained added experience in his specialties while preparing himself for the academic life at Villanova.

McCALL AT FORWARD

Frank McCall is a 6-5 Commerce and Finance student who is well adapted to handle the forward position. He combines a good eye with the knack for following up shots which miss their mark. His springy legs give him an added advantage over his opponents and will enable him to assist McIntosh in rebounding.

The other forward position will be handled by either George May or John Jones, who is no relation to the former Villanova great.

George May, who is also a graduate of Lincoln High School in Philadelphia, was named to the All-City basketball team in his senior year of High School competition.

This 6-4 leaper also has been known to tap in a few missed shots as well as zinging the rebounds from taller opponents.

The third of the alternating forwards is John Jones. Jones comes from Pompano Beach, Florida, where in his senior year he was honored by being chosen to the All-State basketball team. He comes to Villanova after graduating from Blanche Ely High School in Pompano Beach where he was the starting forward for three years.

He is presently enrolled in the College of Arts and Sciences. Although he is rather short for a forward, standing 6-3, his ability to shoot makes him a dangerous threat from the corner when the 'Kittens have the ball. This plus his ability to work with the ball should make him a valuable asset to this year's Freshman squad.

In the back court the frosh will have an abundance of talent. There are three players in particular who have shown tremendous talent in their high school careers and who came to Villanova with high honors and recommendations. These three men are Frank Gillen, Bob Melchionni, and John Price.

GILLEN AT GUARD

Frank Gillen is a 5 - 10 1/2 ball handling ace from Bishop Neumann High School in Philadelphia. His ball handling tactics plus his shooting prowess enabled him to be named to the Philadelphia All-Catholic team in his senior year. He is a backcourt star in the Gannon-Muluihill tradition of South Philly.

Bob Melchionni, brother to the back court ace of the varsity, also comes to Villanova from Bishop Eustace. One of the honors bestowed on him in high school was his selection to the All South Jersey team in his senior year. He stands 6 feet tall and is presently in the College of Commerce and Finance.

John Price comes to Villanova from Paterson East Side High School where he was selected to the All-County basketball team in his final year of competition. John is a 6-3 quick handed floor general who will be counted on by coach Devine to direct the team from the floor.

William Horlacher, another scholarship player, suffered a broken arm and leg as a result of an accident and will be unable to play until the middle of January. When he is able to play, however, he will alternate at the position of forward for the 'Kittens.

It is obvious that there is an abundance of talent on the team. The problem now facing the 'Kittens is whether they can be molded into a smooth-functioning squad. This will depend on their team spirit and on Coach Devine to see that they do become a unit.

Two Freshmen Girls Selected to Lead Villanova's Cheering

Two girls have been added to the ranks of girl cheerleaders, leading the Villanovans at football games, basketball games, and rallies of all sorts.

These cheerleaders, Patricia Albano and Eleanor Foley, both of the Freshman Class were picked by a committee made up of Brian Banmiller, Brendan Moore, Ward Williams, Betsy Grabowski, Lorraine Farino, and Jan Zeller.

Miss Foley and Miss Albano will replace the two graduating seniors, Miss Grabowski and Miss Farino.

The other cheerleaders, (various male students supplement the female corps), are: Phyllis Greyson, Jane Hulse, Cevyn Murphy, Sue Quinn, and Miss Zeller.

Molder of Stars

By Jim Proud

The position of assistant coach to the varsity basketball team and head coach of the Freshmen team is held by a former student of Villanova, Jack Devine. While attending Villanova as a student, Devine was the star center on the basketball team. Due to revamped eligibility rules during the Korean War, Devine was able to play four years of varsity competition. The last two years of his college career were years of great accomplishment for the man who was a member of the Philadelphia All-City team in 1951.

Devine was elected captain of the Wildcat squad for both of those years and also was honored by his teammates who elected him the most valuable player for both of those campaigns.

Although he is only 6-4, Coach Devine was an outstanding rebounder for the Wildcats throughout his four-year career. Jack Devine was also an excellent scorer while at Villanova. His career total of 1,263 points still remains as the sixth highest amount of points ever scored by a Villanova player.

Before coming back to his alma mater Devine coached West Catholic High School of Philadelphia for three years. The first of those years, the 1958-59 season, Devine led the team to the Catholic League title.

Devine came to Villanova five years ago as assistant coach to Coach Kraft. In his second season as a coach at Villanova Devine led the 'Kittens to the Big Five championship. In that season, 1962-63, the Frosh's record was 10-2.

When Coach Kraft appointed Jack Devine as his assistant and coach of the Frosh, he hoped that the skill Devine had acquired as a player and a high school coach would assist him in helping the Frosh players make the big jump from high school competition to the college level. He has performed well in this task, especially with the big men underneath. Players such as Jim Washington and Eric Erickson owe a great deal to Jack Devine for their development.

One of the Best

By Don Campbell

Hey! Hey! Who is this coach of ours? Jack Kraft already had two strikes against him when he started his coaching career. He not only went to St. Joseph's College but also went to St. Joseph's Prep School while a young hardcourt sprite himself. (Don't tell anybody but he also had a third strike against him -- he was chosen All-City in his senior season.)

O.K. the guy has two strikes on him, what does he do?

Jack Kraft coached for fourteen years on the "harry" level before joining ranks with the Cats on April 7, 1961. He was head coach of Bishop Neumann (formerly Southeast Catholic) for 12 of these years where his record was 154-111. At Malvern his last two years, he was 28-7 and won the Inter-Academic title there his first year. He tied for second during his last year.

During this tenure the ex-Navy aviator came to be known for his ability to do a lot with a little. He was known as a defensive specialist and a sound fundamentalist.

Then Jack and Villanova adopted each other. Four years to this day Mr. Kraft has an 87-26 record. Teams under him have won both major ECAC tournaments, the Philadelphia Quaker City Tourney in 1962 and New York's Holiday Festival in 1964. The teams of '63 and '64 had records of 24-4 and 23-5, respectively.

O.K. Now what's he like?

Our coach is a quiet sort of guy; that is, except when he talks about his boys. He uses the persuasive type leadership and exudes a fatherly image. Mr. Defense has the "air of professionalism" about him.

The first thing Coach Kraft demands of his players is 100% hustle at all times. This hustle is incorporated into his famous ball defense. He described it as a "combination man-to-man and zone." It involves having the opposing team pass the ball to us instead of to themselves.

When interviewing the coach, he did not once say that this is a rebuilding year. He did not bemoan the loss of Soens and Moore. He did not say we played too big of a schedule. Mr. Kraft did however praise the way the boys have come around this year. He realizes that the boys will have to pick up game experience by the "baptism of fire technique" but after the indoctrination period he expects the Cats to win a lot of ball games.

He admits that it isn't going to be easy but still feels that we will have a winning season. He lavishly praised the student body and hoped that they would help him on one of his problems. It seems that Frank Gaidjunas isn't hustling enough and student pressure may help.

Coach Kraft has the full respect of the student body and team members. We think we have a good coach and so does the New York Metropolitan Sports Writers who named him Coach of the Year in '64. He was also selected Coach of the Year by the Philadelphia Sports Writers twice and selected Catholic Coach of the Year twice by the Tablet. It seems we are not alone.

Holiday Festival Opponents Strong, But Friars Favored

By Bob McIntyre

The 1965 edition of the ECAC Holiday Festival could be the best of the Christmas Tournaments because of the eight strong teams entered. The 14th Annual Tournament will be held on December 27, 28, and 30, at Madison Square Garden.

Unfortunately Villanova can't be looked upon as a favorite, let alone a threat to the title. But the Kraftsmen still have a few tricks up their sleeves and perhaps an opening win over Army could cause some confusion among the favorites. The 'Cats won the tournament two years ago when they knocked off Big Ten power, Minnesota, 77-73 in the final round.

From the East, Providence leads the pack, followed closely by Bob Cousy's, Boston College, Georgetown, Army, NYU, and Villanova. Add Illinois from the Big Ten and a strong Colorado State from the Midlands of the West and you've got the makings of a thrill packed Tournament.

PROVIDENCE has to rank as the tournament favorite, even though they have lost Dexter Westbrook, a 6-7, 14.4 ppg, through scholastic troubles. It is a painful loss but far from fatal, since Coach Joe Mullaney still has four regulars back, plus Bob Kovalski, star of the 1963-64 team who dropped out of school last year. They were one of the best teams in the country last year with a 24-2 record which includes a loss to Villanova.

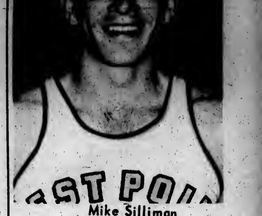
WALKER TOPS

Guard Jim Walker, a 6-3 junior, is the outstanding Friar. He averaged 20.5 ppg as a sophomore, feeds as well as he shoots, and led the team to the NCAA Eastern finals. He and 6'4 senior Jim Benedict (14.4 ppg last season) give the team size, speed and power in the backcourt. Kovalski will be at forward despite his height of 6-8. The other forward 6-3 senior Bill Blair, had a 13.6 ppg scoring average. Mike Riordan wil be the top sub off the bench.

BOSTON COLLEGE however, could be the surprise of the tourney if their sophomores come through. All-American guard John Austin (26.9 ppg.) led the run-shoot- Eagles to a 22.7 record and NIT bid last year. Look for 6-7 junior Willie Wolters (11.5 ppg as a soph) to help Austin out. Coach Cousy also has another smooth looking guard in 6-2 senior Ed Hockenbury, a tough forward in 6-5 junior Ted Carter, and good subs in 6-2 guard Doug Hice and 6-5 forward Bob Rossi, also juniors.

Those are the known quantities. The unknows are the sophs. They won 20 out of 20 as freshmen and could be the varsity world-beaters. They are: Jim Kissane (6-8), Tom Pacynski (6-10), Steve Adelman (6-5), Jack Kvancz (6-0), Ed Rooney (6-2) and Steve Kelleher.

GEORGETOWN has one of the cleverest ballhandlers in the country in Jim Brown, who owns only a 9.4 ppg, but should do a lot better this year. The Hoyas, coached by Tommy O'Keefe, figure that Brown will have one of three with him at the other guard spot. He will have 6-0 letterman Jim Lyddy or either of two high-scoring sophs: 6-1 Dennis Cesar or 6-1 1/2 Bruce Stinebrickner. The last two averaged 24.5 and 18.6 respectivly as freshmen.



Up front, will be a 6-6 senior Jim Barry, who averaged 19.1 ppg. last year to put him on the road to the highest scorer ever at Georgetown. Either 6-8 Steve Sullivan or 6-6 Bob Ward will play the other forward position. Center Frank Hollendoner, a 6-11 junior, averaged only 8.4 ppg. last year, but had a bad knee, and if he plays up to potential the Hoyas could cause trouble in the East.

ILLINOIS REBUILDS

ILLINOIS, will be having a rebuilding year since they lost four of their starters from last year. However, Coach Harry Combes hasn't given up hope and for a good reason, a player by the name of Don Freeman is back. Freeman averaged 18.3 ppg last season and could be good for 25 or more this year. He is, perhaps, the most remarkable forward in college basketball. Don stands only 6-11/2 yet he jumps as though he had springs in his legs.

Other starters could be Veteran guards, Jim Dawson, Jim Vopicka and Larry Hinton, forwards Bob Johansen and Larry Hinton. It doesn't seem like much until you realize that Illinois always is respectable.

ARMY, has lost its coach from last year who led them to two straight NIT bids, and have the freshman coach, Bob Knight now. Knight has one player 6-6 senior center Mike Silliman, who's the equal of any in the country and the finest basketball player Army has ever had. Senior forward Bill Helkie, 6-3, should be a better shooter now that he's been fitted with contact lenses. Sophs Bill Schutsky, 6-2, and Mike Noonan 6-5, could start opposite Helkie. It looks as though Captain Dick Murray, a 6-2 senior and the star of last years freshmen team, Paul Heiner, will run the backcourt.

WESTERN FOE

COLORADO STATE, has Lonnie Wright and, says one observer: "He plays so well it's monotonous." Wright, 6-2, scored just under 20 points a game last year at guard and forward and made honorable mention on several All-American squads.

Returning with Wright is another senior, Tom Vidakovich, a 5-11 guard who has a fine outside shot and is a strong defender and playmaker. Forward Bill Key, 6-4, returns, as do 6-9 center Dale Schlueter and guards Dick Fines and Darrell Greene, both 6-1.

NYU Coach Lou Rossini seems to have another Tournament team, and in this Holiday Festival could take it all if the crowd goes for the home team. Seniors Ray Bennett, Stan McKenzie and Richie Dyer, and juniors Mal Graham and Bruce Kaplan are the Violet reliables; especially McKenzie, the springy, 6-5 forward from Florida who has improved fantastically since his soph season. McKenzie had an 18.7 ppg. average last year and speared 9.3 rebounds a game.

On the top, Brenden Brett explains a counter motion on presidential succession while the bottom photo seems to reveal menacing gestures on the part of a disgruntled Congress member toward one Patrick Mahady.

Congress Stifles Motion On Presidential Succession

Student Government, in a close vote turned down a motion that would have provided for SGA presidential succession.

Since the motion (see VILLANOVAN p. 3 November 17) was an amendment to the Constitution of the body it required a 2/3 vote for passage. The final vote, after several amendments were defeated and one passed, 21-14. The vote was a 60 per cent approval for the motion; 66-2/3 per cent is needed.

An amendment to the motion, offered by one of the makers of the motion, Ward William, discarded the original order of succession. The new order called for the President to stipulate, upon election, the order of succession of his appointed Vice-Presidents, the would be followed in line by the Treasurer, Secretary and Parliamentarian.

The failure of the Congress to pass the motion, which had been recommended by the Senate, leaves the SGA with no method of succession during the second semester, since an amendment takes effect the semester following its passage.

Bob Dean, Senior A&S Day-Hop representative, told the VILLANOVAN after the meeting that he will re-submit an amendment he made on the succession topic.

FREE DAY

In other action, moderated by Vice-President for Student Government John Graziano, the SGA chose March 18, 1966 as the annual Free Day which they are permitted to grant.

Graziano took over the reigns of the Congress when Eck (and several other members of the Congress) had to leave to attend the banquet for Who's Who members.

There was debate on this motion in the form of an amendment calling for the date to be associated with the Easter recess. Reasoning was that many of the students have a long way to travel to get home and that a longer vacation period would be better for them. It was defeated 9-4 in a Senate meeting and by a good majority on the Congress floor.

This and two other motions were brought before the Congress after an Emergency Senate meeting held just 30 minutes prior to the Congress meeting.

The other motion called for the seating of the Stage Crew on the SGA as an official club at the school. At a Senate meeting on November 29, the motion had been tabled. Apparently there was a misunderstanding at that time as to how long the club had been in existence. This was cleared up at the later meeting and the club was formally accepted unanimously.

In other action, Gene FitzMaurice went on record as being the critique of the system offered in the preliminary committee report, according to the vice-president. However, it is pointed out that several "Bugs" in the system were noted and there is hope that these can be ironed out before the system takes to the air next September.

New Book Store To Be Built; Semester Moratorium On TV

Committee Report Favors New System In General

By Bill McCloskey

Instructional television at Villanova will enter a one semester moratorium period tomorrow.

Rev. John Driscoll, OSA, Vice-President for Academic Affairs says the period will be used to "profit from the experience" of the Fall semesters programming on the station.

Mr. Raymond Wilke, director of the Office of Instructional Television (OIT) says he is glad a period has been called during which much needed technical improvements can be made on the system. There are also plans for video-taping lectures for next Fall's term.

The moratorium follows by two weeks the filing of a report by a committee headed by Mathematics Department Chairman Dr. Emil Amelotti. Father Driscoll tells the VILLANOVAN the report is "in general favorable" to the system.

A week ago, a two page memo summarizing the report was circulated to department chairmen. They were asked to pass it on to their subordinates. Word went to the entire faculty via the Faculty Bulletin, published yesterday.

There was a brief general

REPORT SURPRISES

The report was filed after about three months of investigation. The administration was careful to insure that the faculty learned of the report and its findings through proper channels.

The VILLANOVAN received many complaints last Spring when an article reporting the inception of the plan appeared. The newspaper story was the first report many on campus had heard on the idea, although it had been more or less general knowledge to many students and faculty members, long before it appeared in these pages.

At one time the matter was brought before the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) which ended up congratulating Rev. John O'Rourke, OSA, whose idea started WWVU-TV.

Two courses, Psychology 134 and Theology 205 were taught on the system this semester, using two channels.

Student opinion had been varied, but in general there was dissatisfaction with the system because of the many problems created by its newness. A similar opera-

'Villanovan' Research Helps To Implement Needed Improvements

A new book store will be built in time for the start of the 1966 Fall Semester.

This announcement was made following a meeting of the Vice-Presidents of the University and Father President Monday afternoon.

According to the Rev. Richard Appicci, vice-president for student affairs, the building will house only text books and will be used at the time of registration for the sale of textbooks.

The decision was made after a VILLANOVAN-researched article was read at the meeting. The writer of the article, Bill Keane, had done research since the beginning of the semester on the situation and the article contained some suggestions for the book store's improvement.

The new structure will be built near Corr Hall on the campus.

In addition, it was decided that the policy of constant change of text books will be investigated. Non-use of texts after they have been assigned by departments will also fall under the investigative processes.

For next semester, inconvenience during registration and the first week of school will be hopefully kept at a modicum with the installment of two more cash registers in the West Lounge. Other places on campus were discussed as possible locations for the selling of books, but there were too many difficulties involved.

Grad Theatre Slates 'As You Desire Me' For Dec. 10, 11, 12

The final performances of "AS YOU DESIRE ME," Luigi Pirandello's probing work concerning appearance versus reality, will be presented at the Villanova Playbox on December 10, 11, 12.

The plot of the drama in three acts revolves around the identity of a Strange Lady, played by Sandra Salvana, and the efforts of a family to prove to themselves that she is one of them. The Strange Lady herself becomes caught up in self examination and struggles to find her own identity in spite of pressures to be as others see her.

In his study of the Strange Lady and the self-deluding people about her, Pirandello again has put into exciting dramatic form the alienation that is peculiar to twentieth century man. This same relentless examination of relativism is found in most of his other great works, including RIGHT YOU ARE (IF YOU THINK SO) and SIX CHARACTERS IN SEARCH OF AN AUTHOR.

Dr. Jackson G. Barry, assistant professor in the Villanova University Graduate Theatre Department, directed "As You Desire Me."

Reservations for "As You Desire Me" may be made by calling LA 5-4600, ext. 454 Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Curtain is at 8:30 p.m.

Vilvaldi's Gloria Highlights Annual Christmas Concert

The Student Government Association will sponsor the annual Christmas Concert Thursday, December 10, featuring all Villanova musical organizations.

In addition to the Villanova Singers, the Villanova Concert Band, and the Women's Glee Club, the Immaculata Women's Glee Club will also perform. They will present their own selections as well as combining with the Villanova Singers in the presentation of Vilvaldi's "Gloria."

In past years the "Singers" have undertaken major musical works of Bach and other well known composers. This year's presentation of the "Gloria" by Vilvaldi will continue this tradition.

The Singers will also present a program aimed at instilling the Christmas Spirit. Such numbers as "Lo How A Rose Be Blooming," "Adoro Te," "Margarante," and the "Creation" will attempt to highlight the deep religious feeling that should be a part of Christmas.

Also presenting several seasonal tunes will be the "Spires." This is a group of twelve "Singers" specializing in the folk music field.

Conductor C. Dudley Lowden will lead the Villanova Concert Band in the presentation of such numbers as "Sleigh Ride," "Silent Night" and "The Yuletide Festival."

The concert will conclude with all vocal clubs and the Concert Band presenting "O Holy Night," Other appropriate Christmas carols, and the Villanova Alma Mater.

The "Singers" are under the direction of Mr. Herbert Fiss. Barry O. Burke is president. The band is conducted by C. Dudley Lowden with Alfred Bigham, the president.

In past years the concert has been presented in front of capacity crowds and the same is expected for this year. The concert will be held in the Field House and there is no admission charge.

Larry Krupa Promoted To Assistant Manager Of WWVU Radio Station

Larry Krupa, Junior Engineering major, has been promoted to the post of Assistant Station Manager of WWVU Radio.

In addition to this position, Krupa will become Chief Engineer of the station replacing Jim Briggman who resigned. Krupa was Business Manager of the station for over a year.

Sales Manager Paul E. Scannell succeeds Krupa as Business Manager. Lew Traver becomes Sales Manager.

In making the appointment, Station Manager Bill McCloskey told the VILLANOVAN, "I'm always proud to be able to dip into the staff and promote people. There is a wealth of talent on the WWVU staff and every promotion is an indication of the amount of talent an individual has demonstrated."

"I'm sorry to lose Briggman," McCloskey commented, "he spent a great deal of his time helping the station and has improved it technically in many ways. At the same time, I know I can depend on the new people to do a good job, as a matter of fact Traver has already sold one account.

Another opening will occur shortly when Senior Phil Colombo, WWVU's Promotion Director graduates, in January.

Just before Thanksgiving, there was another change in the WWVU organizational chart caused by the resignation of Don Casey as Campus News Director. He was replaced by Al Norcott, one of the newsmen on the station.

only member of the SGA against a policy of installing left-handed desks in the classrooms of the University.

He gave no reason for his opposition.

The motion was presented by Don Serafano and Richard Brandt. Serafano said that after consulting with members of the Education Department and Psychological services, it was determined that the side of the chair on which the desk is located is a factor to the 15 per cent of the student population that is left-handed.

Serafano says he will ask the Administration that these desks be installed gradually as chairs are repaired so as to get a good distribution and not to overburden the maintenance men.

BUSY MEETING

There have been several other motions passed in recent weeks since the last SGA report in the VILLANOVAN. These motions provide that:

---Motions to be voted on by the Senate be presented by noon of the schoolday prior to the meeting.

---The SGA request an early exam schedule posting from now on in both semesters.

---All Seniors be allowed stack privileges at Falvey Library. Father Rongione is quoted as being favorably disposed to this legislation.

---Judicial procedures be reviewed and recommendations made. This was accomplished by a Ward Williams motion at the November 29 meeting.

THREE EXAMS OUT

The SGA has also gone on record, unanimously, as being against any student being required to take three final examinations in one day. (There was no objection to three exam periods daily.)

In a motion presented by Bob Dean, the Congress called on the Administration to allow a student to request a change of date for one examination should he be scheduled for three in one day. As visualized by Dean, a student would follow the same procedure currently in order when a conflict develops.

One Biology Major pointed out that some students in that course have been scheduled for an exam on Monday, three on Tuesday and another on Wednesday.

He pointed out that a student "might as well start packing now" if his passing a course depended on his mark on one of those finals.

NO EXAM EXEMPTIONS

In the course of the last two meetings there have also been several important announcements including the report from Frank Eck that the Administration had turned down an SGA motion which called for Seniors with an "A" in a Spring Semester course to not be required to take a final exam in that subject.

There were 53 motions presented in the first Semester of the current SGA.

These will be included in the Codification to be presented at the next meeting of the SGA, next semester.

Book Exchange Ready Again

The Student Activities Committee of the Student Government Association plans to undertake two main tasks next semester. The re-running of the Used Book Exchange and the distribution of the Student Telephone directories.

The Used Book Exchange will be run similar to the way it was conducted last semester. Notices will be published on all bulletin boards when the students return in January. These notices will tell the students where to bring the second-semester books that they want the S.G.A. to sell.

The S.G.A. will then sell the books during the first week of school next semester. It is important that every student should check the bulletin boards and take advantage of the S.G.A. service.

Also next semester the Student Activities Committee will start selling the student telephone directories on a campus wide basis. These books contain the names, home and school addresses, the telephone number, class and year and college division of nearly every undergraduate Villanovan.

March 24 Is Tentative Date For Annual Class Elections

This year's general class elections have tentatively been set for March 24, 1966. Nominations for the selections will take place two weeks prior on March 10.

On March 24, the Class of 1969 will go to the polls to elect eight people they deem best for the prospective positions. These offices include president, vice-president, secretary, and treasurer of the class, while the other positions are as representatives to the Student Government Association. Four people will be selected for these seats, two day-hops and two residents.

Anyone who has attained a 2.5 cumulative average and is in good standing with the Dean of Men and Chaplain's Office is eligible for nomination.

Normally at Villanova the campaigning for the various positions is quite spirited and the week designated for campaigning (Monday, March 21 through Thursday, March 24) is often the most exciting week of the school year. There are debates between the candidates, posters, signs and much individual campaigning by the candidates and their workers. This all culminates on election day when over 85 percent of the student body votes.

The voting turnout at Villanova has always been a proud tradition. George Valva, chairman of the Election Committee, urges all members of the Class of 1969 to start thinking along these lines and become an integral part of the election tradition at Villanova.

LYNX Editor Dennis J. O'Hara hands a $25 award to Ronald Javers for the Best Work in the literary magazine in front of the society, will have Javers' name engraved on the plaque for the poem "Eliot's Vision."

Ronald Javers Wins 'Lynx' Award With 'Eliot's Vision'

Editor Dennis O'Hara announced last week that the winner of the LYNX's twenty five dollar cash prize for the best work appearing in this issue was awarded to Ronald A. Javers.

The award was given for his poem entitled "Eliot's Vision" which is a combination of the sound of Carl Sandburg with a sense of T. S. Eliot, though still original as the synthesis, Javers is a junior majoring in sociology and a regular contributor to the LYNX. Upon being awarded the prize he expressed a modest and sincere notion of acceptance and promised more contributions for the future LYNX issues.

The award was presented in conjunction with this semester's Literary Society "LYNX Award," given every semester for the work, which in the opinion of the Literary Society represents the most creative and accomplished student authored article in the magazine.

Matthew Roche, president of the society, made the presentation and placed Ronald Javers' name on the mahogany and brass plaque in the Reserve Room of the Falvey Memorial Library.

The selection of the winner was simultaneously made by the LYNX editorial board and the officers of the Literary Society. Voted a close second was Peter Vincent's play entitled "Dangling," a highly imaginative venture into the theatre of the Absurd.

The LYNX will be on sale for the remainder of this week in the Pie Shoppe and at the ramp leading to the resident's dining hall. The price remains at a quarter and, so far, sales have topped all previous records.

Next semester the LYNX will again offer twenty five dollars for the best article published and all creative literary endeavors are eligible. Submissions may be made at any time to 210 Saint Rita's Hall or may be mailed to THE LYNX in care of the University.

Retreat Dates Set For Second Semester With New Attendance

A new system of attendance will be inaugurated this year in connection with the schedule for retreats. Instead of attendance by class status only (i.e. Senior, Junior, Sophomore and Freshman class) the retreats this year will be run on a combined system of curricular as well as class status.

The schedule is set up in the following manner: on January 26 to 28, a retreat is held for Junior and Senior Engineering and C&F students, also included are all women students. The Junior and Senior Arts and Science students will have their retreat held on February 2, 3, 4, while all Sophomores will have theirs from March 2 to 4. And finally, the Freshman retreat is going to be held on April 20, 21, and 22.

Belle Air Nears Completion To Insure Early Distribution

The final touches are being added to the 1966 Belle Air, preparing it to meet the editor's December 10 deadline. An earlier deadline this year will bring the Belle Air out on April 23, earlier than any previous Villanova yearbook. Innovations to look for in the 1966 Belle Air will be a revitalized Senior section, candid photography, and a student index, all of which revolve around this year's theme of "change."

Editor-in-chief Roseanna Boylan gave a preview to the VILLANOVAN "changes" to be covered by the 1966 theme. These changes will cover the University's history from its beginning to the present time.

College to University, increase in number and type of students, increase in the diversity of faculty, the physical growth of the campus, presence and acceptance of female undergraduates, commencement at Convention Hall, and an attitude change in the students are the seven changes covered. The female change will be expressed by the cheerleaders, and the attitude change will be expressed by student interest in political clubs, Vamp, and so forth.

A revitalized Senior section is planned. Candid pictures of seniors on each page is the newest idea, with condensed history forms taking the place of repetitious activity lisings found in previous additions. No activity will be repeated if it can be placed under a broader activity listing.

New ideas in group shots will have organizations over 30 people photographed in candid scenes with a similar background. Another new innovation of Miss Boylan's is the student index.

The Index will give the student's name and the page or pages on which he appears. This would aid not only Villanova students, but any outsider seeking a particular individual's picture.

The staff working on the Belle Air with Miss Boylan this year are: Tom Sebastian, managing editor; Barry Burke, business manager; Valerie Herbstritt and Ken Hedges, Senior editors; Frank Samer, organizations editor; and Theresa Wilson, nursing editor.

Miss Boylan, commenting on this semester's work, said: "The staff would like to thank all the students and faculty members for their whole-hearted cooperation."

Fr. Costanzo was ordained in 1944, and has an A.B. degree from Georgetown University, an M.A. from Fordham University, and a Ph.D. from Fordham University.

He has given numerous invitation lectures and has an impressive list of publications for the FORDHAM LAW REVIEW, THE NEW SCHOLASTICISM, GREAT BOOK SERIES, THOUGHT, CATHOLIC MIND, CATHOLIC WORLD, JOUR-CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, among others. Blood Drive Donation Completed By Sophs

Tom Conway, president of the Sophomore Class, has announced that the class of 1968 has recently been associated with two events of a charitable nature. The first was the sponsoring of the blood drive, and second the donation of a racing shell to the University Crew team.

The recent blood drive held for the benefit of United States soldiers fighting in Viet Nam was termed "a huge success." The drive, held Monday, November 29, collected 165 pints of blood. This was the maximum amount that could be accepted by the Red Cross because of the limited equipment available. Many would-be donors were turned away.

Jack Gardner, general chairman of the blood drive, stated that the effort received both local and national attention. WCAU-TV Philadelphia, sent its cameras to the Villanova campus, and portions of the drive were taped and televised on news broadcasts that same night.

Bermuda or Books

This shortest of semesters raises many questions in the minds of students. The freshmen who have a clean slate from their high school careers will benefit most from the new schedule. But those upperclassmen who are used to the old schedule and also used to procrastination suddenly discover the semester is coming to a rapid close. Probably the only thing that saves them from insanity is the thought of that long, long vacation.

Taking a rather limited view -- since in these days of distant wars, orbiting space capsules, social upheaval, and complexity, any view focused on one campus at one time has to be limited -- it seems that an increasing concern with academic excellence has been disseminating on the University. This is a good thing but one must remember that other things are going on in this world of illusions. Does anyone ever sit down to read a book which isn't on one of their professors' reading lists? The superficial James Bond thrillers may be read but where does one find the classics of European and American literature -- stuffed away in a library somewhere, unread, gathering dust on a shelf.

Literature develops compassion and if there is anything more sorely needed in the modern world, then we would like to hear about it. The university of today needs men and women who will involve themselves in the world of tomorrow, and this involvement can be developed on the campus. This does not mean, however, that the university should be a stopping-off place after a day at the protest factory. Intellectual involvement should be the student's first concern. He then can read about and participate in those aspects of the world to which his taste and ability direct him. As T.S. Eliott said, "Teach us to care, and not to care, Teach us to sit still."

But what does all this have to do with the short semester and academic excellence? It means simply that parochial concerns combined with a non-thinking outlook on life will produce an intellectually vapid person. Those of us who walk around with blinders on throughout our college career will wake up to find the world has passed us by. When the vacation period descends upon our eager arms, we must remember to use it wisely.

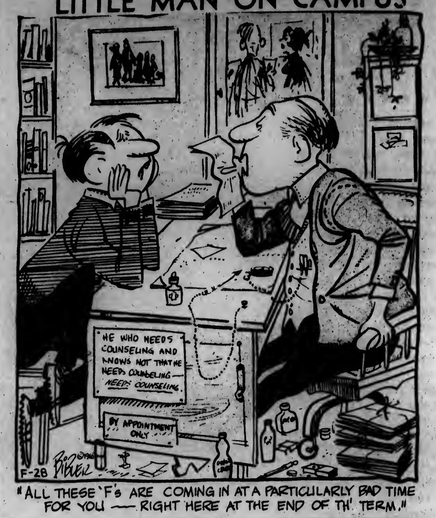
A smorgasboard and dance for the benefit of Bill Atkinson, younger brother of former Villanova football All-American Allen Atkinson, will be held Sunday, January 23, 1966 at the VFW Ballroom on Terminal Square near 69th Street in Upper Darby.



The younger Atkinson was paralyzed last winter in a tobogan accident in upstate New York where he was in an Augustinian Seminary. He has since returned to his home in Upper Darby where he is being cared for by his family.

The reason for holding the affair is to raise money for equipment needed for rehabilitation.

Because Allen was so well-known on campus, organizers of the event are hopeful that friends will help in the program by selling chances or performing other needed functions.

It is suggested that interested persons contact Mrs. Harry Carrell at FL 2-3945.

LITTLE MAN ON CAMPUS

"ALL THESE 'F's ARE COMING IN AT A PARTICULARLY BAD TIME FOR YOU — RIGHT HERE AT THE END OF TH' TERM."

Letters To The Editor

By Bob Dean

To The Editor:

I am forced to take issue with several comments made by Mike Soroka in your November 17 edition.

FIRST, I doubt very seriously that 1500 members of the Sophomore Class are against the TV experiment presently being conducted on this campus. For openers, the total enrollment in the class is closer to 1200.

Second, the "little man on the little screen" is not reading from a cue card in most instances, but from the same cards or notes he would use if he were delivering the lecture in person. The mere fact that a professor is on a television screen or in person does not effect the quality of his voice. If he is monotone, he is stuck with it. As a matter of fact, television is actually an aid to a student with a monotone teacher since the set can be turned up, thus increasing the volume of the speakers voice in a way to overcome its tonal qualities.

Some of the writer's suggestions were in jest (in poor taste in some instances) and others were quite interesting. Students such as Mr. Soroka are to be commended for their interest in the educational methods employed at this University. However, as a broadcaster, I must point out the success with which televised education has met at other Universities after it has been in use for a few years. I would hope the student body would give this medium a chance. I'm sure there was someone against language laboratories when they were in incubation, in fact someone was probably against blackboards and chalk at one time.

To The Editor:

The purpose of this letter is twofold:

We would first like to take this opportunity to thank all the Villanovans who contributed their time, energy and donations to make this year's Charity weekend the most successful in Villanova's history. In the one week concerted drive to raise money for toys and a scholarship fund for the children at St. John's Orphanage. The Missing Link Contest was the main contributor with over one thousand dollars raised.

The winners in this year's highly emotional and tightly fought Contest was the Junior class entrant Bill Fry. Bill received his trophy at the Charity mixer on Friday night which also was a financial success. After the expenses were met for the Orphans' outing on Saturday and toys and entertainment for the Orphans' party on Monday afternoon we were still able to write a check for nearly $1,000 for the Orphans' scholarship fund.

Again we would like to thank you in the name of the Orphans for making Charity Weekend so meaningful to them.

Also, we would like to thank the Junior class for their behavior at the class party at Aquarama on Saturday night. The compliments received from the Aquarama management can reasonably assure us of an excellent location for next year's Senior class party.

To The Editor:

The Villanova University Crew Club would like publicly to express its gratitude to the Class of 1968 and its officers for the funds with which we purchased a racing shell from Princeton University on Saturday, November 20.

The acquisition of a substantial amount of equipment and another successful year should be the keys toward gaining proper recognition and respect from the rowing schools of America.

The Class of 1968 has a unique and special interest in the Crew since its members formed a Freshman Crew for the 1965 season, Villanova's first year of competition, and have, through their efforts, expanded into a full squad and acquired an additional coach.

The Sophomore Class is not only to be thanked for its generosity, but must also be congratulated for having made one of the wisest investments possible towards increasing the ever-expanding realm of sport at Villanova University.

Louis Sonsogni, Secretary
Villanova Crew Club

Editor's Note: The following letter was written to Miss Patricia Kelsh, a graduate student at Villanova, in reply to her Christmas card sent in connection with Mail Call Viet Nam:

Dear Patricia:

Hi, my name is Edwin Weed. I am stationed at Bien Hoa, Viet Nam. Yesterday at mail call, us guys here received cards, and letters from people there. I picked up two myself. Not that I'm a hog, or anything like that. But I feel that each and every one of them should be answered. Some won't, which I feel should, but there isn't anything I can do. Wish there was some way I could thank each and every one that sent a card or letter personally. Myself along with the rest of the guys here are very pleased with the thought of having the people's support. It's a great thing you're doing, and it shouldn't go by with nothing said.

The note you wrote in the card was very nice. I will keep it for remembrance. Don't be too surprised if you receive a Christmas Card from me in the near future.

I'd like to thank you for myself, and for the rest of the guys in my unit.

Purple-Hearted Wildcat

Marine Corps 2nd Lieutenant Gene Donohue, Villanova Class of 1964, visited the campus last week in what was not altogether a pleasure trip. A plaster cast encased his entire left arm, he walked with a distinct and difficult limp, and his eyes bore some of the pain of his experience.

Donohue had about sixteen pieces of metal -- shrapnel and pellets -- imbedded in him. He, along with eight other members of a 60-man platoon that he was commanding, was hit by a Viet Cong land mine not far from Da Nang Naval Air Base, Viet Nam. Four of the men were killed.

"We were drawing back after an engagement with a band of V. C.," said Donohue, "and apparently a few of them got around behind us to plant the mines."

Donohue was wounded on September 25, after being in Viet Nam a little more than a month. He subsequently received the Purple Heart.

"Our group saw action the first day we got there," he said. "And it didn't take long for the delusions of 'war glory' to fade. It happens when you first see what the results of combat do to some of the men you know."

V.U. NURSES HELP

Following the explosion, Donohue was taken to a Marine medical center for initial treatment, then flown to the Philippines for surgery and to Oakland Naval Hospital, Oakland, California for care. At Oakland he said he was treated by several Villanova nurses now in the Navy.

He is travelling on official 'sick-leave' -- to his home in New York -- and stopped off on the way to speak to the Villanova NROTC Marine "option" candidates and several other groups, including the student body of nearby Valley Forge Military Academy.

During his visit to campus he was commended by Father Appicci, vice-president for student affairs and acting SGA President Frank Eck.

STUDENTS RAPPED

When questioned about the recent rash of student demonstrations against U.S. involvement in the Viet Nam war, he said "I think if they were sent over there to see what is actually going on and what the V.C. are doing, they'd change their minds."

But he did point out that the demonstrations are not happily received by the troops over there. "They hurt," he said. "Not in the sense of hurting morale -- morale is great -- but it hurts when guys your own age -- who could be over there instead of you -- complain about defending their country. A lot of them are even raising money supposedly for medical supplies for the V.C., when they know damn well that it will be used for bullets that could end up in our boys."

He indicated his pleasure about Villanova's 'Mail-Call' program. "I read about it in the Armed Forces newspaper," he said.

The long-quiet segment of American college students are getting angry at the demonstrators who burn draft cards and march in protest against this country's involvement in the Vietnam war.

The quiet majority's publicity has not been so wide as their rivals, the outraged and protesting marchers. Villanova has been in the forefront of the new movement, first with the Christmas card campaign, and now with the blood drive and "Project Paperback."

The University of Scranton opened up its blood drive to the people of the town who turned out in record numbers. The result of the two-day campaign, the "Open Veins for Viet Nam" blood donor program was a total of 1013 pints of blood donated by approximately 1300 volunteer donors. The two candidates for the post of mayor of the city showed up within half an hour of each other.

Students at St. Louis University have been circulating a petition supporting United States policy in Vietnam. Copies of the petition are to be sent to President Johnson, the United States delegation to the United Nations, and several senators. Students from Franklin and Marshall College, Lancaster, presented a similar petition to Secretary of State Dean Rusk.

MORALE BOOSTER

The list contained a total of 1080 signatures out of the enrollment of 1600 students. A different version of a morale booster was tried at Marquette University where students are signing a telegram to be sent to General W. Westmoreland in Saigon.

In one day students collected over 250 signatures in the "spontaneous project" and were hoping for at least 1,000 names by the end of the week.

The Director of the Selective Service at the University of Delaware threatened to revoke student deferments of young men who take part in antiwar demonstrations. Lt. Col. Clifford E. Hall reported that his headquarters is "running down these people as their names appear in the papers. When they belong to us, we make a note in our files."

Student reaction to the "publish or perish" scandal has been to ask college administrations for a vote in teacher retentions. Primarily, this has taken the form of teacher rating campaigns. The controversy was initiated by the ouster of Dr. Woodrow Wilson Sayre from his post for not publishing enough quality material for journals, etc.

SUPERIOR STUDENTS JUDGE

The next professor to "get the axe" was Dr. Richard J. Berstein who was denied tenure, despite general student opinion that he was an excellent teacher. Yale's president, Kingman Brewster, Jr. is giving superior students a chance to judge their teacher before tenure is awarded.

The Associate Dean of Arts and Sciences at Penn announced that a committee currently is studying proposals for student evaluation of teaching. Dr. Welch commented, "This is a delicate matter, but if we ask the students the right questions, they'll tell us how well we're teaching."

The Academic affairs Committee of the Villanova SGA currently is investigating a faculty rating system for the campus. This is also a major objective of the Student Council of Catholic U. The City College of New York has instituted a teacher evaluation program recently.

CONFIDENTIAL GUIDE

Some schools accomplish the teacher ratings by course guides published by the newspaper of the college or university. THE DAILY PENNSYLVANIAN has published a course guide for the past nine years. The Harvard CRIMSON published what it labels a "confidential guide." and Yale also prints a guide each year.

Other miscellaneous reports from colleges state that ... THE LORD OF THE RINGS replaced LORD OF THE FLIES as popular college reading at Catholic U. ...

a quotation by Milton overhead outside of LaSalle's Cafeteria, "The hungry sheep look up and are not fed." ... a description read of the University of Nevada football team, "When the going gets tough ... the tough get going."

Fordham College has plans to grant the bachelor of arts degree to students who are 19 years old, after seven years in grammar school and six in college and high school ... coeds will be auctioned off to do services for men at the University of Delaware on Slave Day. The girls will wash and iron shirts, type papers, shine shoes and mend - all this to raise money for scholarships. Are there any V.U. nurses willing to volunteer their services? ... Well, that's all for now ...

College Training Grounds

By Bill McCloskey

Student Government meetings as filled with parliamentary politics as the last two have always brought out criticism from those who object to the Congress floor being used as a political spawning grounds.

This is a view with which I must disagree.

Jeff Radowich's presentations of the Presidential Disability motion during the last month's Congress and Senate meetings have been nothing short of beautiful, because they have been well-thought-out. Compounded with Brenden Brett's well-planned counter motion it was educational to the hilt.

While academic excellence is pushed to the forefront year after year, I cannot agree with those who do not see extra-curriculars as a meaningful extension to the classroom.

When employers hire, they look at what you have done in the past.

If they are looking for a researcher or someone to fill a similar position they will look to someone who has demonstrated excellence in the academic world.

By the same token, when an employer is seeking a technician of some sort he will look more favorably upon someone with experience in whatever technique he needs. This holds true for newsmen, radio announcers, and lawyers to name just a few.

"Experience is the best teacher" runs the old adage, and what better time to gain meaningful experience than while in college. For most undergraduates, there is little financial obligation beyond the basic tuition, room and board and for many this is taken care of by family or scholarship.

For those with little need to make large sums of money, activities, be they curricular, extra-curricular, or employment, should be of such a nature that they will be beneficial to the person's position in the job market upon graduation.

EXPERIENCE NEEDED

For a student, one of the most frustrating tasks is looking through the employment opportunities columns in trade journals or newspapers and seeing the "experience neccessary" line in so many of them.

Yet, what better and cheaper experience is there than participating in the extra-curriculars which Villanova offers.

Journalists, broadcasters, and even potential lawyers and politicians can make many of their basic mistakes while attempting to operate the VILLANOVAN, WWVU or the SGA. A slip here means nowhere near as much as it would on one's first job. A great deal can be learned from one's mistakes.

There are many Villanova students who have a head start on their class when they graduate because they have taken advantage of the entire integrated program of education here. It is one that recognizes the educational value of extra-curricular activities.

TRAINING GROUNDS

Being the most important activity on campus, the SGA should therefore be the prime training grounds. Through this organization many future policy makers are learning techniques of management they will be able to apply in later life.

Anyone who realizes this cannot help but sit back and truly enjoy a debate between Brenden Brett and Jeff Radowich, knowing full well that it is people like these, with experiences such as this, who will leave their peers far behind in the world beyond Villanova, because they have taken full advantage of ALL that Villanova has offered them.

THE BLUEBIRD OF HAPPINESS HAS FLOWN THE COOP

Can education bring happiness?

This is a question that in recent years has caused much lively debate and several hundred stabbings among American college professors. Some contend that if a student's intellect is sufficiently aroused, happiness will automatically follow. Others say that to concentrate on the intellect and ignore the rest of the personality can only lead to misery.

I myself favor the second view, and I offer in evidence the well-known case of Knut Fusco.

Knut, a forestry major, never got anything less than a straight "A," was awarded his B.T. (Bachelor of Trees) in only two years, his M.S.B. (Master of Sap and Bark) in only three, and his D.B.C. (Doctor of Blight and Cutworms) in only four.

Academic glory was his. His intellect was the envy of every intellect fan on campus. But was he happy? The answer, alas, was no. Knut—he knew not why—was miserable; so miserable, in fact, that one day while walking across campus, he was suddenly so overcome with melancholy that he flung himself, weeping, upon the statue of the Founder.

By and by, a liberal arts coed named Nikki Sigafoos came by with her Barby doll. She noted Knut's condition. "How come you're so unhappy, hey?" said Nikki.

"Suppose you tell me, you dumb old liberal arts major," replied Knut peevishly.

"All right, I will," said Nikki. "You are unhappy for two reasons. First, because you have been so busy stuffing your intellect that you have gone and starved your psyche. I've got nothing against learning, mind you, but a person oughtn't to neglect the pleasant gentle amenities of life—the fun things. Have you, for instance, ever been to a dance?"

". . . and then to a justice of the peace."

Knut shook his head.

"Have you ever watched a sunset? Written a poem? Shaved with a Personna Stainless Steel Blade?"

Knut shook his head.

"Well, we'll fix that right now," said Nikki, and gave him a razor, a Personna Stainless Steel Blade, and a can of Burma Shave.

Knut lathered with the Burma Shave and shaved with the Personna and for the first time in many long years he smiled. He smiled and then he laughed—peal after peal of reverberating joy. "Wow-dow!" he cried. "What a shave! Does Personna come in injector style, too?"

"It does," said Nikki.

"Gloriosky!" cried Knut. "And does Burma Shave come in menthol, too?"

"It does," said Nikki.

"Huzzah!" cried Knut. "Now that I have found Personna and Burma Shave I will never have another unhappy day."

"Hold!" said Nikki. "Personna and Burma Shave alone will not solve your problem—only half of it. Remember I said there were two things making you unhappy?"

"Oh, yeah," said Knut. "What's the other one?"

"How long have you had that bear trap on your foot?" said Nikki.

"I stepped on it during a field trip in my freshman year," said Knut. "I keep meaning to have it taken off."

"Allow me," said Nikki and removed it.

"Land's sakes, what a relief!" said Knut, now totally happy, and took Nikki's hand and led her to a Personna vendor and then to a justice of the peace.

Today Knut is a perfectly fulfilled man, both intellectwise and personalitywise. He lives in a charming split-level house with Nikki and their 17 children and he rises steadily in the forestry game. Only last month, in fact, he became Consultant on Sawdust to the American Butchers Guild, he was named an Honorary Sequoia by the park commissioner of Las Vegas, and he published a best-selling book called I Was a Slippery Elm for the FBI.

Statue of Buddhist Deity Now Resides In Phila. Art Museum

A statute of the Buddhist diety Avalokitesvara, unique in the nation, has been acquired by the Philadelphia Museum of Art.

The 500-pound statue, standing six feet, eight inches tall, was found in the Cambodian jungle north of the ancient ruins of the great stone city of Angkor.

Jean Gordon Lee, Curator of Far Eastern Art at the Museum, said the gray sandstone statue was carved in the mid-seventh century, some 200 years earlier than the works uncovered by archaeologists at Angkor.

Repared, it stands in the Museum's Recent Acquisitions Gallery. The galery is located to the right of the west entrance to the Museum.

Dr. Evan H. Turner, Director of the Museum, said the figure is "the only one of its kind and quality in the United States.

"It is unquestionably one of the most important objects in the Museum's large collection of Oriental art and will contribute significantly to Philadelphia's fame as one of the leading centers for Oriental studies. Such pre-Khmer art is virtually unknown in the United States."

The Museum also has on display a head of Buddha found in the Angkor ruins. It is in the Far Eastern Wing on the second floor of the Museum.

The 63rd National Gold Medal exhibitions of the building arts will be an added January feature at the Philadelphia Civic Center's Commercial Museum, 34th Street and Convention Ave. It is in conjunction with the previously announced presentation of "Archi-

Social, Cultural Affairs Dot 2nd Semester Scenery

The major events of the coming semester present an impressive aggregate of lectures, dinner dances and concerts, and other special events.

The semester opens up with Pi Theta Chi sorority annual Dinner Dance. The dance is open to all the members of the Sorority and their respective dates on Saturday, February 5. This will be followed on Monday, February 7, by the "Reincarnated Mark Twain," George-William Smith, who assumes the author's character in his performance.

February will be rounded out with the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra on February 11 conducted by George Szell, and the Sixth Annual Intercollegiate Jazz Festival to be held on February 25 and 26 featuring the best and the latest talent in the collegiate jazz field. Both events will take place in the Field House.

March opens with the annue' Shamokinaki Mission Dance, on March 11, which in the last few years has proved a success both financially for the Augustinian foreign missions and socially, for the attending crowds.

The Singing City Choir, a nationally prominent group, making its second appearance on the campus will be accompanied by an added attraction when they appear March 12. The world renowned soprano, Anna Moffa, will appear with the group.

Also making a second appearance will be the well-known economist and foreign affairs expert, Barbara Ward speaking March 24 on "Organizing the World Economy."

Senior Weekend closes out the month on March 25 and 26 with a concert and Dinner Dance.

FACULTY COMMENT

In a letter of transmittal, Father Driscoll called for "further observations and comments on the part of the faculty."

In relation to the student, the report states, "the student must . . . adjust his learning habits to insure getting the learning process." The two-page report, preliminary in nature, points out that the use of inter-com systems, not presently in use here, increases student participation in the learning process.

The study also acknowledges the fact that increased preparation on the part of the teacher is necessary for such teaching.

"The use of video tapes poses some problems with respect to the rights of the institution and the rights of the instructor in the subsequent use of these tapes," according to the findings.

The committee recommendations include a call for a one year study "to evaluate equipment, personnel procedures and identification of courses for future presentation on Educational Television.

There are five members on the committee, in addition to Dr. Amelotti. They are: Theresa Christian, Nursing Department; James J. Coyle, Mechanical Engineering; George Harris, Education; James J. Kim, C&F, and William Langan, Biology.

There has been no formal student or SGA study of the television system.

Reviews I and II

By Gene FitzMaurice

In the past, many of the LYNX'S critics have felt that the Literary Edition suffered from the lack of a unifying theme. There need be no such theme, for each creation must stand on its own. However, this issue has shown that an attempt at a unifying theme can seriously damage the publication.

A larger issue than most, it presents several short stories, almost all of which seem concerned only with telling us that in our society, the victor does indeed belong to the spoils. Charles Benore in the "Cloak of Necessity" seems to be calling for someone to understand the hopeless screams of a society which he never made, and must therefore accept as a norm, looking only to futility and defeat as his end reward. It will fall on deaf ears.

Readers must, however, be grateful to Fred Hetzler for telling us that life can be cruel. Ronald Javers manages to break the spell of frustration with a highly amusing tale of Everyman finding an emergency exit from a burning theatre. The only other bright spot was Ralph Mattise's Ode to a Villanovan.

Jeff Radowich appears three times: once to comment on his own reading habits; the second to comment on another's writing habits; the third in verse. With regard to this selection, it is suggested that being a witty man, he leave the grassy poesy to others.

E. Hindle and Matt Wartell provided two stories on childhood which gave promise of remembering what all of us seem to forget too soon, yet both stories failed to provide any insights into the most unique mind in the world.

The other work of criticism by John Albright has seven early draft pages on French Existential writings and leads me to ask the author what Sarte man he is. It must be questioned as to whether or not such material properly belongs in the LYNX.

As does the hopefully humorous "Notes on Contributor" section. This serves no purpose except to bring the aims of the magazine down to its level of quality.

The works of P. J. Vincent were seriously considered for the prize which eventually went to Ron Javers' Eliot's Vision, the most overrated piece in the edition.

The poetry of Louis Lembo sought only to sneak past the censor, while the poem on e.e. cummings stood alone for its humor and originality.

PLAYBOX

Not all the bombs are in Saigon. This was proven to me at the Playbox last Friday night at the first on-campus production of Pirandello's AS YOU DESIRE ME. I have always thought there was a song title there.

The players completely missed the philosophic overtones of the play and acted as if they were unaware of the audience, such a good time was the troupe having.

Elaine Allssandroni pouted her way through the undemanding role of Mop. Bernie de Koven failed to arouse any sympathy in the first act and thoroughly hammed his way through the third as a devil's advocate.

The major role, that of the Strange Lady, went to Sandra Salvana who covered the mile in two hours, twelve minutes as she constantly moved around the stage in a performance that will live for the ages (of five, six and seven).

Tom Fennessey, awaiting the remake of "Bernadine," did right by his courtesy tux. Paul Norton looked embarrassed to be in the production. He cannot be blamed as his creation of a world wise but not yet weary old man was excellent (except for the fact that he is the only Italian I know with a Cambridge accent).

Carolyn Nicosia walked through the role of Lena without stopping to act. This was compensated for by Kenneth Resinski, dapper in his Sears Quadrobe, who blew his way through in preparation for his next part, the lead in a dramatic history of overacting.

Two words of praise: Brian Morgan was so outrageously bad as the janitor that his comic relief had the desired effect, while Bonnie Lucas, as a madly smiling woman insane, made everyone wonder why women have never before done Lon Chaney roles.

I will not be responsible for anyone not having a Merry Christmas or a Happy New Year.

Frosh Trounce Scranton; 76-27

By Jerry Bruderle

Villanova's much heralded freshmen basketball team put on a sparkling performance in the Field House last Thursday by trouncing Scranton 76-27 in the opening game of the season.

Scranton was never in the game as the Villanova defense forced the Purple Royals into numerous ball-handling errors. Scranton had planned to simply hold onto the ball and not let the taller and more talented Wildkittens run up the score.

In fact, the Scranton coach told his players before the game, "I don't care if the score is only four-nothing at halftime, we're going to hold the ball." Actually the game was hardly a minute old before it was 4-0, and the game quickly got out of hand.

Johnny Jones, a six-three product of Pompano Beach, Florida, was high man for Villanova with 25 points -- only two less than the entire Scranton team. Most of his shots were scored from in close to the basket, and many of them came on fast break passes from guard Frank Gillen.

Gillen, although he scored only seven points, really had the 'Cats moving with his sharp playmaking and numerous blind side passes. And as the defense fell back on his fast breaks expecting the passes, Gillen was quick enough to drive in and score the easy layup. Gillen and Bob Melchionni were constantly stealing the ball from Scranton before the visitors could set up their stall as they planned.

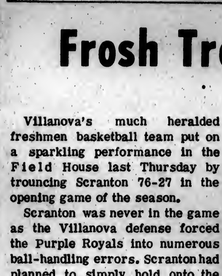
Scranton took too many bad shots, many of which 6-7 Jim McIntosh either blocked or grabbed off the backboard. At the other end of the court McIntosh stuffed in stray Villanova shots and finished with nine points.

In addition, Frank McCall, George May and John Price all showed flashes of brilliance as Coach Jack Devine shuttled his players in and out. Both McCall and May rebounded well and scored 11 and six respectively. The six-three Price tallied eight points and displayed a fluid jump shot in which he waits until the last possible second before releasing the ball. Melchionni, who played in the corner most of the time, chipped in with ten.

Jim McIntosh snags a rebound in last Thursday's romp over the Scranton Frosh.

Beat the Clock

By John DiGennaro

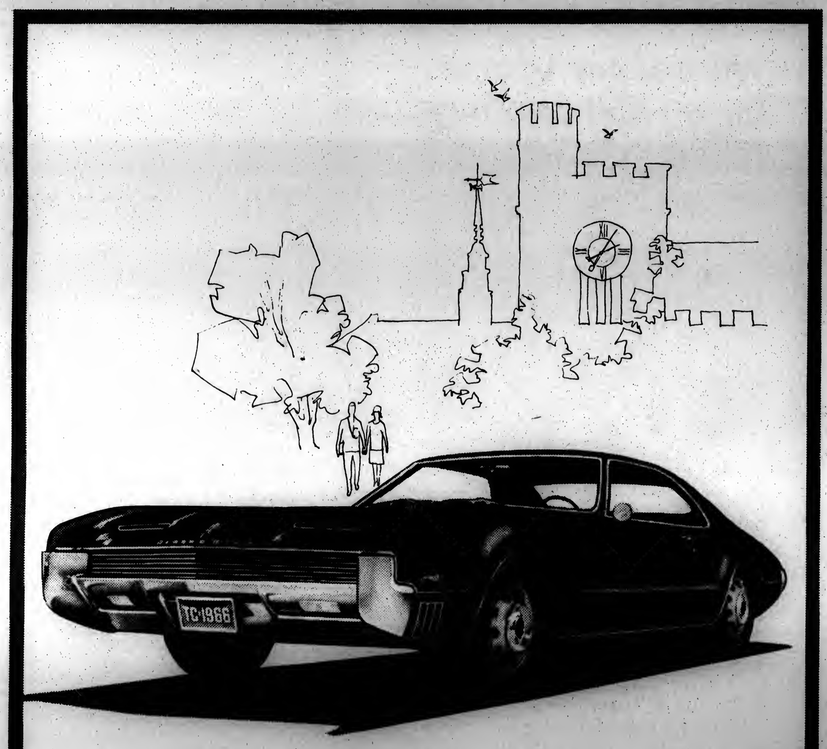


The big hand on the clock shows just 1:23 remaining in the ball game. Both teams are huddled in front of their respective benches toweling themselves as best they can. The two coaches, true to the spirit of the moment, are frantically gyrating, and trying to cram a week of ideas into a thirty second impromptu.

The crowd of some 15,000 stirs restlessly, then breaks into a thunderous roar as the teams come back onto the court. Villanova, after its last time out, sets up its inbounds play. The ref hands the ball to Bill Melchionni, who in turn passes in to Joe Crews. Frank Gaidjunas comes up to a high post, Bernie Schaffer and Terry McGuire jockey for position along the baseline. The big hand on the clock has passed due north for the last time.

The scoreboard shows the 'Cats down by a point as Melchionni dribbles deliberately deep in the back court. It's the little hand on the clock now doing all the work, as it approaches the 20 second mark. Melchionni passes in, an outstretched hand intercepts, the ball trickles out of bounds.

Inbounds Villanova -- to Schaffer, back out to Melchionni behind Crew's pick, he jumps, lets fly, the ball starts its arc toward the basket.



To be contined Dec. 27, 28, and 30. Don't miss it.

Swimmers Drop Opener to Maryland; Good Year Still in the Making

By Bob McIntyre

After the three most successful seasons in their history, Villanova's varsity and freshmen swimming teams give evidence of maintaining the high standards of their recent accomplishments and even surpassing them in the future.

Head coach Ed Geisz and assistant Jack Lumsden guided the Wildcats to an 8-4 mark last season and a 17th place finish in the NCAA championships. This year's team should do much better.

Geisz is now in his 13th year at Villanova and was singularly honored this past spring and summer when he was selected by the State Department to conduct a swimming program in Bagdad, Iraq from April through June.

During Geisz' reign as head coach the Wildcats have become a national power in swimming, finishing in the top 20 in the past three NCAA championships. Geisz has also developed more than a dozen All-Americans in the past four years.

Lumsden is now in his ninth year at Villanova as assistant varsity coach. He is head coach of the freshmen team and is also Assistant Intramural Program Director under Ed Geisz.

The Assistant is a master at manipulating lineup and a strong advocate of interval-type (stresses form and hard work) training.

Three of the main reasons for the optimism are All-Americans Ray Donnelly and Joe Panell and soph Mike Fitzmaurice. This trio can hold its own in any competition.

Captain Donnelly is an outstanding leader and should have another great year. Panell was a pleasant surprise last year, gaining All-American honors as a soph, and should be even better this season. Fitzmaurice rewrote the frosh record book. He has great natural ability and unlimited potential.

Ray Donnelly

Behind that trio are other excellent swimmers that give the Wildcats better balance and depth than they've had in recent years.

Bill Livingood is a top backstroker, while Ken Herr is a talented breaststroker. John Doherty will back up Livingood, with John Hoffman behind Herr.

The diving duo of Bob Beise and Bill Bohrmann can match any in the East and figure to be prominent in title meets.

Chip Friday is the top fly man on the squad and freestyler Richie Lamb has been coming along well in the sprint and distance events. Paul Hornsleth shows promise in the individual medley, while Frank Musico and Ed Ritta have the potential to come along to help in the sprints and relays.

The schedule is the toughest in Villanova history and easily the finest home slate ever with the likes of Yale, Army, Princeton, Maryland, Rutgers and West Chester visiting the Main Line Pool.

Despite this impressive array of opponents, Geisz and Lumsden are confident that Villanova will continue to climb the swimming ladder and, with another excellent crop of frosh swimmers on hand, look forward to a continuance of swimming excellence on the Main Line.

MARYLAND MEET

On Friday afternoon, the terps of Maryland invaded Villanova's Swimming pool. The nationally acclaimed team from College Park won the meet by an impressive but deceiving 66-29 score.

Every race was hotly contested and each winner won by a very slim margin and had the judges on their toes all afternoon. Villanova won three out of the ten events and set two records in their drive to upset the big Maryland team.

Mike Fitzmaurice, broke the pool record when he splashed to victory in the 200 yard freestyle in the time of 1:45.8. He soundly beat the old record of 1:47.8, set by last year's Captain and All-American, Rick Girdler. Mike also won the 100 yard freestyle in 48:.8.

The second record of the day was turned in by Bill Livingood in the difficult backstroke in the School record time of 2:03.6.

On Saturday, Villanova's dejected mermen went to NYU to compete in the Eastern Collegiate Swimming Association Meet. The Cats rebounded from their defeat of the day before and finished second to guess who?, Maryland. Rutgers was third, NYU fourth, followed by the United States Merchant Marine Academy.

Villanova set a new Association record in the popular 400 yard medley relay when they were clocked in 3:46.2 The team was made up of Bill Livingood, Ken Herr, Ray Donnelly (Captain), and Mike Fitzmaurice.

On Wednesday, December 8, the Wildcats host, Catholic University at 4:00 p.m. and the Freshmen go after their first victory at 2:00 p.m.

We set out to ruin some ball bearings and failed successfully

The Bell System has many small, automatic telephone offices around the country. The equipment in them could operate unattended for ten years or so, but for a problem.

The many electric motors in those offices needed lubrication at least once a year. Heat from the motors dried up the bearing oils, thus entailing costly annual maintenance.

To stamp out this problem, many tests were conducted at Bell Telephone Laboratories. Lubricant engineer George H. Kitchen decided to do a basic experiment that would provide a motor with the worst possible conditions. He deliberately set out to ruin some ball bearings by smearing them with an icky guck called molybdenum disulfide (MoS_2).

Swock! This solid lubricant, used a certain way, actually increased the life expectancy of the ball bearings by a factor of ten! Now the motors can run for at least a decade without lubrication.

We've learned from our "failures." Our aim: investigate everything.

The only experiment that can really be said to "fail" is the one that is never tried.

'Cats Take 1st From Scranton; Lose to Providence 69-59

By Jack McGarvey

The Wildcat basketballers opened their season on December 2 with an impressive 93-55 victory over Scranton University. Playing before a near capacity crowd in the Field House, the Cats made good on 41 of 87 shots for a percentage of 47.2.

Scranton shot only 35.8 percent. Senior captain, Bill Melchionni, led all scorers with 36 points, a career high for the 6-1 All-American candidate.

Following a 76-27 victory for the Villanova freshmen, the Varsity starting five of Melchionni, Schaffer, McGuire, Livers, and Crews controlled the tap-off and were never headed. An aggressive defense prevented Scranton from scoring a field goal the first 8:33, and held them to only one bucket in the first 14 minutes. By that time it was 32-6 and the Wildcat cagers were on their way to victory. Many times during the game the Villanova defense forced the Royals to throw the ball away, and the numerous substitutions for Scranton did not help their situation any.

Bernie Schaffer taps off the 1665-66 campaign against Scranton.

With Schaffer and Livers controlling the boards and blocking shots, and Melchionni shooting for 22 points, Villanova piled up a 49-21 point half-time lead over the visiting Scranton team. Villanova controlled the second half tap and continued to outscore the Royals, this time, however, by only a 44-34 margin.

Once again rugged rebounding, aggressive defense, and deadly shooting paced the Wildcat attack. Schaffer and McGuire each grabbed nine rebounds to enable the Cats to edge Scranton 53-42 in that department. Joining Melchionni in double figures were Crews with 11 points, Schaffer with 12, and Livers with 13 points.

COHESION NOTED

Early in the contest it looked as though the V.U. offense would bog down and depend too much on their captain. However, as the game progressed, the cohesion and patterns of the team became more and more noticeable.

Nevertheless, Melchionni showed what it takes to be a real All-American. In the first half his 22 points were enough to outscore the entire Scranton team. His fine all-around play powered the Cat attack right up until he left the game with 4:13 remaining on the clock.

Short Shots: Sub Joe Turk was missing from the Wildcat bench. In a practice session, he fractured a bone in his wrist. Coach Kraft replaced sophs Steve Krines and Jim Stinger on the roster.

PROVIDENCE

The Wildcats travelled to Providence for their second game of the season before a capacity crowd of 3400. Providence was held at bay for 25 minutes before pentrating a tough Villanova defense for a 69-59 victory.

The Wildcats put together a combination zone defense that curbed Providence's All-American guard Jim Walker, but they were unable to muster enough scoring punch to give Bill Melchionni the offensive help he needed.

Shooting a poor 23 for 62 for 37 percent while the Friars of Providence were sinking 43 percent, the Cats were able to make a game of it up until the last 12 minutes when the Friars went into a half-court zone press. Here, Villanova managed to lose the ball several times on steals and were charged with numerous fouls.

Providence turned these miscues into badly needed points to gain an 11 point lead. Meanwhile, Terry McGuire, a 15 point contributor with 10 rebounds, was the only Wildcat to score for a ten-minute period, hitting on 10 straight points.

Providence took control of the boards from the outset and this dominance gave them a 41-26 edge in rebounding. But for a Villanova team considered outclassed, it was a surprising performance. Kevin Traynor, replacing sophomore Joe Crews early in the game, took some of the pressure off Melchionni and chipped in with nine points before fouling out with 2:52 left to play.

Terry McGuire turned in the best performance of his career, and Bernie Schaffer played a typical steady game, scoring 12 points to match his total from the Scranton game.

However, Melchionni's cold hand in the second half (3 for 10) and the inability of the rest of the Cat team to compensate proved to be the downfall of the Blue and White, as they failed to overcome a Providence 32-28 first half lead.

Billy "Cyclops" Melchionni drives for two in last Thursday's 93-55 victory over Scranton.

Commodores Take Title; Commuters 2nd, DPM 3rd

By Steve Kyne

The intramural football program, which has been assessed as one of the most successful in recent years, came to a close last week with the final four games.

In the finals, The Commuters met The Commodores, captained by Tim Coyle, in what was expcted to be a real battle for the number one spot. The Commuters' cause was seriously hampered when their quarterback, Jim Johnston, was ejected for arguing too vociferously on a controversial call by the officials and The Commodores went on to win by two touchdowns.

The stage had been set for the finals during the previous week when the last four teams met to decide who should play for the championship. On Wednesday, DPM met The Yim Yams and played to a tie. They met again the following day and DPM pulled out a real squeeker by scoring in the last 20 seconds on a controversial 40 yard pass play from DiGennaro to Burns. This pitted DPM against The Commuters for the right to meet The Commodores who had been given a bye. The contest the next afternoon was a hard fought battle all the way and it looked as if there was another deadlock in the making as John DiGennaro skirted around end to hit paydirt and even the score at six all.

Unfortunately for DPM there was a flag on the play and the touchdown was nullified giving The Commuters a six to nothing win and second place in the standings.

As the basketball season begins, with a record number of teams taking the court, praise should be given to Jim Moran and his staff for their excellent work in scheduling and officiating.

Maff's Musings

By Joe Maffongelli

Now that a tragic season has been committed to the annals of Villanova football history, many people have busied themselves with the ever popular activity of post season quarterbacking. It seems that general opinion points to a lack of coaching efficiency on the Main Line. Of course, we never heard any outspoken words of praise for this same gentleman during the past four winning campaigns, two of which were highlighted by bowl appearances. Rather we just listen to appraisals of the head coach which are based on this one unfortunate season.

Throughout the speculation on the ability of the VU grid mentor, which began in earnest last September with the 9-7 loss to Toledo, one man chose to remain silent. Since this one man is the president of the university his silence was a vital cog in the mechanics of winning football. But Father President Flaherty did finally express his feelings; and he has since joined the ranks of the criticized in many corners. It is our opinion that much of the blame for this fall's grid activities has been pointed in the wrong direction. We tend to agree with Father Flaherty that one does not pass judgment on a coach which is based on a single season. The fact that the president is more interested in the academic life of the athlete than the extra-curricular should be an inspiration to many of the post season quarterbacks. It should also enlighten the athletes themselves.

Regarding the actual play of the football team itself, there is no doubt that it was often very discouraging. This criticism does not apply to all, but each athlete realizes whether or not he gave his all to the sport. Surely a sophomore or junior in college cannot blame his coach because he didn't execute a block or tackle correctly. The coach cannot play the game; and these are fundamentals which should be acquired in high school. Maybe the player should rather pick anyone at random to blame.

On the brighter side, the play of such as captain Tom Brown, Jerry Strid, Dave Connell, Don Koshlap, and Joe Santomauro was inspirational in their last collegiate game.

Jazz Week Proclaimed

Governor William W. Scranton has designated the week of February 20 "Jazz Week" in Pennsylvania, in honor of the Sixth Annual Villanova University Intercollegiate Jazz Festival, scheduled for Friday and Saturday, February 25 & 26 at the school on Philadelphia's Main Line.

As pointed out by the Governor in his proclamation, "Jazz enthusiasts from all over America will focus their attention on Villanova University during the Intercollegiate Jazz Festival."

Twenty-four acts, from vocalists to 20 piece bands will perform during the two day event. Represented are groups not only from the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania but from Ohio, Connecticut, Texas, Michigan, Massachusetts, New York, Florida, and Georgia.

To further quote the Governor's declaration, "The growing success of the Festival each year indicates the increasing popularity of jazz, and the desire of students to develop, perfect and share their proficiency in the art form."

"Pennsylvanians can be proud of the many contributions by Pennsylvania jazz artists to this important segment of American music," continued Mr. Scranton.

Among the notables to be present when IJF gets underway Friday afternoon at 2 is Stan Kenton, leader of the Los Angeles Neophonic Orchestra. He will be joined on the judging panel by Hal Cook, publisher of BILLBOARD Magazine; DOWNBEAT's Associate Editor, Dan Morgenstern; Bob Share, Administrator of Boston's Berklee School of Music; and John Hammond, of the Columbia Record Company.

Final sessions of IJF '66 are scheduled for Saturday evening and will be recorded by the American Broadcasting Company (ABC) Radio Network for future playback.

Freind Returns to SGA Helm New Cabinet Assumes Role

By Bill McCloskey

After a review of the records by the administration, Steve Freind was allowed to return to the helm of the Student Government Association.

In taking office, Freind named three vice-presidents. Frank Eck has returned to his seat in the congress with a full vote as resident representative from the Commerce and Finance seniors.

In Freind's first administration, Eck had been vice-president for Educational Affairs. Prentiss Q. Yancey, took over the post in Eck's absence. Yancey also returns to the floor of the congress with a half vote.

Taking over the position is Brenden Brett, a junior with a full vote on the Congress floor.

John Graziano remains as Vice-President for Student Government.

Bob Dean returns to the cabinet as Vice-President for Student Affairs.

CHANGING THE GUARD

There were several other appointments: Social Affairs Chairman Abe Hobson for Andy Donohue who resigned due to part-time employment; Dick Behrens replaces Jeff Radowich as parliamentarian who maintains his chairmanship of the public relations committee. Behrens will also be chairman of the Student Activities committee replacing Brett.

Steve Freind

Gene FitzMaurice takes over for Leo Carroll who was removed from the office of chairman for Religious Affairs. Rick Galli moves into the academic affairs committee chairmanship for Frank Samer who becomes the University's representative to the Associated Student Governments. Dave Banmiller had asked to be relieved of his representative's post so he may devote more time to the presidency of ASGUSA.

Ed Grey takes over Cultural Affairs. Karen Christiansen is now in charge of the tutor program.

Although the move was expected by insiders as soon as Freind announced a 3.56 average for the Fall semester Freind was not officially notified until January 6 when he was told of a memo from Rev. Robert Welsh, OSA dean of the school of Arts and Sciences. The memo informed Father Ryan of Freind's eligibility to participate in extra-curricular activities.

The meeting took place in the Dean of Student Activities office.

ECK DISAPPOINTED

Eck, Although disappointed by the loss of his two previous posts, says he will continue to work for the congress and the student body.

"If Steve can get something done, then all well and good," said Eck.

Congressman Scheuer Talks To Political Union Monday

Congressman James H. Scheuer of New York will address a debate meeting of the Villanova Political Union on Monday (January 31) evening on the subject of the Poverty Program. The meeting, which is open to the public, will be held in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall on the University Campus at 7:30 p.m.

Scheuer, a first-term Democrat, won office by upsetting the candidate of the regular Democratic organization in his Bronx congressional district. In the House Democratic Study Group, an organization of freshman legislators, he has specialized in economic problems. He is a member of the House Education and Labor Committee.

A graduate of Swarthmore College and Columbia Law School, Scheuer, who also has a degree in industrial administration from Harvard's Graduate School of Business Administration, is also active in real estate. He has developed residential communities in eight cities under the Federal Urban Renewal Program.

He has been a delegate to four United Nations Conferences on housing, urban problems and human rights. He is president of the Citizens' Housing and Planning Council of New York City.

Scheuer is an active supporter of President Johnson's Poverty Program, a program that is coming under increasing fire from the Republican Party. Sargent Shriver, head of the Program, has just resigned his job as head of the Peace Corps in order to devote his full time to the Poverty Program.

The Debate resolution, which the Union's Liberal, Moderate and Conservative parties will debate, is: Resolved, This House supports substantial expansion of President Johnson's Poverty Program.

Multi-Million Dollar Addition to Library To Be Constructed

Plans were announced during the vacation for the construction of a multi-million dollar addition to the Falvey Memorial Library at Villanova University. Work will begin sometime during the year.

The present library was built in 1948 when Villanova had a student body of less than 3000. Today, the University's overall enrollment numbers nearly 8000. Course offerings have increased and a full scale graduate program, which now includes a Doctoral curriculum, has been introduced.

The new structure will increase the size of the building three-fold and should serve the school's needs for the foreseeable future.

The erection of the library addition is part of the University's long range Development Program which has seen the school nearly triple in size since the early 1950's.

The Library is named for the late Rev. Daniel P. Falvey, OSA, who prior to his death in 1962, had served as Librarian for nearly twenty five years. The Rev. Louis A. Rongione, OSA, was named to the post after Father Falvey's death and is the present Librarian.

The present library will accommodate 300,000 volumes.

New Library Fund Campaign Prompts Grants of $700,000

Two grants totaling more than $700,000 have been allocated to Villanova University in response to a special fund campaign inaugurated this week to offset the cost of a 2.5 million dollar addition to the Falvey Memorial Library.

Announcement of the two grants was made today by the Very Rev. Joseph A. Flaherty, OSA, University President. Father Flaherty disclosed that the Federal government had indicated its approval of a grant for $661,000 and the Philadelphia Electric Co. has pledged $50,000 over a five year period.

Plans for the six month fund campaign were made last Monday during a meeting of the University's Development Council. The Council is made up of University officials and a group of prominent Philadelphia area business and industrial leaders.

Villanova's President called the swift reaction to the newly launched drive "a gratifying acknowledgment of our critical needs."

"Approval of the Federal grant is clear evidence of the government's interest in higher education" he said, "and the Philadelphia Electric Co. continues to prove itself a pace setter in corporate support of private education." "We hope" the President continued, "this response will stimulate incentive among other corporations, foundations, alumni, parents and friends to offer their financial help in the months ahead."

Villanova is now the largest private University in the State of Pennsylvania receiving no part of its operating income from taxes. Its library facilities are heavily overburdened and the need for the addition-which will triple the size of the present structure-is acute.

Rev. William E. Farrell, OSA, Vice President for Development will co-ordinate the library fund drive which will be conducted within the framework of the school's overall twenty year development program begun in 1954.

A special campaign committee has been formed consisting of faculty members, parents of students, alumni, administration officials, members of the Development Council and of the Advisory Board.

Cleveland Orchestra to Play Field House on February 11

The Cleveland Orchestra, under the direction of George Szell, will present a concert in the Villanova Field House on Friday, February 11 at 8:15 p.m.

The Cleveland concert marks the resumption of the University's current concert-lecture series which was interrupted by the semester recess in December and January. The series is sponsored by the Student Government Association and the Villanova Arts Forum.

Consistent with other presentations, the Cleveland Orchestra Concert will be open to the public. Villanova Field House audiences in the past two years have heard such artists as Leopold Stokowski and the American Symphony; Rise Stevens; the United States Marine Band; Mantovani and others.

For the Cleveland Orchestra, it will be their first appearance in the Philadelphia area in four years. Their last local appearance was at the Philadelphia Academy of Music in February of 1962. Prior to that the orchestra visited Philadelphia in 1953.

Last spring the Cleveland Orchestra had a triumphant tour in Scandinavia and Western Europe under the sponsorship of the U.S. State Department. The Orchestra was founded in 1918.

The judicious balance of classic, romantic and contemporary music in the repertoire of the Cleveland Orchestra, performed with rare excellence, has won the praise of many critics.

Information concerning the Cleveland Orchestra at Villanova can be obtained by contacting the University's Student Activities Office or the Office of Public Information.

George Szell, famed conductor of the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra, will bring his group into the Field House February 11 for a concert sponsored by the SGA and the Villanova Arts Forum.

Student Government Meeting Sets 2nd Semester Keynote

At 6:45 p.m. Tuesday night the familiar changing of the guard was acted out once again in front of the Villanova Student Government Association.

For many, what Frank Eck called "the most trying period in Villanova Student Government history" had come to a close. For others, it was just the beginning.

The vice-presidents appointed by Eck following the fabled meeting in Father Appicci's office last September, submitted their resignations. Although no one actually said so, they were accepted and the new vice-presidents and John Graziano (who has served under both men), made their reports to the gathering.

Prentiss Yancey, stepping down as Educational Affairs V-P reminded the SGA of "much work to be done and the many barriers to be crossed."

Bob Dean's initial report in the Student Affairs post was to take the U.S. Post Office to task for allowing mail to sit for 11 days before sending it on to resident students at their home addresses. The letters, which arrived after the residents were back on campus, asked the students to bring their used books back to the exchange set up for their sale.

Speaking of what he called "my responsibility to relinquish this position," Eck left the podium after thanking those who had worked with him and assuring them that "the last four months have been my most rewarding in my time at Villanova University."

Talking of the usual closing of the ranks which takes place after the Spring elections the outgoing chief executive said, "because of what has happened we have not seen this organization turn back into a solidified SGA." He said he hoped this might now happen.

Speaking somewhat nervously, Freind first commented that Frank "did a fine job."

He then went on to appoint officers (see separate story on page 1) after assuring the congress "no matter what I do I know some of you will say it is vindictive or because of political favoritism. This is not the case, I have picked these people because I believe they are the ones who can sprint with me in the short time that is left."

Then speaking of the Administration, Freind told the Congress, "you can't blame everything on the way this school is run. In this congress there is too much shirking away from the rough issue, too much avoidance of red tape." He concluded, "they (the administration) are intelligent people, they have a job to do and so do I." He said he intended to do his job and hoped the Congress would help him in "getting into the arena of controversy where necessary."

Freind then announced that one of the first pieces of business would be course and teacher evaluation, a project Eck thought was better handled slowly. Not so, feels Freind. To point this up he announced the publication of a research paper which he says "clears up once and for all, all of the arguments the administration throws against a student body trying to evaluate a faculty."

For the first time in recent memory, no members of the administration were present at the meeting.

Three 'Nova Alumni Named DA's by Specter

Three Villanova alumni are among the Assistant District Attorneys just appointed to the staff of Philadelphia District Attorney-elect Arlen Specter. The three alumni so honored are:

LESLIE J. CARSON, who graduated from Villanova University CUM LAUDE in 1957 and from the Law School in 1960. While at the Law School Mr. Carson was a member of the Board of Editors of the Villanova Law Review. He was Treasurer of the Alumni Association for the year 1960-61 and is an associate of the Philadelphia firm of Saul, Ewing, Remick and Saul.

WILLIAM F. COYLE, a graduate of Villanova University in 1960 and of the Law School in 1963. ON WEDNESDAY, February 2

IN THE VILLANOVAN OFFICE

ON THE SECOND FLOOR

OF DOUGHERTY HALL.

Letter From the Editor

Dear Students:

This letter to the student body has been prompted by much discussion with numerous students at Villanova. The VILLANOVAN has been criticized because it has had nothing to say on the issues of the day, both on the campus and off the campus. Students pick up the paper to glance at the front cover, to attempt the Spritzler's pool on the back page, and perhaps to look over quickly the inside pages. One quote heard from a classroom pundit went something like this: "Nice paper, takes you two minutes to read it." Fortunately or unfortunately as the case may be, this paper is sent to many parents and friends of the university. This has hindered the VILLANOVAN in the past from directing its dissatisfaction with certain issues to the student himself. But this is the student paper, and it should reflect all the varying shades of student opinion.

However, we have come to the conclusion that there are 4200 students in this University who have no opinion. At least this is the only possible conclusion since the only time they speak occurs behind the shadow of anonymity. Apathy is a mild word to describe the lack of intellectual (not social) ferment on the part of the vast majority of Villanovans. Haven't they begun to think of the amazing diversity of the world around them? Haven't they thought about civil rights? Viet Nam? Politics? Arts? Anything but the next party and graduation? We honestly wonder. The only possible way one can grow intellectually, socially, and morally is by expressing oneself. Believe it or not, this is YOUR paper; we need your help to improve, to gain more readers, and to keep this paper from simply being an ink blotter for the mimeograph machine in Tolentine Hall (which it is). In the coming weeks, the VILLANOVAN will speak out candidly on many things, always mindful of our human fallibility. If you don't like the way we do it, tell us. We'll try harder.

Sincerely,
The Editor

Villanovan

Snow Removal A Big Job

Editor's Note: The following Editorial was aired this week on WWVU Radio. The Villanovan heartily agrees with the opinions expressed.

It is not unusual or unexpected that individuals constantly desire things until they are had ... and then they don't want them any more ... and perhaps more prevalent in a student sphere than anywhere else. This has been readily shown over the past few days. All winter long, everyone was wondering where the wonderful and scenic snow had gone. The anticipation found itself answered on Sunday as the Villanova area received its full measure of anticipation ... then human nature took over, as students were inconvenienced ... wet ... and generally frustrated by the sudden "Winter Wonderland."

What followed was a burst of complaints about the natural thing to complain about ... snow removal.

Many Villanova students found themselves learning to be expert skaters ... for indeed they got the necessary practice while attempting to get to class on Monday ... over the snow and ice covered walkways.

However, while students naturally complain about anything current ... there is some basis in fact ... while a few of the more sturdy maintenance men were on hand all day and night Sunday ... they only cleared the driveways of the campus. By the time the regular crew arrived on Monday, the walkways were completely frozen over.

WWVU suggests that an emergency crew be formalized to contend with an emergency situation. Shovel the walkways before it becomes impossible. If a labor force is needed, hire students on a temporary basis. No student would refuse some ready money.

WWVU also suggests that the difficulty in student help being reliable is not in the student ... but the supervision.

WWVU feels that more consideration of well over 5,000 students and faculty members makes it essential to investigate these problems ... and make the advance planning for future emergencies, thus avoiding the dangers which presently exist.

Democratic Candidate Shapp To Address VU YD's Monday

Tom Bruderle, president of the Young Democratic Club announced last night that Milton J. Shapp, a candidate for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination will speak Monday afternoon, January 31, at 4:30 p.m. in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

Shapp was born in Cleveland fifty-four years ago and was raised and schooled in that Ohio city receiving a bachelor of science degree in electrical engineering from Case Institute of Technology in 1933.

He served in the United States Army Signal Corps from 1942 to 1946 and was discharged with the rank of captain.

Currently serving as president and chairman of the board of the Jerroid Electronics Corporation, he founded the corporation in 1948 on an initial investment, $500, while a manufacturer's sales representative in Philadelphia.

Beginning with two employees 18 years ago, the firm now totals more than 2000 people and has a net worth in excess of $10 million as a manufacturer of television systems, TV antennas, high fidelity equipment and electronic test equipment.

Shapp is a recipient of numerous awards and citations in the Delaware Valley and is credited with selling the idea of Peace Corps to Candidate John F. Kennedy in 1960. He has served as a special consultant to the Peace Corps and is a former President of the Greater Philadelphia Council of the American Jewish Congress.

In addition to his civic and business activities, he was a member of the faculty of the near-by St. Joseph's College. Shapp lives in Lower Merion Township, is married to the former Muriel Matzkin and has three children.

It was also announced that the YD Club will sponsor the film "The Making of the President - 1964" on Thursday evening February 10. The time and location of this television adaptation of Theodore White's best seller will be revealed shortly.

Villanova Representative Aids Text Tax Exemption

In an official ceremony in Harrisburg, witnessed by nearly 60 student representatives from across the state, Governor William Scranton signed into law a bill repealing the 5% sales tax on textbooks sold in school and university book stores.

Bob Dean, SGA Vice-President attended the ceremonies representing Villanova. Dean was one of the original initiators of the action and a co-Chairman of the statewide Committee for Repeal of the Tax on Texts. Other co-Chairmen were Bob Rovner, former Student Government of Temple University, and Marty Redish of the University of Pennsylvania.

The bill was passed in response to appeals from various student representatives. Last February the Villanova SGA passed a resolution favoring such action and requesting that it be taken by the State Legislature.

Dean, Rovner and Redish visited the state capitol last April 6 to present petitions to the Governor, speak with key members of the majority and minority parties in the legislature. They also testified in behalf of the bill before the House Committee on Taxation and Appropriations.

The bill which Scranton signed becomes effective next July 1 -- at the beginning of the new fiscal year. While it will be too late for most students in this year's Senior Class, it will begin benefitting all students -- both in college and in secondary schools -- next fall.

Tax losses from the exemption are expected to cost the Commonwealth approximately 1.4 million dollars. The bill was passed as a rider to an exemption for fish-hatchery products and was thus what Scranton called "a one and one-half million dollar rider on a twelve thousand dollar motion."

Dean remarked that the action was significant not only in saving students money and helping to reduce the already astronomical cost of higher education, but also as a demonstration of what students can accomplish by pursuing their interests in a proper manner through established means.

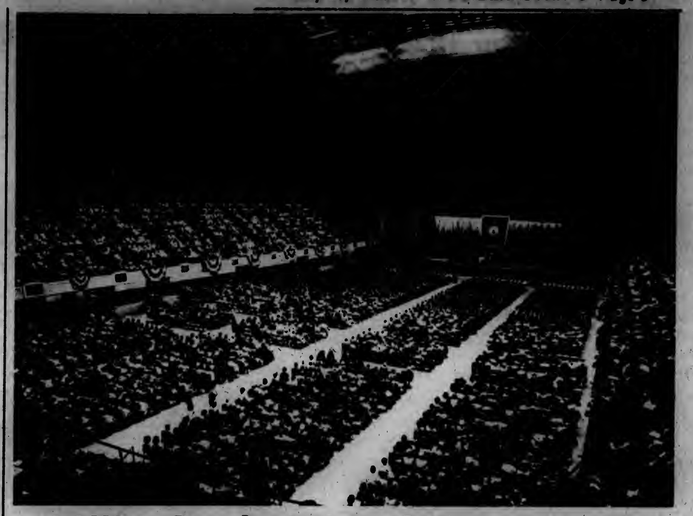
Beta Gamma Society Hosts Annual Debate Tournament

Beta Gamma Debate Society will host the Sixth Annual Villanova Debate Tournament today and tomorrow.

Fifteen eastern colleges and universities will be coming from Norwich University in Northfield, Vermont to the north and Old Damian in Norfolk, Virginia to the south. Other schools of interest will include Boston College, Maryland University, Seton Hall University and George Washington University, while area schools will be Rosemont College, the University of Pennsylvania and Drexel Institute of Technology.

The entire tournament will be held in Bartley Hall, commencing at 4 p.m. on Friday and 8:30 a.m. on Saturday and ending with the presentation of awards at approximately 4:30 p.m. on Saturday.

According to Ed Grey, president of Beta Gamma and Tournament Chairman, this year's tournament will have a few changes. These include power pairing; i.e., having teams of relative strength meet and increasing the number of rounds from five to six.



Another junior, Kathy Kollar, in charge of entertainment, has planned a reception for debators and coaches at the Marriott Motor Lodge.

Mr. O'Toole, director of Debate, has extended an invitation to faculty and students especially to attend and learn more about debate and its benefits.

Installment Payments Started by Seniors For Senior Weekend

The Senior Class opened its installment payment program for Senior Weekend this past Monday. Collectors will now be on hand daily in the Student Activities Office on the second floor of Dougherty Hall from 10:30 until 1:30.

This program, the first of its kind at Villanova, gives seniors the opportunity to pay some money, when they have it, toward the Senior Weekend festivities on March 25 and 26. Wide interest already shown in the plan indicates that it will be successful, according to Senior Class officers.

AAUP's Resolution on Commencement

Ed. Note: The following resolution was recently adopted by the Villanova chapter of the American Association of University Professors (numbering about 100 on campus). At the next meeting of AAUP at Villanova, the St. John's controversy will be debated. Mr. Bernard F. Reilly, president of the local chapter, invites all interested to attend the meeting, which will be held on February 2 at 3:30 in a room to be designated. The VILLANOVAN endorses the sentiments expressed in the following article:

The annual commencement is properly the most significant public function of the University. It symbolizes the presentation to the world of those who have received the training of the University and who have merited its academic degrees. In a broader sense, commencement serves as a public demonstration of the institution's dedication to high standards of scholarly and intellectual attainment. The chapter wishes to lend its support to the maintenance of dignity, good taste and the emphasis on academic values appropriate to such a ceremony.

The chapter notes with approval the considerable efforts taken to make the commencement of 1965 one worthy of the University. Suitable surroundings allowed the many friends of the University to attend in comfort. Music especially appropriate to an academic convocation was provided. Men of accomplishment in varied fields of endeavor were honored with degrees. The ceremonies were conducted with dignity and without tedium.

In the hope of furthering the effort to lend dignity and academic significance to these proceedings, the chapter offers several suggestions for future commencements.

The chapter urges that more emphasis be given to the awarding of the Distinguished Teaching Awards, as a fitting demonstration of the value the University places on excellence of instruction. It would be appropriate to have recipients of the awards called to the platform to receive them publicly. They might then remain on the platform to represent the faculty as a whole during the awarding of degrees. This might seem appropriate since degrees are traditionally awarded "on the recommendation of the faculty."

The chapter suggests that the commissioning of naval officers be carried out at a ceremony separate from the commencement itself. For many graduates, commencement marks the beginning of a significant career, but there seems no compelling reason for singling out for recognition those beginning a military career. If any graduates are to be called forth to the platform, it would be more in keeping with the spirit of commencement to single out those who merit high academic honors. A separate ceremony for commissioning officers, as in the past, would also provide a more suitable environment for the new officers to receive the congratulations of their families and friends.

The chapter acknowledges the great importance of the selecting of recipients of honorary degrees, since these selections are taken to represent the values which the University holds in special esteem. The conferring of honorary degrees has its place in the commencement as a concrete recognition of the role played by men and women of talent and learning in many varied fields of endeavor. The University's choices should reflect its esteem for scholarly, scientific and artistic attainment, as well as for achievement in politics, religious life, and commercial affairs. Newer and more specialized fields of endeavor, sometimes not so often in the public eye, in which men make positive contributions to their fellow men should not be overlooked.

The chapter urges that the faculty's collective knowledge of many varied fields of endeavor be put to effective use in the process of considering prospective recipients of honorary degrees. Suggestions for recipients of honorary degrees should be actively solicited, and faculty members should make every effort to recommend worthy candidates for these honors. To further this process, the chapter recommends that members of the teaching faculty be appointed to lend their services as members of the Committee on Honorary Degrees.

The 'Cats actually made things tough on themselves as they squandered what was once a 15 point lead in the first half. At the outset it looked like Villanova in a runaway, but the Tigers calmly pecked away, and cut the lead to only 8 at half time. They finally tied it with less than 4 minutes remaining to be played.

Both teams played even in the frantic closing minutes, but with neither team being able to connect for a field goal in the final minute, Traynor's free throw knotted the victory.

ST. PETERS

Villanova's 1000th game, since it all started back in 1921, turned out to be a 94-66 romp over a game St. Peters five, before a Fieldhouse crowd of 2500. Billy Melchionni paved the way netting 23 points, and turning in a sparkling floor game.

Villanova never trailed in the game, but the well drilled Peacocks kept it close for the first few minutes. The Wildcats leading 11-10 surged for 14 quick points, and the Jerseyites were never again in range. During the streak Melchionni hit 4 baskets, and fed off for 3 more.

Despite some fine shooting by Joe Repka, who kept splitting the zone and hitting short jumpers from the top of the key, Villanova carried a 48-33 lead into the locker room at half time.

St. Peters, in an effort to stop Melchionni, came out for the second half in a box and one. Billy responded with some fine passing, and Gaidjunas, McGuire, Coleman, and Schaffer countered with the points.

All ten men saw action for the 'Cats, and everybody scored. St. Peters took individual honors with Repka leading the scorers with 26, and Pete O'Dea the rebounders with 12.

However, St. Peters lacked the height and balance of the 'Cats, and had nobody to compare with Melchionni. The 'Cats saw 5 men hit double figures, led by Melchionni with 23 points in a 10-16 effort.

Frank Gaidjunas, hitting on 7-10 from the floor, added 15 points and 8 rebounds. Bernie Schaffer led the Villanova rebounders with 11, and was second in scoring with 18.

Pete Coleman, in addition to some good ball handling to help crack a pressing defense, chipped in with 12 points, and Terry McGuire added 10 points and 8 rebounds to round out a good team effort.

Frosh Basketball

ahead 52-51 after three steals by Gillen. Johnny Jones led all scorers with 31 points and dominated the backboards. Gillen had 12 and Bobby Melchionni chipped in with 10.

The 'Cats looked rusty in both games possibly due to the long mid-semester break. They played only one game since December 16 and they showed it. In the La Salle game Villanova dropped numerous passes and threw the ball away on many occasions, but they'll get another chance at the Explorers when they play in the Field House on February 1

Despite the mistakes Villanova was still in the game until Williams sewed it up, and had they hit some of the short jumpers which refused to drop the outcome might have been different. La Salle has a spectacular team, (there is no doubting that), but Villanova's squad is also a talent-laden one, and one that is not yet convinced of the Explorers superiority.

The 'Cats play at Temple on Saturday before Tuesday's return match with La Salle.

The reasons for such optimism are many and well-founded. No less than a dozen individual swimmers are on hand to insure the success of the Wildcats for several seasons to come.

Not the least of the reasons for such confidence are two All-Americans, senior Ray Donnelly and junior George Parell, and an outstanding All-American candidate, sophomore Mike Fitzmaurice. This trio can hold its own in any caliber of competition.

DONNELLY CAPTAIN

Donnelly, from Waterbury, Connecticut, is the captain of the squad and is an outstanding leader. An All-American in the 50-yard freestyle two years ago, Ray is primarily a specialist in both the 50 and 100-yard freestyle competition.

After recovering from an illness a short time ago, Ray has found it difficult to get back in the groove and work himself back into top form. But the expectation is that it won't be long before Ray works himself back into sufficiently good shape to display the talent he has so often shown in the pool in the past.

Parell, coming to Villanova out of St. Benedict's in Newark, New Jersey, copped All-American honors last year as a sophomore, and should develop even more in the future. After making the All-American relay team last year, Parell has also been troubled with a slow start this season, but it seems to be only a matter of time before he snaps out of it and once again displays the form which gained him All-American honors as a sophomore.

The best word to describe the ability of sophomore Mike Fitzmaurice is fantastic. Fitzmaurice, from Grenwich, Connecticut, rewrote the frosh record book last year by setting two national freshmen swimming records. He is nothing less than great in the freestyle and is also outstanding in a race covering 200 yards.

Having an abundance of natural ability and unlimited potential, Mike is a sure bet for All-American honors again this season.

Backing up this threesome are several other 'Cat swimmers who are noteworthy in their own right, and who give the Wildcats better overall balance and depth than they have had in recent years.

Bill "Wildman" Livingood, from Bishop Neuman, is an excellent 100 and 200-yard backstroker, and holds most school records in this department. Bill is frequently counted on in the clutch by the 'Cats, and just as frequently comes through.

Senior Ken Herr is the top breaststroker on the squad, and is known by his teammates for his dedication and hard work. Sophomore John Doherty backs up Livingood, with junior John Hoffman behind Herr.

DIVERS UP

The Wildcat diving tandem of Bob Beise and Bill Bohrmann is comparable to any in the East, and figures to be prominent in title meets. These boys are being heavily counted upon to help sustain the good fortune of the 'Cat swimmers.

Sophomore Paul Hornsleth, from Malvern Prep, shows a lot of talent and potential in the individual medley. Soph Ed Ritti, also of Malvern Prep, is a fine swimmer. Both of these boys are steady performers and are also being heavily counted on by the team's followers. Soph Richie Lamb, is a good distance freestyler and has been doing well in the spring events. Soph Chip Friday is the top fly man on the squad.

Frank Gaidjunas with good position easily out jumps St. Peter's Tom McMahon while pulling down one of his eight rebounds.

Part of the optimism can be traced to several talented performers on the frosh squad, whose presence in the years to come will be of immeasurable help to the fortunes of the varsity. Bill McDonough, the brother of Villanova All-American Dick McDonough who graduated in '64, is an excellent freestyle prospect, and is sure to be heavily counted on by the varsity come next season.

Paul Campbell and Bob Hartye are also fine freestylers, and need only more experience to develop to their full potential. The future looks bright indeed for these two 'Cats. Joe Farrell has potential as a breaststroker and, if he develops as expected, could be a great one.

Charley Stone, spending his first year in the 200-yard butterfly, is currently doing well, and is expected to develop into a great butterfly man. Dick Radobaugh, is a fine all-around swimmer, and is doing well in the individual medley. He should reach his full potential in about two years, and is one of many being counted on to sustain the success of the Wildcats in the near future.

All in all, this frosh squad needs only more experience to season its potential; when this potential is reached, whether one, two or three years from now, the opposition is going to be in for a very rough time.

Coaches Geisz and Lumsden seem confident that the Villanova swimmers, because of fine varsity holdovers and the talented crop of freshmen, will continue to improve in swimming competition in the years to come.

The remaining Varsity Swimming Schedule is:

Feb. 2, Penn, Away
Feb. 5, Princeton, Home
Feb. 9, Navy, Away
Feb. 11, NYU, Away

Coach Joe Rogers Resigns From Staff To Go into Business

Joe Rogers, backfield coach under Alex Bell and a coach here at Villanova for 13 years, handed in his resignation this past week. There was no disagreement resulting in the departure. It was done of Mr. Rogers' own accord, and he left with the blessings of the university.

Coach Rogers, at 41, and with a wife and nine children, just could not refuse a rather lucrative offer by Blue Cross, with whom he had been a part time employee.

Joe Rogers

The university and coaching staff rues the loss of such a qualified and experienced man, but join in wishing Joe the best of luck in his business ventures. At present no successor is known.

Stickmen to Hold First Meeting

The Villanova Lacrosse Club will hold its first organizational meeting of the year Thursday, February 3 at 4 p.m. in the Blue Room of the Field House.

The Cats' stickmen are on an eight game winning streak, losing only the opener last season. Due to graduation, many positions are now open on the team. No previous lacrosse experience is necessary to join the Villanova Lacrosse Club and anyone interested is welcome to attend this meeting.

The Cats anticipate a good season this year, hoping to come close to or better last season's 8 wins - 1 loss record.

Wildkittens Claw Opponents Lose to LaSalle Explorers

By Larry Justice

Villanova's freshman basketball team got off to a fast start this year, defeating its first four opponents without much trouble. The team sports a high-powered offense, averaging 80.5 ppg., and a tenacious defense which has limited its opponents to an average of 45.5 ppg.

John Jones, a 6'3 185 pounder from Pompano Beach, Fla., is the team's leading scorer with a 26 ppg. average while Frank Gillen, a 5'11 guard from Bishop Neumann, directs the Wildkitten offensive attack and is averaging 10.5 ppg.

On December 2, at the Field House, the Frosh five mauled Scranton's yearlings 76-27. John Jones led the scoring parade with 25. The following Tuesday the Freshman traveled with the Varsity to Princeton to take on the Tiger Frosh. Jones and Frank Gillen led the team to a 90-64 victory, scoring 26 and 20 respectively.

On December 11, the Wildkittens defeated St. Joseph's Freshmen 66-48 in their first Big Five game of the season. The Frosh has only a four point lead (31-27) at the half but they pulled themselves together and overpowered the Hawk Frosh in the second half. Again, Jones led the scorers with 28 while Jones Price chipped in with 13.

On January 19 the Wildkittens swamped West Chester's Frosh 90-43. The team was able to come back after a four week lay off and put together the balanced attack that they demonstrated in their previous games. Jones hit for 25 while Price added 18.

BIG FIVE TITLE

The Wildkittens are shooting for the Big Five Freshman Title and if they are able to maintain the balance which they have displayed so far, they have a very good chance to do so. The Big Five Freshman teams play each other twice on a home-away basis and the team with the best won-lost record takes the title.

LaSalle and Temple appear to be the toughest Big Five opponents the Frosh have faced. La Salle, already beaten by Temple, is considered one of the top Freshman teams in the nation. Bernie Williams from Da Matha near Washington and Larry Cannon, from Lincoln High in Philadelphia, were both high school All-Americans last year and form the nucleus of La Salle's Frosh. But, in Big Five competition, anything can and usually does, happen.

INDIVIDUALS

Jim McIntosh, the Wildkitten's 6'7" center from Lincoln in Philadelphia, has shown his tremendous defensive and rebounding abilities but has not scored the way coach Jack Devine knows he can. He is currently averaging only 8.3 ppg. but if he can become a greater offensive threat, the Wildkittens could become the Big Five Freshman team to beat.

Bob Melchionni, a 6' guard and brother of Varsity captain Bill Melchionni, displaying a fine shooting touch and is a good defensive man. He can come back in the game and get the team rolling with his speed, shooting, and ball-hawking.

John Price, at 6'3 and 180 pounds, has some excellent offensive moves and a good touch. After a slow start, he has hit well against St. Joseph's and West Chester, netting 13 and 18 respectively. He has raised his average to 11.5 ppg. and is the team's second highest scorer.

Frank McCall, a 6'5 200 pound forward, from Bishop McDevitt, is a rugged rebounder whom opponents find very tough to move under the boards. He gives McIntosh an able hand in performing the chores around the hoop and is averaging 8.0 ppg.

George May, at 6'4 and 195 pounds, is another strong rebounder who can also handle the ball well and is an excellent defensive player.

Coach Devine must be praised for the job he has done in knitting these standout performers together to form a well-balanced team that operates as a unit.

Villanova's much-heralded freshmen basketball team put on two unimpressive displays this week in losing to the La Salle frosh 73-64 on Monday, and defeating a weak Pennsylvania team 81-74 in the Field House on Tuesday.

The La Salle game was a combination of Villanova errors and La Salle brilliance as the Explorers pulled away in the last nine minutes of the game. At that point La Salle held a shaky three point lead 51-48 and had high-scoring Larry Cannon on the bench with four personals. But Bernie Williams hit two long jumpers and followed with a layup which broke the game open.

The Explorers got the margin up to 12 points but the 'Cats closed to a final 73-64 score. Williams had 23 for La Salle, and Cannon was impressive with his playmaking as well as his usually fine shooting. George May paced the 'Cats with 14 and Frank Gillen had 13. Johnny Jones got into foul trouble and his eight points performance caused his 25 point average to suffer.

The next night against the Quakers, one of the have-nots among the frosh, the 'Cats had to come from behind late in the second half before pulling out a victory. The Quakers, whose biggest man was 6-5 led most of the game until Villanova caught up and went

Schaffer—'The One Guy to Have'

By Aurel Villari

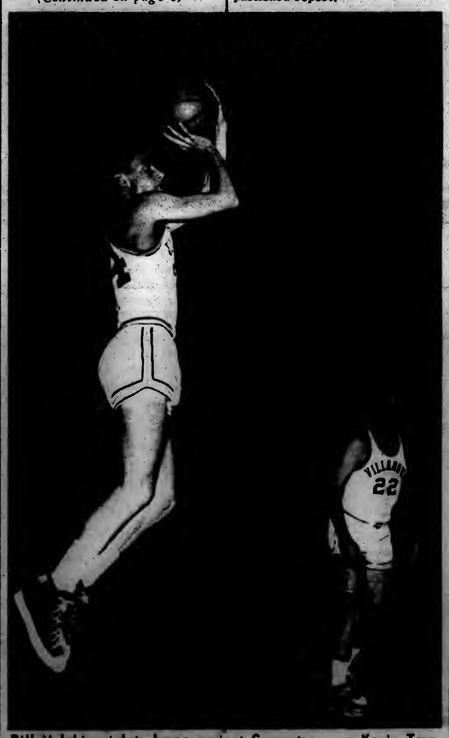
Bernie Schaeffer, 6-5 graduate of Haverford High School, is just reaching his peak this season, the last he is to spend playing in a Villanova uniform. Bernie has had his "ups" and "downs," so to speak, but he has really been sparkling this season. While in his senior year in high school, Bernie maintained a fine 18 ppg average. In his first year at Villanova, Bernie was a member of the Wildcats' Frosh "Big 5" Champion team, which posted an 11-2 record. Bernie started half of the season's games in his sophomore year, but only managed to start 2 games last season. These games, however, were the final two of the season, and Bernie scored a total of 26 points in them, a fact which was to augur well for Bernie's performance this year. To date, Bernie has managed to post an 11.4 ppg average, and has also hit the boards well enough to maintain an average of 8 rebounds per game.

His individual high thus far was 27 points in the recent heartbreaker against Detroit, when he hit on 67% from the floor (12 for 18) and 3 out of 4 from the "charity line." Schaeffer contributed 18 points this past Tuesday against St. Peters, sinking 7 of 16 from the floor and 4 of 5 free-throws. On the season as a whole, Bernie has hit on 43% of his field goal attempts, and 70% of his foul shots, a big jump from the 39% average on foul shots he posted in his freshman year. Bernie has steadily improved in all departments, and it's a good bet he'll continue that trend right up to the final game.

Bernie really surprised everybody last month, especially St. Joe's, when he turned in a great performance in consistently dribbling around and through the strong St. Joe's press. Schaffer sparkled in the Detroit game, hitting on 8 shots in a row, 5 of them jumpers from between 15 and 20 feet out. Bernie's consistently fine play, strengthened by his development of a great shooting eye from the outside, has been of nearly inestimable value to the fortunes of the 'Cats thus far.

Following his graduation in May, Bernie hopes to go on to graduate school in business come next Fall. His success there, as it has been on the court, is certain. Ranked within the top quarter of his major, Marketing, Bernie also did very well on his graduate-record exams. Besides his endeavors on the basketball court, Bernie's position as Sports Editor of the school yearbook, the BELLE AIR has been foremost in his extra-curricular activities.

Eagles' Pete Retzlaff To Assist Wildcats In Spring Practice



All-Pro Philadelphia Eagles' end Pete Retzlaff will spend a few days on the Villanova campus this coming Spring working out and helping the Wildcats in the "pass offense part of football."

Retzlaff's efforts in this area for the Eagles have gained for him from the Philadelphia Sports writers their vote for Most Valuable Player for the NFL in 1965.

Speaking to the Villanova and WWVU, the former All-American said he enjoyed a similar stunt at Notre Dame a few years ago. He was asked to help out by head coach Alex Bell on Monday night.

"We'll get together this Spring and pick a time when I can come out for a day or two and work with the ends," he said.

He emphasized that he was not coming on as a coaching assistant as was implied by at least one published report.

Maff's Musings

By Joe Maffongelli

About this time a year ago we printed an appeal to the wire press services that they alter their methods of selecting the cream of the college grid corps. This past season the major polls responded by naming their top ten clubs following the round of all important bowl contests. It seems, however, that another extreme was reached. There is still room for improvement in this matter in our opinion. Perhaps the Crimson of Alabama did provide the best showing of all the bowl entries, but surely their rating above Michigan State cannot be justified by that single effort. No, it seems rather that the services desired to merely come up with something different from the polls which were put out before the new year. There is no limit to the fallacies which may arise from such faulty reasoning should it continue.

Along with last year's appeal that the wire services change their techniques we included a rather staunch criticism of their selection of Alabama as the national champion. We felt that Notre Dame had been slighted due to their four point upset at the hands of a fired up Southern California club. Now we find that a similar case has arisen with another Pacific Athletic Conference member - UCLA - upsetting the probable national champs, and the same Crimson Tide gathering the laurels. It seems that either Alabama has a special place in the hearts of the selection committees, or that the Pacific Conference is supposed to decide the national champs on their own although it's rare that they produce a really great team in their own fold.

When Alabama was named the top collegiate club in '64 at least they were undefeated in regular season play while Notre Dame had been beaten once. But in the case of '65 the season loss sustained by the Tide was ignored and only the bowl defeat which the Staters experienced was given any weight in the matter. It all seems rather unreliable. The very fact that a club can receive a national title when they continually stay within the realm of the Southeast or Southwest Conference is ridiculous. We hope that in the future the services will find a more sensible means of selecting the champs by placing the proper emphasis, CONSISTENTLY, on the season records and bowl games.

'Cats Drop Heartbreakers

By Bob McIntyre, Jerry Bruderle, and John DiGennaro

Villanova courtmen played against a so-so Army team in the first round of the Christmas tournament at Madison Square Garden in New York, on December 27.

The Black Knights of the Hudson handed the Cats a jolt as they won easily, 89-68. Army's best, center Mike Silliman, poured in 27 points to lead his team, as Bill Melchionni continued his torrid shooting pace with 30 big points for the 'Cats to keep the game from being a complete runaway.

The speech now famous by Jack Kraft to the team after the Army loss was probably the turning point in Villanova's season, as can be seen throughout later games.

The Wildcats proved all was not wasted when they lost to Army by bouncing back the next day against Colorado State, 68-57.

Again, to the delight of the New York fans, Bill Melchionni showed his class and dropped in 32 points, while Schaffer and Crews both hit for 12 points apiece.

On December 30 Villanova made the sports writers who counted them out eat a bit of crow when they knocked off a strong Georgetown team, 81-72, and finished fifth in the tournament. In this game all five starters hit for double figures and played like a well-oiled machine, Pete Coleman hitting a team-high of 18, as both Crews and Melchionni ended with 17. Schaffer had 12 and Frank Gaidjunas had 13 rebounds and 11 points.

The second Big Five game of the season with Temple University was a real cliff-hanger and, as noted later, was a prediction of what was to come in the future. Both teams battled it out, with the Wildcats coming back strong after being down 12 points at the half, only to lose, 57-56. In this game sophomore Joe Crews came of age by letting the ball fly for 20 points and also grabbing ten rebounds.

On January 8, before a national television audience, Villanova continued to show plenty of class as they almost upset the Redmen of St. John's in an overtime battle that had television fans biting their fingers off.

The final score in this topsy-turvy battle of border-state rivals was 68-63. Bill Melchionni chipped in 27 points as he tried desperately to beat the team that nipped last year's 'Cat entry in the NIT finals.

Perhaps Villanova's greatest game of the year was played on January 16 at the Palestra. Only did a blind jump shot at the buzzer by a guy named Donches prevent the 'Cats from knocking off the third-rank Hawks of St. Joe's. They lost instead, 71-69.

Seven players for Villanova played and all were excellent. Not a bad shot was taken and hustle was the keynote. Mr. Kraft's magic almost returned, except for that guy named?

VS XAVIER

Villanova's Bill Melchionni returned to the Xavier Field House where he starred two years ago as a sophomore, and once again led the 'Cats to a high-scoring, hard-fought victory over the Musketeers 90-82.

Two years ago Melchionni came off the bench to score 22 points and team with Wally Jones and Richie Moore in defeating Xavier 90-88 before a sellout crowd. This time there were only 1153 subdued fans present but Billy put on one of his finest shooting displays of the season, scoring 37 points and shooting 15 for 21 from the field. He saved his best for the second half when Villanova needed it, hitting 9 out of 10 to stifle a Xavier rally.

After trailing most of the game, Xavier took the lead 63-62 midway through the second half as Bob Quick (29 points) started to find the range. The lead see-sawed back and forth until it was 67-66 with Xavier in front. Then Melchionni hit two freak throws and the 'Cats outscored the Musketeers 14-2 opening up an 80-69 advantage.

Terry McGuire came off the bench and took two fast passes from Melchionni, hit two short jumpers and scored 11 points all in the final five minutes of the game. The 'Cats shot poorly from the foul line (18-33) but managed to hold off another Xavier rally that cut the margin to six points.

The 'Cats trailed only at 2-0 before opening up a 20-10 lead in the first half. Joe Crews, a 16 points producer, hit three jumpers in a row to keep Villanova in front 42-36 at the half.

Bernie Schaffer scored 13 tough points and grabbed 11 rebounds although the taller Musketeers controlled the boards 52-41.

The 'Cats continue to play better ball on the road (5-5) than they do at home (1-4).

DETROIT

Villanova, hoping to escape the plague of the Hawk, took off for the midwest, and Memorial Fieldhouse, home of the University of Detroit's talented Titans. U of D entered the game as the nation's top rebounding club, and also, in co-captains Dorie Murrey and Lou Hyatt, boasting one of the toughest inside-outside combinations in the college ranks.

True to form, Hyatt's 33, and Murrey's 29 led the hot shooting Motowners to an 101-94 victory; uping their record to 11-3, while at the same time dropping the Cats 4 games under .500 with a 5-9 mark.

The Wildcats, led by Bernie Schaffer's 9-10 from the floor, and some fine back-up work by Joe Crews, took a 51-45 lead into the dressing room at half time. With the 'Cats shooting 64.9 percent as a team, only the hot hand of Lou Hyatt (9-11), mostly long range jumpers, kept the Titans that close.

The second half was a different story. Hyatt was held to only 4 field goals, but Murrey, Bruce Rodwan, and Larry Salci more than made up for it. Rodwan turned tiger underneath, hitting the boards for 19 rebounds and coming through with 22 hard earned points. At the same time, leading scorer Dorie Murrey got tough, chipping in 15 second half points, while claiming 16 bounds.

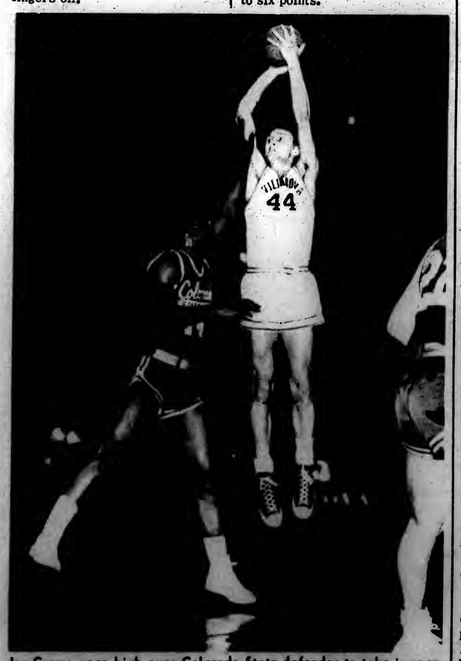
The real knife twister, however, was Larry Salci, a 6-1, soph, who kept hitting the clutch baskets. Every time the Wildcat defense toughened the little guard popped a long one from the outside, at one point hitting three in a row, and keeping the Titans right in there.

Detroit, shooting 59.7 from the floor, and 81-8 from the line, peppered away at the 'Cats zone, and made the usually defense minded 'Cats play their game. The Wildcats responded well, shooting 52 percent from the floor, but did not quite have enough to keep pace.

Schaffer led the Villanova scorers with 27. He was followed by Melchionni with 24, Crews with 19, and Coleman with 12.

MEMPHIS STATE

Saturday night found the 'Cats in the beautiful Mid-South Coliseum, in Memphis Tennessee, and they went on to edge the MSU Tigers in a 70-69 thriller, before 6,230 not so hospitable southerners.



The soph-laden Tigers almost pulled it out, but Iggy Traynor's foul shot hung in through the last hectic seconds, and the Wildcats finally chalked up a close one.

With 28 seconds left Billy Melchionni, a 70 plus percent foul shooter, missed two, and the Tigers took over trailing by a point. Setting up for the good shot, the clock showed 9 seconds before Mike Butler, the Tiger's leading scorer, and a twenty point contributor on the night, let fly.

He missed, but the 'Cats in their eagerness to grab the ball lost it out of bounds. Once again Butler shot, once again he missed, once again it went off Villanova.

With two seconds left on the clock, MSU set up its inbounds play. It was thrown in to Craig Alexander deep in the left corner, but his desperation shot was way

Wildcat Mermen Win Easily Over Rams, Tough Army Next

By Aurel Villari

Last Saturday the Villanova swimmers, led by sophomore Richie Lamb, defeated local rival West Chester State, 66-29, copping seven out of eight events.

Lamb was the only double winner of the day, taking the 200 and 500-yard freestyles in 1:56.8 and 5:51 respectively. Several Wildcats turned in strong performances in the event held on the Main Liners' campus, with Paul Hornsleth, Chip Friday, Bob Biese, and Ken Herr also contributing fine performances.

Today the Wildcats play host to Army, who is flying high after their recent defeat of Yale, ranked first in the East.

Some of the credit for these wins should go to head coach Ed Geisz who is now in his 13th year as mentor of the Wildcat swimmers -- but don't bet that 13 is about to bring its traditional bad luck to bear upon the Main Liners this season. During Geisz' reign as head coach the Wildcats have been carefully molded into a strong national contender in swimming annually, finishing within the nation's top 20 in the past three NCAA championship meets.

Over the past four years alone, Coach Geisz has developed more than a dozen All-Americans at Villanova, and we have justifiable confidence that this trend is going to continue far into the future.

Success is nothing new to Geisz. He first excelled back at Northeast Catholic High School, going on from there to many AAU championships.

After ending his own swimming career by copping two European titles, Geisz went on to have an outstanding coaching career at La Salle before taking over the reins at Villanova 13 years ago.

FROSH COACH

Assistant varsity coach Jack Lumsden is currently in his ninth year at Villanova, and doubles as head coach of the frosh swimmers. An All-American swimmer at La Salle for two straight years, 1947 and 1948, Lumsden held every Middle Atlantic AAU record from 50 to 880 yards during that period.

During Jack's tenure as head of the freshmen swimmers, Wildcat frosh squads have won over 70% of their meets, a fact which pays ample tribute to the skill and ability which Lumsden possesses.

Head coach Geisz and assistant Lumsden guided the 'Cat varsity to an 8-4 record last year, and a 17th place finish in the NCAA championship meet, and there's a strong possibility that the future holds even greater success in store for the Wildcats.

FUTURE BRIGHT

After losing the likes of Rick Girdler, the swimming answer to Bill Bradley, one may think that the future won't be as successful as the past. Not so. The swimmers began the difficult task of working themselves into shape in mid-September, and were in good condition to participate in organized workouts by October 11, with managers Ray Curran and Tim Wahl doing a fine job in helping the team to work themselves into shape to cope with the rough schedule which lay ahead.

The season opened, however, on a low note when on December 3 the 'Cats bowed to a strong Maryland Varsity. But the team has come on very strong since their disappointing opening loss, and have since given an optimistic outlook to the rest of their schedule.

On December 4 the Wildcats finished in the number 2 spot out of 10 entries in the ESCA Championships, which were held at NYU. It should be noted that this particular competition involved nothing but relays, with no individual events being held.

Returning to the Main Line on December 8, the 'Cats trounced Catholic University, and again rose to the occasion this past Saturday when they defeated local rival West Chester State. One of the toughest, if not the toughest, schedules in Villanova swimming history remains, with teams from the likes of Yale, Army, Navy, Princeton and Rutgers about to invade the Main Liners' home ground.

But despite this very strong array of opponents, we're sure that the Villanova swimmers will meet with much-deserved success the rest of this season and in the future.

Father President has officially informed the Villanovan that swimming has been raised to the level of a major sport. This carries no implications as to scholarships. It is intended solely as a means of recognition for the varsity swimmers who have continually proven themselves against top rank competition. This new status now entitles the swimmers to varsity letters, sweaters, and any other recognition accorded worthy athletes.

Major Elections Amendment On SGA Program Tonight

By Bill McCloskey

A major amendment to the SGA constitution will be read to the Congress tonight before debate on two motions.

One motion calls for a free period at 10:30 a.m., Monday, March 21 for presidential debates. This was among seven motions presented at last week's Senate meeting.

The debates would kick off the campaigning for the various offices up for graps in the campus elections this spring.

George Valva, elections committee chairman, joined with John Graziano in offering the motion. This is one of several changes contemplated by the committee to improve campus elections therby increasing interest.

At WWVU, engineers are already at work preparing a tote-board which will be used to "flash" results of the important races as they develop. This year's elections will have another first, running results starting in early afternoon. Under this plan, candidates and voters will know before the polls close how the election stands. This will eliminate much of the needless suspense that normally accompanies the elections.

In explaining the motion, Valva noted that very few classes are held at that time (10:30 Monday). It is hoped, Valva said, "that this will point up the importance of student elections to the student body and the Administration."

In the same area, Jim Griffin asked what had happened to an earlier motion, passed by the SGA, calling for a second weekly activities period. Steve Freind said this is still being pursued.

A lengthy debate followed on a judicial reform motion presented by Ward Williams, SGA Secretary (see box).

Another constitutional change, which will be considered by the SGA at their next meeting, will ask that 2.25 cumulative average be made sufficient for qualification for all offices except SGA representative.

A motion by Steve Freind, requesting a plaque with a gavaf mounted on it, to be presented to Frank Eck, "in recognition of his service to the SGA last semester," is expected to meet little if any opposition.

The final motion was presented by Jim Griffin, Senior Class Presi-

Falvey Library Boasts Rare Copy of Encyclical

By Bill Tavani

Among the recently acquired books in Villanova's library is one not found in most libraries. It is a special commemorative edition of PACEM IN TERRIS, containing in addition to the encyclical by the late Pope John XXIII, the proceedings of the International Convocation on the Requirements of Peace, held in New York last February and sponsored by the Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions.

The book was printed as a suitable gesture to coincide with the newsmaking trip of Pope Paul VI to the United States. It was published last October.

The copy now in the Falvey Memorial Library was donated by Harvey Satenstein, director of the Educational Services Production Division, and a Villanova graduate, American Book-Stratford Press, Inc. Mr. Satenstein is a friend of Doctor Albert H. Buford, dean of Graduate Studies at Villanova, and he offered the book to the Villanova library when he learned that his company would be publishing it. Satenstein himself was responsible for the specialized design and binding for PACEM IN TERRIS.

Originally there were 15 copies issued in the limited edition. Later, however, a few "extra" copies were released. Villanova was one of the recipients. Others who received copies of the book, in addition to the Pope himself, were: President Johnson, Vice-President Humphrey, U.N. Secretary General U. Thant, prelates of the Church and officials of the U.N. and Congress.

PACEM IN TERRIS is in the library right now and is available to the students as well as to the faculty.

ANTIQUE MASKS, an original play by Jan Hartman, takes place in a rehearsal room of an old, abandoned theatre.

Junior Week Chairman Inaugurates Time-Payments

Junior Week General Chairman, Jim Donegan has announced the organization of a TIME-PAYMENTS PLAN to help Juniors meet the many expenses of Junior Week as easily as possible.

The three main events of Junior Week -- Mother's Day, Concert, and Dinner Dance -- will cost approximately $35. Add to this total the cost of tuxedo, flowers, and room rentals, as well as the nominal charge for the other events of the week, and you find yourself faced with a very expensive Junior Week.

By starting to save for it now, Juniors will assure their attendance at this memorable week and minimize the possibility of an abrupt drain on their finances.

Beginning Monday, February 7, a member of the Special Problems Committee will be in the Student Organizations Office on the second floor of Dougherty Hall. Hours will be from 3:30 p.m. to 4:45 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Juniors may deposit any number of dollars as often as they wish. With each deposit, they will receive a receipt. An accurate record of all deposits will be kept by the committee.

Friday, April 1 will be the last day for making deposits. Beginning Monday, April 4, Juniors will be able to pick up the money they have deposited in the form of a class check.

Charles W. Bowser Will Address VUPU On Poverty Program

Charles W. Bowser, Executive Director of the Philadelphia Anti-Poverty Action Committee will be the introductory speaker in a Villanova Political Union debate on Monday, February 14. The debate, open to the public, will be held at 7:30 p.m. in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall on the University Campus.

The resolution which Bowser and Union members will debate is: Resolved, this house favors substantial expansion of President Johnson's anti-poverty program. It is expected that members of the Liberal Party will support the resolution and Conservatives oppose it. The Moderates may hold the balance of power.

Bowser was appointed to his present position in April of last year. A graduate of Central High School, he has two degrees from Temple University a 1952 B.S. in Journalism and a 1957 L.L.B. from the Law School.

Paul Goodman, noted author, lectures on 'De Facto Censorship' at the Villanova Law Forum held last Friday.

Goodman Decries Networks, Government for Censorship

Censorship in the field of communications, in national government, and in big business is destroying the freedom of the "little people," author Paul Goodman said here Friday night.

Goodman, author of "Growing Up Absurd" and "Compulsory Mid-Education," spoke on "De Facto Censorship: People or Automatons" at the Villanova Law Forum before a crowd of 150 at the Law School.

His thesis was "a change in legal thinking (on censorship) might have real revolutionary uses ... new concepts in law are needed."

In speaking of the new student activists, Goodman stated that there is a "do it yourself" tradition spreading among the dissidents. "If you don't like what is happening in the university, do it yourself" is an idea which has resulted in the recent free university movements.

There are three encroachments on human freedom extant in America, and "brainwashing" on the part of the three great national news services engenders a non-cultural atmosphere.

According to Goodman, "Interlocking communications systems makes Jeffersonian democracy impossible," making the first harmful result. He suggested the establishment of a mass media tax to encourage and promote small stations, which would improve the quality and diversity of programming.

Secondly, "legal political machines are swallowed up by national political machines" creating an alliance between the corporations and the national government.

Thirdly, the coalition of the national machine with the national government in a national economy gives the worker the feeling that he is a "cog in a big machine."

Goodman then went on to name a series of cases where the three above occurred, focusing on the Fourness Doctrine which states that two sides of a controversial issue must be discussed if both sides buy time.

He castigated a New York channel which erased a tape of a David Suskind show concerned with sexual mores. "Blandness is an ideology (in America)," is a statement that pervades the thinking of the large networks, in Goodman's view.

Television has "no forthright discussion of sexual mores ... every soap opera has a SATURDAY EVENING POST sexual morality." Quoting the John Ford case in which the accused won $3 million from CBS after his blacklisting, Goodman used this as an example of a big corporation being irresponsible to its employees.

He called for "building decentralization into the mass media," and if necessary, a group of artists and writers boycotting a station that used censorship.

In the field of education, Goodman declared that the "rights of young people are being taken away" by being forced to school until he is 16 or 17. "Dormitory is the worst possible living for college students," he said, because it takes away their freedom.

SGA

dent, who asked that the SGA formally request the administration to review the policy by which students are held accountable for class during inclement weather.

The motion was obviously a result of the triple lashing the area has taken in the last two weeks from several storm fronts. Some areas of the campus had four feet of drifted snow last Monday.

One member of the Senate asked Griffin if he honestly thought students would come to school if they knew their cuts were going to be excused. He said he thought they would if they could get to the campus.

The main complaint heard among students was that after they made it to class there were no teachers. Bill McCloskey noted these are the same students who would be quite happy had the teacher not shown up some other day.

Under a policy announced last Winter by then University President Rev. John Klekotka OSA, Villanova is open every regular class day, regardless of the weather. This action was taken to obviate the necessity of calling the school or listening to the usually confusing list of school closings on the radio. Father Flaherty announced this Fall that this policy would be continued.

Advisor With Honors

By Dale Pappert

Dr. Robert J. Rowland, Jr. came to Villanova five years ago, and in this time has accomplished a great deal in his area. Recently given the task of Director of the Honors Program and Postgraduate Study Advisor, Dr. Rowland has come in contact with many of Villanova's best students.

In a recent interview he expressed views on his work, the students involved, and Villanova as an institution of higher learning.

After constant contact with the Honors Program since his arrival, Dr. Rowland is pleased with its quality and progress, although he emphasized the need for continual re-evaluation and improvement.

He expressed the aim of the program as the identification of talented students and the furthering of their education beyond what is normally required by giving them the opportunity to exploit their individual capabilities to the fullest.

In addition to improving these students' prospects of obtaining postgraduate scholarships and grants, he feels that the most of the Honors groups, having developed their abilities to think critically, will be capable of excelling in whatever careers they choose to pursue.

By this close association with the Honors program for four years, an easier transition will occur for them into the graduate program.

Commenting on the essence of an Honors program, Dr. Rowland finds such a program more than merely an overload of work. Intellectual stimulation and independent work are the main goals. Subject matter is concerned more with breadth and theory than with fact, which, however, cannot be underemphasized.

Innovations being considered for the program are the addition of a students' Honors Committee, which would serve as a liaison between the honors students and faculty and as a percolator of ideas from the students.

Another aspect of Dr. Rowland's activities is his work as Graduate Advisor. Graduate work at Villanova is on an upswing, as at least 300 seniors are considering postgraduate work. The creation of the Postgraduate Advisor's Office is a manifestation of the university's concern for its students, but he feels that an over emphasis on the graduate school at Villanova can only be harmful to our heritage as an undergraduate institution.

Former Academic Vice-Pres. Transcribes French Book

By Joe Sassani

Father Joseph Gildea OSA has recently completed the first volume of a two volume transcription of the Durmart le Galois, a French romance of the Arthurian Cycle. This work, the only one of its kind with an Irish setting, dates back to the late 12th or early 13th century.

To study the manuscript, Father Gildea travelled to Frebourg, Switzerland. While there, working alone, he completed 400 pages of textual transcription and is beginning the second volume consisting of notes and source material.

The enormity of this task can be seen by comparing the Durmart's 16,000 lines of text with the Chanson de Roland's 4,000.

Father Gildea's work is sorely needed by the literary world since the only other transcription of the Durmart dates back to 1872.

While researching the present manuscript, Father Gildea brought to light a 62 line fragment of a second manuscript in Carlisle, England. This fragment had been used as part of a book binding before it was preserved at Carlisle, so the rest of the manuscript has probably been lost or destroyed.

Before being relieved of his duties in 1963, in order to devote his full time to the Durmart, Father Gildea served as Academic Vice-President of Villanova. He had first come to Villanova in 1940 as a teacher of modern languages and held that position until 1947, when he became Academic Dean at Merrimack College. In 1959 he returned to become Villanova's Academic Vice-President.

Young Democrat Club Presents Kennedy Film Tomorrow Evening

The Young Democratic Club of Villanova University is presenting the award-winning movie THE MAKING OF THE PRESIDENT 1964 on Thursday evening, February 10, at 8 p.m. in room 110, Bartley Hall.

This film should be of interest to all, both faculty and students, as it is an interesting case study of the American process of government by the people.

Club President Tom Bruderle suggests that all those interested in joining the Young Democrats should see one of the officers after the meeting tomorrow night.

Valuable Manuscript On Marine Research Donated By Alumnus

A former Villanova biology major and an active member of the Gregor Mendel Biology Club, Sigmund Kardas, Jr., has sent the original manuscript of a research paper on ECHINOCARDIUM CORDATUM (Pennant), a type of irregular sea-urchin, to be preserved for the future use of students at Villanova.

The paper was begun while he was in Wilhelmshaven, West Germany at the Senckenberg Institute for Marine Sciences and was enlarged and completed as a result of further work at the Oceanographic Laboratory, Santander, Spain. Although the manuscript is in English, the paper was published in Spanish in the REAJ SOCIEDAD ESPANOLA de HISTORIA NATURAL (Biol.) 63:15-32 (1965).

Sigmund Kardas expressed his philosophy of education in the accompanying letter, which is reproduced in part below. "My only aim in any of the work that I have participated in was to gain more knowledge of the world in which I live, and to attempt to hand this knowledge down to others. How strange and foreign must the world appear to the materialist, constantly surrounded by things of Nature, 'worthless' things which are neither understood nor appreciated.

How frustrating must be the world of the 'luke-warm' student, who desires to understand his world -- or says that he does! -- but does nothing more than complain that he has 'no time,' '...only by DOING, by actively participating in the vibration of the Universe can one be in any way satisfied in life.' (S.K. 1/24/62)

With these words I wish to express my continuing interest and best wishes to the Gregor Mendel Club, and in particular to the students who should be benefitting from the facilities and activities of 'their' club."

On Second Thought

Bogie and Bat

With all the recognition that has been given to Humphrey Bogart as an existential symbol of today's college man, it is disheartening that the VILLANOVAN must resort to the camp courage of Batman and Robin.

Rather than finding the fiber to support their actions in personal strength, they are required to toss the Batrope around whatever goal they are seeking. Villanovans do not maintain their cool; it was never there. Instead they transport their high school vocabulary to the college campus and build their 4 years out of a masked creation trying to outwit the Riddler and outlaugh the Joker.

Their challenge is to find Robin in a bottle, but if they respond instead to the challenges of getting Lazlo out of the country, the gold out of Mexico and even as a last resort getting Sabrina out of Long Island, they would be better demonstrating that which will be needed in the future.

We need the creature comforts of the Batmobile when we should be able to make due with a 1937 touring car. We should not need the Batzooka but should be able to rely upon a trusty Thompson as we come screaming around the corner.

HOBGOBBLINS VANQUISHED

We are too much concerned with vanquishing the hobgobblins which we create for ourselves on campus, rather than with destroying the Rogues Gallery, which the Brothers Warner throw at us away fron the Main Line Preserve.

We are more concerned with Bruce Wayne's clever expletive than with Lorre's sneer; more caught up in the light in the sky over Gotham city than with the Greenstreet's chuckle.

We hide our Gant shirts and Brooks ties beneath flowing capes and rodent's masks. It should trouble us more that we have no song, than that there is one which we do not want them to play.

We let Batman take all the credit, although without Robin he would be only another gangbuster running around in leotards. But with Robin he is half of a dynamic duo; a caped crusader against the forces of sanity.

MENTAL BATCAVE

Instead he should be locked up in the batcave of our minds, where our vampire creations rest, waiting to spring forward, kiss funny, and leave holes.

Bogart, however, left no holes. He left only the realization that one man could be both Spade and Queen at the same time. Needing only himself and a cause to which he could be true, Bogart overcame the forces arrayed against him, whether good or bad, secure in the knowledge that not even Pat O'Brien could destroy him with his cancerous kindness.

Only one American figure manages to tower above Batman, Robin, Bogart, and, yes, even Dick Diver, and that is, of course, Joel Chandler Harris, who recognized that all of life, and even this, is writ ironic.

'Camp' Lamp Is Lit

By Bill McCloskey

"If you can't send the boy to camp, why not send the camp to the boy." Someone must have said that once. The way we figure it was either Herb Lipson, publisher of the GREATER PHILADELPHIA MAGAZINE or whoever it was who came up with the idea of Batman on the tube.

Both GREATER PHILADELPHIA and WFIL have rather widespread audiences at Villanova, but Batman brings out the greatest reaction from the masses.

Wednesdays and Thursdays are special times at Villanova's Pie Shoppe. Suddenly it doesn't matter that the machine is out of seltzer and there are no cokes. No one could care less if Betty, Mary or Jane is sitting at the table next to that marvelous moving wall that didn't close for a week. WWVU could have more static than ever; Jimmy could be stealing that not quite completed piece of chocolate layer cake. Nothing matters. Bruce and "boy wonder," AWK, are on the air.

Not since the World Series have so many Villanovans ignored their studies in favor of the Pie Shoppe TV set.

We understand of course that you can watch Batman on any television set that gets "The Big 6." In fact on some you can see purple smoke come from his umbrella. But, in the "pie" Robin and friend are something else.

"Why so" you say. (That was the first indication to us that you are a dayhop).

Well, for openers, no place else can 200 Villanovans gather for such esthetic enjoyment. Not since Orwell have so many animals been in one room. Not since Joe Phipps has there been an excuse to watch VHF (UHF is camp).

Those placards with POW, ZAP, KRUNCH, and AWK emblazoned across the screen are the true gems. Not since Colt .45 has there been such a truly unique experience.

Those two-hundred voices, (which haven't joined together since "Hello, Pie Shoppe" in Freshman year), do what comes naturally, they holler the sounds spelled out on the screen.

This is marvelous enough, but the true gems are the clairvoyants right up there under the set who can "tell" what is coming next, they're one ZAP ahead of the gang (THAT, my fellow Villanovans, is camp).

Most people who hear of this strange gathering in front of the tube usually go once to marvel, then they're hung on it. They've got to come back tomorrow night to see if "Boy Wonder" gets out of the current predicament.

The really ardent campfollower can leave the Pie Shoppe with a 20 cent orange (very camp) read the GREATER PHILADELPHIA until 9:15, turn to WIP for Colonel Updraft (he was shot through the heart four times over Christmas vacation, gang) and then listen to WWVU to hear the alma mater at midnight, followed by the national anthem (how camp can you get).

New York may be a summer festival but Villanova is a winter camp.

a basic service motivation?
a certain flexibility?
a lack of prejudice?
a certain degree of adventurousness?
a sense of idealism?

Why not the

PEACE CORPS?

Computerized Retreats

The relation between a man and his God is a private and sacred thing. Once a year the chaplain's office intercedes with the university to give the student two days to reflect upon his interior situation. This is a retreat, a retreat from the world in order to understand this fragile balance called religion.

The practical result of this retreat should be an active offense against himself, his weaknesses and lax habits, and for an improved self, as well as an updated, improved confrontation with the world.

All too often the student looks forward to the retreat because of the excused cuts from classes while the teachers dread it because of the work which must be made up later in the course. For the student, it means fewer classes; for the teacher, same work, fewer classes. The general result seems to be a flowering apathy.

The VILLANOVAN is not in favor of mass I.B.M. -do-not-bend-spindle-mutilate-or-fold retreats. Scheduling the retreats by college instead of by class was a good idea since it partially solves the teachers' problem who have both Junior and Senior, or Sophomore and Freshmen in the same class. But this does not solve the students' problem.

How does one communicate with his God, amidst 500 or more squirming bodies, thinking of that last beer, that last card -- anything but the Last Judgment?

We propose to make the retreat required, but not on a mass scale; simply requiring the student to make one retreat during the year, whether it is at his parish church, a closed retreat made at a local retreat house or the campus chapel. We would recommend next the discontinued use of the computer cards as religious credit cards entitling the student to one salvation in return for attendance at several devotions.

All this is directed toward an eventually voluntary retreat in which the student may have a private confrontation with his creator. The bulletin of the university states that "the University gives prominence to the study of the Christian religion and regards the moral training of its students as a prime commitment."

We feel that private closed retreats are in keeping with this tradition. The chaplain's office inaugurated closed retreats at St. Mary's this year for anyone who would like to escape the exodus to the Field House. A step across the road plus the payment of a small stipend earns one escape from the masses plus a retreat for two days "far from the madding crowd" in order to bring back to that world a fresh outlook upon the monotony of sameness.

Is a new outlook for the new you worth a weekend? Is God worth a weekend?

SGA Press Conference

By Tom Dabney

Steve Freind, recently reinstated SGA President, held his first press conference last Thursday in the training room in Dougherty Hall. The gathering, the second of its kind in Villanova history, presented a chance for the student as well as the press to cover the major issues concerning the SGA this semester and its projected plans.

Freind opened by covering the high points of a soon to be distributed SGA newsletter. Many of the issues mentioned, according to Freind, were mentioned previously in the Council but never carried through to completion.

The leading issues under discussion were: a course and teacher evaluation, currently under consideration by the Administration to iron out discrepancies, which will hopefully be made available early in April; an extensive investigation of complaints of the Resident Cafeteria system; the initiation of a Student Loan Service to the amount of $15 per month to the student; and an expanded Speakers' Forum representing a wider and more diverse program.

Others were: a revamped Campus Elections procedure; the correction of the present errors in the undergraduate listings of the Student Directory; and finally, bus trips to away basketball games, aiming at building the Wildcat spirit.

Freind, responding to the question of the most important issue before the Congress now, said it was without a doubt the course and teacher evaluations. He said further that the Council's participation in this matter was more a responsibility than a gesture to the students. He added that a poll taken several years ago by the Congress, showed 75 per cent backing by the faculty. The evaluation, which will represent a one in four sampling of the student body, will ask some 25 objectively oriented questions.

Freind, queried on the biggest obstruction that the Congress faces, answered that it was a Congress that "shirked from responsibility to seek the security of mediocrity." He said that this, coupled with a great degree of student apathy, provided a greater hindrance and drawback than any other single thing.

He answered a question on the feasibility of having the Day-hop Cafeteria opened for the majority of the day by saying he would attempt to have it at least opened on Thursdays for activity period and then work from there. He was asked also to comment on the condition of the Used Book Exchange, the filing of exams, and the snow removal problem.

He said the Used Book Exchange had failed to realize the profit of the previous semester because letters concerning its operation were held up in the mailing room and subsequently did not reach students before returning to register for the second semester. He also blamed the past SGA Administration for not contacting students before they went home. The filing of exams will be completed when all the exams of the second semester last year and the first semester of this year have been gathered completely. The snow removal question has been dealt with, he said, in that he had sent a letter to Father Curran concerning possible ways of expediting the procedure and expressing student concern.

Controversial 'Sign' Begins Run at Society Hill-West

"The Sign in Sidney Brustein's Window" by Lorraine Hansberry will open at Society Hill Playhouse - West, 22nd and Walnut Streets, on Thursday, February 3 at 8:00 P.M. This wonderful warm funny play ran on Broadway last season, and represents an outstanding Philadelphia premiere for the Society Hill Playhouse current season. "The Sign in Sidney Brustein's Window" will play Friday and Saturday evenings through March 5.

"The Sign in Sidney Brustein's Window" is basically an urban play and one of ideas. Set in Greenwich Village, it shines with humor and ends with affirmation. From casual beginnings, light and humorous, the play becomes Sidney Brustein's personal odyssey of discovery, a confrontation with others in the process of which he discovers himself. When it opened in New York, the play caused much controversy, and continued to run because of the ardent support of the general public and the theatrical community who refused to let the management close the play.

Miss Hansberry is best known for her Critic Circle Award Play, "Raisin in the Sun." She was deeply committed to everyday living, and throughout her short life, insisted that she was not a Negro playwright but a writer who happened to be a Negro. During the writing and rehearsal of "The Sign in Sidney Brustein's Window," Miss Hansberry was in and out of the hospital for two years, and on Jan. 12, 1965 at the age of 34 she died of cancer. On that night, "The Sign of Sidney Brustein's Window" also closed on Broadway.

Reservations for "The Sign in Sidney Brustein's Window" may be made at PE 5-0574. Society Hill Playhouse-West is only open on performance evenings but information and tickets may be gotten any day from 12 noon until nine at the central box office, at Society Hill Playhouse, 507 S. 8th Street.

Maff's Musings

By Joe Maffongelli

Things looked rather bleak last summer when the word went around that Billy Soens would not be back to handle the "big" man's job for the Wildcat cagers this season. This, coupled with the fact that Charlie Coleman was still ineligible, seemed to spell only disaster for the 'Cats. Well, as bad as things did look many critics failed to realize one thing; that is, Jack Kraft is the head coach. Such phrases as "witch Kraft" and "black Cat magic" do not just come about. No, rather they are applied only after the individual has performed the kind of feats which make such labels thoroughly appropriate.

Although Coach Kraft was not the only asset on hand -- there was also a wizard named Billy Melchionni and a guy named Schaffer -- we must realize that the 'Cats were given little hope for finishing above the .500 mark. Whether or not they do, they have certainly come far along--enough to be considered worthy of the Blue and White which they wear. Such boys as Kev Traynor, Frank Gaidjunas, and Terry McGuire were even called "dead weight" by some, but now here they are as integral parts of, at the very least, a real good ball club. Our congratulations to all of them.

Frosh Revenge Former Loss By Stomping LaSalle 84-62

By Jerry Bruderle

The Super-Team is dead! Long live the Super Team! That just about sums up the reaction of many fans who saw Villanova's freshmen destroy the highly publicized La Salle frosh 84-62 in the Field House last week. The Explorers' freshmen squad was supposed to be the second-best team in the country to Lew Alcindor's U.C.L.A. team, but as the DAILY NEWS said in their headline last week, "Would You Believe Third Best?"

The 'Cats got an outstanding performance from George May (29 points) and the usual fine game from Johnny Jones (25 points). They "held" Bernie Williams to 19 points and Larry Cannon to 15, and they broke the game open with an 18-4 streak midway through the second half.

But when you come right down to it the 'Cats won because of the job they did on the boards, outrebounding the taller Explorers by 21. Jim McIntosh, who was badly outplayed in the earlier game at La Salle, came up with 19 rebounds and he outplayed and outleaped Isiah King. Jones, who sat out most of the earlier game with foul trouble, came up with 17 rebounds. May, who didn't even start in the first La Salle game, pulled down 14. Stan Wlodarczyk was high man for the game with 21, but none of the other Explorers came close to that.

Offensively the big story was May, the 6-4 graduate of Lincoln High where he and McIntosh were both overshadowed by the high-scoring Cannon. It was May and McIntosh who broke the game open after Cannon had hit three baskets to cut Villanova's lead to six points, 54-49 early in the second half. Then, after Jones hit two foul shots, May hit a jumper, "Mac" got a layup and then followed up a missed shot, and then May followed up another missed shot and then hit another jumper. Then Jones hit two jumpers and Bobby Melchionni stole the ball and hit another jumper.

Meanwhile La Salle got only two layups -- one by Cannon and one by Joe Markmann. The 'Cats had a 63-43 lead and the fans were wondering whether people had been kidding about La Salle.

La Salle never got closer than 17 points after that and May added insult to injury late in the game by scoring three unmolested layups after getting behind the Explorer defense on three fast breaks.

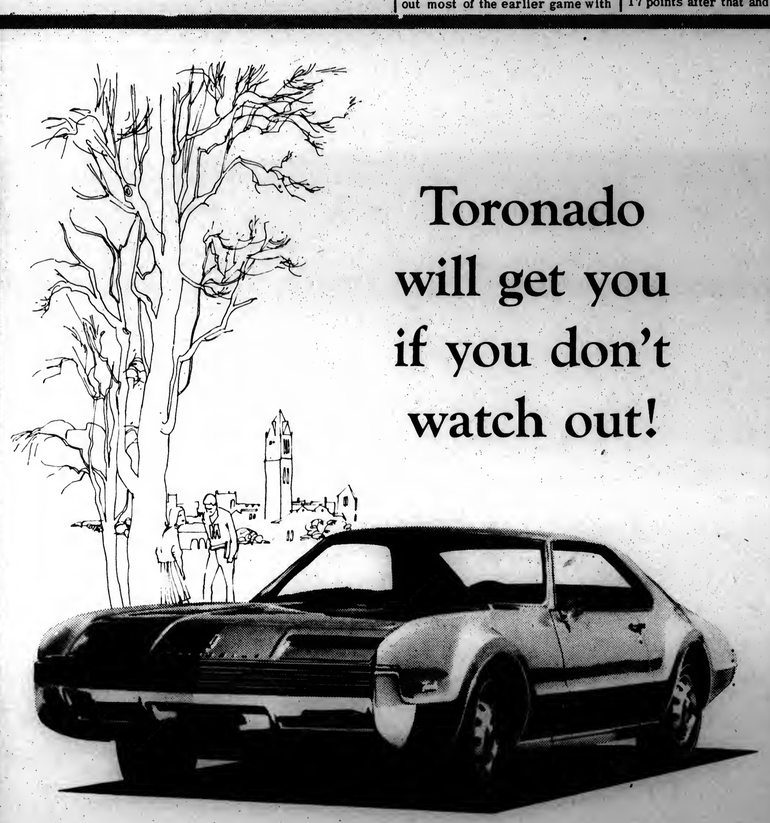
Coach Jack Devine stayed almost exclusively with his first five until near the end of the game when 3,200 fans stood up and told him, "It's all over!" Then, one by one the starters went out each to the tune of a standing ovation.

First Jones, who has been hitting his awkward jumper with machine-like accuracy all season long. Then Melchionni went out with 14 points and numerous assists and steals, (only St. Joe's counts steals). Then McIntosh went out after doing a job on King and scoring 10 points himself. Then May got the biggest ovation. The only one who was left was Frank Gillen who scored little (four points), but he ran the 'Cats offense and controlled the ball the way Wally Jones used to do a few years ago.

For those of you who were wondering what's so great about Larry Cannon and what Bernie Williams was doing taking 35-foot jump shots it must be remembered that LaSalle did beat Villanova 63-54 last month and that Williams broke the game open by hitting those same 35 and 40-foot jumpers consistently. The fact that he and Cannon were off was due a good bit to Villanova's defense. But if Cannon and Williams keep their grades up to the standards required of the La Salle student -athlete, then you'll be hearing a lot more from those two future stars.

The thing is that Villanova's frosh had heard too much about the Super-Team. So now the Super-Team is dead. Long live the Super-Team!

Wrestling Tournament Set For Feb. 28 -Mar. Open to All Students



By Jack McGarvey

Because many students have shown a considered interest, the Intramural Department has inaugurated a Wrestling Tournament open to all students of Villanova University. The head of the Intramural Department, Mr. Ed Geisz, will supervise the entire tourney, which will run from February 28 to March 3. Trophies will be presented to each individual champion of the following weights: 123, 130, 137, 142, 148, 154, 162, 171, 180, and heavyweight.

All matches will run a total of six minutes or until the first pin. Preliminary bouts will be held in the Field House during the afternoons of February 28, March 1, and March 2. The final and championship round, due to a retreat conflict, will be held in Alumni Gym on Thursday, March 3 at 8:15 p.m. All matches will be held on regulation size mats, and the finals will be refereed by an NCAA official.

Anyone interested in participating in the tournament need not have any previous wrestling experience. However, each contestant must weigh exactly or below the weight in which he enters on the day of his match. A one pound leeway will be given for the final round.

For further information, entry blanks and rules may be picked up in the Intramural Office in Alumni Gym. All forms must be completed and returned by Friday, February 25 in order to arrange a wrestling schedule to be posted Monday morning, February 28 on the "General" bulletin board in Dougherty Hall.

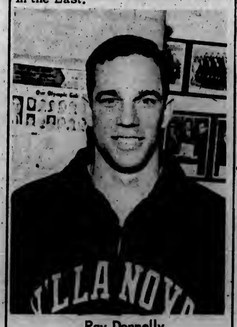
Tigers Backwash 'Cat Mermen Quakers Should Eat More Oats

By Bob McIntyre

Villanova's swimming team was sunk on Saturday afternoon by a powerful Princeton squad who won their 8th meet in a row by a score of 60-35, at the Villanova pool inside the Field House.

The unbeaten Tigers of the Ivy League showed a lot of talent but had nothing that could stop Villanova's Mike Fitzmaurice. Fitzmaurice, who is swimming two or three races a meet and winning them handily, seems to be prepared to meet a relatively unknown from Yale, by the name of Schollander.

Rumor has it that Schollander who was stricken with infectious mononucleosis last year, is swimming at top form and is willing and able to back up his reputation as the only person in history to win four Olympic Gold medals. He and Fitzmaurice will hit the water on Feb. 26 at 3:00, when Yale visits the Wildcats at home. It should be an interesting day to say the least.



Fitzmaurice, a former Malvern Prep star, won the 200 yard freestyle in a fast 1:47.4 and the 100 yard freestyle in 48.3. He also swam the third leg on the Cats winning 400 yard freestlye relay team. The three other members were Bill Musico, Joe Parell, and Captain Ray Donnelly.

Bill "Wildman" Livingood won his specialty, the 200 yard backstroke, in 2:09.3 to give the Cats their only other place against Princeton.

On Feb. 2, it was a different story as the Wildcats won easily over the University of Pennsylvania 61-34. at the Hutchinson pool.

Soph Chip Friday won the 200 yard butterfly by nipping Captain Donnelly in the time of 2:18.2.

Bill Biese and Bill Bohrmann found the diving conditions favorable and finished 1-2 to prove again they will take on any divers in the East.

Ray Donnelly

Mike Fitzmaurice swam the 200 yard medley against Penn and won in the time of 2:04.9 and then settled back to watch the 400 yard medley team of Doherty, Hoffman, Friday and Doyle, finish first 4:04.4.

FROSH

The Freshmen led by Bill Hartye, also won easily 58-36 over Penn's yearlings. Hartye, another star of the future, swam three of the toughest races in swimming in one afternoon and won them all. The events, the Trinity H.S. grad won, were the 200 yard freestyle and the 200 yard butterfly, plus the 500 yd. freestyle.

On the 26th of Jan., the Villanova mermen were upset by a strong Rutgers team 54-43 in the Wildcats home pool. The only light that shone inside the pool that day for the Wildcats was Mike Fitzmaurice, who took both the 200 and the 500 yard freestyles, for a strong double victory.

Coach Geisz expects the Cats 3-4 record to swing into the victory column again as soon as the times of some of his swimmers begins to break down a little. The Wildcats go against Navy, N. Y. U., and Yale in upcoming meets of interest.

Wildcats Need Rebuilding But Potential Is Evident

By Aurel Villari

If we are to correctly describe the progress of the current track season as "slow but steady," we should also wish to dispel any pessimistic misconceptions which may be caused by doing so. This season, as Allie Sherman is accustomed to say, is one of "rebuilding" for the 'Cat trackmen, much in the same way that it is for the Jack Kraft's boys.

The reasons for this situation on both fronts are similar: the loss of such stars as Carroll and Sullivan has hurt Jim Eliot's squad as much as the departure of stalwarts Jones and Washington has inevitably weakened the Kraftmen; "Jumbo" Jim's crew is basically a young team, needing only experience to season its potential -- which is substantially the same situation which Jack Kraft is currently facing.

Eliot has but three experienced upperclassmen returning to the wars: Honner, Coniglio, and Heidelberger. The rest of the Varsity is composed mostly of sophomores who, although having a great amount of potential, need more time and experience to realize their top form.

Although Eliot is forced to admit that losing the likes of Carroll and Sullivan and others can only be a detriment, he is nevertheless confident that by the time the IC4A's roll around, March 4, Villanova will be sufficiently strong to be rated as a good dark horse entry.

The 2-mile relay team is composed of Jack O'Leary, Charlie Messinger, Jan Hamilton and Dave Patrick, who is the anchor man. Their best effort to date yielded a time of 7:37.4, which is good, though it can't stand next to the world indoor and outdoor records set by last-year's Villanova squad for the 2-mile race. The estimated potential of this all-sophomore unit is about 7:23. Here, again, is where the matter of experience will be a telling factor.

Anchor-man Patrick has contributed a low of 1:51.1, while Hamilton and O'Leary have run legs of 1:52.5 and 1:55.8, respectively, in competition held two weeks ago in the Boston K of C Meet. In this same meet, Charlie Messenger ran the 2-mile course in a good time of 9:01.8.

Ken Coniglio, high school world-record holder, is running fine this season, and seems to have really come into his own. Coniglio set a new school record in the Melrose Games held at New York, by flying over the 60-yard hurdles course in 7.2 seconds. Coniglio has placed in all three finals so far: 3rd in the Melrose Games, 4th in the K of C meet at Boston, and 5th in the Boston A.A. Boston A.A.

The 1-mile relay squad is composed of Earl Horner, Harold Nicter, Ken Prince and Heidelberger. Heidelberger serves as the anchor man. The best time the boys have attained thus far is 3:20.4, with a probable future potential of about 3:18.5. Nicter has run a 48.7, Prince a flat 49, and Heidelberger a 49.2 leg.

It must be stressed that although the times set by the 1- and 2-mile relay teams are not spectacular, their times do drop consistently week after week. Again the effects of practice and experience cannot be ignored.

In the pole-vaulting department, Vince Bizzaro, Bill Martin and George Conway are all expected to reach the 15-foot mark by the commencement of the IC4A Championships on March 4.

It is "Jumbo's" policy this year, as it has been in the past, to try to reach a peak by the time of the IC4A's.

Wildkitten dunks two points to revenge earlier loss against LaSalle.

Hot 'Cats Freeze 'Dukes; Outlast Fairfield 'Stags'

By John DiGennaro

The Wildcats, staging a late season drive for an NIT bid, are currently riding the crest of a four game winning streak while regaining the .500 mark for the first time since the Princeton game. Spearheaded by their All-American captain, Bill Melchionni, and a hustling and vastly improved Frank Gaidjunas, last week the 'Cats made Duquesne and Fairfield their eighth and ninth victims.

Last Wednesday, Coach Red Manning led his Dukes from the cold and snow in Pittsburgh to a snowy cold reception from a sparse, but highly partial, Palestra crowd of about 2400. The big freeze continued, with an assist from a hounding Wildcat defense, as the Dukes only managed 60 points, and saw Frank Miniotas and Jim Smith, two 17 ppg. performers, held to five field goals and 12 points between them.

Villanova, led by Bill Melchionni's 32 points and seven assists, spurted to an early lead, weathered a mid-game slump, then coasted home to an impressive 83-60 win. Frank Gaidjunas, improving more with each game, chipped in 15 points while snagging rebounding honors, again with 15. Bernie Schaffer and Joe Crews added 24 points and 15 rebounds between them, and for the second straight game the 'Cats were able to clear their bench.

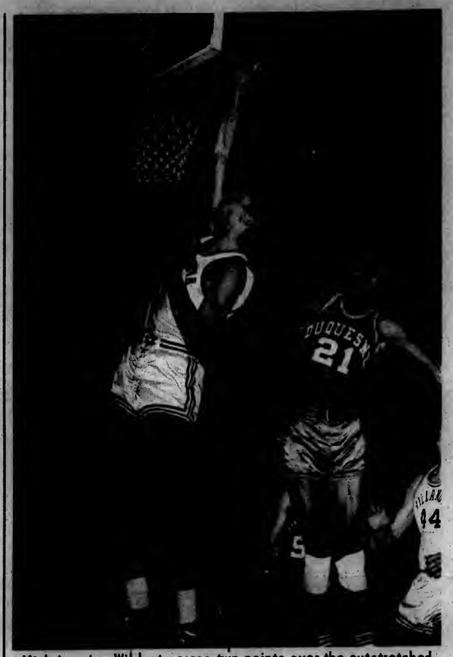
Ahead by as many as 15 points in the first half, the 'Cats saw their lead chopped to 4 before Melchionni hit 6 straight points giving them a 37-29 halftime lead. During the Dukes' surge the Wildcats were held to 2 free throws in about 8 minutes.

After another slow stretch at the beginning of the second half, the 'Cats once again found the touch, and went on to outscore the Dukes 46-31 in wrapping up their eighth victory. Ron Guziak led the losers with 26.

Saturday's opener, one of the year's better twinbills at the Palestra, pitted the Stags of Fairfield, looking for their 14th straight, against the Villanova Wildcats, seeking their 4th in a row. The 'Cats, putting on one of their most aggressive defensive displays this season, held the high-scoring visitors to a lowly 31.9 percent from the floor while chalking up a 61-55 victory.

The Wildcats, striking fast, never allowed Fairfield to get untracked, and led from buzzer to buzzer. Billy Melchionni turned in another sterling performance, taking game honors with 26 points while feeding off for 14 more. Jim Brown led an abortive second half rally, and wound up high man for the Stags with 17.

Villanova, with Melchionni hitting for 11 of their first 21, streaked to a quick 13 point bulge before Fairfield changed its tactics. Following a time out they came out in a box and one with Burke on Melchionni. Billy was held to 3 for the rest of the half, but Crews, Gaidjunas, and Coleman chipped in, and the 'Cats took the 13 into the dressing room, leading at half time 31-18.



With 11:25 left to be played the Stags had narrowed the lead to 39-31. With their floor game sputtering, and their lead dwindling, the 'Cats seemed in dire need of help, and got more than enough from Larry Livers. Larry, coming off the bench, saw his first shot go in and out, then hit three clutch baskets in a row giving the 'Cats some all important points and keeping the lead above five.

With 53 seconds left the score stood 55-51, the closest Fairfield had been since the opening minutes. However, Frank Gaidjunas hit the first of a crucial one and one, and a few seconds later Melchionni added two more, building the lead to 7, and putting the game on ice.

Roundup: With seven games left in the regular season Melchionni is leading the team in scoring with 474 points neatly wrapped in a 26.4 average. Bernie Schaffer is leading in the rebounding department with 7.9 a game, while his 10.8 average puts him second in scoring. Joe Crews is third with 10.2; and Frank Gaidjunas is fourth in scoring at 8.8, and second in rebounding with a 7.5 average.

The ballplayers are determined to take the last seven so they can invite you to the NIT again. Let's get behind them and show them we want to go.

Special tribute should go out to Coach Kraft for the excellent job he has done this year. His fine coaching has enabled us to watch the birth of a ball team as it was moulded from unknown potential into a solid, two-way unit.

'Cat Lacrosse Season Approaches With Hope Of Winning Record

The Lacrosse season is approaching and Villanova's Lacrosse Club anticipates it to be a prosperous one. Riding high on top of an eight wins-one loss record last year, the stickmen hope to continue their eight game winning streak.

Fortunately the three starting attackmen on last year's squad will be functioning together once again. Jim Ryan, Ed McFadden and Rich Hook comprise the offensive trio that saw the 'Cats secure wins in all but the opening game last year.

Sophomores Rich Hook and Ed McFadden received national scoring honors as a result of the 1965 season. Hook was second in the nation in scoring with 42 goals netted while McFadden gained the distinction of tying for second in the nation in the assist department. He caused 47 goals by passing the ball and setting up immediate scores.

This fine scoring punch with the assistance of the mid-field and defensive units carried the fifth consecutive Lacrosse season at Villanova to its best on record.

Coach Gene Melcher, class of '63, expects a winning season but he will not commit himself to any kind of prediction. He would rather wait and get the job done first, and then praise or correct his team's actions.

All interested persons are invited to come to watch the team practice 4 to 5:30 p.m. weekdays on the basketball courts next to the Field House. Those wishing to play Lacrosse are asked to make themselves known to coach Melcher or captains Ray Hollander or Rich Santoro.

Since the Lacrosse team is a self-supported club new members are welcome. The past has shown all members play regardless of ability. It is a true team effort that brought such a successful season last year.

V.U. Ice Hockey Club Returns With Nucleus Of Last Year's Squad

The pre-season outlook for the 1966 Villanova Ice Hockey Club is encouraging. With the departure of only one member of last year's team, a solid nucleus remains around which a winning team can be built.

Thus far the team has had six practices and skaters such as Bob Birmingham, Dean Goodwin, and Brian O'Shea. They have received assistance from their new faculty-coach, Gordon Storholm who is now preparing them for their first game of the season.

The late-night practices are not appealing to the members of the team but their morale has been bolstered by the turn-out. Many sophomores and juniors who were previously unable to play are now playing regularly.

Again, as in the past, monetary problems beset the team since they must pay for practice and game time on the ice. However, with expected financial assistance from the University, the chances for a successful season are favorable.

Shooters Lose to Army After Winning Eight

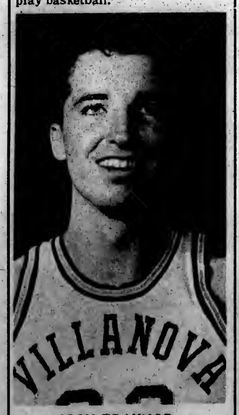
By Frank Miller

The sharpshooting Wildcat Pistol Team was barely nipped in its upset bid over Army, one of the nation's strongest squads, by a 2276-2268 count. This was the first loss for the 'Cats this year after a string of eight straight victories. This loss dropped the Marksmen into second place in the Northeast Intercollegiate Pistol Conference, and continued Army's jinx over Villanova. The Wildcats have never defeated the Cadets.

ALL-AMERICANS

The pistol team is coached by Sgt. Migliacci U.S.M.C., and is one of the least known sports on the V.U. campus. The team's top gun is N.R.A. All-American Jim Bushong. But he is not the only outstanding marksman on the team. He is joined by All-Americans Ted Laven and Tony Mascia, Jim Durborow is also rated as an outstanding All-American prospect. Other outstanding team members are "sophs to watch" Chuck Croney, Bill McGettigan, Marty Plante, and Mike Reitan.

Even though the 'Cats have never beaten either one of the two major Service Academies, Sgt. Migliacci is "looking forward to dumping Navy" this coming Saturday.



2 LEAGUES

The squad is entered in two leagues. One is the N.I.P.C. in which the Wildcats have soundly trounced the University of Massachusetts, Rutgers, The Merchant Marine Academy, the Coast Guard Academy, and M.I.T. The other conference is the Delaware Valley League in which V.U. is the strong candidate for top spot laurels. Strong competition should be offered by Delaware State, Delaware County, West Chester, and Holmesburg. The markesmen league mark is 1-0, after clobbering Valley Forge.

Hidden Hero

By Steve Kyne

Before the recently nationally televised St. John's game, the commentator related the "heart warming" story of a boy who had been cut from his high school team and had the guts to continue playing in the hope that he would someday make the college ranks. This boy was Kevin Traynor and needless to say his determination has paid off both for himself and the '65 Wildcats. This aura of determination pervades all of his activities, but it is most evident when he takes the floor to play basketball.

IGGY TRAYNOR

He is determined on offense when he drives up for the quick lay-up and on defense when he almost appears to be the ball handler's Siamese twin. It is this determination that has brought Traynor up from the ranks of a bench rider to this year's starting five.

Last season Iggy played in the shadow of a pair of guards that added up to one of the best one - two punches in Villanova history -- Bill Melchionni and George Lefwitch. Traynor saw only limited action since both of these players had All-America potential, but the little action he did see was enough to whet his appetite for bigger and better things.

He was determined to make his last year at Villanova something to remember and has done so by becoming a starter and aiding the 'Cats in a year when the basketball diagnosis looked anything but healthy.

Even now that he has made it big, Kevin is still the quiet type. You won't see him listed with the high-scorers or heroes because he plays with the idea of getting the ball and giving it to the man with the clear shot. If the fans and the press ever made a big thing of assists then you just know that Traynor would be their man.

Another of Kevin's talents that has enlivened many a game is his acting ability that enables him to draw offensive fouls from an opposing player. There is rarely a game that one does not see him somersault backwards or sprawled out on the floor boards. It has been hinted that if there was an Oscar given in this category, the name of Kevin Traynor would top the balloting every year.

It is this kind of spirit that Kevin Traynor carries into every game and this sense of determination on his part and from the rest of the team that has helped to salvage a decent record from a season that many thought would be the worst in the recent history of Villanova basketball.

Charles Murphy, who created quite a stir at the last Congress meeting, asks questions as to the motives behind the firing of Brendan Moore as chairman of the Spirit Committee. Charges of a 'political deal' were levelled by Murphy.

Political Charges Prevail At Last Congress Meeting

by Bill McCloskey

Charges of "political dictatorship and backstabbing" disrupted normal procedure of last Wednesday's Student Government meeting as supporters of Brenden Moore protesting the method of his ouster as head of the spirit committee.

The charges were leveled primarily by Charles Murphy, an off campus room-mate of Moore's, who read an account of the events which he said led up to the dismissal of Moore by SGA President Steve Freind.

(Moore was dropped from the post last Monday for what Vice-President Bob Dean called "a lot of problems in the last two weeks" including being "extremely lax and not making any effort".)

Murphy said the method of dismissal went beyond all grounds of propriety.

According to Murphy, the ouster came over the telephone following a lengthy discussion between Moore and Dean. Then, Murphy said, Steve Freind took over the telephone to tell Moore, "you're fired" ... "you're through".

According to Dean, this came after a brief discourse between Moore and Freind.

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

Midway through the 72 minute free for all Moore spoke on the floor. He enumerated his defenses to three specific charges made by Bob Dean earlier in the melee. Moore said "when Dean took over as Vice-President he informed me that the Basketball Club (a sub-committee of the spirit group) would have complete authority during the basketball season. I therefore believed that the basketball club would be taking care of the rally". Dean had charged that Moore had not conducted requested rallys.

After the meeting, Dean told the VILLANOVAN he sent a memo two weeks prior to the dismissal, calling for a joint rally sponsored by the Basketball Club and the Spirit Committee. The memo went to Fusco and Moore. Moore later told Dean that it was his impression the memo said it was to be a basketball club rally only.

In answering the charges made by Murphy, Dean also said Moore had not carried out plans for a bus

Logue Announces Candidacy In Local Congressional Race

by Dale Pappart

Professor John J. Logue, a member of the Department of Political Science, announced last Friday that he will seek the Democratic nomination for congressman from Delaware County.

A resident of Swarthmore, Logue said that the Swarthmore Democratic Committee voted unanimously to put his name before the County screening committee as a candidate for the nomination.

Ernani C. Falcone, Democratic County chairman, when notified of Logue's announcement noted that he had been "very impressive" in a recent appearance before the Haverford Township Democratic Committee. He noted that Logue is "very articulate and has much respect within the party and, if selected, would make an extremely effective candidate for Congress."

In his statement, Logue attacked the County's Republican Board of Supervisors (the War Board) and his would-be opponent this fall, Representative G. Robert Watkins for "living in the past and greeting every new program with fear and suspicion."

When asked why he decided to seek the nomination, Logue cited "among other things" the fear that "Delaware County is losing its suburban characteristics in much the same way as the Long Island suburbs of New York City lost theirs."

He said that he believed the County should prepare plans for conservation, mass transit and urban renewal for if "you sit back the future will roll all over you."

He continued, "the Kennedy and Johnson Administrations have devised and written into law a whole range of programs which are geared to the needs of the suburban counties."

Logue also charged the War Board with a "lack of active political leadership" toward these problems and promised to deal "with issues not personalities" in bringing these issues to the attention of the voters.

Class Elections Set For March 10 and 24 By Chairman Valva

George Valva, Chairman of Elections Committee has announced that this year's dates for Nomination and Elections have been set at March 10 and March 24 respectively.

Due to a large number of proposed changes this year Valva has indicated that there will be a meeting for all those interested in running for office on March 3 to acquaint all prospective candidates with the new regulations. The time and place of this meeting and of nominations will be adequately publicized.

The goals of this year's Elections Committee is not only to get out the greatest voter percentage in the history of Villanova, (Ed. Note: The record now stands at .) but to get out a well-informed vote of both the issues and the candidates. Measures have been taken to insure the success of these goals.

Transportation Institute To Be Formulated At V.U.

by Steve Buck

The formation of an "institute for Transportation Studies" at Villanova University was announced last week by the Very Rev. Joseph A. Flaherty, OSA, University President.

Villanova has been offering transportation courses for the past two years and has been conducting wide research in the field. The Institute will be conducted at the graduate level and will be devoted exclusively to the study of transportation.

The Institute will be the first of its kind in the East, Texas A & M, University of California at Berkeley and Northwestern are the only other schools in the nation offering similar studies.

Dr. James J. Schuster, a member of Villanova's Department of Civil Engineering, has been named Director of the Institute. He holds the Doctor's degree in transportation studies. Schuster is an alumnus of Villanova and did his graduate work at Purdue.

Father Flaherty said the Institute will not only educate students for transportation planning but will provide facilities for research and development in transportation.

To be known as the "Institute for Transportation Studies," it will operate with 13 faculty members embracing a number of fields including: Electronics, Geography, Sociology, Economics, Engineering, Psychology, Materials, Statistics and City and Regional Planning.

Schuster said, "Villanova is in an excellent position to undertake this type of program. By its geographical position it finds itself in the center of the Boston to Washington Corridor which represents one of the most highly developed areas of our country."

Villanova's proximity to Philadelphia, which has every conceivable type of transportation, is seen as another advantage by the new Institute director.

In addition, Villanova's Civil Engineering Department has, for many years, been involved in a study of construction materials normally used in various aspects of the transportation industry.

This research has centered around "The stabilization of highway and airfield bases and subgrades;" "Analysis of Pavement Performance" and the "Properties of Asphalt." The University Civil Engineering Department is well qualified for the administration of a transportation program.

A minimum of $250,000 for special facilities is being sought from interested foundations over a three-year period.

New Schedule Provokes Comment

by Joe Sassani

One of the innovations introduced into Villanova during the past year is the new schedule of classes. To accommodate this new system, classes start earlier in September than they did in previous years and the Christmas holidays have been extended to a month-long vacation, encompassing semester break and the normal Christmas break.

In an effort to discover student reaction to the new schedule, the VILLANOVAN sampled student opinion. In this survey freshmen opinions were not used since the frosh had not had experience with the old system of classes.

The results of this survey show that most students appreciated the extended Christmas vacation and were relieved to be able to spend the holidays without the discouraging prospect of returning to mid-year exams. Some students, however, did complain of increased pressures caused by teachers trying to cram their old courses into the abbreviated semester. In all cases the students were asked if they had any suggestions for improving the present system.

The following are a few typical student comments:

Bob Moore 1967
Electrical Engineering

"When I first heard about the new schedule I didn't like it because I'd have to quit my summer job early and at the time I needed the work. I also thought it wouldn't allow enough time to study before exams. Now, however it seems to have worked out. The semester seems to go quickly and you get a jump on the students from other schools in finding a summer job.

Villanova's Man of Letters

by Walt Baginsky

Dr. Joseph C. Reino, Associate Professor of the English department, came to Villanova in 1960 after five years of teaching at LaSalle College.

He received a B.S. in education from Temple University in 1943; M.A. from the University of Pennsylvania in 1946; and Received his doctorate at Penn, in 1951. The subject of his doctoral thesis was, SIGNIFICANT REPETITION AND ECHO IN BEOWULF.

Although his principal committment is to medieval literature, he has expressed considerable interest in modern poetry, especially modern American poetry, and modern "Beat" poetry. When asked to define modern American poetry, Dr. Reino answered: "It is free-wheeling, blunt, calls a spade, a spade; comes from every segment of society: from college professors, to illiterate beats; is jazzy, and controversial."

Dr. Reino is currently one of the faculty advisors to Villanova's literary magazine: "THE LYNX", and has given approximately 80 lectures on the WFIL-TV University of the Air series. The subject of these lectures was usually modern American poetry, with occasional lectures on poetry in general.

When questioned as to whether he would engage in any more television work, he answered smilingly: "I hope not, because programs are presented at an ungodly hour -- usually about seven in the morning and must be presented almost completely alone, without any assistance from the TV studio, or even the University itself."

Dr. Reino related a rather disconcerting experience with television work when he said: "I entered the studio one morning for my lecture on Robert Frost's "Stopping by Woods," only to find that I was preceded in the very studio where I was to lecture by none other than Fabian -- with about ten thousand of his screaming female fans. There was only two minutes between the end of his program, and the beginning of my lecture."

Dr. Reino is also active in learned societies such as the Modern Language Association. He enjoys reading the "SATURDAY REVIEW OF LITERATURE" and poetry magazines. He also reads such popular journals as: "LIFE," "LOOK," "TIME," etc.

When asked to comment upon the students at Villanova, Dr. Reino replied, "They are all likeable boys."

SGA to Use New Method With '66 Club Elections

This year's organizations Elections will be under the auspices of the Student Government Association. It is the first time that the SGA has attempted such a large task but it was felt necessary due to great irregularities that have been prevalent in the past.

The unenviable job of viewing this year's organizational elections will go to George Valva and his Elections Committee. Valva outlined the following procedure which he feels will help to remedy the situation:

1. A form containing the name, date, time, place and method of nomination and Election are to be submitted to the Election Committee Box by Feb. 20, 1966. Any Organization who has not done this will not be permitted a seat on The SGA for the first Semester next year.

2. The Elections Committee will either approve or dissaprove of the method to be employed. The date, place and time are up to the particular organization under the limits set down by the Elections Committee.

3. If approved the Election and Nomination must be held in accordance with the approved method. Any deviation will void the election and sanctions imposed upon the Organization.

4. Nominations for office must be held before Feb. 16 in order to insure that the Nominee for SGA representative has passed the test on the SGA Constitution

This test will be administered only twice this year on March 14 and 16. An organization will not have a seat on the SGA if its representative neither passes the test nor fails to take it.

All organizations are reminded to get those forms in by Feb. 20, 1966.

Law Professor Dowd To Be Interviewed On Red Benson Show

Villanova Law School Professor Donald W. Dowd will be interviewed on the Red Benson Show, Station WPEN, beginning at 12 midnight, on February 22. Professor Dowd, who teaches Criminal Law, Constitutional Law and Admiralty at the Law School, will discuss various aspects of space law during the interview.

Prior to that time, on February 18, Professor Dowd will participate in the National Space Law Seminar at Princeton University, where he will join a distinguished group of constitutional and space law experts from the government, industry, and university fields.

Note: It was incorrectly stated in an earlier edition of the VILLANOVAN that Frank Samer was the Villanova representative to the ASGUA. However, that position is officially held by Greg Fusco.

TV, Mid-West Tour, New Record Highlight V.U. Singers' Season

The Villanova Singers traveled to Molloy Catholic College, Rockville Center, N.Y., on February 6, 1966, for the initial concert of this year's season. On February 13, the Singers made a special T.V. appearance on Channel 17, Philadelphia. The Singers' appearance was on a show, "College Hi-Lites of the Big Five."

The high points this year, as in the past, are the Singers' Midwestern and New England tours. The Glee Club will travel 3,000 miles through seven states. These tours not only give the Singers' the chance to see the country, but also boosts the name of the University throughout the East and Midwest.

To please their local followers, the Singers had sung in concert at Chestnut Hill College on February 12. The Singers will again sing locally at Immaculata College on February 25. Finally, after traveling many miles, the Singers close their concert season by participating in Villanova's Annual Spring Concert on April 17.

For those students and friends of Villanova who wish to listen to the music of the Villanova Singers at home, the Singers album, "Yours in Song," is on sale in the Pie Shoppe and in 202 Sheehan Hall. The record will provide the listeners with forty minutes of music and a lasting memory of Villanova.

Aquarama Scene Saturday For Final Senior Party

Seniors are reminded to purchase their tickets for the Senior Class party at the Aquarama Saturday night, Feb. 19, 1966, 8:30 - 12:30 p.m. As usual the tickets for the event are $3.50 and are on sale in the Pie Shoppe.

George Valva, chairman for the party believes this party may very well be the best in the history of the Class of '66, a class, known for its lively and well-attended affairs. This is the last Class party as such, of course there still remains the 1-5 a.m. party at the Sheraton the night of the Senior Dinner Dance and the Senior Festival.

This is the last in a long line of parties which started Sophomore year with the now famous Moose Club, continuing through Junior year and the Labor Lyceum and culminating this year at Aquarama.

The officers of the Class have gone to great lengths to give this event its proper farewell.

The Critters a local group with a record that is now "hot" in many parts of the country will be the main attraction and the Fat City Four a group in great favor with the Class of '66 will play the breaks. Of course great pains have been taken to insure that all members of the Class get the most for their money in the way of refreshments.

Sociological Society Resumes Activities For Current Semester

The Villanova Sociological Society has resumed activities for the current semester. Louis Lombardi has assumed the vacated office of president. Lombardi was so appointed by Mr. Palazzoa, the organization moderator, due to the necessary resignation of Richard Berry.

The club has planned a mixer to be held at the home of Mr. Palazzoa on Friday the eighteenth of February. Anyone interested in joining the club will be cordially invited to the mixer. Complete details will be available at this week's meeting on Thursday at 10:30 in 207 Vasey Hall.

This meeting will also feature a lecture by Eugene Clark, an officer of the Philadelphia County Court, on the problem of juvenile delinquency.

AN EQUAL OPPORTUNITY EMPLOYER

Teacher-turned-Politician

by Bill McCloskey

The candidacy of John Logue demonstrates an unusual occurance in the political spectrum -- a non-lawyer running for office.

The reason most politicians are lawyers are many, but high on the list is the fact that in most other businesses "politics" is still regarded as a dirty word.

In business, people are often afraid that being identified with one party or another will rule out dealings with members of the opposition. How much truth there is in this fear is not known.

Mr. Logue is certainly not the first area teacher to run for office, in fact even a student has run for the Congress while still identified with school. Bill Green, now Congressman from Philadelphia's 5th district, was in his final year at Villanova's law school during his first successful campaign. He eventually had to drop his studies here to keep up with his Congressional commitments. However, Green was taking some courses at night at Georgetown.

WILL REMAIN AT V.U.

Logue has no intentions of taking a leave of absence to campaign for the office, since he must depend on his paycheck for livelihood. The monetary consideration is another factor which has kept many educators from entering the political ring. Actually, Logue intends to do the bulk of his campaigning during the summer. He had the approval of the Villanova administration before seeking the nomination.

Other professors, including one from Penn and another from Swarthmore have run for elective office while retaining their teaching status.

Money of course is always a problem for an office seeker and Mr. Logue is no exception. He has the problem. He is currently seeking the financial backing necessary to pay for such mandatory costs of a campaign as printing, postage and telephone.

Logue plans to do public speaking and issue frequent statements to the news media on issues he feels are important in the area.

The first hurdle is Saturday of this week when the Democratic party in the county decides who their candidate will be. There is apparently little announced opposition to Logue's candidacy.

Teachers here interviewed by the VILLANOVAN indicated they are proud of the political scientist for his efforts. One pointed out that those in education are becoming more involved in politics since the Kennedy and Roosevelt "brain trusts."

One speech department member called it "the healthiest thing in the world" for Villanova. A social science teacher pointed out the tremendous opportunity for experience which "will make John Logue even more valuable as a member of the faculty than he already is."

One member of the faculty pinpointed a feeling that telling young people what is right and advising them on what they should do is only partially fulfilling and every man wants to fulfill his aims completely. He noted that Mr. Logue has taken a big step toward his own personal fulfillment.

The case of Arthur Miller, the playwright was pointed out to the VILLANOVAN by a professor who noted Miller would often take a few months off to go to the factories to work in order to "keep in touch" with the people.

Students seemed quite surprised Sunday but nevertheless happy that a Villanovan was placing his hat in the political ring. Many immediately pledged their support to his campaign.

Arts Fraternity Plans Active, Varied Semester

Delta Pi Mu, the social fraternity for the Arts and Science students, has announced an active and diversified schedule for the new semester.

Heading the list, is the six-week "pledging" program just getting under way this week. DPM's social chairman, Bill Keane, reports that about sixty applicants turned out during the two-week "rushing" period, which consisted of meetings, applications, interviews and a welcoming party.

Pledging will end in time for the new members to attend the IFC (Inter Fraternity Council) Weekend festivities, April 1 and 2. All of Villanova's social fraternities are invited to this affair.

In addition to having its allotted number of parties, the Arts and Science fraternity will engage in charitable activities as well as undertaking domestic projects.

The annual Orphans' Outing, an event usually scheduled to coincide with a home football game, will be held this spring. On this occasion, members of Delta Pi Mu reserve a weekend to entertain children from local orphanages.

A new undertaking for the fraternity this year will be a charity drive. The probable recipient of the funds collected here on campus by the drive is the Easter Seals Foundation.

Among the internal affairs on the agenda is a revision of the constitution. Under the direction of the fraternity's president, Joe Vetrano, DPM's members will rewrite the present charter in an attempt to update and improve the current system.

Also among the fraternity's considerations is an effort to form a useful alumni association for its constituents. DPM has no such organization at this time.

They will take measurements for tuxedoes between the hours of 10:30 a.m. and 4 p.m. in the C&F Cafeteria on March 14 and 15. On March 16 and 17 measurements will be taken in the training room on the second floor of Dougherty Hall at the same hours.

Applications for the Senior Queen Contest will be received until Friday, March 4, in the Student Organizations Office. To enter your date in the contest, submit a picture of her with your names and addresses, and the name of her school or occupation.

"Antique Masks" Premieres Friday Night at Playbox

The original performance of Jan Hartman's "ANTIQUE MASKS" will be staged at the Villanova University Playbox, beginning Feb. 18.

Performances will continue for two weekends, Friday through Sunday, Feb. 18, 19 and 20, and Feb. 25, 26 and 27, with the curtain rising at 8:30 p.m.

In "ANTIQUE MASKS," a two-act stage ritual, the Villanova Players will explore the world of the ex-star performer and his collision with past triumphs, loves and torturous friendships. In the rehearsal room of an empty theatre, theatre masks are tossed aside, and coffins, canes and human conflicts become the reality.

Thomas F. Nevins, technical director of the Villanova Graduate Theatre Department, will direct the play. Paul Cummins Norton will take the role of Baxter; Tom Fennessey is High Hat; H. Robert Becker, Sargant; Prudence Barry, Sabrina; Edmond Weinheim, Tyrone; Victoria Lee Blunt, Bonny; John Benigno, Arthur, and Michael Sutherland, Scribner.

Bernard De Koven will assist Mr. Nevins as stage manager, and Jim Thomas will do the lighting. Mr. Becker is technical director.

Jan Hartman, who is awaiting production of his first Broadway play, is noted in the field of television and theatrical writing.

Reservations are being taken at the Playbox, and the boxoffice is open daily from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tickets will also be available at the door.

WWVU Gives Nominations New Appointments, Programs

The spring semester always brings elections to the Villanova campus, and WWVU is first off the starting block, having already held nominations for the post of Station manager. The nominations were held at the monthly staff-heads meeting of last week. A number of new appointments were also announced.

Nominated for the position of head man at WWVU were: John Lellis, present Chief scheduling engineer, Essa Abed, now serving as Traffic Manager, David Buscher, Production Manager, and Al Norcott, who has been handling the campus news department. Also nominated, but refusing, were: Ray Baker, Larry Krupa, and Pete McCarthy, all staff heads in the management of the station. The election will be held on March 14.

APPOINTMENTS

Bill McCloskey, manager of the station, was recently named regional director of the Intercollegiate Brodcasting System, for the mid-Atlantic area of the country. In connection with this, he has invited member stations to Villanova for a convention on February 22, a school free day.

At the same time, the IBS asked McCloskey to work on national sales for the organization. This position was accepted for the post of national sales representative for WWVU. In this post, he will also be sales representative to the proposed IBS system.

Al Norcott, Campus news director, has announced a number of innovations in the programming schedule. The Student Government meetings will continue to be aired live. Senate meetings, Political Union meetings, and the bi-weekly Presidential Press conferences, will be taped, and then aired at various times during the broadcasting week.

In speaking of the move, Norcott said, "The policy of the Campus news department is to provide the Villanova student with complete coverage of all events which are of interest, and to give the student the convenience of hearing such proceedings at the most opportune time."

With the latest rage on campus being the "trivia" contests, WWVU has joined the pack with a bi-weekly "Surprise" show, from 7:30 p.m. to 8:30 p.m. on Wednesdays.

choice, McCloskey said, "Frank has the unique background of business experience and organizational know-how, coupled with a knowledge of radio, which makes him an excellent man for the post." Through Eck, WWVU hopes to acquire more national advertising.

Phil Colombo, Promotion and Public Relations Director, finished his work at Villanova in January. Filling the vacancy is Brian Banmiller, present Editorial Director, and former Student Government vice-president for Student Affairs.

MEETINGS AIRED

Philosophy Club Back, New Format Features Critiques, Readings

Anthony J. Coccia, of the Philosophy department, with the assistance of several undergraduate students, has re-activated the Philosophy Club after one semester of working behind the scenes.

The purpose of the Club will be the evaluation of the ideas of undergraduates by fellow students. The format will be the reading and criticism of individual papers. The first paper, to be presented Thursday, February 17 at 10:30 in 104 Vasey Hall, will be John Albright's "Freedom and God - Sartre's Influence on Contemporary Thought."

It is hoped that students from other area colleges will participate in these forums to be climaxed by a general conference in the Spring. All are invited, both faculty and students, to attend next Thursday's meeting. Membership is open to all that are interested.

The Ratio Is Unfair

One is not enough. The ratio at Villanova is one full-time chaplain for every 5,000 full-time students; 5,000 students each with a different reason for accepting, rejecting, adhering to or ignoring Catholicism.

To many, the chaplain's office is too remote to be meaningful: on the second floor of Tolentine Hall, it is too far to go to cash a check, too far to go to establish religious credit.

The very nature of the chaplain's task requires him to sit and wait. A combination of the security of the counsellor's office, the sanctuary of the confessional, and the informality of a casual conversation, the chaplain's office must contain its counsellor until the personal crisis, the moral uncertainty, the loneliness of crowds demands that the student seek him out.

It is impractical for the chaplain to go out and establish a rapport with the entire student body: there is not enough of him to go around; his insight cannot be that keen; his time cannot be so thinly spread.

With a community of priests as large as Villanova's, the availability of priests might be assumed. However, with classes to teach, tests to correct, clubs to moderate, sermons to prepare, it is unreasonable to expect men to commit themselves as full-time counsellors as well.

If not enough men are available, and there are not, then the problem cannot be ignored until more men are available. Nor can it be ignored that the nature and position of this office makes it too remote, with the result that small problems are left unattended too long, and too many of these problems exist for the chaplain to meet.

The VILLANOVAN urges that members of the Augustinian community here be removed from some of their more time-consuming extracurricular activities, such as club work, in order to deal more directly with the student body.

It is hoped that these extra men would find the time to make more contacts with the students, to meet their problems before they become insoluble, to afford the chaplain's office enough time for the greater challenges which it faces.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

To the Editor:

The Student Government Association of Villanova University is a stagnant organization. By this, I do not mean that it is totally useless. The various SGA committees are performing a very valuable service to the school. But, as a political body, the SGA is simply an object of ridicule for the students.

However, this situation is not entirely the fault of the organization itself or the members. These people are doubly handcuffed -- by lack of student support on one side, and by the almighty veto power of the administration on the other. Thus, every year, Villanovans make a mockery of sending into Dougherty Hall a group of representatives who pass meaningless motions, or see worthy ones go unimplemented, tabled, or vetoed.

The situation grows worse with each passing week. Now is the time for something to be done. It is time for a "summit meeting" of faculty members, administrators, and students in which the fate of the SGA should be determined. As I see it there are three definite alternatives:

1) Make the SGA a major policy-making body for the school -- in fact, as well as in theory
2) Revise the SGA completely, combining it with a Faculty-Administration Committee, and make this a major policy-making body.
3) Abolish the SGA completely and turn all student affairs over to the administration. Even this would be preferable to the situation which now exists.

As you may guess, I favor either of the first two proposals. But whatever the outcome the decision must be made. For only then can Villanova escape the enigma of mediocrity, and become the great university which it could be, but, unfortunately, is not.

The Time Has Come

There is no need for politics to be a dirty word, especially on the campus level. Politics at Villanova can be a very useful art whereby the goals and desires of the student body may be effectively achieved and maintained. Yet, while politics can be helpful to the student body and the individual politician, it has its time and place.

It is most unfortunate, therefore, that the purpose and program of a Student Congress meeting should be perverted and dissipated by personal politics. It is also unfortunate that politics has dominated practically every Congress meeting this year. Last Wednesday evening the Student Government Association openly displayed itself for what it primarily is at this time -- an ineffective collection of self-centered, apathetic individuals.

This newspaper heartily endorses the right and obligation of the President of the Student Government Association to remove or appoint a committee head for a legitimate reason. We further agree with and encourage the right of discussion and debate on such an action. When, however, certain politically-conscious individuals use a Student Congress meeting to exhibit their personality conflicts and further their own political aims, we cannot help but raise a cry of strong protest.

We urge the members of the Student Government Association to consult the preamble of their Constitution which states that the purpose of the SGA is to "ensure the necessary cooperation and understanding between the student body and the faculty and the University Administration, to better provide for the welfare of the student body and the development of Villanova, and to create an awareness of the obligation for responsible leadership."

The time has come to take these words seriously. The time has come for the Student Congress to initiate at its meetings effective and worthwhile programs, not political debates. The time has come for the Congress to discuss matters of vital concern to the Villanova student, not the virtues or vices of an individual member. Politics belongs in the hallway or the Pie Shoppe, not at a Congress meeting.

If the Student Government Association does not assume and fulfill its obligation as responsible leadership for the Villanova student body, then it has no right to exist.

Letters To The Editor

Ed. Note: The VILLANOVAN usually limits Letters to the Ed. to 350 wds. An exception was made due to the significance of Mr. Coccia's remarks.

To the Editor:

Dear Sir:

Perhaps the content of this letter is not best presented in the letter column of a school newspaper but at the same time, I must confess a natural fear of the white-coated, rubber-gloved scientists in Tolentine Hall that all but rules out face to face confrontation and discussion on the issue I am about to raise.

The issue I wish to raise is this: If it is true that 'white-coat psychology' and 'armchair psychology' both study man as man, then why are there two psychologies, to wit: so-called 'empirical psychology' and 'rational or philosophical psychology'? If the object of a science specifies that science, then, unless some other critical difference can be pointed out between the two, it would seem as though there should not be two psychologies.

We can presumably rule out immediately the possibility that the difference arises from the fact that the two psychologies are really warring camps, as it were, within a larger camp. That is to say, the difference between the 'white-coats' and the 'armchairs' is not similar to the difference between the Gestaltists and the Empiricists.

It is not, in other words, a family quarrel. And the reason for this is that 'white-coats' and 'armchairs' do not even consider each other friends, much less brothers. No, the difference seems to be more basic -- so basic in fact that one sometimes gets the impression that each of the sides is convinced it can get along totally independently of the other and that they have nothing in common but the name.

But if this is really so, then we must ask again, wherein lies the difference? That there is a difference very few on either side would seem to deny. Perhaps the reluctance to see the two as really one is due, on the part of the 'white-coats', to the desire to keep themselves untainted by nebulous speculation, and, on the part of the 'armchairs', to just plain keep themselves.

Now, while this kind of probing is bound to uncover sensitive areas, it seems necessary that such probing be done. I am thinking, e.g. of the plight of the hapless students who find themselves faced on the one side with an exposition of man which endows him with an immaterial soul and innumerable faculties, powers, and potencies and on the other with a view that seems to make man a mass of neurons and cells capable of something very solemnly called Behavior.

What are the students to do in such a situation? We wonder what gives rise to a Descartes. Wonder no longer! That is what we are teaching them! (I should indeed be interested in the reactions of students who have found themselves in this exact situation.)

Of course, this is only a quasi-theoretical reason for asserting that the basis for the distinction between these two psychologies must be examined. But there are purely theoretical considerations as well. And this gets us back to the question we asked above: What difference is there between these two psychologies?

Of course, the question is not this simple. It may be easy enough to point out the difference between the two, but we must know if these differences are legitimately pursued. Let us glance at some of the differences which might be suggested and indicate what we mean.

'White-coat' is undoubtedly prepared to point out the difference. It centers around the methodology. "While an armchair can be called a laboratory only by mistake," he will say, "WE actually have spigots and Bunsen burners and use drawings and tracneural paths."

'Armchair', for his part, is quite prepared to admit that the two psychologies are different, but not for the same reason. "While it is true," he will say, "that the Philosophy Department is sadly lacking in facilities to dissect animals, this is irrelevant since our function is to make general statements about the nature of man based on the data, among which is that of our colleagues in the white coats. We are, in other words, synthesizers and

THE UNIVERSITY

The System and the Student

by Dr. Bernard Bonniwell Psychology Department

Editor's Note: The following is the first in a series of articles on the general theme: "The University" which are being written by Dr. Bonniwell. The VILLANOVAN wishes to express its thanks to Dr. Bonniwell for his permission to publish these articles.

The dissatisfaction with a system arises when the system, typically adjunctive in function, no longer adequately reflects the changing viewpoint of man. In a constantly expanding socio-intellectual environment, growing ever more complex and unwieldy, the demand for a modified university system arises as a natural function of change.

Thus, resistence to a system is not a question of the temperment of the times but, rather, the routine and predictable outcome of behavioral dissatisfaction with a recognized deficiency in the system itself.

In a sense, the cause of the disorder is the system rather than the individual. The originally effective system no longer is attuned to the data and technical knowledge of the day. The system has outlived its effective social usefulness.

In this sense, then, it is the incautious persistiveness of the system that proves to be the irritant rather than the restlessness of a given generation.

Why should a previously acceptable system suddenly appear no longer acceptable? Time and change are the disrupting factors. The system, a constant, is no longer sensitively correlated with the vital changes-over-time that are of the utmost significance to the student.

The student, the variable, is highly motivated towards the present and future but finds himself captive in a system bypassed by a technical and sociologically oriented society. Behaviorally speaking, then, the potential for "conflict" is inherent in the abortive attempt to meld tradition (the constant) with transition (the variable).

Whether or not the behavioral studies have given meaningful insight into the problem of man in relation to a system may be questioned: but surely one principle of consequence emerges -- in the behavioral study of man and his environment there are only variables. There are no psychological constants.

Change is the basic characteristic. The relationship between man and matter is always in a state of flux. Emotion, mood and thought are illustrative of the intransigent variables of every man. Growth, development and maturity are the consequences of time.

COMPLETE DEVELOPMENT

Time and experience are mutually coexistent. No system, conceived as a constant, is capable of serving this man reasonably or adequately. This man, the student, requires a highly variable system for his full and complete development.

The "outline" of the system capable of administering effectively to these diverse demands, is suggested by a routine recall of the student's prime psychological need: self fulfillment. In brief, man the variable can only be adequately served by a system in transition.

The point of educational ingress and egress must be the choice of the student, not the system. Education is a question of quality, not time; of interest, not credits; of internal motivation, not external pressure; of advancement, not competition; of self pacing, not time allotment; and of self examination, not National Boards.

In practical terms, the transitional system is segmental in character, extensive in comprehension, and offering "levels of achievement" according to the needs, capability and motivation of the student. The concept of mass promotion or failure is antithetical to a transitional university system of education.

DETAILED COMPLEXITY

It is a question of the individual educating himself in the direction of his choices, regardless of their roots, over as little time or as much time as required. Age is not a factor. The enormous and detailed complexity of this transitional system is recognized and equated with the means at hand: core teaching machines, programmed learning, audio-visual aids, and most certainly the modern computer.

Fundamental to this project is the self elected examination, to be given when the individual student requests the examination - the entire process being facilitated by an Office of Examinations which functions continuously throughout the entire year.

Individual progress, at the student's own pace, reduces to a minimum the pointless and destructive competitive element. Withdrawal and re-entry into the university should be a typical procedure. Under the segmental plan, individuals would change direction as frequently as they desire, coordinating their choices with the evolving needs of their career.

TRANSFERABLE CREDIT

In terms of degrees and certificates of accomplishment, areas of concentration and segmentalized degree programs would be available, but with greater emphais upon the concept of interdisciplinary studies where credits are transferable from one field of study to another.

Students would be encouraged to take courses, within the same semester, at several of the local colleges and universities if the process serves the student's purpose.

In the contemporary milieu, where an insistent and incessant technological and behavioral revolution threatens psychological enslavement of man and his ideals, it is only reasonable that the student seeks nothing less than an understanding of the transitional society about him.

INTENSIVE STRUGGLE

The pace is swift, the goal uncertain, and tradition offers little certitude in the intensive struggle between objective science and subjective man. In this regard, the university continuum of responsibility ranges educationally from the presentation of the precise matter of science to the sensitive accommodation of culture to the restless spirit of man.

The common problem continues to evolve and impinge forcefully upon the system and there is no forseeable relief in view. Student enrollment increases, and in proportion so does the problem of heterogeneity, the overall process simply outdating the effectiveness of the present university system.

As stated in an earlier commentary, the problem and its solution is reflected in the following observation: The change to be elicited is a change in the thinking of men, not in things. The change itself is the willingness of men to change.

What neither of these realizes is that their statements of the difference are easily questioned. The empirical psychologist's on the ground that what he considers 'experimental method' is due to a narrow interpretation of experience foisted upon him by a likewise narrow empiristic philosophy, while the philosophical psychologist's statement of the difference seems based on the belief that no other science has the function of synthesis and generalization except philosophy, which belief is not only false but dangerous since it leads to patent absurdities due to the fact that the philosopher begins to believe that he is released from all commitment to the facts.

Now, what I hope this letter will encourage is some positive discussion on the question of the difference between these two psychologies and perhaps even some discussion on the legitimacy of the distinction of the two. Perhaps it will even have, ultimately, such pragmatically desirable results as the co-teaching (by a 'white-coat' and an 'armchair') of at least introductory psychology courses. Such an occurrence would indeed be desirable in an institution dedicated to the totally integrated man.

Respectfully,

A. J. Coccia

To the Editor:

Most of us are well aware of the controversy that took place at the past Student Congress meeting. However, I do not think that the basic facts about Brendan (Irish) Moore's dismissal as head of the Spirit Committee are as evident as his sympathetic companions.

To put it simply, Brendan Moore was not performing his job well. This combined with the resurgence of our Wildcats were the basic reasons why Bob Dean removed him from leadership.

With these two things firmly implanted in our minds, let us consider the conduct of Brendan's sympathizers. Firstly, to complain to the Congress about something is perfectly legitimate. This complaint should be based on fact and not assertions. The assertions that were made that Brendan's dismissal was a political move was completely unwarranted, and to say the least, substantiated with not one piece of proof except the hunch of a highly aroused person.

Secondly, the implications that were made showed no definite signs of a political collusion. Again it was an assertion of an aggravated young man. But more than that, Brendan and his followers were guilty of the same sin that they accused Steve Freind and Bob Dean of -- namely, the sin of rash judgment and lack of understanding. There can be no rational justification for such assertions.

You Might Well Ask . . .

by Neil Sheehan

... Why you should take five minutes to read this and then another fifteen to think it over. Actually, it's simple. After reading it, you will either hate the author (perhaps more), which would exemplify exactly what is said below, or feel pretty rotten, which may not be out of place. Whatever the result, do something about it.

The following may be a little disorganized as far as a literary presentation goes, but actually it is a train of thought and will flow like one.

On the night of February 2, Harcum Junior College held a mixer. During the course of the night, a person, or several persons ripped off two sinks and one sign from the men's room in the basement. There is quite good reason (which shall not be disclosed here) to believe that the rather unimpressive feat of strength was done by a Villanova student (s). Now evidently some act like that is something to be proud of. Actually it's sickening. That's a fine way to advertise Villanova University.

On the train going to the mixer, there was another ass (I'm sorry but that is all that can be said for him right now) from Villanova, I might add, who evidently considered himself a great, if not the greatest lover on the Main Line. He rather sloppily placed himself on the lap of a girl who made it rather obvious that she did not want his 180 pound body on her. After he was dragged off of the unfortunate girl, he became rather indignant and asked one of the students in the garbage removal brigade if he wanted a "punch in the nose." The student said yes, but the "big man" disappeared. He knows who he is and the answer is still a definite "yes." Evidently his courage left him completely because to engage in his proposed battle would not result in much damage since neither party is a muscular standout. Another wonderful bit of advertising. He probably cheered on the sink-wrecker.

With things like this happening, you ask why Bryn Mawr College does not exactly welcome V.U. students at their library?

Speaking of Bryn Mawr, that's another place where a few Villanova clowns act like rather disgusting slobs. This is no guess for I have seen it happen. These people may not think much of Bryn Mawr girls but the least they could do is have a little respect for human beings.

A topic that now comes to mind is Haverford. A lot of V.U. students are quick to knock its students. May I suggest that they meet a good number of them before they make their sometimes rather unintelligible remarks.

This article is not a defense of various area schools, but they are simply places where the unfortunate situation brings itself out.

Perhaps the most repulsive problem with us Villanova students is the one that is hardest to see and point out. Stated simply as possible, it is a gross lack of charity. What makes a person such a representative of the human race that he can point and laugh at someone who isn't dressed as he is, or doesn't act as he does, or someone, who likes a little bit of the "extreme" that harms no one.

What makes the situation hurt more is the fact, that we are for the most part Catholic. If people can't have pride in themselves or their school, they could at least have some pride in their religion. Faith, Hope, and Charity, that's what it is. It's been corrupted. It's now faith in one's narrow-minded "cool", hope that he will become "cooler", and charity ... well, charity hasn't only been corrupted, it's been destroyed.

Expanding to all people, I sincerely ask why do people feel that a person who is not like themselves, is trying to insult them. This is not meant to excuse extremism which is immoral (free love and the dubious art of turning on with pot), or disgusting (not bathing), but it is meant to point out to people how stupid they make themselves out to be when they criticize something that is harmless to anybody, and which does nothing to alter the intrinsic character of a person.

In short, I would like to propose that people take the time to get to know a person before they make a judgement. We found out how cancerous this can be when the above was not heeded in the judgement of Negroes. Call it far-fetched but it is certainly analogous. Think of all the wonderfully fine Negroes who have been unjustifiably exposed to disgusting prejudices. It's the same with all people.

What happens to all the good people? They go unnoticed, that's all. There's another injustice for you. It's a really unfortunate situation. Those who get noticed are the people who rip out the sinks, insult the girls, immediately judge people and come out with lines like "nice clothes" or "nice head", and stare with pathetic looks of ignorance on their faces.

Change that situation and the result will be that the unnoticed at Villanova will become the noticed, perhaps unmentioned, but yet noticed. For God's sake and for Villanova's sake, let's hope that something changes.

Judge this article as hypocritical and you will be judging too quickly, for this article was not written to or for "the others" but to all and for all, author included.)

POLITICAL FORUM

Collectivist Attack on Freedom

by Bill Clark

The growth of collectivism (or statism) in America can and must be opposed on both philosophical and "practical" grounds.

On the philosophical level, any scheme to "redistribute the wealth", to provide "cradle to grave care" or to wage a government sponsored "war on poverty" can be seen to be a gross violation of morality and a perversion of the meaning of a free society.

On the "practical" level, it is not difficult to see that such a program just plain won't work and that those who try to use it will fare no better than the ancient Romans.

PHILOSOPHICALLY

Philosophically, the moral defense for collectivism is based on the explicit or implicit acceptance of a particular premise by all those who advocate such a system. This premise states that a person's needs constitute a legitimate claim on the wealth and productivity of another person or persons.

This premise holds true regardless of the form it may take in its political existence. What it is called -- the welfare state, communism, creeping socialism, Nazism, the corporate state, the great society, ad nausaum -- refers only to means and degree of attainment, not to the basic principles involved.

FREEDOM

A free society is conceived when men recognize the inalienable rights of life, liberty, and property. A free society is born when these rights are implemented and each man is able to live his own life, pursue his own interests, and dispose of his own property as he sees fit. And a free society is dying when any of these rights are abridged -- for they are one and inseparable, either they are all present, or none can long survive.

WELFARISM

Welfarism, the particular form of collectivism now spreading through our society, is a club designed to bludgeon into oblivion the right of property. The welfare state is based on the belief that one segment of a society -- the segment that can somehow gain control of the reins of government -- has the right to confiscate the wealth of one person and redistribute it to another.

In a free society a person is free to dispose of his property -- his land, or factory or salary -- as he sees fit. It is this freedom, this "right of property", that enables a man to maintain his independence and to achieve his other rights of life and liberty. In a free society the government only receives sufficient funds to carry out its legitimate functions -- that is, to act as an impartial arbiter and protector of individual rights from both foreign and domestic violation.

The degree to which government goes beyond these bounds is the degree to which freedom is being destroyed.

FAKE CLAIMS

The welfare statists claim that their programs are acts of charity -- ignoring the fact that when property or wealth is taken from a person without his express permission, the fitting term is roobery, not charity.

The welfare statists claim that their actions are moral because they help the impoverished, the underprivileged, or the culturally deprived -- ignoring the fact that when force enters the picture, in this case the power of taxation, morality leaves. The end, they seem to forget, does not justify the means.

The welfare statists claim that they are seeking to extend freedom -- ignoring the fact that to the extent a man is deprived of the free use of his land, factory or salary, is the extent to which he is a slave to those who control his property.

The gross immorality and the anti-liberterian basis of government welfarism is quite evident. Those who are interested in doing works of charity must learn to operate within the realm of voluntary participation -- their noble goals do not give them the right to play the role of an over-sized Robin Hood.

Where the Girls Are

by Gene FitzMaurice

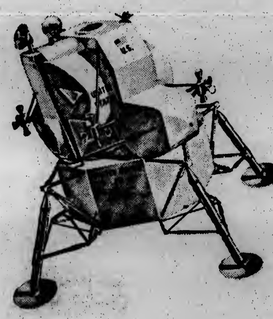
A Vassar girl told me last spring that she did not like Yale men because, "They're gross. They don't know how to behave at a party. If they can't get their way, they just chug beer and act crude." I assured her that such things never happened at Villanova. She agreed that it was probably just the Elis.

If you need to prove to yourself that a school's popularity is inverse to the distance you travel from it, you could do worse than to base your wanderings on "Where The Girls Are," a self-explanatory guide published by the DAILY PRINCETONIAN.

Covering everything from where the girls can be found on the 25 campuses listed to their favorite off campus watering spots, the text is surprisingly free of objective error, although their value judgments are, of course, subjective.

Guaranteed long life as the womanizer's Baedecker, it reports fully on every major women's college in the East, providing full information on travel (time and routes,) big events, accommodations (where and how much), as well as the ever present rules and hours, with a list of alternative things to do being listed.

Some would argue that Villanovans will have little interest in the booklet because of a prior commitment to Rosemont. Like many other legends concerning the Main Line's most beautifully landscaped morgue, this is untrue.



Consider the rumor that Rosemonsters are the dull daughters of the rich. Not true. Some girls receive financial aid. Or that they are dependent on V.U. for dates. Not true. All know dozens of boys waiting to come down. You can see them arriving every Friday evening. Or the smear that the girls are not interested in science. In the interests of cancer research, each girl smokes two packs a day.

Although listed alphabetically, a geographical breakdown is more conductive to superior Tripsmanship.

To the South and West, little of interest is to be found. North of New York City Bennent (sweet young things), Briarcliff (sweet young things who can read), Sarah Lawrence ("Of course I picket. Don't you?"), and Manhattanville ("Is Georgetown the Catholic Villanova?), as well as Vassar await.

New England, of course, means a series of up-dated ladies seminaries and high Board scores, and so is to be avoided.

Some might argue, however, that there is no place like home. Which is probably true except for the fact that Rosemont girls frequently complain (as they go off with a Yale man), "Villanovans are gross. They don't know how to behave ...."

Your first assignment could be over your head.

The Aerospace Group of General Precision, Inc., makes sure that your first assignment drops you right into the middle of one of our many space engineering projects, such as precision guidance and navigation equipment for Apollo, Gemini, OSS, LEM, Mariner, TFX, Titan III, and others too numerous to mention. We've found that it's the best way to keep your interest high. If you find you're over your head technically, there are lots of seasoned pros to help you out (they came up the same way you will).

You'll learn the intricacies of the space business quickly. Working in several departments on several projects as you progress through our rotational training program gives you a very good idea after a year what your career goals really are.

Right now we're looking ahead with visionary programs in precision guidance and navigation instrumentation which will someday result in hardware for optical laser gyros and accelerometers, stellar inertial guidance systems, strap-down inertial guidance systems, solid-state sensors and complex information systems for spacecraft, missiles and aircraft.

And there's lots of room to move around in. A multi-million dollar equipped Research Center was completed in 1962. An extensive Systems Engineering Facility was put into operation in late 1963. All in all, our advanced equipment complexes in Suburban Northern New Jersey represent 1,500,000 square feet of research, development and production facilities.

A Plan For Progress Company – An Equal Opportunity Employer

FROM THE HIP
A column written for the soul satisfaction of its Author . . . others be warned.

Riding With the Junkman

by Ron Javers

I have often considered doing a book review for the VILLANOVAN, but was intimidated by sheer dearth of really decent writing being done in this country today. Best sellers Stink ... Shallow little parables crammed full of pointless sex for mindless readers. But recently I came across a book worth writing about, a really depraved, brilliantly perverted, vision of deranged beauty.

The title is NAKED LUNCH, the author William S. Burroughs. But don't rush out to your nearest library for a copy. You won't find it. Don't watch for it in paperback on the stands. It's not there. It's only available in hardbound edition from certain shifty-eyed book sellers at six dollars a copy. NAKED LUNCH is the kind of book that would enrage the P.T.A.'s of fifty states -- if they were aware of it. Luckily they are not.

SATURDAY REVIEW

John Ciardi, writing in the Saturday Review, had this to say of NAKED LUNCH: ..."writing of an order that may be cleanly defended not only as a masterpiece of its own GENRE, but as a monumentally moral descent into the hell of narcotic addiction."

This book has been praised with faint damns by many critics, all who realize the sheer guts it takes to write a truthful novel in this country today. NAKED LUNCH is difficult reading. Let the faint-hearted thrillseeker be warned.

It is a non-novel without plot or characters in the conventional sense. It is full of parody and satire, written in the underworld argot of the addict on the street.

The author Burroughs was for fifteen years addicted to various drugs. He has taken everything from nembutol to nutmeg in a body-shredding search for euphoria. But this book that was the product of so many years of dissipation is more than a confession; it is a confrontation of the times in which we live.

MAILER

Norman Mailer wrote: "NAKED LUNCH is a book of beauty, great difficulty, and exquisite insight." Mailer, who pays a compliment maybe once or twice a year, has called Burroughs "the only American novelist living today who may conceivably be possessed by genius."

NAKED LUNCH will never be a best seller. It's not a book for the cocktail crowd. It IS a work of great imagination and vitality. It is a vision of the world through the drug-glazed eyes of the junky, who sees most times with paranoia -- but sometimes -- and these are what makes the book, sometimes with shocking perception.

COMMENT

And so I've done it -- written a book review. Some of you will probably read NAKED LUNCH. Some of you will read parts of it. And some of you will not read it at all, because you never read anything besides textbooks and the sports page.

Some of you will eventually become successful. Some of you will eventually become rich. But some of you will always be hungry. And food won't kill that hunger. And the sports page won't kill that hunger ... The hungry ones may borrow my copy of NAKED LUNCH. REMEMBER! You can't get it in the library ...

GORDON WOOD HAS A JOB WITH PENN MUTUAL

And this college graduate continues to work with ideas . . . words . . . facts and people

Gordon's experience is typical of the college graduates entering Penn Mutual. He first discovered that there were job opportunities in such fields as accounting, mathematics, investments, electronic data processing and sales administration. He took a position that he felt best suited his talents. Moreover through Penn Mutual's tuition aid program Gordon is now pursuing a graduate degree pertinent to his job skills. He discovered too, that the life insurance business is one of the largest and fastest growing industries today—and that Penn Mutual has been among the leaders for 118 years. Gordon liked the look of his future and is now well into his career. Before you graduate, we invite you to look into Penn Mutual. Check with your Placement Office—or plan to talk to our Penn Mutual representative.

Cohabitation and Welfare Provide Complex Legal Case

by Jim Brennan

The semi-final rounds of the Reimel Moot Court competition held recently at the Law School, saw the team of Paternak and Agnew representing the petitioner and the team of Jarvis and Freedman representing the respondent advance to the final round. The Pasternak team defeated McCreesh and Murphy representing the respondent, while the Jarvis team proved victorious over Casper and Levinson representing the petitioner.

The case argued concerned a woman whose public welfare assistance was cut off without a hearing when welfare inspectors found a man in her apartment during a midnight search without a warrant.

This writer heard the arguments proposed by the teams of Casper-Levinson and Jarvis-Freedman.

COHABITATION

The petitioners presented their view first by stating that the General Welfare Act was unconstitutional, an unlawful search had occurred, and the woman was denied the right of petition to a hearing. They continued by asserting that there is no precise definition of cohabitation. Does cohabitation mean living together in the same house; in the same room; in the same bed; or does it mean having sexual intercourse? Various judges and state courts have disagreed about cohabitation.

When an administrative agency issues a judicial function they must allow the person a hearing, but the woman was denied the opportunity of a fair hearing. Concluding, the petitioners claimed that the fourth and fourteenth amendments apply to both civil and criminal cases.

In presenting their view, the respondents stated that only unreasonable searches are prohibited by the fourth amendments. A warrant for every search would be too timely, too expensive and practically impossible. They went on to say that cohabitation search would have to take place during a late hour because of the nature of the offense and therefore the search was reasonable.

The respondents further stated that the woman did not need welfare assistance because she was living with a man.

Concerning the General welfare Act, the respondents claimed that it was constitutional and one of its purposes was to prevent bastardy.

After a thirty-minute deliberation, the Honorable Edward J. Griffiths, Honorable John P. Fullman, and Honorable Thomas M. Reed decided in favor of the respondents. The justices then gave a critique on the briefs and oral arguments of the teams.

Drama Guild Presents 'Shadow of a Gunman' By Playwright O'Casey

Ten years ago, and 28 plays back, the Philadelphia Drama Guild first presented two performances of "THE DEVIL'S DISCIPLE", in February. This year, from February 24 to March 5, the Drama Guild will present as its Tenth Anniversary production; Sean O'Casey's first dramatic success "SHADOW OF A GUNMAN", at the Playhouse, 1714 Delancey St.

Producer Sidney S. Bloom said, "as our Tenth Anniversary play we have chosen to bring to Philadelphia for the first time the first full-length O'Casey work to reach the stage. This fascinating work preceded his better known 'JUNO AND THE PAYCOCK', and 'THE PLOUGH AND THE STARS', both previously done by the Drama Guild."

"SHADOW OF A GUNMAN" is in the same idiom as his other works concerning the Irish rebellion. It is full of the same ironic humor, sharpened with the same tragic irony at the end.

O'Casey's comic-tragedy was first put on at Dublin's Abbey Theatre in 1923. It is doubtful if O'Casey ever invented a more delightful set of characters than those who inhabit the tenement on Hilljoy Square. And since much of the action comes from the author's own experience, it has the spontaneity of truth. The play, loaded with raffish dialogue and wildy comic mannerisms, has been called a "fascinating prologue to O'Casey's greatness."

The Drama Guild's presentation of "SHADOW OF A GUNMAN", in cooperation with the Extension Service of the Board of Education, follows a tradition of O'Casey productions -- the group has done "RED ROSES FOR ME" as well as the aforementioned Irish playwright's classics. Tickets and theatre party information for the production can be obtained at LO 3-3137.

Parents Program Nears Goal

Dr. William A. Tomasco, Chairman of the 1965-66 Parents Program, announced on January 17 that 73% of the goal had been attained during the first three months of the drive.

The Parents Program is a campaign organized and carried out by the parents themselves under the auspices of the University's Development Office. The Program was launched in 1963 with a five year goal of $250,000. All proceeds, unless otherwise earmarked, are being used by the Library in a space utilization program.

In its first two years the Program exceeded its goal and won national honors, having been recognized as one of the top drives of its kind. This year's goal is $60,000, and the Committee of parents is optimistic about making it.

The Chairman, speaking along these lines, said: "If each parent will give this program the same consideration as those who have already contributed we can go far over the top."

As of January 17, 550 parents had made contributions totalling $43,276. The following list includes contributors of that date.

Every effort has been made to be accurate in the preparation of this report if the committee has missed your name, or listed it incorrectly, they hope you'll understand and pass the correction on to the Parents Program.

Campus News Briefs

The Very Reverend James A. Donnellon, present Prior at the Monastery here at Villanova, went to Florida, Saturday, February 12 for the dedication of two new buildings at Biscayne College.

Bishop Coleman Carroll of Miami asked Father Donnellon to accept control of Biscayne in its beginning days. Since this time Biscayne has become Villanova's sister school and a tie has formed.

Last Saturday the new student union building, Carroll Hall, and the new dormitory, Donnellon Hall, were dedicated by the president of the college in honor of the two men who had a large hand in the beginning of the institution.

Father Donnellon was formerly President of Villanova University from 1953 to 1959 and then Provincial of the Augustinian Order from 1959 to 1965. He helped promote the building of the new Saint Mary's Seminary Building.

Student Government Meeting

trip to the DePaul game. He had been asked, according to Dean, to write or call for price information. Moore said you could not get a bus company to make arrangements that way. However, when he finally was talked into calling a bus company in Camden he did get an estimate. Dean then asked him, the same day, February 4, to firm up the estimate by letter. This Moore apparently refused to do.

In the midst of the floor fight, Jay McGinnis submitted his resignation as a member of the spirit committee saying, "I work better with certain people".

At this point, Frank Eck, who had, earlier in the evening been presented a mounted gavel for his work in the SGA presidency, asked Steve Freind to remain publicly neutral in the upcoming election for Student Body President. Freind refused saying he felt he had an important interest in the SGA next year for what he called "the simple reason that I have put in three and a half years working for this Student Government and I want to see it continue to progress".

Several members of the congress took the floor under "point of personal privilege" to ask that the political diatribe be stopped, but to no avail. Freind reiterated his oft-stated stand that "politics is not a dirty word."

Freind pointed out that a good manager cannot put up with a staff member who is constantly negative. "The main point is we have only a month left in the basketball season and the simple fact is Brenden Moore was not giving us the results we needed."

Although never fully stated, the whole battle was the first salvo in a three way war for the Student Government Presidency which has been shaping up for several weeks.

Unless a dark horse comes out of no where, the candidates on March 30 will be Brenden Brett, Brenden Moore and Ward Williams. Freind made it no secret that he prefers Bret in that race.

Again, although no one ever said so, the inuendo at the meeting was that the move to oust Moore was political because Moore had refused to drop out of the race for Arts and Science Day Hop Representative from the Class of 1967. This is the office Brett has announced his candidacy for.

The weekend before the SGA meeting Steve Freind took Brenden Moore aside and asked him to run for Alumni representative. This way Moore would have a full vote on the Congress if elected, the same as he would if elected to the A&S post.

This would presumably give Brett a clear shot at the Congress too. Then the final battle would come out on the floor of the Congress. If both Moore and Brett run for the class post, one must lose.

Freind said "it's not a sin to back the man you think best for the job, and that is what I intend to do."

Brett, also speaking under point of personal privilege, denied that any political deal had been made between Freind and himself. He continued, "it is up to the members of my class to decide, on the basis of my past work of both candidates. Some might believe the words that have been tossed around here tonight. All of my political aspirations are based on this first election (the A&S post). I plan to conduct a positive campaign."

Speaking of the investigation called for by several members of the Congress and Murphy, Brett told the Congress, "if you conduct an investigation and prove me a liar, then I won't come before you seeking the SGA presidency."

Despite the fact that many thought this was the most interesting development in years in the SGA, some members expressed distaste and almost disgust for the floor fight. One member voiced his dissatisfaction saying, "I think by this meeting we have proven to the student body that they are correct when they say we sit here 'with our heads in the clouds and thumbs in our ears.' We can do nothing until we get their respect. Here we have two sides working against each other. Until WE get together, we can't get together with the student body.

In an interview on WWVU after the meeting, Frank Eck said he thought the uproar could do much to bring the Congress together. "All of the things that have been in the background are now common knowledge, perhaps this will pave the way towards a greater degree of unity, now that everyone is sure where things stand."

SNOW POLICY

The rest of the student governing for the evening took about 15 minutes. One bill, calling for a re-thinking of the snow free-day policy of the administration passed without a dissenting vote, as did a motion requesting a free period on Monday March 21st for class presidential election debates.

Gene FitzMaurice presented his first report as Religious Affairs Chairman (see separate story).

In other developments, George Valva announced that the Student Government test, which must be passed to serve in the Congress, will be given March 14th and 16th and must be taken by all candidates for representative at that time.

John Graziano announced that half of the proceeds from Friday night's mixer went to the Soccer, Rugby, Lacrosse and Crew teams. Half of the last mixer's proceeds went to the Villanova Aid To Mexico Project (VAMP).

The Student Senate met Monday, issues considered there will be voted on by the full congress next Wednesday as will the Student Court bill.

New Schedule Comment

"I'd like to use part of the Christmas break to take an accelerated two or three-credit arts course, something I think is needed for Engineering students."
Mike Roch
Biology 1966

"The vacation is great, but I think it caught a lot of the students and teachers by surprise. Some teachers didn't seem to adjust their curriculum to the shorter semester time. It'll be better when the teachers adjust."
Vince Chandler
Psychology 1966

"I thought the only bad thing was the pressure at exam time. It's also tough to get back in the groove after the long vacation. The teachers seemed to cram their courses into the time. I wouldn't change it."
Alejandro Cusi
Mechanical Engineering 1967

"It was great. I come from Mexico and this schedule gives me more time to visit home. You also don't have to worry about exams over the vacation. Before you just worried and didn't work anyway.

"I would like to leave earlier before Christmas and return earlier so that I could enjoy the pre-Christmas spirit."
Sue Hughes
Social Science 1968

"I think it's better than the old system. It's almost like you're not in school anymore. You can get a whole course crammed into a lot shorter time."
Jeff Komins
Biology 1967

"The pressure was very tough before Christmas but the long holiday was worth it."

"I'd like to use a few of the Christmas holidays for snow holidays. The new system is so closely planned that no time is allowed for snow days."
Fran Whelan
Psychology 1966

"I think the old way was better. Now there's too much to do and not enough time for papers and studying at the end of the semester. Nobody ever studied under the old system, but at least you had a chance to."
Jerome Bartholomew
Social Science 1968

"I like the solid break, with Christmas and semester break at one time. You have a vacation without worries and you can take your exams while the material is still fresh in your mind. I'd like to start school later in September."
Tom Petinga
Social Studies 1968

"It was a good arrangement for rest and I think that's its greatest asset. But towards the end of the vacation I was bored and was anxious to get back to work. I thought the teachers would have to rush their courses to fit the work in, but everything seemed to fall into place.

"I'd like to use some of the Christmas holidays for a few study days before exams, similar to the arrangement at the end of the year."
Joe Forns
Education 1966

"I thought it was great. Under the old system you had to study when you came back to school, now at least you don't have anything hanging over your head."

"I'd like to see the first and second semesters lengthened to lighten some of the burden caused by teachers cramming their courses into the short semesters. I'd like to do this by coming to school earlier in September and leaving later in May."
Jeff O'Neil
Social Studies 1967

"I like having the exams before Christmas but after the beginning of January things really drag."
Bill Walsh
Electrical Engineering 1967

"I think its great. You have a chance to find a job and enjoy yourself, and you don't have any worries while you work or relax."

This survey was not intended as an accurate reflection of the total sentiments of Villanovans with regard to the semester schedule. Rather, it is a sampling to determine any overriding strengths or weaknesses in the new system. The VILLANOVAN is contemplating a more thorough poll to be conducted at a future date.

Logue Runs for Congress

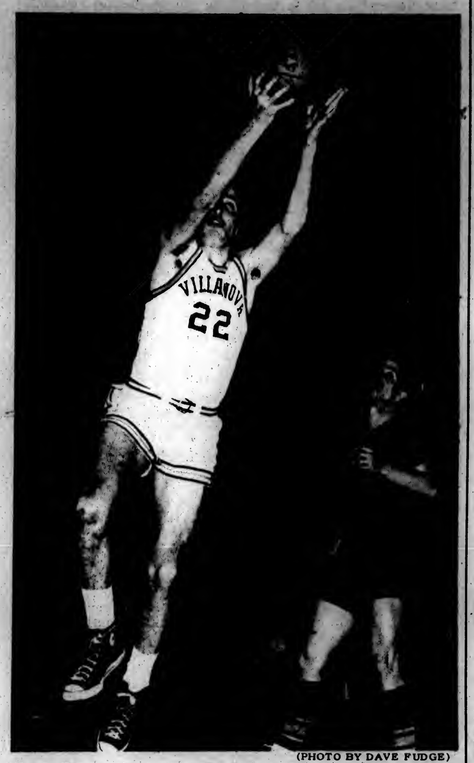
Villanova Young Democratic Club, said "Mr. Logue will make an excellent candidate for the U.S. Congress this fall and I have promised him the full support and cooperation of the Young Democrats. It is indeed most heartening to see a man as familiar with both the academic and practical aspects of politics and political science pursue public office."

An active conservationist, Logue is presently Chairman of the Open Space Committee of the Citizens Council of Delaware County and is a member of the Penjerdel Open Space Committee. Last May, he attended the White House Conference on Natural Beauty at President Johnson's invitation.

He is also an active Democrat and has written several political instruction sheets, including "How to Be a Block Captain" and "How to Work an Election District." Logue teaches courses in American government and international relations on both the graduate and undergraduate levels. He is author of "The Great Debate on Charter Reform: Proposals for a Stronger United Nations" and was co-author of last year's County Democratic platform.

Logue was born in Philadelphia and received his bachelor of arts degree from Yale in 1946 and his master's degree from Yale and the University of Pennsylvania. He has been at Villanova since 1959 and is founder and moderator of the Villanova Political Union. He lives in Swarthmore with his wife and five children.



When asked what type of campaign he would conduct, Logue replied "a memorable one."

John J. Logue

Father President Flaherty had this to say about Mr. Logue's candidacy: "While the University neither supports or opposes Mr. Logue politically it recognizes the rights and responsibilities of any qualified citizen to run for public office... No matter what the consequences this undertaking should be an enriching experience for Mr. Logue as a political scientist."

Cloudburst by 'Cat Mermen Washes Away Violets Varsity

by Bob McIntyre

On Saturday afternoon, Villanova's mermen traveled to NYU to engage in their fourth meet in a little over a week. The Cats weren't handing out any Valentine's cards as they toyed with the Violets and won both the Freshmen and the Varsity meets, 58-27 and 56-39, respectively.

The Wildcat coaches, Ed Geisz and his assistant Jack Lumsden, mixed up all their relay teams and even some individual events to see what could occur. Even though most of their plans backfired a little, they still had no trouble at all in winning their fourth meet of the season.

FITZMAURICE

Mike Fitzmaurice, swam the breaststroke of all things on the 400 yard medley, and the rest of the members also switched around only to get beaten by the New Yorkers. This was the first event and it got the Villanovan's a little upset to say the least and they thus proceeded to swamp NYU without much difficulty.

That night, the travel-weary 'Cats competed in the NYAC meet. The main reason being they were after a new record in the 400 yard medley relay event. The Black Nights of the Hudson nipped the Cats by .2 of a second and thus ended all hopes of a record in this meet.

Paul Campbell is another Freshmen who is causing some talk in and around swimming circles. Paul, who is from Tampa, Florida, has started to come into his own in the 100 yard freestyle and medley relay. He is breaking 50 seconds for the 100 now which is a tough barrier to break and he could be a big help to the Wildkittens.

NAVY

On the 9th of Feb. the Villanova swimmers visited the Navy Academy, in Annapolis, Maryland.

The Navy Blue and Gold were all ready for the invasion and almost blew the Cats back to the Main Line. Navy, one of the stronger teams in the East, beat the Varsity 60-35 and the Plebes won 59-38.

Fitzmaurice, against Navy, won the 200 and 100 yard freestyle events. In the 200 yard freestyle he set a new pool record with a time of 1:46.0. His time for the 100 was 47.9. Bob Biese garnered 219.95 pts. to win the diving event. The only other first was turned in by Rich Lamb in the tough 500 yard freestyle when he did a 5:29.5. Bill Livingood got a second in the 200 yard.

The swimming team is off till next Saturday when they swim a weak Seton Hall squad, but the one meet that the Varsity wants the most right now is the one with La Salle. From the rumors that have seeped through the steam-drenched pool area, one could detect that if La Salle, who is 10-0, shows up they'll wish they had taken their Explorer mascot and headed for Mars long ago because a certain group of Villanova mermen are out for BLOOD.

Wildcat Shooters Upset Naval Academy

by Frank Miller

The Villanova pistol team made sharpshooting history when it dumped Navy by a 2223-2211 count at Annapolis last Saturday. This marked the first time that either one of the major service academies had ever lost to a civilian college in Marksmanship.

Sgt. Migliacci's charges came close to downing Army two weeks ago but fell short by a mere eight points. The four Villanovans who turned the trick against the Middies were All Americans Jim Bushong (564), Tony Mascia (558), Ted Laven (545) and All America prospect Jim Durborow (556).

This was the 'Cats tenth victory of the season and gave them a firm hold on second place in the Northeast Intercollegiate Pistol Conference.

Earlier in the week, V.U. rolled up an easy 1112-983 win over Chestnut Hill (no-not the girls college!) in the Delaware Valley Pistol League. In this match Bushong, Durborow, Laven, and Mascia with 281, 281, 276, and 274 points respectively again showed their All American skills. The Marksmen are atop the D.V.P.L. with a 2-0 log.

During the remainder of February the sharpshooters swing into action three more times ... These matches are to be against the 157th Infantry at home, February 17th, against the Kemberton Rifle and Pistol Club, on the 22nd and against West Chester at home, on the 23rd.

Sgt. Migliacci cordially invites anyone interested in watching Villanova's most successful winter team, to attend one of the home matches. They are to be held at 8 p.m. in the basement of John Barry Hall.

The Student Government Association will sponsor a mixer this Friday night after the Villanova-St. Joseph's freshman basketball game in the Field House.

Starting at 9 p.m., the mixer will run until 12:30. Admission will be $1 with the bulk of the music being provided by the Fat City Four assisted by the Kingdams.

DOCTOR, LAWYER, OR A LOT OF GRIEF?

Grief is graduating with a B.A. degree and no idea of what to do with it. A lot of grief is graduating with a B.A. degree and the wrong idea of what to do with it. And wasting the most important years of your life discovering (the hard way) that you chose the wrong career.

Enrolling in our Campus Internship Program now could save you a lot of grief at graduation. How? By giving you the opportunity to become involved in—not just exposed to—life insurance sales as a career. You learn life insurance as a profession, from a professional. You put what you've learned into practice, and find that a life insurance sales career pays off in dollars as well as a sense of satisfaction. By graduation, you know what you're going to do with that B.A. degree.

We're old pros at saving graduates a lot of grief while they're undergraduates. And we can prove it.

Leapin' Larry

by Aurel Villari

By far the easiest, and the most accurate, way to briefly describe the abilities of Larry Livers is "an all-around athlete." Larry is best known for his endeavors in the world of track, but it would be unfair to bypass his feats on the basketball court. Larry is probably best remembered for copping the following records: the school high-hurdles record, which he set in 1964; the IC4A championship record in the high-hurdles; and the 400-meter hurdles record, which he set last year at Bakersfield, California, in the fastest collegiate time of the year -- 50.7 seconds.

(PHOTO BY DAVE FUDGE)

Before coming to Villanova, Larry was an outstanding hurdler and basketball player at near-by Norristown High. Since track was really his forte, when "Jumbo" Jim Eliot came knocking at his door, Larry willingly accepted a four-year track scholarship to run for the 'Cats. And the rest is history. The trail of Glory that Larry blazed for himself at Villanova in the world of track is now recorded in the annals of sports. But the rest of the story of Larry Livers is not so well known.

Larry had used up his four-year eligibility in track at the beginning of this academic year, but a year of eligibility in basketball remained. Jack Kraft, not one to let a good opportunity pass him by, enticed Larry to once again don a basketball uniform. The fact that Larry had been virtually idle in basketball for the past four years at first proved to be quite an obstacle; but Larry worked assiduously over the summer, trying to regain his shooting eye and to attune his legs for jumping. His efforts seem not to have been in vain. After starting the season on a promising note, Larry has been steadily improving as of late.

The St. Joseph's game epitomizes Larry's potential on the court. Larry excelled in this heated encounter by his tenacious rebounding and strong defensive play. He closely guarded Hawk stalwart Cliff Anderson and allowed him a frugal sum of points. Larry's sharp shooting in the Fairfield game, after coming off the bench cold for the second half, was probably the decisive factor in the outcome of that contest.

Larry attirbutes some of his success in his return to the wars to George Leftwich and Pete Coleman, who have offered those little bits of advice which are so important and can only be learned by experience. What about the future? Larry plans to begin running once again, but this time it will be for the Philadelphia Pioneer Club, starting about a month after the end of the basketball season. If Larry runs for the Pioneers like he ran for the 'Cats, the sport world will be hearing plenty about Larry Livers, the "leaping wonder."

Exciting Music Happens When the Duke Meets the Maestro

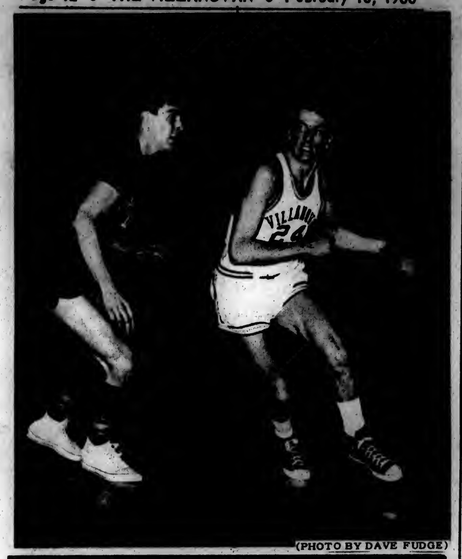
and the Boston Pops



Recorded "live" at Tanglewood—the musical meeting of America's foremost interpreter of popular classics with the man who created so many of them. In this new album, Arthur Fiedler and Duke Ellington play 12 of the Duke's tunes, arranged to make the most of the combined talents of the Boston Pops, the Duke's own sidemen on bass and drums, with the Duke himself at the piano. Here's a new "big band sound" that really takes off. Included in this swinging study of essential Ellingtonia are "Caravan," "Mood Indigo," "Sophisticated Lady" and "Satin Doll," with liner notes by the Duke himself. You'll love it madly.

Maff's Musings

By Joe Maffongelli

"Hey, Paul, I hear this guy Anderson is worth some $800,000 to Weeb Ewbank, so Vince grabbed him up to take your job." "Yeah," replies Paul, "but I'm sure you linemen will take care of the kid when summer training rolls around."

The above quote is merely what could happen in a bull session involving a couple of veterans on a world championship football team. These few phrases could spell disaster for a young prospect's career. Suppose these men do make sure that Paul's job is secured for a while longer. The tactics being employed to sign young talent in the grid game are, at best, deplorable. This is rather a common topic, especially since the Namath Bank was established last year, but the VILLANOVAN has withheld comment.

The episode which recently resounded the bitterness of the veterans toward the stupendous bonuses being offered to young talent -- involving Earl Faison and Ernie Ladd -- is a sterling example of the trouble which pro football is facing.

Although these two men cannot be commended for their attitude, there is no doubt that the speculative contracts which such green players are being offered are far worse than unreasonable. They are actually idiotic intentions spelled out in figures which involve numerous digits.

Perhaps the American Football League is achieving its objective to reach the status of the NFL, but such means can be disastrous enough to minimize the value of such an end. Now it is fairly safe to assume that no AFL club will be able to afford spending such amounts of cash for very long. Many people believe that this economic fact will be enough to off-balance the present onslaught of the junior circuit, but by the time this dwindling of funds has been reached it may well be too late.

From another point of view, this dangerous monetary practice of certain AFL men is not entirely their own fault. If the NFL will not soon come around to being realistic, they will be just as responsible for the inevitable calamity which confronts the sport. Surely their refusal to negotiate with the younger league has left them with no alternative but to out bid their adversaries.

On the topic of Namath himself, although it is a wonderful thing to watch a rookie become a superstar, his possibly shortened career would certainly be ironic. It would also be disastrous for the Jets now that Huarte has departed. Since the former "Irishman" was the outstanding college all-star last summer, in a game in which Namath did not even have to suit up; and also since the Jets gave him no chance at all to prove his value, who knows what might have been.

Explorers Burn Wildcats; Tournament Hopes Fizzle

by Jerry Bruderle

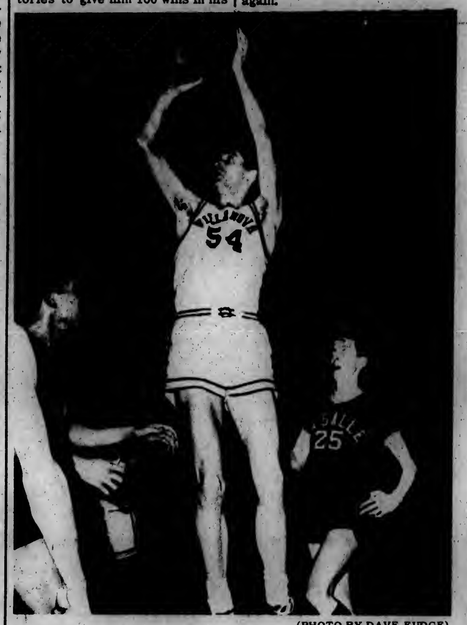
Before the game Villanova fans screamed, "NIT, NIT" knowing the 'Cats could make the New York post-season tournament if they could win almost all of their remaining seven games. But at the end of the game, when the La Salle fans yelled "It's all over!" many realized that Villanova had lost more than just a ball game. They may have lost their last chance for an NIT bid, which would be a fitting reward for a team that has come a long way since December as this one has.

La Salle is going nowhere, although there was some hope after upsetting Brigham Young in the Quaker City Tourney that newly-installed coach Joe Heyer could salvage something out of the season. But the BYU game was to La-Salle's season what the Army game was to Villanova's season -- only in reverse.

Since the BYU game and up to last Saturday La Salle had won one and lost 10 (including nine in a row), for a 3-14 mark. Since the Army game Villanova has won seven and lost four (including a one point loss to Temple, a two point loss to St. John's). In addition, Villanova had won four in a row. The 'Cats were going places until last Saturday when it all came undone.

Villanova was outhustled, outshot and generally outplayed as the Explorers handed Villanova its fourth defeat in City Series competition. The last time that happened to Villanova they had a new coach the next year. That was in 1961, Al Severance's last season, when the 'Cats went one step better and finished 0-5 counting extra loss to Penn in the City Series playoffs.

LA SALLE HOT



Villanova outrebounded La Salle by 27 and took 24 more shots, but still the Explorers made six more baskets while hitting an even 50 percent. Leading the way was Ed Burke who hit six out of seven from the field and four out of five from the foul line. The 5-11 guard scored mostly on jumpers from the 20 foot range, and most of the time he was open as Villanova overplayed their defense to stop high-scoring Hubie Marshall.

"In the beginning we were gambling a little by playing Marshall tight and letting Burke alone," said Jack Kraft after the game, "but after he hit two of those long jumpers, we should have played him tighter." Villanova did succeed in holding Marshall to 17 points and only 14 shots but it was the rest of the Explorers who kept Villanova at bay although the 'Cats were never out of the game. Lefty Ervin's 22 points were high for both teams.

Offensively for Villanova it was, as they say, "just one of those games." Led by Frank Gaidjunas' 24 rebounds and Bernie Schaffer's 14, the 'Cats often had three or four shots at the basket, but the ball just wouldn't go in. Bill Melchionni, who finished with 21 points but who shot only seven for 23 and seven for 11 from the foul line, had at least three or four shots which one of our more picturesque basketball announcers might call "in-again-out-again-Finnegans." Larry Livers missed an easy layup all alone on a fast break, and in short, the ball just refused to go in.

FRUSTRATION

The helpless feeling that VU fans get at the end of these City Series games when the "other" side stands up mockingly and yells, "It's all over," can only be compared with the frustration of the players like Melchionni, Schaffer, Traynor, Gaidjunas and Crews who know they're a better team than they were Saturday night. But there are still goals to shoot for -- a winning season; one which would be far more than people expected back in December. Also, Coach Kraft needs only four more victories to give him 100 wins in his five years at Villanova. (It could happen in the Field House against Seton Hall.) And there's still an outside chance for that tournament in New York. The Season's not over yet and the 'Cats will be heard from again.

(PHOTO BY DAVE FUDGE)

Frank Gaidjunas sails high over everybody to score on a short jumper.

Hard Day's Night

by John Digennaro

If nothing else, Saturday night's game answered the question of the month -- "Do you think we'll get an NIT bid?"

Not even the Madison Square Garden selection committee could take the chance of inviting a team capable of playing the way Villanova did last weekend. The only other team I have seen come close to being capable was LaSalle, and they still managed to win handily.

Whoever the seer was who selected the refs for the game proved beyond a doubt that three wrongs make a mess. If you were fortunate enough to watch the game on television you could have stayed tuned for the bullfights, watched the bull's first charge, and been exposed to more finesse than at any other time all evening.

"... when they are good they are very good, but when they are bad they are horrid." Led by Billy Melchionni, who played like I have never seen an All-American play before, the 'Cats combined in an effort that makes Lafayette look like a national power.

Led by their dynamic duo, Burke and Ervin, -- if anyone had asked me before the game who I thought they were, I would have guessed comedy team, and been right -- the Explorers outstaggered the 'Cats to victory, leaving them ('Cats) sole tenants of the Big 5 cellar.

It's really a shame to see a team that has come so far and so fast, return so fast and so far to pre-season form. Nobody can blame a team for losing, or getting beaten, but Villanova did neither. Whoever coined, "It's not whether you win or lose, but how you play the game that counts," sure was not at the Palestra Saturday night.

IJF '66 Hosts Jazz 'Cats' Friday

Sixth Jazz Festival to Hold Finals Saturday Night at 8

By Bill McCloskey

The Villanova Field House, home of the 'Cats, becomes the home of the "cats" Friday afternoon as representatives from 16 schools from around the country compete in the Sixth Annual Intercollegiate Jazz Festival (IJF).

Two defending champions will return to attempt to repeat their winning ways, the West Chester State Criterions and Trudy Desmond of the Tyler School of Fine Arts at Temple. Last year the Criterions were best overall group in the Festival and Miss Desmond was voted top vocalist.

Top names in Jazz will be on hand with the competitors. Stan Kenton is arriving tonight to serve as a judge and make a series of appearances on local radio and television programs for promotion of IJF.

In addition, the judging panel will consist of Dan Morgenstern of Down Beat Magazine; Hal Cook the publisher of Billboard, the music business weekly; John Hammond of Columbia Records and Bob Share, administrator of the Berklee School of Music in Boston.

A special judge will be Dr. Jack McKinney, of the Department of English at Seton Hall, who is Stan Kenton's biographer.

A band from Walt Whitman High School on Long Island will play while the judges make their final decision on Saturday night. The entire show will be over by 11 p.m. with the completion of the presentation of awards.

Senator Dominick To Speak At Political Union Meeting

A United States Senator from Colorado will debate the Dirksen Amendment with Villanova students on Monday evening (February 28). Senator Peter H. Dominick, Republican, will be the lead-off speaker in a meeting of the Villanova Political Union at 7:30 p.m. in Dougherty Hall. The meeting is open to the general public.

Senator Dominick received national attention at the 1964 Republican National Convention as a strong supporter of the presidential aspirations of Senator Barry Goldwater. Before the Convention and a nationwide television audience he spoke out against a floor resolution backed by the Rockefeller-Scranton forces.

Sen. Peter H. Dominick

A freshman Senator, Dominick serves on the Education and Labor and Commerce Committees. He served two terms as a congressman before being elected to the Senate in 1962.

The Dirksen Amendment on which Senator Dominick will speak is an attempt to reverse a recent Supreme Court decision. The resolution which the Senator and members of the Union's Liberal, Conservative and Moderate Parties will debate is as follows: Resolved, this house supports the Dirksen Amendment which allows one house of a state legislature to be based on factors other than population.

Senator Dominick will be the third United States Senator to debate before the 3-year old Villanova group. Senators Scott of Pennsylvania and Hart of Michigan have also subjected themselves to the fire of the Union members.

Senator Dominick, the Union's 31st guest speaker is a graduate of Yale College and Yale Law Schools.

He served as an Army Air Corps pilot during World War II and received the Distinguished Flying Cross and the Air Medal.

Fat City Four, Derelicts, Moths, All Play at Mixer

By John Morton

The fourteenth annual Shamokinaki Charity Mixer will be held on Friday, March 11, in the Villanova Field House.

The dance will begin at 8:30 p.m. and go until 12:30 a.m. with continuous music being supplied by the Fat City Four, the Derelicts, and The Moths. "This continuous music policy will insure the best mixer ever," said Betsy Grabowski, chairman of the affair.

Shamokinaki is a dance to support the Augustinian missions in Japan. These missions are located in Nagasaki, Hatano, Fukuoka, and Nagoya. The Nagasaki mission was the first one to be built. It encompasses a 15 square mile area that runs from the East China Sea to Nagasaki Bay. In this small area there are approximately 50,000 pagans. All of the proceeds from this dance will go to these missions.

Tickets for the dance will go on sale in the Pie Shoppe later this month for the price of $1. Tickets will also be able to be purchased at the dance itself. Refreshments will be sold, and all schools are cordially invited.

Villanovans Attend Prayer Breakfast In Nation's Capitol

Two Villanovans were among 80 students from across the nation who attended President Johnson's Prayer Breakfast in Washington Thursday.

Bill McCloskey and Brian Banmiller were the guests of Kansas Senator Frank Carlson at the breakfast. Some 1200 other leaders from around the nation were also present.

The prayer breakfast was part of a three day program in the nation's capitol sponsored by the International Christian Leadership.

The pair from Villanova were invited because of their involvement in a committee which is setting up a similar prayer breakfast for Pennsylvania student leaders, to be held March 7 in Harrisburg, with Governor Scranton in attendance.

There were several speeches at the Washington event.

O'Neil Commends V.U. Spirit

By Joe Sassani

Mr. William O'Neil is a 1962 Villanova graduate teaching in the Marketing department of the College of Commerce and Finance. Presently he is working to complete his doctorate which he began at Columbia University.

He is married and has a nine week old baby girl. A former member of a small orchestra, his chief avocation is music, all kinds from the big band sound of Glen Miller to Brubeck Jazz and Peter, Paul, and Mary.

As director of Freshman Academic Orientation, he seeks to inform incoming freshmen of the diversity of opportunities open to them at the College of Commerce and Finance. He is also moderator of the Marketing Club.

Mr. O'Neil is both articulate and enlightening when he speaks of Villanova. In a recent interview he spoke of his views of Villanova and its student body.

"Two of the University's greatest assets are the campus and the spirit of its student body.

"When I was at Columbia, I learned to appreciate the need for a university to have an atmosphere conducive to work. I find that Villanova has that atmosphere.

"Another of Villanova's assets and perhaps its greatest is the student body, which after all IS the university. Villanova is a campus of men. Here one can feel the Christian atmosphere and get the sensation of being part of a competitive vital organism. This spirit, I believe, is due to the fact that the students have an appreciation of the value of an education.

"Morality too is a prime trait of the Villanova student. For example, in the business world, it is easy to pass off confidential information about a client. I notice that Villanova graduates seem to understand their responsibility to their clients and staunchly refuse to divulge such information."

William O'Neil

Commenting on the Batman craze, Mr. O'Neil said: "When I was here it was Mickey Mouse! We never began a meal without reverently singing the Mickey Mouse song. I think Batman is an outlet and an enjoyable social phenomenon. It's a means of poking fun at the outside world.

"I enjoy it myself although it is a point of considerable ridicule. I know some of the other faculty members watch it also! I believe it shows a certain sophistication on the part of the present generation which sees the ridiculousness of Batman over the past generation which actually sat enthralled by that type of thing on Saturday afternoons."

Mr. O'Neil was asked of the problems a graduating student faces and how Villanova is preparing its Commerce and Finance students to meet the needs of our time. He replied:

"Like any other commodity, the B.S. degree is subject to the laws of supply and demand. While at one time a high school or B.S. degree was adequate for success in business, today the number of B.S. degrees is fast surpassing the demand. In the future the Masters and Doctors degrees will assume the stature now held by the B.S. degree.

"What does this mean to the student? Today a student must be good and different to find a place in the business world. One alternative is of course, to stay in school and obtain the graduate degrees.

"On the more general level, the introduction of the computer into the business fields has placed increased emphasis on college algebra, calculus, and the other branches of mathematics. To succeed in the business world, one must speak the language of the business world. Communication is essential.

"Although the student must pay increased attention to these quantitative methods of business, he must not do this to the exclusion of the arts. Rather, communication also means speaking to other men and this implies a knowledge of not only English grammar but also of literature, the arts, and possibly even a foreign language.

"At Villanova, the students are given a background in these quantitative techniques. However, I would also like to see English included as part of the curriculum for each of the four undergraduate years."

When asked of his future plans, Mr. O'Neil said that he intends to stay at Villanova and complete work on his doctorate. Eventually he hopes to win a professorship.

In Mr. O'Neil Villanova has found a man who not only is knowledgeable in his field of specialization but also is concerned with the students' problems. He will not fit the old concept of the cloistered professor but is interested in the entire University and most important, he is a vital, vibrant human being.

Former V.U. President Dies At Biscayne Dedication

The Rev. Edward V. Stanford, OSA, former president of Villanova University and consultant to the Association of America Colleges, died on Thursday while attending a meeting at Biscayne College, an Augustinian institution in Dania Florida.

Father served the second longest term as Villanova's president from the years 1932 to 1944. During Father's significant tenure, the NROTC program was initiated under the title of the V-12 Program.

After his presidency, Father served as rector of Archbishop Carroll High School in Washington, D.C. In later years, he was a consultant to the American Association of Colleges. He had just completed a book dealing with college administration.

Father's last place of residence was St. Mary's Hall. He was buried yesterday in the Augustinian cemetery located near the chapel on campus, after a requiem mass at 11 a.m. An all night vigil on Sunday and the Office of the Dead on Monday were also offered for Father.

Logue Endorsed Sat. By Delco Democrats

Political Science Department professor John Logue was endorsed Saturday, by the Democratic Committee of Delaware County to be their candidate for Congressman in the fall elections.

Logue was nominated by a 22-4 vote at a meeting in Media, Pa., the county seat.

Speaking to the VILLANOVAN shortly after the slating, he said he highly enjoyed the first week of campaigning. During last week he contacted by mail or phone all of the township Democratic leaders in the County to get their support for his candidacy.

Beta Gamma Society Keeps Above .500 in Competition

Ever since the completion of its successful Sixth Villanova Invitational Debate Tournament which George Washington University won, the Beta Gamma Debate Society has been busy representing Villanova at top tournaments up and down the Atlantic seaboard.

At Harvard, freshmen Ted McDermott and Mike Normile spoke well for Villanova and themselves in compiling a 5-3 record against some pretty stiff competition. Considering this was their first varsity meet, much is expected of them in the coming year.

While the freshmen were at Harvard, four of the varsity traveled south to the College of William and Mary in Williamsburg, Virginia. Despite the southern hospitality, the team of Dan Cuicci, Jerry Burke, Ed Grey and Skip LaFleur managed only a 5-9 record. Of the nine rounds lost though, five were by one point each while two were by two points to such national contenders as Navy, Wake Forest and North Carolina.

Traveling the next weekend to Rutgers and Yeshiva Universities the varsity compiled a 12-2 record for both tournaments. At Rutgers in New Brunswick the team of Cuicci, Burke, Grey and LaFleur placed sixth with a 6-2 record.

The following Sunday at Yeshiva in New York City the varsity team of Ronnie Dankel, Mary Kay Lally, Ed Grey and Skip LaFleur brought back a perfect 6-0 record and a third place on the negative side with LaFleur as third-rated negative speaker.

In the coming weeks Beta Gamma will be traveling over 5,000 miles to debate. Going north to Dartmouth College in Hanover, New Hampshire, west to Notre Dame in South Bend, Indiana and south to Bellarmine College in Louisville, Kentucky rank Beta Gamma as one of Villanova's most widely traveled extra curriculars.

Anna Moffo, Singing City, Perform Here March 12

By Steve Buck

Anna Moffo, renowned leading soprano, and the famed Singing City Choir, will appear in concert in the Field House on Saturday, March 12. The performance, sponsored by the Villanova Arts Forum, will begin at 8:15 p.m.

Miss Moffo has been acclaimed throughout the world for her appearances in opera. She has been a leading soprano in opera houses in New York, San Francisco, Rome, Chicago, Buenos Aires, and Milano. In addition, she stars in her own television show which runs 35 weeks a year from Rome.

A native of Wayne, Pa., and a graduate of Radnor High School, Miss Moffo achieved one of the great triumphs of her career during the 1964-65 concert season when she performed before Prince Rainier and Princess Grace of Monaco at Monte Carlo. She also appeared at the Metropolitan Opera House, where she was acclaimed for her success as Norena in "Don Pasquale" and Liu in "Turandot."

The Singing City Choir is a 100 voice choral group directed by Dr. Elaine Brown. It was founded in 1948 as a non-profit educational group, and it remains in that status today. They have sung with the Philadelphia Orchestra, The Robin Hood Dell Orchestra, and the New York Bach Aria Group.

The Singing City has received acclaim throughout the world. They have performed under such conductors as Leonard Bernstein, and Eugene Ormandy. Their music is now being heard throughout the world through the "Voice of America" Program.

SGA Tutoring Program Stages Its Return With Frat Backing

The SGA Tutoring Program has been established for some time but a lack of cooperation from the student body has kept it from achieving its goal.

In a joint effort to revive this program, it has enlisted the guidance of well qualified tutors from the honor fraternities on campus. Their names will be on file in the S.G.A. office, and they will be available to tutor Biology, Chemistry, Psychology, Economics and Math.

As soon as the S.G.A. has received the names of those students who are in need of special assistance, definite hours will be provided each day in the S.G.A. office to enable the student to make arrangements with his tutor.

Mid-term examinations will be here in a few weeks and it is the S.G.A.'s desire to have this program in full force before it is too late.

Rehearsals in Swing For Miller Classic 'Death of a Salesman'

The Field House may be in reality quite far from New York but when Arthur Miller's "Death of a Salesman" comes it will be close enough at least in spirit to be called off-off-Broadway, as the students will be witness to Belle Masque's entrance into a new era of entertainment, according to the officers of the club.

This production which will be running from March 31 to April 3 should prove to be an interesting one. This may be due to the writer of the play, Arthur Miller. This is true, but only in part, for a play to come alive must have people. It is under the direction of Mr. Resinski and he is leading a capable cast.

Among them are John McPeak, Mike Sutherland, and Brian Morgan who are returning from their fine performance in "Man for all Seasons."

Special mention should be made of Morgan. He will be playing Willie Loman, the leading character.

Elections Committee Meets Tomorrow Night Aids Frosh Elections

The SGA Elections Committee will hold a meeting tomorrow evening at 8:15 in 209 Bartley Hall in connection with the Student Government Lecture Series. The speaker for the meeting will be George Valva, chairman of the Elections Committee.

The primary purpose of the meeting will be to introduce Freshmen candidates for office to elections procedure on campus and to acquaint upperclassmen with revision in the procedure for General Class Elections which will take place on March 24 this year.

The Election Committee hopes a result of this Series will be a better informed voter and a heavier turnout at the polls this year. They will attempt to surpass last year's record of 77% of the student body voting.

Scholar and Man of Action

By Matt Roche

The word "scholar" sometimes conjures up Faustian visions of leather-bound books, retorts filled with vile liquids, and a retreat from the world into necromantic experiments. If this is so, "scholar" is only a partial approximation of William D. Valente, professor of law.

A better title might be man of action, for as retiring president of the Pennsylvania Federation of Citizens for Educational Freedom he was instrumental in securing passage for the controversial fair bus bill of Pennsylvania.

It would seem that Mr. Valente has collected honors ever since coming from his Augustinian parish, St. Rita's, in South Philadelphia to the University of Pennsylvania. While at Penn, he completed his college course in two years on a faculty scholarship, picking up along the way such honors as Phi Beta Kappa and Pi Gamma Mu.

After receiving his B.A., the U. of P. history major then attended the university's Law School. Here again the combined scholar and man of action reaped such prizes as the editorship of the U. of P. Law Review and membership in the Order of the Coif.

A quiet man of strong convictions, Mr. Valente echoes the philosophy of the Citizens for Educational Freedom who seek "dollars for scholars." Last year he was unanimously elected the CF's Man of the Year.

William Valente

The lawyer formerly held the position of Assistant City Solicitor, Philadelphia. He is a member of the Philadelphia and Pennsylvania Bar Assn., and also a board member of the Philadelphia Fellowship Commission. When asked about the best preparation for a legal career, Mr. Valente replied, "I found a mixture of philosophy, English and history to be the best. I think legal studies can best wait until law school."

The scholar Valente is rated by his students as a demanding teacher of corporation and contract law, featuring deep analyses which search the heart of the problem whose solution has the extra sparkle of practical experience. The man of action Valente will soon file a brief as a friend of the court in the Girard Trust, petitioning the court for the admittance of Negro students. Scholar and man of action, William D. Valente is a new asset to the Law School.

Rev. John B. Sheerin Addresses Law School On Ecumenical Council

The chapel in Corr Hall was the scene on February 13 of a gathering of law students from the Villanova Law School.

Led by Dean Harold Gill Reuschlein and the President of the Student Bar Association, Paul X. McMenaman, a large contingent of the Law School student body and Faculty received communion at an eleven o'clock mass.

Following the mass the group attended a breakfast at the nearby Haverford Hotel. Celebrant of the mass, and guest speaker at the breakfast, was The Reverend John Basil Sheerin, C.S.P. Father Sheerin is Editor of THE CATHOLIC WORLD, and played an active role at the Ecumenical Council in Rome. The topic of his informative address was the so-called Jewish Declaration of that Council.

Among the distinguished guests at the Breakfast was The Honorable J. Sidney Hoffman, Judge of the Superior Court of Pennsylvania.

S.G.A. Convenes Tonight, Succession Policy Proposed

By Tom Dabney

The SGA, when it meets tonight in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall, will consider a lengthy and detailed list of motions which it recommended for passage at last Monday's Senate meeting.

The meeting opened at 4:30, and had to be recessed to allow the members of the Senate to attend dinner and return for further discussion before it ended at 8:30.

Heading the list of motions to be tackled in this evening's meeting was an important and prevalent one concerning Presidential succession. The motion, if passed, will amend the present Constitution to allow the Congress to deal with succession in one of two categories: whether the absence will be considered temporary or permanent.

The absence will be considereo permanent by the Congress if two-thirds majority roll-call is gained, following the President's notification of his pending absence. Less than two-thirds vote for permanent absence will result in the appointment of an Interim President by the Dean of Student Activities.

If a two-thirds majority is reached for permanent absence, his successor, who will be chosen from a designated line of succession, must receive a two-thirds vote of confidence to assume the office. In the event none of the designated line of successors gains the necessary confidence vote, an open election will be held at a later date to elect a senior from the ranks of the Congress.

The next motion on the agenda deals with a list of 20 proposals lumped into one motion, which are all of an academic nature. This motion was hotly contested by two members of the Senate on the basis that some of the proposals were merely a sugar-coating for the other more stringent and less acceptable ones.

Also that some of the proposals appeared to resemble riders, which could not pass of their own merit taken separately and that to pass them in one composite motion was "criminal" and deceitful. The motions themselves are compre-

Law students, faculty, and distinguished guests breakfast at Haverford Hotel on Feb. 13 following Mass in Corr Hall Chapel.

The house is packed again. Do you play Retreats?

Letters To The Editor

To the Editor:

Concerning your editorial of February 9, "Computerized Retreats," the question should be asked, pertaining to the statement that "All too often the student looks forward to the retreat because of the excused cuts from classes ...," why do students have this attitude?

The answer probably involves immaturity, indifference and worthlessness. But who is or what is immature, indifferent, and worthless: the student or the retreat? A further evaluation of both the student and the retreat is necessary to answer the question. This evaluation need not be of the purpose of the retreat as aptly stated in the editorial, nor of the students' needs, but rather of the method of giving retreats and of how the student thinks and reacts.

If one went to a Catholic high school (which applies to many Villanovans), from his freshman year on he has most likely attended "computerized" retreats centered around the topic of sex, and the stories, sermons and language have remained the same. Improper sexual activity is probably rampant and a great problem, and should be discussed. However, does anyone really expect two days of mass computerized repetition to change the lives of young men?

To sight an incident from history, it took many, many years of God knows what and certainly not computerized retreats to convert one of the greatest thinkers of the Church, the founder of the Augustinians, from a life of sin. No student at Villanova claims to be a great theologian, but, if the retreat is to be a success, he must be communicated with and treated for what he is, an intelligent questioning adult, facing all the seemingly rational doctrine and theories of the outside world.

The VILLANOVAN deserves praise for its February 9 editorial for the much needed and well restrained criticism of the present retreat system. But it should have gone further in suggesting possible remedies, such as a "free school" retreat system based on the idea that if it is good it will be well attended; or simply no retreats, but a greatly improved theology program augumented by pertinent sermons at Sunday Mass slanted toward the student as is done in the Corr Hall Chapel.

To the Editor:

Two weeks ago, acting as spokesman for a large segment of the student body (some of whom were present at the meeting that night), I gave a totally factual account -- not a lot of unfounded "assertions" but a factual account -- of the circumstances surrounding the firing of Brendon "Irish" Moore. This was motivated by a sincere desire to see justice done, through bringing out into the open some things which otherwise would have remained unpublicized and unknown. What was protested that night was not the actual firing of Moore, since this is a purely subjective decision which the chair has every right to make. Rather, protest was made about the manner in which this was done (suddenly, heatedly, and over the phone) and about the way in which a bulletin announcing this removal was continuously broadcasted for over a day on WWVU (rather than waiting two nights and publicizing it at the Congress meeting). Furthermore, an inquiry was made as to why Irish was asked by the chair not to run for Arts and Science day-hop representative.

Being a member of the Spirit Committee, and having been very close to the situation all year long, it is my own personal opinion that Brendon Moore was doing a very good job as chairman, especially under many adverse circumstances involved, and that he definitely showed no "lack of interest." I can't help but wonder how Mr. Ed Grey could make the statement in last week's Villanovan that "Brendon Moore was not doing his job well." Considering the fact that Grey has never served on or been connected with the Spirit Committee, is it not he who is guilty of "rash judgment" and "lack of understanding?"

To the Editor:

As an individual and a member of the Young Republican Club, I welcome the emergence of the Young Democrat Club on campus. Now that both parties have representation, we have endeavored to awaken the political interest on campus or at least present both sides of the political coin to the undergraduate, so that upon graduation he will be able to choose his political allegiance with a conviction in the principles of that party.

But in this ambitious crusade, it appears the Young Democrats have fallen already. As a VILLANOVAN editorial of last semester stated, "the Young Democrats Club continually plays on the memory of John F. Kennedy through numerous films about him." There is no discussion of present administration policies.

In order to remedy this situation and get back to wakening political interest and knowledgeable of the student body, I propose that with the approval of the VILLANOVAN, and the leadership of the Young Republican and Democrats, weekly political newspaper columns be instituted.

We would discuss Vietnam, Civil Rights, the "Great Society," Bobby Baker, etc. Both clubs would benefit; 1) By the greater amount of undergraduates they would reach; 2) By the political discussion they would generate.

By this discussion of foreign and domestic issues, hopefully, will develop the informed and principled electorate that this country needs.

To the Editor:

Your editorial in last week's edition, calling on the student to take weekend retreats I am sure only uses weekends as an example. I am sure a retreat over a vacation would be just as satisfactory in the writer's eyes.

However, mention of the weekend brings into focus an apparent disregard at this University for the working student. Last weekend (February 5) I was required to take the Graduate Record Examination so that the University could evaluate one of its programs. While I am glad to see the school attempting to better itself, I do object to being required to miss a day's employment to serve this purpose.

The practice of the Economics Department of scheduling many departmental tests at 4:30 p.m. is another indication of the lack of consideration for those who plan their work week around what is supposed to be a fixed academic schedule.

I would hope those in charge, perhaps with the help of the computer now employed by the University, could come up with a more equitable way of testing students.

It is 6:45 Saturday night: THUMP THUMP, dribble dribble dribble; all is normal at Alumni Gym. It is now 7:01 Saturday night: the doors are bolted, the lights are out, Alumni Gym is closed. All that remains is the hollowed echoes of the sounds of enthusiasm that accompany a fast rugged, pick-up game of basketball.

Saturday night is terribly lonely and boring on campus when one doesn't have anything to do. Alumni Gym could offer some entertainment. Would it cost the school too much to operate the gym an extra two hours a week, or does the school fear a lack of participation in the gym on a Saturday night? I for one would be there many a Saturday night along with a few friends. Therefore, I ask the Administration through the VILLANOVAN to reconsider this action and allow Alumni Gym to remain open until 9:30 p.m. on Saturday nights.

To the Editor:

The recent basketball game with La Salle exemplified an occurrence which has become all too frequent at Villanova sporting events. We refer to the mass exodus from the V. U. cheering section when the game had obviously been put out of our reach with only about two minutes of playing time remaining.

This display richly reflected our loyalty and I'm sure that any of the players who noticed this rush for the exits probably wondered about the hypocritical nature of the Villanova backers. These same students, minutes before, had been screaming and yelling for the 'Cats to bring home a victory. Further, Villanova, as one of the three Catholic colleges which really are responsible for the Big Five's national reputation has an obligation to uphold its spirit as well as any Big Five school.

On Saturday night, however, we probably resembled a Blue and White version of Temple or Penn. It is undoubtable that the poor spirit shown by many of our students actually gave impetus to La Salle's taunting cheers of "It's all over" etc.

Finally, those who stayed until the final buzzer could have taken notice that coach Kraft and the entire squad stayed for the entire forty minutes. But if we don't have to stay until the final buzzer, why should they? There is no reason why everyone can't stay whether we're winning by twenty or losing by twenty! Consequently, those who do not plan to stay with the team in defeat would find everyone concerned happier if they didn't attend the games at all.

Editor's Note:
The following is the third letter written to the CATHOLIC STANDARD AND TIMES concerning the handling of the St. John's controversy by the National Catholic News Service. Mr. Van Allen is a member of the Villanova Theology Department, and we feel that the letter deserves publication. None of the letters were published in the STANDARD.

Dear Editor:

I write in regard to the NC news service report "Normal Second Semester begins at St. John's" carried in the Standard (2/11/66). The report states, "The hard-core union members marching outside the gates of the nation's biggest Catholic university lost a friend because of a switch in the stand of the campus of the American Association of University Pro-

Theology Reappraisal

Beginning with evidence concerning the existence of God, the Freshman Theology course seeks to give students an idea of the conclusions which can be drawn from man's knowledge of Him. Going on, they study the religions of other men in other times. This is not comparative religion: in a quarter of a semester they review and dismiss all other religions.

Later, revelation, the Life of Christ, and Church History occupy them. The paradoxical conclusions of the course deal with ecumenism and the authoritarian structure of the Church.

The new texts used and the new fields explored by the Theology Dept. are to be commended. The pitfalls inherent in the new courses are to be condemned.

This new course is in danger of falling into the sarcastic, unintelligent evaluations of other religions -- the fault of the old Apologetics text. No study of all other faiths can be completed in ten days unless the course becomes merely an excuse to attack other faiths. We believe that a more meaningful discussion of other religions can be had by the presentation of speakers of different religions, in lecture or debate.

The study of revelation will prove uninteresting, and we wonder how objectively the Department will present the History of the Church.

The Sophomore course races through an intellectual and historical review of morality before delving into major moral problems of the day.

In some fields, moral authority must be recognized. But in class discussions of "social justice," while pro-labor (and socialist) encyclicals will be read, little note will be taken of the defense of property and the excesses of unions.

In "Peace and War" talks, it will be too easy for professors to use the Church as support for their personal theories on the conduct of nations.

When discussing "Church and State" relations, many letters advocating aid to Church schools' (and similar programs) will be dictated, while honest conservatism will merit only academic retaliation.

The VILLANOVAN recognizes the great progress that has been made. It also realizes the great distance yet to be traveled. The first two courses, as now constituted are only a temporary construction. If dissent is not allowed, if debate is not heated and free, if personal opinion is not debunked, then the new courses will not move us forward. They will only deepen intellectual resentment.

'Antique Masks' Promising Play

By Joe Linsalata

Last weekend the Playbox served as the perfect set for the new show ANTIQUE MASKS--an old dilapidated theater. A stage, strewn with old actors gathered together to work out their life for their old director, turns into a fiasco between their reality and their stagecraft.

Jan Hartman has written an interesting stage ritual of how a moribund director Baxter calls his past acting company together to reminisce about his creative life.

Hartman intertwines the technique of Eugene O'Neill's THE ICEMAN COMETH and Luigi Pirandello TONIGHT WE COMPROMISE to bring out the tortured waste each actor has made out of his life. Each actor has covered his personal life with a mask of superficiality.

The stage becomes their escape from reality but also their instrument of purgation.

Baxter's little escapade into the past turns into an exposure of the frustration the actors suffer because of the director's influence. His carnal relationship with the actresses and his homosexuality with the actors has transformed each victim into a tyranny of egotism and callousness of reality.

Baxter implies that he gave them life and creative talent but the value of what he gave them is meaningless.

Hartman displays his talent as a playwright by complete reliance on technical principles. The plot, characters, and the language are striking but the script lacks the subltety of a mature writer.

The message Hartman dwells upon is self-evident but handled in an overly blatant fashion.

Director Tom Nevins has stated that Hartman is an excellent craftsman and he has given him an exciting script to stage. Nevins also has staged one of his finest productions.

Instead of relying only on "stage tricks" and rapid action, Nevins toned his cast down to emphasize the poetry of the script and the personal involvement needed by each actor.

The cast is ably supported by Tom Fennessey as High Hat, a song and dance man, who gives the most significant portrayal. Prudence Barry and Victoria Lee Blunt were excellent as Sabrina and Bonnie -- two actresses whom Baxter has seduced. However, both seemed to have had problems with their concentration on stage.

Paul Norton as Baxter, H. Robert Becker, Edmond Weinheim, and John Benigno all had problems with consistancy of characterization. Weinheim seemed to be excessive with movement and articulation giving an impression of overacting. John Benigno was so stiff and rigid on stage that one could easily imagine him cast of bronze.

It is evident that the cast was not at its peak during their second performance. However, the show has the promise to mature into the powerful drama that Hartman has written. It is an extremely difficult play with complex emotional commitments. It is not an easy show for amateurs to present.

This weekend the cast should be at their peak which would give the Playbox the most startling drama it has had yet.

'Superman' Flops

By Joe Linsalata

When a camp show such as Batman becomes a hit, you can be sure to expect New York producers to come up with the worst scripts and the worst music that they have on file to try to mesh a camp show together.

Harold Prince tried it with IT'S A BIRD ... IT'S A PLANE ... IT'S SUPERMAN which opened last week at the Shubert Theatre for what he hopes will be a two week pre-Broadway try-out.

What more could be desired for a "camp" script show than Clark Kent doffed in his fidora and horned-rimmed glasses searching for the most convenient phone booth, or Lois Lane dilegently covering every Superman story for the Daily Planet in hope of winning Superman's love, or Max Menchen, the debonair reporter having contests to find Superman's REAL identity, or Dr. Segdwick, the only person who lost the Nobel Prize ten times and avowing to destroy Superman. What a script!

The whole show might have gone over if Charles Strouse and Lee Adams had written a better musical score or if some one in the cast knew how to put a song across.

Only the performance of Linda Lavin is worthy of any acclaim. She made the shows only musical hit, "You've Got Possibilities." She was the only performer with vivacity and charm.

Who she sang it to might have had possibilities but IT'S A BIRD ... IT'S A PLANE ... IT'S SUPERMAN has none.

In the opening scene Superman flies down from the skies to capture some bank robbers but there is little hope that even Superman would be able to save his own show.

fessors." The article then goes on and states that in the Feb. 2 meeting of the AAUP "the strike was condemned by a 94 to 79 vote. A move to condemn both the strike and the firings was defeated by an 88 to 87 vote."

What was not reported, however, was a change that occurred in the membership of the AAUP. The BULLETIN (2/10/66) reporting on the talk given by St. John's Professor Richard J. Wall at Haverford College (2/9/66) stated, "Wall said that he was forced to resign (as President of AAUP at St. John's) when conservative members of the faculty, including 32 Vincentian priests, joined the chapter, secured a majority and voted to denounce the faculty strike."

I write now to protest the manner in which the NC news service has handled the story. Can we conceive of this reporter on the scene at St. John's being unaware of this change in the membership of the AAUP? Can the withholding of this information be anything less than dishonest?

Last April, in Rome, Pope Paul VI told the participants in a U.N. seminar on freedom of information: "No one, therefore, has the right knowingly to propagate information that is erroneous or presented under a light that distorts its real meaning. Nor has anyone the right to select this information in an arbitrary way, publishing only what follows the thrust of his opinions and passing over the rest in silence. One can sin as well against truth by calculated omissions as by inexact statements."

As Msgr. Adamo, editor of the CATHOLIC STAR HERALD stated in his article "Dilemma in the Catholic Press" (AMERICA 8/14/65), "Actually there is no valid reason why the NCWC should own a news service; this is the root of the problem of freedom of information." Msgr. Adamo explains why this is the root of the problem. "... through their control of National Catholic Welfare Conference News Service, the bishops could exercise news management at the source, and did. Repeatedly, NC News Service has been requested by Church leaders to ignore this, soften that, cover up some other news story."

Who is responsible for NC news' apparent withholding of the information of the change in the membership of the AAUP is not greatly important. The basic issue is that we seem not to have been given the whole truth. Calculated omissions seem to have distorted the truth.

Isn't this most surely at variance with the spirit of Vatican II? Shouldn't steps be taken now to bring the NC news service and the diocesan papers dependent on it, into great accord with the recently completed Council?

Sincerely,
Rodger VanAllen

Freedoms Foundation Gives Special Award To Project Mail Call

The Freedoms Foundation at Valley Forge bestowed a special award on Mail Call Viet Nam on Washington's Birthday, after giving its highest honor to the Defense Department and the Military services in Viet Nam.

Mail Call Viet Nam was initiated by Dr. and Mrs. Richard P. Ornsteen with help from Villanova students in DeLurey Hall and many other Villanovans who filled out Christmas cards to be sent to the soldiers overseas. Other colleges in the area gave added assistance as a counter-measure against student protests against the war in Viet Nam.

The Foundation praised Mail Call Viet Nam, "... for the unique, stirring and strenuous program initiated and directed by Dr. and Mrs. Richard P. Ornsteen and carried out by local volunteers united in love of country to boost the morale of servicemen in Viet Nam.

"The nation depends on individual initiative, high goals and personal efforts illustrated by these honored citizens."

Political Forum

Union Strength

By Jim Brennan

In recent months labor union leaders have been claiming that they could see no danger of inflation, but according to the Department of Labor there has been an 0.4 per cent rise in the consumer price index. According to the United States Chamber of Commerce, the principle reason for the price increases has been rising union wages.

The average wage increase for manufacturing in 1965 was 45 per cent higher than the average for the preceding five years. Along with the wage increase was a 25 per cent drop in the average worker's increase in productivity.

PRODUCTIVITY DECREASES

During 1960-64, the average increase in hourly earnings and manufacturing was 2.9 per cent while in 1965 it was 4.2 per cent. The average increase in worker productivity, 1960-64 was 3.4 per cent, but in 1965 it was 2.5 per cent.

Concerning the construction industry the view is even dimmer. Labor Department statistics show that wages and fringe benefits are rising 4.8 annually and as a consequence, construction costs in 1965 rose approximately 3 per cent.

TAFT-HARTLEY

Probably the senators who voted recently against a cloture motion to halt the Dirksen-led filibuster against the Administration's bill to repeal Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act were familiar with the above statistics and erudite enough to realize that if anything unions do not have to be strengthened.

REVEALING POLLS

Perhaps those voting for the motion should not only become aware of the above figures but should refer to three public opinion polls taken during 1965. These polls, Gallup, Lubell, and Opinion Research, showed that the public, on the whole does not believe that employees should be required to join or pay dues to a union to hold their jobs.

As elected representatives, the repeal voting Senators would do well to reflect the views of the public.

You Might Well Ask . . . .

By Neil Sheehan

About ... High atop a seemingly peaceful and ordinary quadrangle, sits the beautiful Sullivan Manor. What danger lurks there? None, of course, for this is the palatial home of Harver Lottery, the millionaire playboy. However, whenever trouble is in the air, Harver and his ward, Ward Warte, dash to their underground hideaway (What madness is this?) and become the world renowned fighters of crime, protectors of the law, upholders of justice, none other than Batfly and the Boy Lecher, Robel (This is madder than I had suspected). By the looks of things it appears that our Dynamic Duo is off on the trail of the archvillain, the Rodent. If you will remember, the Rodent is the infamous master criminal who leaves a small mousetrap behind after every dastardly crime. The trademark of the Rodent!

Meanwhile, in Gothic City, at the Gothic Museum on Gothic Avenue, near Gothic Park, the fiendishly sinister character, the Rodent, and his vicious gang, the Mice, are in the process of robbing the famous Gothic Art Collection. The guards have been overcome by limburger cheese in the ventilating system. (Some of these villains go all out to stay within their themes.)

But where is Batfly? Where is Robel, the Boy Lecher? If they haven't gone fishing and they're not doing Robel's algebra homework, then where are they? Has Batfly finally wised up to the finer things in life? Not a chance. Here he comes with Robel on the Bat-Ropes crashing through the skylight in a somewhat hackneyed entrance.

"You're all through, Rodent!"
"Holy Hacksawblades!"
"Dammit, Robel, that's getting a bit boring."
"BIFF!"
"POW!"
"FUNK!"
"BAM!"
"POIK!"
"CRACK!"
"POIT!"
"HURT!" (And where is Hostileman?)
"PAIN!"
"TENSION!"
"PAIN!"
"TENSION!"
"PAIN!"
"The Rodent's getting away, Batfly!"
"It's too late to get him but we'll get the three Mice. See how they run." (That's good, Batfly.)

Later that evening in Sullivan Manor, Harver and Ward discuss the day's events.

"Well, how did you like the day's events," said Batfly, discussing the day's events.

But there was no answer, for Robel was fast asleep, tired out from the day's events.

The Quest for Identity

by Ron Javers

"I a stranger and afraid
In a world I never made."
(Housman)

It seems indeed strange that one could feel alone in America today; if only for the reason of not having enough time or silence to think about it. But it is being pointed out more and more frequently that many Americans do feel alone, acutely and intensely alone. Apparently, somewhere between the television and the stereo, the drive-in and the discoteque, somewhere in the pause between the noises, there is an alarming question being asked: "Who am I?"

A person needs to know and to feel himself both as a unique individual and as an integral part of a larger social configuration. The use of the term "integral" connotes more than the idea of a cog in a wheel. The individual must identify himself with a pattern of ideology, religion, occupation and personal relationships which invoke a real sense of human satisfaction.

GOALS NECESSARY

Without this sense of satisfaction, or indeed even selection of goals is severely atrophied. In short, one isn't going to "go" anywhere if he doesn't believe there's anywhere worth going.

So again the question haunts the individual: "Who am I?" Alienation, insecurity, and anxiety are all related to the continued diminution or complete loss of identity in America today. With the crumbling of old values and norms and the lack of vital substitutes, a certain amount of anxiety must acrue. It is this anxiety that haunts modern man. Its eradication or at least diffusion is probably the most important single problem to be encountered in the development of an enlightened satistying society.

CONFRONTATION OF "BEING"

The philosophers never cease their confrontation of "being." The sociologist considers the more individuated problem of "self" and hence the concept personal identity or the "continuing I." The continuing problem with the sociologists and philosophers is the problem of communication: Few can understand what they are saying. Often, they can't understand each other. Many of these men are brilliant, a few even readable. It seems to the eternal discredit of the social scientists, a morbid penchant for dissection.

Those who would conceive "the proper study of mankind" must indeed study their subject in a contextual, societal perspective, not as a bug sliced and squirming. So it seems that a valid argument may be indeed put forward for the need of a "rallying point," a point of orientation, as it were, for the study of man.

Perhaps we may reconsider an old question: "Who am I? and find at least the beginnings of a satisfying answer. We may even someday learn how to make ourselves happy.

Or just at loose ends? There's a big difference, you know.

Like the difference between the guy with a pie-in-the-sky scheme to get rich quick, and the man with a plan for financial security.

Or the difference between a savings plan that's hale and hearty as long as you are, and a life insurance program that keeps going strong even when you can't.

Life insurance is one investment you can make today that's guaranteed to take the strife out of life years from now. That might be worth more, from the very beginning, than you put into it. That could be worth as much, at any time, as you planned to put into it in a lifetime. And the sooner you start, the less it costs.

Cleveland Orchestra Gives Memorable Main Line Debut

By Matt Roche

George Szell and the Cleveland Orchestra made their Main Line debut Friday, February 11, at the Villanova Field House.

Mr. Szell had been to the Philadelphia area before, most notably at the Robin Hood Dell. The pre-concert fog setting was perfect for the first number, the awesome musical equivalent of Michelangelo's Sistine Chapel ceiling. It was a tone poem in the romantic style based on a poem by Alexander Ritter.

A delightful postscript to Strauss was the closing number of the first part of the program. Three pieces from THE DAMNATION OF echoes of brass and strings in the allegretto. One of the harpists remarked after the program, "I certainly learned quite a bit from Mr. Szell in the Allegretto. I think he rose to the challenge of the youthful and enthusiastic audience."

The Cleveland Orchestra then made the transition to the third movement, "Presto; Trio; Assai meno presto," which featured a lyrically moving quality.

The last movement, "Allegro Con Brio" fractured the silent Field House with a forthright opening followed by a firm stroking by the string section. This was the final proof of the title bestowed upon Mr. Szell by a critic "Master Builder of Music."

The conductor was an architect of sound in an old favorite that could have easily become a tried-and-tired standard, but thoughtful interpretation resulted in a fresh delivery and a memorable performance. This was Mr. Szell's debut on the Main Line: this fan hopes that there will be many more future encores in the Field House ... as many as after the performance.

ethereal PRELUDE TO LOHENGRIN by Wagner. Leaning over the podium, the maestro coaxed and commanded the orchestra into the crescendo of melting violins and brasses. At the end of the piece, the audience complimented the orchestra by that hushed momentary silence which follows a matchless performance.

The Wagner piece was followed by DEATH AND TRANSFIGURATION by Richard Strauss, an FAUST, by Berlioz. The first piece, MINUET OF THE WILL-O'-THE-WISPS, was delightful in its surprising twists and turns. The orchestra's European style was admirable for the shift to the BALLET OF THE SYLPHS, a gem of music box lullaby in the Brahms tradition. The orchestra did an about-face for the closing piece of the first half HUNGARIAN MARCH ("Rakoczy") exhibited a threat to the intricate balance between the strings and the brass. The balance was maintained until the brass conquered but did not overpower, the strings in the end.

The second half of the program was devoted to Beethoven's SYMPHONY NO. 7 IN A MAJOR, 92. After the lively first movement, the maestro evoked the full resonance of the Churchillan atmosphere with its sombre Athletic Scholarships ?

By Steve Morrison

Ever since the days when Plato and his cohorts cited the virtue of physical exercise as well as intellectual stimulation, the sound mind in a sound body has been the definition of the "well rounded man." To this end, logically enough, man has usually endeavored to improve his standing in both respects. Excellence in either field resulting in a certain amount of respect among the appropriate social group.

But with the growth of universities, the cultivation of the healthy and sound body was not greatly reduced in emphasis. (In favor of purely intellectual pursuits). In more modern times, what happened was quite unusual.

Some alumni or university authority must have noticed that if an athletic reputation was added to an already high standing academic reputation, the result was the perfect formula for the success of a given university "image." Alumni money poured in along the swamps of applications, no doubt aiding the prestige of the school among the sports fans as well as the intellectuals.

Now in addition to the moral responsibility of turning out well qualified graduates to aid community and national resources, the new dual-purpose college also attempted to entertain the public with a series of gala sport spectaculars in order to obtain the biggest chunk of publicity.

SCHOLARSHIPS

The most significant about-face came when the schools began to pay their athletes via scholarships. Recruiters, stadiums, and athletic scholarships became part of the American college scene. The raccoon coats of the Harvard-Yale game became part of "college." In short, the American college headed down a road far different from that which it began.

The real problem arose when people began to notice that although some of the prize athletes were prize students, some were not, and had no business in college. Old alma mater found itself in hot water. The fact was that some colleges had let their hair down to much.

One of the major improvements came from those schools who had the most to lose (reputation-wise) in a scandal. The formation of the "Ivy-League" was a step in the right direction. These schools were less interested in "hiring" football players and so the athletic scholarship was nixed.

Today, the football scholarship is still in existance in many colleges, existing side-by-side with fancy Latin phrases and insignias which make no mention of the importance placed on a successful basketball season. (There are also thousands of college students who need the athletic scholarship set-up since it helps their personal image if the school they attend happens to hit the sports page at proper intervals.)

VILLANOVA

Closer to home, Villanova has been plagued (especially in the past) with a sports page name that has overshadowed its academic reputation in many respects. Although this situation is being changed, there is still the fear of the same publicity that fell upon St. John's University (Look) and Seton Hall (Time) when both colleges received that grandest of all insults when they were described as schools with bigger reputations for basketball than for academic rigor.

The same or even worse situation exists in many of the large state schools but Catholic schools should especially realize that it takes a great amount of money to support a "big-time" team; money that belongs to improving internal problems such as teacher salary, library or lab facilities, or academic scholarships.

Sporting competition is of course, perfectly natural and desirable. The healthy recreation that it is has great value for physical and emotional improvement. That it builds character and aids to clean, healthy living is obvious. As yet, however, no one has succeeded in proving that these qualities of athletics take a turn for the better when emphasized to a grand level in a university.

When it is necessary to give a scholarship to a boy, have him practice for hours a day, making academic success more difficult, then the desirable facets of a sport is reversed, making it a burden. It seems then, that with the role of a university or college in mind, that, a school has no more business paying a scholarship to a talented athelete than the New York Giants have paying salaries to physicists. The two institutions exist for entirely different reasons.

ACADEMIC

Instead, let us begin to award academic scholarships in greater numbers to truly deserving and needy students. And if there are still those minds on a college level who will insist that a winning team of dedicated athletes may in some way be construed by the public to reflect their own worth or the educational status of their school, let there be a collection taken to hire the Cleveland Browns for the purpose of entertainment and advertisement instead of placing the burden of proving the worth of a school on a small group of undergraduates.

Honourable Art of Protest

By Ron Javers

It seems increasingly true these days that almost everyone we meet is carrying a placard. Whether anti or pro, the demonstrations continue with unmitigated fervor. College and university administrators continually find themselves in the not too comfortable position atop the proverbial powder keg.

Much has been written lately of the student protest movement. Those involved have been called everything from misguided adolescents to sincere, quite intelligent young people who sense a tragic flaw in our society. When considering the former euphemism it is well to keep in mind that the slayer of sacred cows is always subject to potshots from the well meaning, but often sadly deluded True Beleiver.

WE ARE THE GREATEST

Americans too often seem content to sit back on their gross national product with a self satisfied smirk and click their collective tongues at any constructive criticism. Naturally we are the greatest nation on earth, and we won't hear anything to the contrary for fear of harboring "unamerican" thoughts. But the cries are growing loud in our ears. They can almost be heard over the wail from the corner discoteque. Dissenters are everywhere. One can't dance a peaceful frug without fear of a band of these strange bearded people marching on the corner. And they do march, and get kicked, and mocked, and yes, even spat upon. Haven't we heard all this somewhere before? But that's another story, one incidentally that signaled the decline of an empire. (Ah yes, you remember Rome.)

DIGRESSION

We digress! The subject was unrest on campus. This is something very relevant to all of you college students, cream of the crop, Leaders--of the--next generation.

This is relevant because it means that college people (and they are people) are beginning to care more about what is going on around them. They care more than the pinochle players in Bartley Hall, more than the fraternity men with their initiations.

They care because they have finally realized they are a part of the world, and the insulation of ivy covered walls cannot mute their voices, shade their eyes, or numb their ears to the squalor and the phonies, and the hypocrites that abound in "Our civilized world."

But our immediate world is a small one. It is most times quiet, as the shady walks, and snow crusted fields of this campus. It is as insecure as a dateless Saturday night; as turbulent as the long nights of open books and hastily wrought term papers.

It is a world of small victories and defeats. It is most of all a world of waiting. Perhaps it is the eyes of impatience that signal the births and deaths of endless worlds. Perhaps some eyes blink at finding the light so bright, and others never even open.

Friend, SGA President Injured in Accident After Senior Party

Four people, including the President of the Student Government Association and the President of the Senior Class were injured Sunday morning in an automobile accident at Broad and Bigler Streets in South Philadelphia.

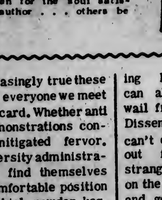
None were injured seriously, but Miss Ann Welsh, who was at the party with Jim Griffin, the class President, was detained at Methodist Hospital before being transfered to Graduate Hospital for additional treatment for a compound fracture of the arm. She was operated on Monday to further set the arm.

Steve Freind, SGA President, was X-Rayed at Bryn Mawr Hospital on Monday. He had been complaining of chest pains. The results of the X-Rays were not available at press time.

According to Griffin, the car which he was driving skidded and crashed into a tree. He said the group was coming home from the Senior Class party at Aquarama at the time of the accident. A half inch of ice covered most Philadelphia streets at the time.

Griffin was treated for head lacerations. Freind's date, Miss Marilyn Webb, was treated for leg injuries including lacerations of the knee.

Griffin and Miss Welsh were taken to the hospital by a passer-by while Freind and Miss Webb waited for police. Another member of the class, Joe McCauley, took them home from the hospital after the mishap.



According to a report on radio station WIP, there was one accident a minute in the City of Philadelphia at the time of the Griffin accident.

Latest reports indicate that there were at least seven accidents involving Villanova students after the party.

Larry Moore
B.M.E., Univ. of Kansas

The college graduate's initial exposure to the world of business is often less than exhilarating. The reason? A great many companies require the recent graduate to serve a long-term apprenticeship in a role that offers little or no opportunity to demonstrate personal capabilities. That is not the way at Ford Motor Company. Our College Graduate Program brings you into contact with many phases of business, encourages self-expression and helps you—and us—determine where your greatest potential lies. An important benefit of the Program is getting to know and work with some of the most capable people in industry. One of many young men who believes he has gained tremendously from this exposure and experience is Larry Moore, a Product Design engineer.

After receiving his B.M.E. in February, 1964, Larry joined our College Graduate Program and began work in brake design. Stimulating assignments followed in product evaluation and disc brake development. Later, he learned production techniques while supervising one phase of the Mustang assembly line operations. An assignment in our Truck Sales Promotion and Training Department added still another dimension to his experience. The "big picture" of product development was brought into focus for Larry when he became associated with Thunderbird Product Planning. From there he moved to the Special Vehicles Section . . . into the exciting world of high-performance cars!

Currently, Larry Moore is on leave of absence, studying to acquire his M.B.A. degree at Michigan State. He feels—and rightly so—that we're 100 percent behind his desire to improve his educational background. Young men with talent, initiative and ambition can go far with Ford Motor Company. Think about it—and talk to our representative when he next visits your campus.

AWOL in the 'Ramparts'

by Tom Dabney

Recently in a nationally published magazine a brilliant example of sensationalism was presented to the general public. The magazine, RAMPARTS, obviously seeking the highly desired journalism first, printed from the "Memoirs of a Special Forces Hero" an excerpt entitled "The whole thing was a lie!" and "I quit."

For those interested, the magazine by its name alludes to the reference in the National Anthem about 'Ramparts.' After one has been exposed to more than one copy of this periodical, he begins to wonder from which rampart these vigilant sentinels are watching -- most probably the least accessible one. As for their degree of objectivity, the closest comparison that this writer can envision would be the very sporadic light given off by "the rockets red glare."

The article itself is based on the reflections of Master Sergeant Donald Duncan on the war in Viet Nam; Duncan is a veteran of ten years in the U. S. Army six of which were spent with the special forces. Duncan reportedly turned down a field commission of captain shortly before his voluntary retirement.

Before anyone jumps to the conclusion that the Sergeant 'got cold feet,' it should be noted that he was the first enlisted man to be nominated for the Legion of Merit and also was selected as the enlisted man to brief Secretary of Defense McNamara on the position played by the Special Forces in the war.

The immediate tone of the article makes it seems as if its secondary purpose is to discredit the reputation of the Special Forces, which it does not. The basic premise is that the American cause is not dedicated to making Viet Nam safe for democracy, but that we are there to serve only as a very present deterrent to communism using the Vietnamese as our tools. In short as Duncan puts it: " ... it's not democracy we brought to Viet Nam -- it's anti-communism."

Duncan spends most of his time showing the cause and effect principle of the anti-communist propaganda drilled into our troops. The essence of the article to this writer, however, is the awakening of a professional soldier to the hypocrisy and deceit that go with wars.

He is quite detailed in his elucidation of the non-democratic spirit that permeates not only our forces in general, but also the way in which our forces treat their 'indigenous counterparts.' He substantiates this with much detail.

He tells of how, in his early days with the Special Forces, he was shocked by the high degree of racial discrimination that was a part of this supposedly inhuman corps of men. He relates how he was once told by an officer that he might refer anyone he felt capable of meeting the "Green Beret" requirements to him, but "don't send me any niggers."

This anti-democratic spirit is manifested more openly by those directly connected with members of the South Vietnamese Army. As far as he is concerned the American officers and men are responsible for the greatest distrust of the American motives for intervention. Although this is not generally broadcasted, the Americans make no bones about their lack of confidence in the Vietnamese military when things get tough.

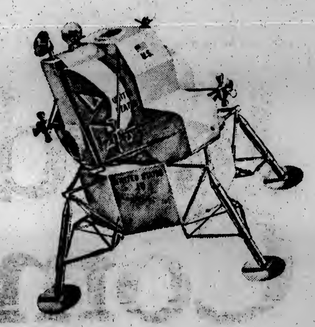
(All of this is ,however, second-hand for those who have read the fictionalized best seller about the Special Forces. "THE GREEN BERETS" is very objective despite the fact that it seeks to laud this group of men.)

The only earth shattering revelation that this reader is treated to is the account concerning the political overtones involved in this idealized war. Duncan tells of how a major intelligence mission into Laos in 1964 ended up in a wholesale slaughter of Vietnamese Special Forces.

The mission, as originally planned, was to have joined American and Vietnamese forces in a drop into Laos to gather valuable information on V.C. supply and troop movements in that area.

The American contingent was pulled out at the last minute because it was feared that if the mission ran amuck, it would have done serious harm to the President's image and chances of being re-elected. As a result the Vietnamese had to go alone and only six of the original forty returned alive.

In the overall picture Duncan's primary contention that anti-communism is our primary reason for being there seems insupportable. As John Dryden once said "Peace itself is a masquerade for war," so also we must look upon the variety of names that are used in defining our constant fight against the foes of the free world. The enemy is a many sided being with an immeasurable capacity for regeneration and existence. Thus some people call our policy aggressive, some call it protective, and still others like Duncan call it anti-communist -- the game however is still called war.



From Duncan's enlightenment, the reader also is introduced to the fact that a certain party is quite deserving of merit and has never received it. The U. S. Army has gone long enough without praise, and the mothers of America should be the ones to give it. To think that men like Duncan can go through such intensive training, learning innumerable ways of killing another human being with their bare hands and still coming out with innocence unmolested is a feat par excellance.

At the end of the article one comes to the conclusion that Duncan, although he has tried hard, has failed to unmask one of Democracy's many shadows. He forgets that democracy when implemented by man into his material world takes on many of his good and bad traits for better or worse.

As for Duncan we can only offer a welcome to reality. As for the pacificists whom he has taken refuge among and openly supports, we must continue to put up with them as they must with us, which ironically enough is another cloak worn by the democratic spirit. To the editors of RAMPARTS we suggest, in the interests of accuracy and as a possible circulation increase gimmick, that they change the magazine's name to AWOL IN THE RAMPARTS or else they should stick to Ronald Reagan cut-out dolls.

Your first assignment could be over your head.

The Aerospace Group of General Precision, Inc., makes sure that your first assignment drops you right into the middle of one of our many space engineering projects, such as precision guidance and navigation equipment for Apollo, Gemini, OSS, LEM, Mariner, TFX, Titan III, and others too numerous to mention. We've found that it's the best way to keep your interest high. If you find you're over your head technically, there are lots of seasoned pros to help you out (they came up the same way you will).

You'll learn the intricacies of the space business quickly. Working in several departments on several projects as you progress through our rotational training program gives you a very good idea after a year what your career goals really are.

Right now we're looking ahead with visionary programs in precision guidance and navigation instrumentation which will someday result in hardware for optical laser gyros and accelerometers, stellar inertial guidance systems, strap-down inertial guidance systems, solid-state sensors and complex information systems for spacecraft, missiles and aircraft.

And there's lots of room to move around in. A multi-million dollar equipped Research Center was completed in 1962. An extensive Systems Engineering Facility was put into operation in late 1963. All in all, our advanced equipment complexes in Suburban Northern New Jersey represent 1,500,000 square feet of research, development and production facilities.

Observing Apathy

By G. W. Gingery

Apathy is a striking, stinging word which seemingly is one of the most highly favored words used by editorial writers, the sensationalist press and vest pocket philosophers.

The cry of apathy arises frequently concerning the increases in rape, street crime and the public's want of interest in regard to things social and political, et cetera ad infinitum.

Apathy, like any vice, virtue or good or bad habit has to be developed. As intellectual beings, no one of us is born without some degree of curiosity or interest in the things we observe environmentally. Apathy then is what might be called a developed disinterest or a characteristic which might be labeled as not giving a damn.

Consider the case of a young person who allows himself to become apathetic concerning very trivial matters. As this unresponsiveness grows, so might well the things about which he has become apathetic grow.

In this light, it is no wonder that as we grow older, murder, rape and child abuse as examples do not really shake us up unless we are personally or directly involved.

Getting back to the notion of apathy as being a developed disinterest, shouldn't it be considered that in our position as students and young people, we are more likely than not developing some form of apathy right here in our college careers? Certainly the opposite of this might well be true, but if we evaluate ourselves in an objective manner, we will probably concur with the validity of this assumption.

This assumption occurs in general here at Villanova in the want of interest in regard to the Student government Association, the VILLANOVAN and the LYNX, and various other political and charitable organizations and functions.

On a larger and more important level than Villanova University, there is an even greater degree of apathy on the part of our students concerning national and international affairs. Certainly we all know of Villanova's athletic events, and the death of Mickey Rooney's fifth wife is common knowledge, but what do we know of important legislation now pending before our Federal Congress?

How many of us are able to give the geographic location of Viet Nam other than it is situated in Southeastern Asia? What is the Section 14.b of the Taft-Hartley Act, and what will it's repeal mean to us when we apply for positions after graduation? Who is Robert Weaver? What is Barrons?

Is it true that The National Review backed Lindsey in the last New York election? What is the story on the Philadelphia magistrates and the D.A.'s office? Obviously the answer is not to be found in the entertainment and sports sections of the Philadelphia DAILY NEWS.

Drama Guild Presents 'Shadow of a Gunman' By Playwright O'Casey

Tomorrow night the Philadelphia Drama Guild will present as its Tenth Anniversary production; Sean O' Casey's first dramatic success "SHADOW OF A GUNMAN" at the Playhouse, 1714 Delancey St.

SHADOW OF A GUNMAN is written in the same idiom as O'Casey's other works concerning the Irish rebellion. It is full of the same ironic humor, sharpened with the same tragic irony at the end.

O'Casey's comic-tragedy was first put on at Dublin's Abbey Theatre in 1923. It is doubtful if O'Casey ever invented a more delightful set of characters than those who inhabit the tenement on Hilljoy Square. And since much of the action comes from the author's own experiences, it has the spontaneity of truth. The play, loaded with raffish dialogue and wildly comic mannerisms, has been called a "fascinating prologue to O'Casey's greatness."

Tickets and theatre party information for the production can be obtained at LO 3-3137.

William J. Hampton, former Villanovan, accepts certificate from Colonel Yates.

"Let's unplug the computer, boys! Start thinking!"

A lot of people believe that someday computers will do all their thinking for them.

Well, a funny thing is going to happen on the way to the future:

You're going to have to think harder and longer than ever.

Computers can't dream up things like Picturephone service, Telstar® satellite, and some of the other advances in communications we have made. Of course, we depended on computers to solve some of the problems connected with their development. But computers need absolutely clear and thorough instructions, which means a new and tougher discipline on the human intelligence.

And it will take more than a computer to create a pocket phone the size of a matchbook, let's say... or find a practical way to lock a door or turn off an oven by remote telephone control, or to make possible some of the other things we'll have someday.

It takes individuals... perhaps you could be one... launching new ideas, proposing innovations and dreaming dreams.

And someday, we're going to have to find a way to dial locations in space.

Makes you think..

William J. Hampton was recently awarded a certificate of achievement upon successful completion of a special junior engineering training program with the U. S. Army, Corps of Engineers, Philadelphia District.

A 1960 graduate of St. Joseph's High School in Camden, Hampton was awarded his certificate by Colonel E. P. Yates, Philadelphia District Engineer. Hampton, who earned a civil engineering degree at Villanova, is now employed by the District Engineers' Office in the Design branch of its Engineering Division.

ICG Delegation Preps For Annual Convention

The Villanova delegation of the Intercollegiate Conference on Government is preparing for its annual convention to be held in Harrisburg on March 30 - April 1. Delegations from over fifty colleges in Pennsylvania compose the ICG.

There are three levels of grouping in the ICG: the campus level; the Regional level; the State level. This distinctive make-up lends the organization to many Model Governmental themes, the theme being changed each year.

The ICG at Villanova is in its bill writing phase at present. Students will present these bills for passage by the State Convention of the ICG in Harrisburg this spring. The next meeting will be held in 106 Vasey Hall, tomorrow at 10:30.

Johnson's Prayer Breakfast

President Johnson spoke at the breakfast, telling the gathering "there are some things the past cannot teach us ... (for example) how to bear without pain the sending of young boys into battle, or how to fill the aching void in a loved one's heart "when their boy is killed in battle.

"In these troubled times, I am sustained by the prayers of hundreds of Americans who take the time to encourage me," the President reported.

Later Thursday, Thomas C. Mann, assistant secretary of State Economic Affairs called for another great revolution comparable to the economic revolution of the past hundred years, "the evolution of man himself. Then we can have a new goal, peace among men and among nations. Mann's speech came at a luncheon at which the student leaders were seated with close to a hundred ambassadors and charges de affair.

On Wednesday evening, Sen. Milllard Simpson, (R-Wyo.), told the student leaders, "I don't want to see men of your caliber sent to Viet Nam. To get peace in this world we must follow the precepts and teachings of Christ. This roomful of men dedicated to Christ could make the world run any way they wanted it to.

Sen. Simpson is one of 30 Senators who meet weekly for a prayer breakfast.

The reason for inviting the students to participate in a series of seminars after the prayer breakfast was to get them to return to their campuses and institute similar observances, not as representatives of any specific organization, but on their own. It is hoped that groups which might form would tie together as friends not as an institution.

During their free time in Washington the Villanova representatives attended the Senate Foreign Relations committee hearings on Viet Nam and visited Sen. Robert Kennedy (D-NY) in his office.

Close to twenty Villanova students will attend the Harrisburg prayer breakfast.

hensive and serve to answer many student complaints concerning the academic milieu.

Following that will be a motion which, if passed, will reaffirm previous SGA resolutions dealing with problems in the Resident Cafeteria system and the installation of various types of vending machines in the dormitories.

The other motions call for: the institution of a Student Academic Board to review certain academic cases of students seeking redress for final grades considered by the student unjust. The board will act as an arbitrator between the student and faculty in these cases.

It will request an additional free period at 10:30 on Mondays, and the establishment of teacher awards to be given each year to one teacher from each of the three colleges in recognition of teaching excellence.

Finally two motions pending passage will ask for the establishment of an evening Mass on Sundays to allow students an additional chance to attend Mass, and the institution by the SGA of an annually awarded fellowship grant to the professor bringing the "most academic credit to Villanova" in his respective field.

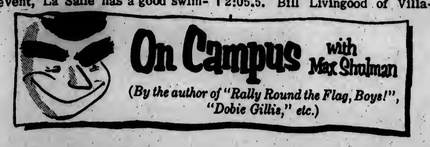
Swimmers Splash-off Thurs.; Face Explorers in Home Water

By Bob McIntyre

On Thursday night, the Villanova mermen face their first opponent of the season who is untied and undefeated. The team is La Salle College and their record to date is 11-0 after Saturday's tight victory over a good Bucknell team, 54-41.

In the 50 and 100 yard freestyle event, La Salle has a good swimmer in Jon Walheim who has done times of 22.4 and 48.4. Mike Fitzmaurice and Ray Donnelly should give Walheim his first taste of real competition in these two events. Dick Close is another Explorer to watch.



His specialty is the 200 yard butterfly, in which he has done 2:05.5. Bill Livingood of Villanova should get a lot of competition out of Pat McDonnell whose best time in the 200 yard backstroke is 2:08.8, a new La Salle record.

Everyone is urged to come to the Field House pool on Thursday night at 7 to watch the 'Cats who appear to be sky high as they take on the unbeaten Explorers from LaSalle.

YALE

On this coming Saturday Yale invades the Villanova campus at 3:00 in the afternoon to do battle with the Wildcats, who are now 5-5, almost at the end of a grueling schedule which began back on Dec. 3 in a meet with Maryland.

This past week, the Cats took their "B" team to Seton Hall and had no trouble at all in handing them a resounding 73-12 loss. The Villanovan's were just too much as they completely overpowered the weak Seton Hall squad.

ROOMMATES: THEIR CAUSE AND CURE

You'd think that with all the progress we have made in the education game, somebody would have found a cure for roommates by now. But no. Roommates remain as big a problem today as they were when Ethan Mather founded the first American college.

(Contrary to popular belief, Harvard was not the first. Mr. Mather started his institution some 100 years earlier. And quite an institution it was, let me tell you! Mr. Mather built schools of liberal arts, fine arts, dentistry and tanning. He built a lacrosse stadium that seated 200,000. Everywhere on campus was emblazoned the stirring Latin motto CAVE MUSSI—"Watch out for moose." The student union contained a bowling alley, a weighing machine, and a sixteen-chair barber shop.)

(It was this last feature—the barber shop—that, alas, brought Mr. Mather's college to an early end. The student body, being drawn chiefly from the nearby countryside, was composed almost entirely of Pequot and Iroquois Indians who, alas, had no need of a barber shop. They braided the hair on top of their heads, and as for the hair on their faces, they had none. The barber, Tremblatt Follicle by name, grew so depressed staring day after day at 16 empty chairs that one day his mind gave way. Seizing his vibrator, he ran outside and shook the entire campus till it crumbled to dust. This later became known as Pickett's Charge.)

But I digress. We were exploring ways for you and your roommate to stop hating each other. This is admittedly difficult but not impossible if you will both bend a bit, give a little.

I remember, for example, my own college days (Berlitz '08). My roommate was, I think you will allow, even less agreeable than most. He was a Tibetan named Ringading whose native customs, while indisputably colorful, were not entirely endearing. Mark you, I didn't mind so much the gong he struck on the hour or the string of firecrackers he set off on the half hour. I didn't even mind that he singed chicken feathers every dusk and daybreak. What I did mind was that he singed them in my hat.

To be fair, he was not totally taken with some of my habits either—especially my hobby of collecting water. I had no jars at the time, so I just had to stack the water any-old-where.

Well, sir, things grew steadily cooler between Ringading and me, and they might actually have gotten ugly had we not each happened to receive a package from home one day. Ringading opened his package, paused, smiled shyly at me, and offered me a gift.

"Thank you," I said. "What is it?"

"Yak butter," he said. "You put it in your hair. In Tibetan we call it gree see kidstuff."

"Well now, that's mighty friendly," I said and offered him a gift from my package. "Now you must have one of mine."

"Thank you," he said. "What is this called?"

"Personna Stainless Steel Razor Blades," I said.

"I will try one at once," he said. And did.

"Wowdow!" he cried. "Never have I had such a smooth, close, comfortable shave!"

"Ah, but the best is yet!" I cried. "For you will get many, many smooth, close, comfortable shaves from your Personna Blade—each one nearly as smooth, close, and comfortable as the first!"

"Wowdow!" he cried.

"Moreover," I cried, "Personna Blades come both in Double Edge style and Injector style!"

"Sort of makes a man feel humble," he said.

"Yes," I said.

We were both silent then, not trusting ourselves to speak. Silently we clasped hands, friends at last, and I am proud to say that Ringading and I remain friends to this day. We exchange cards each Christmas and firecrackers each Fourth of July.

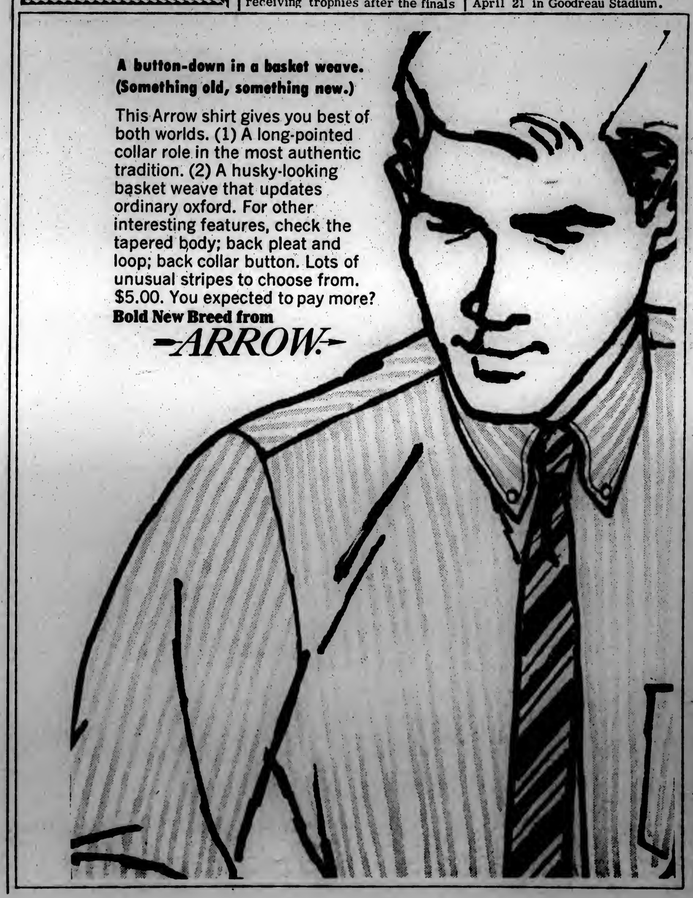
Moran Announces Schedule Intramurals Set for Spring

By J. McGarvey

Jim Moran of the Intramural Department has announced a heavy spring schedule for the coming year. The basketball program has been in progress since before the Christmas holidays and is running right on schedule.



All teams who have forfeited or suffered a defeat at the hands of the opponent have been eliminated in the new and revised schedule, which has been posted outside Alumni Gym. The playoffs, which will feature the very best of the intermural B-Ballers is scheduled to begin on March 14.

Before the basketball season ends, the intramural department will have featured a first in their athletic program. On February 28 the Villanova Intramural Wrestling Tournament will commence with ten champions (123, 130, 137, 142, 148, 154, 162, 171, 180, Hwt.) receiving trophies after the finals on Thursday night, March 3.

Applications, rules, and further information may be picked up in the Intramural Office of Alumni Gym before 5 p.m., March 25, when all entries must be turned in.

After the wrestling forms are taken off the market, the softball applications will be available (March 1). This year there will be no elimination period. After March 23, when the tournament begins, one loss will cause a team to be dropped from the schedule. This is necessitated because of the large number of teams that enter, and because there is no dome at Villanova to cancel out the weather.

The Intramural Tennis Tournament will also take place in March, scheduled to commence on March 28. And rounding out the spring program, the Intramural Track Meet is scheduled to be held on April 21 in Goodreau Stadium.

Frosh Capture Big Five Title Defeating Penn, Hawks, Owls

By Jerry Bruderle

Frank McCall came off the bench to score 15 points, all in the second half, and help Villanova capture the Freshmen Big Five Title with a hard-fought 93-80 victory over Temple in the Field House last Monday night. The win, coupled with a 70-61 win over Penn and a 72-46 trouncing of St. Joseph's this past week, gives the Cats a 7-1 record in Big Five play, and made them 10-1 overall. This is coach Jack Devine's first title since the 1962-63 team (Bill Melchionni, Bernie Schaffer and Richie Moore) tied for the title, and if they defeat Seton Hall next week it would be Villanova's best freshmen mark since Jimmy Huggard's 1957-58 team went 11-0.

The 6-5 McCall who has played seldom this year, especially since George May has been scoring so well, filled in for Jim McIntosh at center and scored a season high 15 points, including nine straight during one stretch, to turn a 53-54 deficit into a comfortable 74-67 lead. It didn't stay comfortable for long however as Temple came within 76-74 after a foul shot by Tony Brochi with 4:40 left in the game. But then Bob Melchionni hit a jumper and May drove in for a layup to ice the game.

Temple was tough from the beginning as the Owls took a 23-12 lead midway through the first half mainly on the scoring of Joe Cromer who had 17 first half points. With some fine shooting by May, Melchionni and Johnny Jones, the Cats came back and tied the score 33-33 on McIntosh's two foul shots with 2:30 left in the half. A jumper by Melchionni and a steal by May resulting in a layup by Melchionni helped Villanova to a 43-39 halftime lead.

However Temple stayed close and gave the Cats a hard time until McCall came to turn the tide. May finished with 25 points one more than Jones and Melchionni had 13. Frank Gillen scored only six points but these all came when the going was tough in the second half and he kept the Cats offense moving. Cromer finished with 25 for Temple, while George Weitley had 21.

In the Penn game Villanova blew an 11 point lead and then had to come from behind to win, while playing for the first time on the Palestra floor. Against a team that had given them trouble in their first meeting in the Field House, the 'Cats raced to an 11-1 lead, with Jones getting five points.

Villanova stretched their lead to 37-26 with 2-1/2 minutes remaining in the half as May and McIntosh, along with Jones did most of the scoring. However, Penn came back with eight straight points to make it a game at the intermission, 37-34.

The Quakers tied the game at 39 as Villanova couldn't get going, and the lead proceeded to see-saw back and forth. At this point Jones took over and scored 11 of Villanova's next 15 points, but Villanova led only 58-54 with four minutes left in the game in spite of this.

A jumper by Osowski put Penn only two down 61-59 with only two minutes remaining, but that was Penn's last gasp. The 'Cats went into a stall, with Gillen and Melchionni trying to dribble the time away. Penn had to foul them and Bob and Frank each hit three fouls to stretch the final margin to 70-61.

Once again Jones was high with 27 points while Gillen had 12, and May and McIntosh each had 11. Andrews had 16 for Penn and Osowski had 14.

On Friday night in the Field House Villanova nearly ran St. Joseph's off the court while racing to a 36-12 halftime lead. The 'Cats led only 7-6 after five minutes but they opened up a 23-7 spread with less than six minutes left in the half.

Then, after a basket by the Hawks Dave Pfahler 5:37 on the clock, St. Joe's went scoreless for Five minutes and 25 seconds. When Al Horn finally scored with 12 seconds on the clock, Villanova had a 34-11 bulge.

The Hawks hung in and narrowed the gap to 50-38 with eight minutes left in the game, but then Gillen, Melchionni, Price and Jones hit jumpers around a foul shot by Jones and that wrapped it up: 61-38 with only 3:30 remaining.

Jones finished with 19 points. Price had 11 and McIntosh had 10. Mike Barret from West Catholic had 13 for St. Joe's, all in the second half.

Villanova plays its final game next Tuesday March 1 in the Field House against Seton Hall before the varsity game between the same two teams.

Wildcat Shooters Gun Down Infantry

By Frank Miller

The Wildcat Pistol team romped to its eleventh victory in twelve matches last week, when it gunned down the 157th Separate Infantry Brigade 1119-993 in the .20 caliber class skirmish.

The highly touted Infantry came into this match on the heels of a big victory in the First Annual Army Reserve Smallbore Pistol and Rifle Pistol Matches in which they fired a score of 1178 out of 1200.

The scorers for V.U. in this match were Jim Bushong (285), Ted Laven (281), Tony Mascia (278) and Rick Hunter (275). The leading Infantry scorer only tallied 257.

The Wildcats also won the .38 caliber competition in a decisive 1042-831 encounter. Bushong again was high man with a score of 273, followed by Mascia (264), Laven (255), and Jim Durborow (250).

The Marksmen are now in the top spot in the Delaware County Pistol League with a 3-0 mark.

In the future the 'Cats will be shooting in two big sectional tournaments. The first will be March 5, when they compete in the Conventional Pistol Sectional at the Merchant Marine Academy.

Competition will be from all over the East. Then on March 20, the International Pistol Sectional will be held at Annapolis. The only difference in these two matches are the target sizes. The international target is much smaller and scores are considerably lower.

Stickmen Ice Lafayette 5-2

By Brian O'Shea

The Villanova Ice Hockey Club, after two weeks of practice, opened its season on Saturday, February 5, and beat Lafayette 5-2. In the first period Villanova had several scoring chances, but could only capitalize on two of them.

Defenseman Jay MaGuire fired in a hard shot from the point position and towards the end of the period sophomore Warren Gabaree slapped a rebound past Lafayette's goalie. In the second period Lafayette managed to tie the score with two quick goals, due to a lapse in Villanova's defense.

The third period started fairly slowly but midway through the stanza Brian O'Shea scored, set up by a fine pass from Bob Birmingham. Minutes later Birmingham countered again for Villanova making the score 4-2. Finally, in the closing minutes, O'Shea scored again with an assist from defenseman Dean Goodwin, to insure the victory.

The next day Villanova faced Temple before a home crowd and beat them 3-0 in a sloppily-played game. The slow ice gave the team's offensive power trouble and at the end of the first period the score stood 0-0.

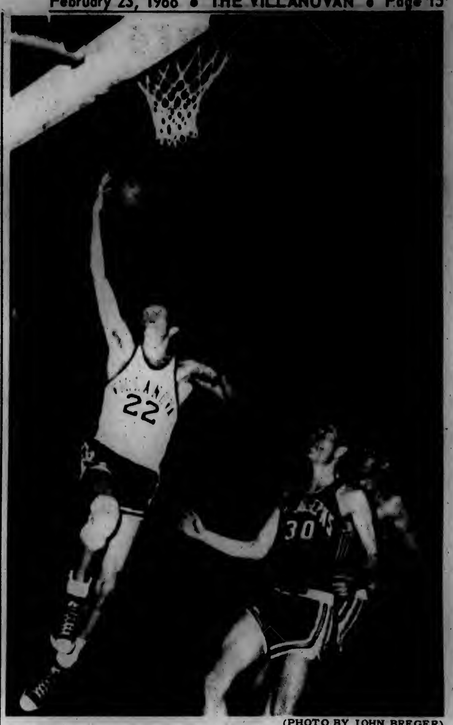
Towards the middle of the second period the pin-point passing of Mark Clement set up O'Shea's goal and put Villanova on the scoreboard. Throughout the third period the defense continued to contain Temple's rushes and the offense showed some signs of clicking.

Senior Mike Loscalzo scored on a fine angle shot and Tom McCormick, playing perfectly on the corner of the cage, tapped in a rebound, making the score 3-0 and thus icing Villanova's victory.

On Saturday, February 12, Villanova won their third straight game by trouncing Bucknell 6-0 in 55° weather. Mark Clement opened the scoring for Villanova and shortly afterward O'Shea also tallied making the score 2-0.

Minutes after the second period face-off, Warren Gabaree scored to give Villanova a 3-0 lead. The final period saw Villanova forge to a final 6-0 win with goals by O'Toole, Loscalzo and O'Shea, the latter assisted on a fine pass from Mike Labrec.

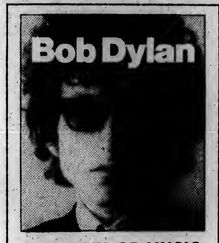
On Sunday, February 13, Villanova met a hard skating sextet from Rutgers University and bowed 5-1. The visitors pumped in two goals in the first period and were never overtaken. The defense, headed by Birmingham, MaGuire and Goodwin then tightened up, and coupled with some fine goal-tending by Paul Viano, played creditably.



In the third period the passing was more accurate and the Villanova offense showed signs of life. However, they were able to score only once, on an O'Shea goal assisted by MaGuire.

On Saturday, February 19, Villanova played Lehigh to a disappointing 2-2 tie. After a scoreless first period, Lehigh tallied mid-way through the second stanza. Shortly afterward, the passing of Jimmy O'Toole and Warren Gabaree enabled O'Shea to score and tie the game.

Seconds later Villanova went ahead 2-1 with another O'Shea goal assisted by Jay MaGuire. Fine goal-tending by Paul Viano and a strong defense led by Birmingham Inc. helped to maintain the slim 2-1 lead until the waning minutes of the third period, when Lehigh countered again.



Because of the roughness of play in the third period, the officials decided that it would be best NOT to carry the game into a sudden-death overtime. Therefore a dejected Villanova team was forced to settle with a 2-2 tie.

This coming Saturday the team faces Lafayette in a return game at the Cherry Hill arena. From next weekend on, the remaining games will be played at the Main Line Skating Rink. A good student turn out might well make the difference in the outcome.

Cyclops Tops Big O's Mark; 'Cats Capture Last Three

By John DiGennaro and Jerry Gruderle

Last Wednesday evening, Villanova, led by Billy Melchionni, who played like I have never seen an All-American play before, combined to crush the St. Bonaventure Brown Indians 93-81 before 2843 Palestra rooters.

Melchionni broke Oscar Robertson's Palestra record of 43 points while turning in probably the finest game of his career. He hit for 44 points, shooting 54 per cent from the floor and 93% from the charity line, and adding 8 assists and 10 steals. All in all he was responsible for 60 of his team's 93 points.

The Bonnies, led by the sharp shooting of Bill Butler and Jim Satalin, jumped off to an early lead. The 'Cats staged a late rally, but the Bonnies held on and took a 37-35 advantage in at half time.

The second half was a different story- it was all Melchionni. In exactly 3:13 he was responsible for 10 points, 2 steals, and an assist, as the Wildcats bolted to a quick 47-38 lead. With 11 and a half minutes to go the 'Cats had built their lead to 18, 59-41, and the only interest left was as to how many Melchionni would score.

Melchionni wound up with 8 field goals and 11 free throws in the second half alone. His game totals were 15 and 14. Frank Gaidjunas shared rebounding honors with George Carter of the Bonnies. Both had 13. Villanova saw five men finish in double figures. Following Melchionni came Gaidjunas with 14, Schaffer with 13, McGuire with 11, and Crews with 10.

CANISIUS

Last weekend the team traveled to Buffalo, New York, and the Memorial Auditorium, to take on the Golden Griffs from Canisius. The 'Cats were welcomed at the airport by 5 degree temperatures, at the auditorium by a chorus of "Villanova stinks," played a team that in front of two whistle-happy refs, but managed to hang in for a 76-62 victory which rushed their record above .500 for the first time since the opening game.

The 'Cats shot 50% from the floor, but it was not one of their sharper ballgames - nor was it their fault. Villanova enjoyed the height advantage, and the refs enjoyed Villanova. Although they called 25 personals on each team, things were not quite as even as they might appear. A good example of the situation up there is the St. Bonaventure fans rooting for Villanova, a team which had just beaten them in their last ball game.

Pre-game reports built it up as a "battle of the guards" with John Morrison pitted against Bill Melchionni. Actually, there was a lot more to it than that, since Villanova was the better ball club, and Morrison is only a good shooter, not a great ballplayer.

Except for two early moments the 'Cats led throughout, building a 7 point half time lead. The second half was no different, and the outcome of the game was really in doubt.

Melchionni led all scorers with 23 points while hitting 8-18 from the floor. For the second straight game Frank Gaidjunas shared rebounding honors, this time with Canisius' Jack Hassett. His 16 points placed him second in Villanova scoring, while the Wildcats' super-sub, "Desire" McGuire, was third, coming off the bench to add 14 points and 7 rebounds. Morrison scored 20 for the losers.

NIAGARA

Villanova's backcourt combination of Bill Melchionni and Pete Coleman scored 53 points between them and handled out 12 assists (nine by Melchionni) in racing to an easy 79-61 victory over towering Niagara in the Field House this past Monday.

Niagara -- with six players from 6-5 to 6-9 -- controlled the backboards (53-38) but the Purple Eaglers committed 27 turnovers to give Villanova numerous layups and short jumpers. Melchionni scored 34 points, shooting 16 for 29 and two for three from the line and raised his average to 27.3. Coleman, who has been a disappointment much of this year, shot 9-14 and one for two for a career high of 19 points. Pete had been counted on to take some of the scoring load off Melchionni when he became eligible in the middle of December. But until Monday night he rarely showed the form that made him such a highly sought after prospect coming out of Darby-Colwyn High School. As a result he divided his time with Kevin Traynor in the backcourt. At Canisius on Saturday, he didn't even start and perhaps that's why he played so well against Niagara. Pete had a number of steals, (many of which resulted in fast break baskets), a couple of behind-the-back passes, and he was hitting his jumper.

The victory means Villanova has won seven of their last eight, losing only to La Salle, and kept slim hopes alive for an N.I.T. bid. Coach Jack Kraft said Villanova ought to know by this coming Tuesday if Villanova is going to any post season tournament.

The win was Coach Kraft's ninety-ninth of his career.

Lacrosse Squad Set With 36 Stickmen

When the twilight shadows gathered out upon the campus green of Mendel Field -- when that same grade-school kid crossed the campus by Austin Hall singing "Downtown" as he does every afternoon about five -- and when a pack of sweat-suited, sneakered Villanovans jogged the campus drive around Alumni Hall and out along Tolentine's front lawn -- it was then that students asked, "What are those maniacs doing running in the rain, on the snow, and through the slush in this miserable typical Villanova winter weather? They've got to be pledging."

No, they weren't pledging. Pledging would be much easier. Neither were they cross-country runners, though some of them well could be. And they were not maniacs. They were Villanova lacrosse players.

Though it may be news to some, Villanova does have a lacrosse team. The 36 men on the squad are now conditioning for the coming season. At this comparable point in training, the team appears to be in far better physical shape than last year's fine group.

Last year's record was eight wins, one loss. The lone setback was in the opener with C. W. Post College, a perennial Long Island powerhouse. Then came the eight straight wins, a streak that this year's club vows to extend.

The stickmen open their season on March 26, at Long Island against another strong C. W. Post team.

If the 'Cats leap this first tough hurdle and handle Washington and Lee University, a Southern power from Lexington, Virginia, in the second fray, chances for going all the way to an undefeated season seem bright. Other formidable opponents on the schedule are N.Y. Maritime College, University of Pennsylvania, Lebanon Valley College, Muhlenberg College, Dickinson College, Fairleigh-Dickinson University, and Georgetown University.

All who are interested, or just curious, are welcome to watch practices that are presently being held on the outdoor basketball courts next to the field house every day from 4 to 5:30.

Kraft Speaks Out

By Essa Abed

Jack Kraft has been at the helm of the Wildcat ship, presently in stormy waters, for the past five seasons. In so short a span of time, his expert guidance has produced an enviable record indeed--two NCAA post-season tournament appearances; two successful NIT appearances; all the marbles in the Madison Square Garden Holiday Festival Tournament (1963-64); and, to date, of this writing a fine 98-36 overall record.

The following are the highlights of an exclusive interview with Coach Kraft, after last Saturday's victory over Canisius:

Q: "To what do you attribute your team's success this year?"

A: "Of course, Bill Melchionni has been the key man in our six wins in the last seven games, but the improved and developed play of Gaidjunas, Crews and McGuire has been a vital factor."

Q: "Why was the team so slow in getting started?"

A: "In the early weeks of the season, the team was relying heavily on Melchionni to carry them, and naturally Bill could not win all the games single-handedly for the team. Crews, Gaidjunas and McGuire all had excellent potential, but very little confidence. After they gained confidence and valuable experience, they began to help the team immensely, and that is why we started playing good ball."

Q: "What was the low point of the season?"

A: "We were really in the doldrums after the Army game back in December. They boys got thrashed in that one and they were really down. However, after that encounter, the players started playing like a molded team and made their presence felt on the court.

Q: "Which team impressed you the most this season?"

A: "Of all the teams that we have played, I would say that St. Joe's was the best."

Q: "Which opposing player impressed you the most."

A: "For offensive and shooting maneuverability and talent, I'd take Jimmy Walker of Providence."

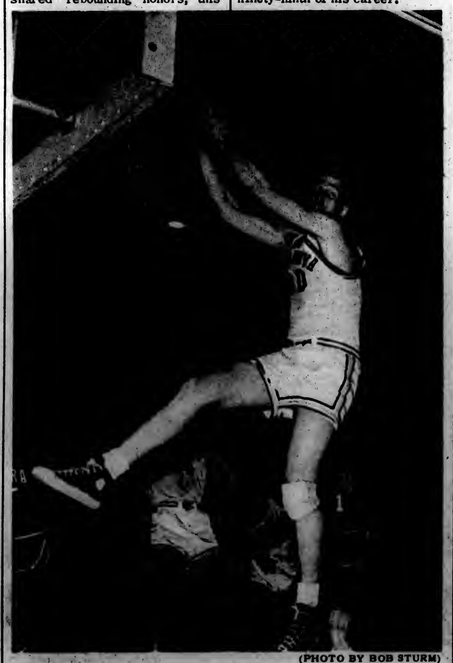
Q: "What about Melchionni's chances of making All-American?"

A: "Billy deserves all the recognition that he gets. He should be All-American, but whether he makes it will depend on our team record, unfortunately."

Q: "What about the NIT?"

A: "We'd have to win all of our games impressively before we ever start to think about that."

Q: "What happened to the team in the LaSalle game?"



A: "The mental attitude of the players was very poor. The boys took LaSalle very easily--overconfidence."

Q: "What is your basic strategy for each game?"

A: "Basically, we try to play a tough defense and a controlled offense that has us working for the good shot."

Q: "What about the next season?"

A: "We have a talented freshman squad that will provide us with great material.

Anna Moffo, famed soprano opera singer, and the renowned Singing City Choir will appear in concert in the Field House on Saturday, March 12. The performance, sponsored by the Villanova Arts Forum, will begin at 8:15 p.m.

Miss Moffo, acclaimed by many as "the most beautiful woman in music" has achieved a great measure of international recognition in her comparatively short career. When as a Fulbright Scholar her first appearance as Madame Butterfly on the Italian television network brought her offers from a dozen leading European opera houses.

Rave reviews are the custom for Miss Moffo. After her sensational Metropolitan Opera debut as Violetta in "LA TRAVIATA," TIME Magazine said: "One of the best lyric-coloratura sopranos in the world. Throughout, the radiant, controlled voice lent a superb air of emotional conviction to the great arias."

During the 1964-65 season, Miss Moffo's schedule included appearances at the Metropolitan Opera as Lucia, Norama in "DON PASQUALE" and Liu in "TRUANDOT." At Milan's La Scala, she scored a singular success in "LA TRAVIATA," and in Monte Carlo, Miss Moffo appeared as Manon in Massenet's masterpiece before Prince Rainier and Princess Grace of Monaco.

Miss Moffo was born in Wayne, Pennsylvania, the daughter of an Italian descended shoemaker. She sang "because all Italians sing" but preferred the piano which she studied for ten years.

At Radnor High School in Wayne, she distinguished herself in sports, especially basketball and tennis. Today she credits sports with having taught her the value of teamwork, so important in opera.

The Singing City Choir is directed by Miss Elaine Brown who today is recognized as one of the outstanding choral directors in the United States. Miss Brown has dedicated her 100-voice choir to the solution of mankind's persistent dilemma of how men of various racial and cultural backgrounds and religious persuasions can achieve a measure of peace and harmony in their daily relationships with one another.

Believing that "music is a potent force for democracy and brotherhood," Dr. Brown devotes all her time and energy to the search for ways to break down the barriers that separate men. She has carried on in this effort since 1948 when she founded the Singing City program in Philadelphia.

The Choir has sung with the Philadelphia Orchestra, the Robin Hood Dell Orchestra, and the New York Bach Aria Group under such conductors as Bernstein, Ormandy and Wallenstein.

Soph Retreat Begins Tonite in Field House With Fr. John Seary

Sophomore retreat will begin this week with opening exercises at 7:30 p.m. tonight. The retreat will continue through March 3, ending with a noon Mass on Friday, March 4.

Attendance is mandatory for all sophomores and IBM attendance cards are to be used. All exercises included in the retreat will take place in the Field House.

Father John Seary OSA will act as retreat master. Fr. Seary is the prior of the Augustinian community at Mendel Catholic High School in Chicago, Illinois.

The retreat will consist mainly of conferences, confession and prayers.

Annual Shamokinaki Mixer To Be Held in Field House

By John Morton

The 14th annual Shamokinaki Charity Mixer will be held on Friday, March 11, in the Villanova Field House. The dance will begin at 8:30 p.m. and go until 12:30 a.m. Continuous music will be supplied by the Fat City Four, the Derelicts, and the Moths.

The Shamokinaki tradition began when the Augustinians returned to Japan in 1952 from the American province of St. Thomas of Villanova. Among these Augustinians were Rev. Thomas Purcell of Shamokin, Pa., and Rev. George M. Krups of Lancaster, Pa.

This was the beginning of the present Augustinian mission project in Japan. Presently, there are four Augustinian missions located in Nagasaki, Fukuoka, Hatano, and Nagoya. The Nagasaki mission was the first one to be built.

Shamokinaki's purpose is to help support these missions. Last year the mixer made $7,600, and in 1964 it netted $6,300. The total amount of money made by this charitable affair since 1953, comes to a sum of approximately $47,500.

All of this money comes from student support of the dance, and all of it has gone to aid these missions. "I feel that the students of Villanova can be justly proud of the good that has come from their support of this mixer," said Fr. George F. Riley OSA, dance moderator.

Tickets for the mixer will go on sale very soon at the Pie Shoppe, for the price of $1.00 per person. Tickets will also be able to be purchased at the dance itself. Refreshments will be sold at the dance, and all are cordially invited.

Prof. James McRandle Addresses Law Forum Friday in Garey Hall

Dean Harold Gill Reuschlein announced today that the fourth meeting of the 1965-1966 Villanova Law Forum will be held on March 4 and will feature an address by Professor James H. McRandle of the Department of History, Purdue University, on the subject, "The Perception of Injustice in Totalitarian Society."

Professor McRandle, a native of Minnesota, obtained his undergraduate degee at the University of Montana, his Master's at the University of Michigan and his Ph.D. from the University of Minnesota. He also studied extensively in Germany at the University of Munich. He has been a member of the History faculty at Purdue since 1956, and is widely recognized as an authority on recent German history.

Dr. McRandle is the author of a recent book, THE TRACK OF THE WOLF, which has been widely acclaimed as an authoritative study of Germany 1918 to 1945. He will deal with certain facets of the National Socialist experience in Germany and the manner in which the German population managed to blind itself to what was occuring, or find excuses for obvious assaults on human rights.

Professor McRandle's thrust will be that at each step in the development of the National Socialist State, the Third Reich could appear to be acceptable, or at least not completely outrageous, to the majority of the population.

The meeting will be held at 8:30 in the evening in Garey Hall on March 4. Faculty and students are cordially invited to attend.

Transportation Institute Names 10 Man Committee

A ten man advisory committee, representing all phases of transportation, has been named to work with the newly formed "Institute for Transportation Studies" at Villanova University.

Announcement of the appointment of the Committee was made last week by the Very Rev. Joseph A. Flaherty, OSA, University President. Villanova's "Institute for Transportation Studies" is the first of its kind in the East.

It will not only prepare students for careers in the field of transportation, but will provide facilities for research and development in this highly complex field.

Members of the newly formed Advisory Board are: John A. Bailey, Deputy General Manager of SEPTA; Paetrus F. Banmiller, Eastern Plant Manager of The Budd Company; John F. Curtin of Simpson & Curtin - Transportation Engineers.

Also Hon. Richardson Dilworth, former Mayor of Philadelphia; George W. Girdler of Seatrain Lines, Inc.; Sol Katz, President, Strick Trailer Co.; David W. Longmaid, Executive Director, Delaware Valley Planning Commission; Louis P. Marechal, President, Dean International Corp.; Merritt H. Taylor, Jr., President, Philadelphia Suburban Transportation Co.; Eric J. von Hausswolff, Deputy Secretary for Planning and Programs, Pennsylvania Department of Highways.

Their function will be to provide liaison with industry and government, and to instill proper balance through guidance. Fr. Flaherty stated, "We are enormously grateful for the services these outstanding men have brought to our committee."

Dr. James J. Schuster, of Villanova's Civil Engineering Department, is Director of the "Institute for Transportation Studies." He will be assisted by faculty members representing 13 academic departments.

The Institute will explore transportation from every standpoint. It will include specialists in engineering, sociology, statistics, psychology, economics, political science, planning and mathematics.

Letter to All Students

Dear Villanova Student:

The Senior Class of Villanova University for the year 1966 will attempt a Senior Pledge Drive. This drive will be similar to the one conducted at Boston College, and is basically one by which the seniors promise funds for their first three years in the Alumni Association.

The program is geared specifically to the Villanova Campus. All solicitations will be made IN PERSON, and our goal is $30,000 for a three-year period. The funds will be specifically given as follows: 50% to the athletic program, and 50% to the library fund.

The nature of the program will be from the students to the students who follow them. The president of the senior class will be the general chairman, with full responsibility. The class treasurer will handle a treasury committee, the secretary will be in charge of publicity and the vice-president will handle special problems. Under the president will be chairmen for each of the four colleges. Under these chairmen will be chairmen for each major, who will head committees large enough so that each solicitor has only 5-8 people to contact.

The theme will be set by the president in two personal letters to the class. This will be accompanied by other promotional literature.

The benefits from such a program are obvious. First of all, you can raise much more money. (The program would comprise 10% of ALL alumni giving -- 10% of all alumni giving from only one class!)

Next, it would get hundreds of men in the EARLY habit of giving, which is a great advantage for future alumni

V.U.'s Lay Theology Prof

By Joe Sessoni

In a letter to the editor published in last week's Villanovan, Mr. Rodger Van Allen of the Villanova Theology department expressed his comments on the St. John's University controversy. This is certainly not his only distinction.

Mr. Van Allen is the only lay man on Villanova's Theology department. A 1959 Villanova graduate he received his MA in Theology from Villanova in 1964. Before coming to Villanova he taught at Devon Preparatory School and Msgr. Bonner High School.

Besides teaching at Villanova Mister Van Allen is also working on his Doctorate while teaching a course in Contemporary Catholic Thought at Temple University's graduate school.

In a recent interview we asked Mr. Van Allen what type of individual is one likely to find as a Villanova student today. He replied:

"The students today at Villanova are, generally speaking a good deal different than they were when I was an undergraduate student in the late 50's. They're alert, concerned, questioning, thinking. They seem more aware of the needs of society and are more concerned about doing something about those needs. It's no accident that VAMP, the Student Apostolate Group, C.C.D. etc. are of recent vintage on campus.

With regards to the modern student Mr. Van Allen pointed out the way in which the Moral Theology course has been shifted to meet these needs. He said.

"It's a Thomistic Principle that the means must be suited to the end. According to this good notion we have adopted a scriptural means to the end of presenting the Christian life in a meaningful fashion. Instead of teaching Moral Theology we are attempting to present Christian life in the terms Christ himself presented it. By using this Biblical Existential approach which recognizes man and his life as one existing moving action we can present Moral Theology in a way which is more akin to the way modern man thinks."

Rodger Van Allen

Commenting on the teacher's freedom in his department Mr. Van Allan said:

"Some people today have made the statement that universities and religion can't mix. I don't think this is true. In the Theology department we have an ideal situation as far as freedom and communication within the department are concerned."

Mr. Van Allen sees the university as a place which is primarily dedicated to the education of the student and he sees the teacher's place as primarily in the classroom. He is cognizant of the need to communicate with his students, his only complaint being that students sometimes don't ask enough questions. He is in essence a teacher in every sense of the word.

Mr. John A. Bailey (extreme right) Deputy General Manager of SEPTA and Richardson Dilworth, former mayor of Philadelphia, discuss academic program of Villanova University's "Institute for Transportation Studies" with Very Rev. Joseph A. Flaherty, O.S.A., University President, and Dr. James J. Schuster (second left), Director of the Institute.

Student Government Meeting

By Tom Dabney

The Student Government Association met last week and passed an unusually long list of motions. The meeting which because of the volume of motions under consideration was spread out over two evenings and totaled five hours.

Highlights of the meeting were: a speech by Rev. Robert Gill, O.S.A. (Dean of Men); the passage of two motions which dealt with a variety of grievances of students in academic and administrative affairs.

Of particular importance among the motions defeated was the Student Court. The motion was not considered on the basis of a speech given by Fr. Gill. Also defeated were certain parts of motion 60: "That the Latin requirement for the A.B. degree in Humanities be significantly altered," "that the Administration seriously consider employing more qualified lay instructors to teach Theology courses," and "that the mark received by a student in summer school approved by the Administration be included in his cumulative average."

President Steve Freind announced that a special letter would be sent to Archbishop Krol to request a dispensation in conjunction with the motion for evening mass on Sundays.

He also announced that the Student Loan Service is open to students as of Monday, February 28, allowing to borrow a total of fifteen dollars with no interest.

The rather lengthy and very important motion on Presidential succession is slated to be considered at the next meeting because of the time needed to consider it.

The following motions received passage:

(55) MOTION

THAT Article VII Section 4 part a of the By-Laws be deleted and replaced with the following: "Satisfactory scholastic achievement which means a 2.50 cumulative average for all SGA representatives with a full vote and all Class Officers and a 2.25 cumulative average for all officers of SGA.

(56) MOTION

That the SGA by a two-thirds vote grant a suspension of the rules regarding Motion 55 so that it may take effect this semester thus implementing the present proposals of the Elections Committee.

(60) MOTION

THAT the SGA propose the following points:

That the Administration initiate a University-wide policy whereby all examinations and term papers which a teacher does not return to a student must be made available to the student upon request up to one week after the following semester begins.

That the schedule of all final examinations be posted by mid-semester.

That the final examinations of a semester be on file in the U.S. Navy Offers Program For Commissions for Sophs

The U.S. Navy has announced a new program offering college sophomores an opportunity to earn a commission in the U.S.Navy Reserve or the U.S. Marine Corps Reserve. The new two year contract program calls for college sophomores to go to one of five designated NROTC colleges for six weeks of summer school after the completion of the sophomore year.

The six week school provides courses in Naval Orientation, Naval History, and Naval Weapons in order to place you on a Naval Science curriculum level with your contemporaries in the four year Contract Program. The student will receive travel pay, room, board, and $87.90 a month while in this training.

Successful candidates of the summer session will be accepted as Midshipmen at the Villanova NROTC Unit. During the Junior and Senior years, the Midshipman will be permitted to select either Navy or Marine courses, and is required to attend drill for two hours a week, and three fifty minute lecture periods per week. The student will receive $40 a month as a subsistence allowance. After Junior year, the student will go on a six week training cruise. There is a three year obligation to serve on active duty after graduation.

To be eligible for this Program, the sophomore must have a 2.00 quality point average, and have never been married. The eyesight qualifications have been liberalized.

Deadline for application and tentative acceptance for the Program by the Professor of Naval Science is May 1, 1966.

300 Pint Quota Set As Red Cross Begins Annual Blood Drive

The annual Red Cross blood drive at Villanova will be held on Wednesday, March 16 and Thursday, March 17.

Mrs. Stephens, the Red Cross official in charge of the campus drive was recruiting doners yesterday at John Barry Hall. The aim of yesterday's enlistment was to get as many Navy ROTC students as possible to pledge blood donations for the campaign.

The Red Cross officers will be in Dougherty Hall today to sign up any and all people connected with Villanova (students, faculty, employees), and the general public as well.

Ed Apuzzo, director of the blood drive, has sincere hopes that Villanova will reach its goal this year. The goal has been set at 300 pints of blood. Apuzzo points out that 300 appears easy enough to attain with several thousand students, but Villanova failed to make its' quota last year.

There are definite advantages available to those who donate blood. For anyone who has given blood and for any member of his family, the Red Cross will supply as much blood as is needed in an emergency. This service is free of charge as compared with the price of twenty five dollars a pint for non-doners.

Also, if the quota is made, everybody associated with Villanova would receive as much blood as necessary if the need arose without charge.

Because of the three-day weekend the time for donation of the blood has been scheduled for 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. in order that early departure by the students will not seriously affect the drive.

History Dept. Opens Spring Lecture Series Tonite With Dr. Reilly

Mr. Edward E. Cannan closes the series on March 16, with a lecture entitled "The Pliny-Trajan Correspondence: A Study in Roman Imperial Administration."

All students, faculty, and friends are invited to attend.

Selective Service May Use Korean War Type Draft Plan

By Jim O'Hare

One of the most widespread topics for conversation on college campuses across the United States is the draft, and if and how it will affect the college student. Mr. Edward Murray, Assistant Professor of Economics and head of the Selective Service office in Corr Hall, suggests that the situation is not as gloomy for students as numerous reports and newspaper articles indicate.

Mr. Murray said that to date he has received no new instructions from Commonwealth Selective Service Headquarters in Harrisburg or from Washington, concerning a change in the present draft policy. However, judging from certain newspaper reports and experience, he believes that a policy like the one used during the Korean Conflict will be established.

During Korea, there were two ways for a student to achieve and maintain a 2-s (deferment for studies) status: 1) To have a sufficiently high class standing, or, 2) to achieve a passing mark on an OPTIONAL Selective Service test. For a freshman to advance to sophomore year and still hold his 2-s, he must be in the upper half of his class; from sophomore to junior, upper two-thirds; junior to senior, upper three-fourths. Standing is computed for each individual college of the University. For students failing to meet these standards, they could take an exam which, if passed, would entitle them to a 2-s.

Mr. Murray believes that this system will be followed if the present policy is changed. On an optimistic note, he said that to the best of his knowledge none of the college students reclassified as 1-a during the Korean Conflict were drafted while satisfactorily advancing to a degree in the normal period of time. He sees no immediate likelihood of undergraduates being drafted.

The situation on the graduate level is a little different. If there is a new policy, for a student to be deferred for graduate work, he would probably have to be in the top one-fourth of his senior class, or, if doing work in the "healing Arts" (such as Medicine, Dentistry, etc.), he would have to be in the top half of his class. A student could also qualify by getting a passing mark on the Selective Service exam. Passing for a graduate student is a higher grade on the same exam.

Mr. Murray also pointed out that many local draft boards have begun or will soon begin requiring college seniors to report for physical examinations before graduation. This is not to be in any way considered an induction notice or an indication that one will be drafted immediately after graduation. It is becoming a general policy with many draft boards merely to save time and trouble.

In general, Mr. Murray feels, exaggerated stories and rumors are causing a lot of unnecessary worry, since at the present time the situation is not serious as many people fear.

Villanova Forum Presents Author Barbara Ward

Barbara Ward, famed British economist and author, will lecture on "Organizing the World Economy" at the Field House Monday, March 28.

Lady Jackson, author of ten volumes, is currently writing a book on Africa, and still another on the problems of the city. She is known by her books "FIVE IDEAS THAT CHANGE THE WORLD" and "THE RICH NATIONS AND THE POOR NATIONS." These and other similar books on East-West relations are ample proof of her ability to speak on the world economic situation.

Born at York, England, Lady Jackson has attended such schools in the United States as Fordham, Columbia, Smith, Canisius, and the University of Pittsburgh. She is privileged to be the only woman to have delivered the Commencement Address at Harvard University.

Her platform performance as a lecturer is flawless. Lady Jackson is extremely talented, and so for this reason she will grace the Villanova Forum for the second time.

Maturity Will Come

Father Gill's speech to the SGA last week surprised the VILLANOVAN in that the information concerning the firecracker in Fr. Halphen's room was as foreign to us as the withholding of information by some Villanova students.

The Dean of Men then went on to question the idea of a student court because the incident and withholding of information showed that the students perhaps were not mature enough for this added responsibility. But Father is missing the point here.

Well-disciplined students are not produced by the ability to follow a pre-ordained honor system which calls for "squealing" on other students. Honor is inculcated by a moral code which the student freely accepts -- presumably constructed after years of training in a Catholic school. When one has accepted this Christian code, incidents such as these would not occur.

The VILLANOVAN feels that the old days of wrist-slapping, stringent restrictions, and bread and water punishments should be banned from the discipline calendar. With the development of the college student from a sort of hell-raiser to an intelligent, questioning individual, more responsibility is demanded but not always received.

The students will make mistakes, but at least they will know that there is a certain amount of trust implied in this relationship with those in authority.

It took five days for the information to reach us, and even then it was served as an example of immature Villanova students. A student court is desirable at Villanova, but if the students lack freedom of expression, the idea will ultimately perish.

Choose Wisely But Choose

Nominations for class officers will be held March 14 to 21. Members of all classes are being asked to consider the qualifications of any prospective candidates before making nominations. Once nominated, it is imperative that the students vote for the candidate of their choice. An unopposed candidate is not worth running.

Nominations should be made on the basis of the candidate's ability to make decisions and determine class policy, plus his past performance and interest in class affairs. All students are reminded that this is not a popularity contest, and an unwise choice now will result in catastrophe and chaos next year.

Letters to The Editor

To the Editor:

Insofar as letters to the Editor should be brief and to the point, I wish only to state that the problem of "two" psychologies is a question of significance. Further, the question is of essential significance in a Christian environment where man's freedom is the basis for responsible behavior.

However, I must add, that neither the Department of Psychology nor the Department of Philosophy can be said to purposefully contribute to the problem. Both departments represent valid sources of understanding despite the rather obvious contemporary dilemma the conflicting views suggest. Perhaps both departments are rooted by historical antecedents from which they cannot, under the structure of methodology, free themselves. Thus, in a sense, the problem remains unchallenged and society itself becomes the unwary recipient of our limitations and doubts.

In conclusion, it is therefore proposed that an Institute for the Study of Man be established at Villanova University, based upon a continuing interdisciplinary contribution from all concerned departments. It is that time in history when man has the spiritual, philosophical and scientific information at hand to advance man's understanding of man.

Dr. B. L. Bonniwell

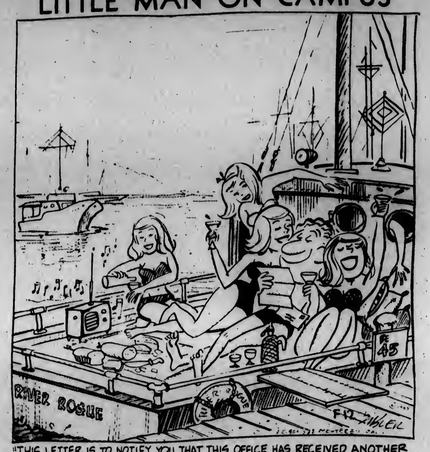
To the Editor:

The best of its kind! Once again the Intercollegiate Jazz Festival brought praise to Villanova for presenting the pre-eminent event of its kind.

It was my good fortune to meet the judges and other honored guests, and I can relay their emphatic opinion that the IJF is well out in first place artistically. Moreover, there were many comments of praise for the thoroughly professional manner in which the festival was organized and presented. While the musicians are amateur, in all other respects this year's IJF was top-notch and professional.

To Bill McCloskey, Rick Berry, Jerry Iby and their associates -- kudos for a job well done.



Dr. James Gotza

To the Editor:

Let me congratulate you for publishing one of the best copies of the "Villanovan" in the past couple of years. Filled with several good articles, two in particular are worthy of commendation: Neil Sheehan's column, and the editorial entitled "The Time Has Come." Both show courage on the part of the writers by discussing problems we all know are wrong, yet are afraid to solve for fear of losing popularity or upsetting the status quo. Keep up the good work, and again, thank you.

Theology: Passing or Failing

No course is of any value if those who present it lack authority. While all of those who teach in the Theology department seek to present their course honestly, they do not all meet the same requirements that other departments have established. The degrees held by Theology professors vary from engineering to philosophy. While all priests have intensive training in Theology, we question the assumption that this background qualifies them to teach college Theology. The one layman in the department has a master's in Theology, a background that is directed toward college teaching. The VILLANOVAN urges that the members of the Theology department be required to matriculate in the University's graduate program in Theology, in order to better insure continued competence on the other side of the desk.

Academic credentials are not the sole criterion of successful course presentation. Some courses require unique ability not to be found in texts. In such fields as Marriage, for example, the practical background of the professor is most important. For priests, extensive work in family counselling, parish work, or on Marriage Courts should be required. If such men are not available, lay professors should be employed. We are aware of the shortage of qualified lay professors, but point out that there is no shortage of interested competent laymen who would make themselves available for classroom work in Marriage (now part of another course), and in the course areas dealing with social and ethical problems.

A course that is well-presented by competent personnel should merit a grade. Theology courses at Villanova do not; at least the grade is not meaningful.

Some on the faculty teach Theology as they would any other college course. Some view it as a way-station on the road to heaven, and only successful completion of that journey guarantees a passing grade.

When a student receives what he considers to be an undeservedly low grade in a course, it is doubtful that he carries a lifelong resentment toward that discipline. However, when this happens in a Theology course, many feel that students carry their resentment longer than in other cases, and that this may adversely affect their faith. No credit is given for the courses by graduate schools, yet they constitute one-sixth of our credit load every other semester.

The VILLANOVAN urges the Theology Department to petition the University to make offering's more meaningful, from both a religious and academic view. The continuation of an unfair grading system, applied to courses which can be legitimately and seriously questioned, should not be tolerated. Theology courses offered in a meaningful setting by interested and competent personnel at Villanova should carry with them no grade other than Passing or Failing.

Can it Be?

A column written for the soul satisfaction of its author . . . others be warned.

By Ron Javers

It has been mentioned. There have been ripples. There might even be waves.

What we refer to is the talk around the University about a recent proposal for some sort of faculty evaluation - by the student. We've heard views expressed, pro and con. Some seem to think that this proposal will have the fate of a few others that came up in the Student Government Association. It will be discussed, debated, polled, advised, voted on, and then slip from sight, never to be seen again.

At least it makes good practice for the aspiring future legislators and politicians in our Student Congress. It is unfortunate that so many times this Congress has been made to look like a governing body concerned primarily with tempests in tea pots. We're sure it has a stifling effect on the members of that august body.

But here we are not concerned with the frustrations of this University's student government - that we'll save for another column, or perhaps a book or series of books. (An interesting study in aggression - anxiety.)

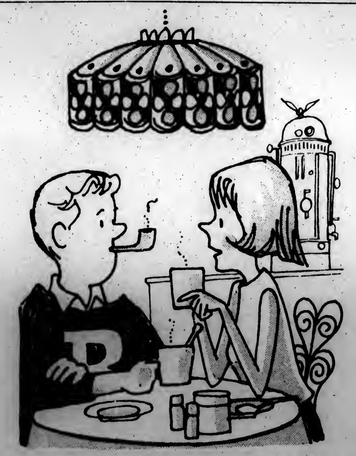
Here we are concerned with a particular issue: the faculty evaluation. Too often in American Academia, are teachers rated with a worn-out yardstick. The "publish or perish" axiom never was a salutary criterion for establishing a teacher's classroom worth. The number of degrees a man has may prove him to be a brilliant student, but says nothing of his teaching ability.

Let's face it. Education like any other service is a commodity to be bought and sold. It is unfortunate that this is the situation, but society proscribes the rules; and this system was ordained by the same generation that now cries out in protest when the tin god of academic professionalism is tarnished by association with anything so crass as a dollar bill.

The term "professional" means just that, a person who sells a particular talent or service to the consumer. Why doesn't the consumer in the case of education, have anything to say about the quality of the product? It's the simple law of supply and demand at work here.

The demand has become so great that the suppliers have perhaps grown a bit too self confident. They too often take the attitude that if one student doesn't like the way the system operates, then let him go home. There are many more, waiting tuition in hand, to take his place.

Good teachers have nothing to fear from any evaluation program. In fact it should enhance their position and confirm their abilities. The poorer teachers could conceivably become better if they were reminded occasionally of their shortcomings.



It all sounds so easy. However, there are problems. The difficulty lies not with the professors who are to be evaluated, but with the students who are to do the evaluating. We really don't have an awful lot of "students" around here.

Anyone who would wish to take on such an onerous task as teacher evaluation would be a "student" in the most serious sense. A teacher could not be rated on such nebulous criteria as his grading practices, or the number of classes missed per semester. This, we are afraid might be the tendency here.

So alas, we are caught in the vicious circle of not having enough students capable of the task of evaluating their pedagogues.

Until the quality of the student improves at this university, we can hardly hope for an improvement in the faculty. But let's be wildly optimistic anyway and hope for an evaluation system that would make both "student" and "teacher" at least aware of each other's expectations. And more aware of the privileges and obligations the titles imply.

NROTC Drill Team

By John Silva

Seven o'clock in the morning is probably not the best time of the day to be tossing rifles and bayonets around on Mendel Field.

Come to think of it, neither is eight, nine, ten or any other time. Yet fifty-six Villanovans have been doing it five days a week since September. They are all members of Whiskey Company, Villanova's NROTC Drill Team -- and they must obviously like what they are doing.

'SUICIDE,' 'EXPLOSION'

Some of the things the team does are described by such words as "blackout", "suicide", "explosion" and "wanza." They represent a few of the names of tricks which can put the team through various maneuvers stressing a maximum of precision, concentration and adherence to the second of the Two Great Commandments.

The technical differences between these tricks is commonly measured by the number of stitches obtained in perfecting them. The nature of "suicide" and "blackout" can be ascertained from their names. "Wanza" is a derivation of "what was that?" It was first uttered by the First Platoon commander as the Second Squad leader removed his bayonet from the commander's cap.

While it may be amusing to jest about such "incidents" the reasons for Whiskey Company's trick drill routine will be found neither in sensationalism or sadism but rather in a desire for perfection and esprit de corps. ("Let's do it right this time! Dammit, let's do it right!")

WHISKEY COMPANY

Whiskey Company, now in its seventeenth year, is composed of three teams. Two freshman platoons drill Basic, a routine strictly in accordance with the MANUAL OF ARMS. The First Platoon is comprised of twenty-two upperclassmen who specialize in Trick Drill. It is in this area that Marine "blues" and bayonets are donned and the drill routine becomes based largely on difficulty and originality.

It is the familiar First Platoon which marched during half-time at the Quantico game last fall. During last semester the team also put on exhibitions at the NROTC Fall Review and a Saints and Sinners Club Banquet honoring Governor Scranton.

With the second semester here, the drill season is now officially underway. On February 19, Whiskey Company was one of twenty-one teams competing in the Pennsylvania Military College Drill Meet. The First Platoon took a first place in Basic, a fourth place in Trick and Third Overall, finishing behind LaSalle and Seton Hall.

VILLANOVA INVITATIONAL

On February 26 Whiskey Company sponsored the Seventh Annual Villanova Invitational, held at the Pennsylvania National Guard Armory in Philadelphia. Out of a field of twenty-eight teams, Basic drill was won by Maryland AFROTC. Seton Hall finished first in Trick Drill as well as winning this year's Overall Championship. Villanova did not compete for score.

The remainder of the drill season will see Whiskey Company at St. Peter's, Northeastern, Maryland, Manhattan, and the

You Might Well Ask . . .

By Neil Sheehan

About the knight's hard day.

Taking his life into his own hands and arising, having seen the movie nigh over seventy times, he straggled into the footloose ski slopes, noticing not that he had Barry's picture on his pack of Lucky Strikes. Leaving little to be desired but his own ring, he calmly directed beach traffic all during the impending blackout. After all didn't he have his own friction-motor flamingo. He had danced on tables before and what of getting into bed backwards? Hell's Angels might be his answer, he thought. But he had all his teeth and he still could ask her for saturday not friday, which was the Ides of March, he being the reincarnated Caesar. Take it for what it's worth, he mumbled, but I have the Lucky Buck. And wan't it true that someone short-sheeted his bed. Listen, and he listened, it wasn't my dope ring, and besides I like Washington stewardesses in a manner of speaking. Later that day he took the second milk, despite Sarge who in a similar manner of speaking, never let them through sans tie. Sell the room is the way, he perspired, but no, I do like dry cats, having no reference to the wild ones. Speak not evil thoughts of Boston, for I've been in the infirmary with four not two. And why chase the knight. I was at the museum, taking it all in. Speak of Buzz, move your lip, pop your art, use their library, have you no Friend? What you need is help, not just anybody.

To any kid who'd like to go somewhere:

We'll pay half your fare.

The idea's not as crazy as it may seem.

Anytime we take a jet up, there are almost always leftover seats.

So it occurred to us that we might be able to fill a few of them, if we gave the young people a break on the fare, and a chance to see the country.

The American Youth Plan*

We call the idea the American Youth Plan, and what it means is this:

American will pay half the jet coach fare for anybody 12 through 21.

It's that simple.

All you have to do is prove your age (a birth certificate or any other legal document will do) and buy a $3 identification card.

We date and stamp the card, and this entitles you to a half-fare ticket at any American Airlines counter.

The only catch is that you might have to wait before you get aboard; the fare is on a standby basis.

"Standby" simply means that the passengers with reservations and the servicemen get on before you do.

Then the plane's yours.

The American Youth Plan is good year round except for a few days before and after the Easter, Thanksgiving and Christmas rushes.

If you can't think of any places you'd like to go offhand, you might see a travel agent for a few suggestions.

We can't add anything else.

Other than it's a marvelous opportunity to just take off.

Complete this coupon—include your $3.
(Do not send proof of age—it is not needed until you have your ID validated.)

In addition to your ID card, we'll also send you a free copy of AA's Go Go American with $50 worth of discount coupons.

EVERY DAY OVER 33 MILLION PEOPLE USE A SEALRIGHT PACKAGING PRODUCT. Perhaps you used one today. For instance, a glass milk bottle cap or closure, a plastic-coated paper milk carton or a blown plastic milk bottle. Perhaps it was some ice cream or cheese from a paper or plastic Sealright Round-Pak container, or your coffee-break coffee might have arrived in a Sealright take-out cup.

These are just a few of the products turned out at six Sealright production facilities spotted throughout the United States and Canada and there are more units in the planning and building stage.

SEALRIGHT IS 75 YEARS YOUNG AND GROWING FAST. It's a subsidiary of Phillips Petroleum Company, one of America's foremost corporations and a major producer of plastics resins. Today plastics is "King" in the challenging packaging field, and Sealright is finding new and exciting applications for it every day. Sealright engineers and technicians design and produce the automatic machines and equipment used for processing Sealright packaging. As a Sealright packageer, you will contribute and participate in this challenge and growth.

ONE WORD OF CAUTION! If you are looking for a place to hide, a soft job with no responsibility or recognition, don't waste time talking to the Sealright man, because at Sealright everyone MUST merit responsibility and earn recognition.

IJF — Ok

By Gene Fitz Maurice

College efforts usually justify themselves by definition. The energy and work which goes into them is not immediately rewarded by other than self-satisfaction. When reviewing a college program of any type, the tendency is to view its faults as due to inexperience and to try desperately to find some good points.

Unfortunately, this benevolent attitude cannot be used in considering the merits of this year's Intercollegiate Jazz Festival. While it is true that all of the participants are in college and are not legally considered professional musicians, in every other way this year's IJF was completely professional.

Any programs which can attract leading names in Jazz from all fields: recording, publishing and teaching must be far superior to its college cousins. More notable, the fact that Stan Kenton has become, in effect, Villanova's Jazzman in Residence for the last several years, confirms this University's open competition for the country's best as the best to be found. (Last week, on an area news program, Mr. Kenton noted that the outstanding musicians were more and more coming from the college campus, and then he lent himself to proving that this is the best college showcase in the country.)

The technical work on the Festival cannot be faulted. The fact that all of the performers were obviously as much interested in entertainment as competition was noted by all. Indeed, there can be only one complaint which this corner can make concerning IJF: I do not like Jazz.

It may be reactionary in the musical world to feel that simply because the composer wrote a certain piece a certain way that it should be played that way. Jazz musicians obviously do not share that feeling. To them, the original score is merely a starting point for them to go on and weave technically acceptable screens of music.

While they are doing this, they sometimes stray so far from what is apparently the composer's main idea that they become lost in mazes of their own making. Granted that an original composition may be a good starting point in the creation of new ones. Granted that the construction of variations on a theme is both difficult and rewarding.

The fact remains that too subjectively complex a variation can lead to a new piece, which is in no way related to the original one, but uses it for some form of self-justification when the simple fact that a composition had been created would be both more honest and end serving.

The Bob Cameron Quartet from Bucknell seemed always to be on the verge of presenting a strong and interesting "sound," but every time they came close, particularly in their presentation of music by Dizzy Gillespie, they backed away and left some disappointment.

Ohio State's Lab Band came on big and maintained interest throughout the first piece. The second, a "Tribute to Lord Buckley," was more of a dirge than even a funeral deserves. This seemed to carry over into their last piece.

Both the Bill Farmer Quartet and the Carl Sullivan Quintet fell

John J. Gallen, Dean of the College of Engineering, has been appointed Chairman of an Arrangements Committee.

Mr. Richard Duprey, chairman of the Graduate Theatre Department, has selected "The Laughmaker" to be the next presentation at the Villanovan Playbox.

"The Laughmaker" is a new lyrical play by the American team of playwrights, Jerome Lawrence and Robert E. Lee, who gave the theatre "Inherit the Wind" and "Auntie Mame."

This Lawrence and Lee production relates the arresting story of two actors whose lives are torn by the perverse wish of a beautiful woman. The play is about the theatre, and is pure theatre, Mr. Duprey said.

Performances will be given for three weekends, beginning Friday, March 18, under Mr. Duprey's direction. This is the third of four new plays being presented this year in the Playbox arena theatre. It will mark the first anniversary of the Villanova Theatre Department's selection as the national winner of the Margo Jones Award for the encouragement of new playwrights in the American theatre.

Both Mr. Lawrence and Mr. Lee will visit the theatre department and discuss production of the play during some of the final rehearsal sessions, Mr. Duprey said.

into what I had hoped they would avoid: the seemingly aimless stringing together of notes running wild. I know that Jazz buffs look forward to this, but after a point the ability of the performers is proven and the musical games become pointless.

The performances of West Chester's Criterions and the North Texas State Band were undoubtedly the highlight of the evening: Both were in championship form, and even the most conservative in the audience could not be disappointed in their handling of Summertime.

All of the other competitors played music which the Jazz buffs in the audience could not help but cheer. Non-buffs might not have cheered, but the evening's efforts left them more than entertained.

Jazz at Villanova, 1966 Version

The big band from North Texas State University in Denton, Texas, ran away with the top prizes at Villanova University's Sixth Annual Intercollegiate Jazz Festival Saturday, February 26.

Donna Jean, a vocalist from St. Joseph's College Evening Division, Philadelphia, Pa., and the Jazz Quintet from West Chester, Pa., State College were awarded the best in their category awards at the Festival.

RECORD CONTRACT

In addition to the $250 cash prize, which went to each of the three top winners, the North Texas band has been promised a recording session with the Columbia Records Company. John Hammond announced that decision for Columbia from the stage at the conclusion of IJF. This is the first time a contestant at the Villanova Festival has been offered a chance to record for a major record label based on a performance at the Field House.

It was Hammond who signed the Paul Winter Sextet out of the Georgetown Festival a few years ago. The awards for North Texas, which included the ABC trophy, presented by Ed Jordan of the ABC Radio Network, were accepted by the director of the band Leon Breeden. Breeden has been attempting to get the North Texas band to Villanova for three years, but this is the first year financial arrangements could be made for the three-day trip.

Swings Into Field House Friday

The top vocalist was Donna Jean from Ardmore, Pa. The 21-year-old blonde was presented a silver bowl by Tom Brown, afternoon air personality at Metromedia's WIP in Philadelphia.

Donna's first appearance after the Festival victory was on WCAU's TV 10 Around Town on Monday afternoon, Feb. 28. In addition to her six hours of class at St. Joseph's, she teaches in St. Anastasia's parish school in Newtown Square, Pa. On Saturday, March 5, she will appear on Ed Hurst's show from Aquarama along with the West Chester Jazz Quintet, the top combo on the IJF schedule.

Donna Jean and the combo each received a $250 cash award.

TOP TRUMPET

Jeff Stout, leader of the Jazz Quintet, was also named the best trumpet player at the Festival and received a Getzen Flugelhorn for his efforts. Another West Chester student, Garry Gauger of the Criterions, the big band, was the best drummer and walked off with a gold plated snare drum from the Fred Gretsch Company.

The North Texas band, in addition to their other prizes, have been invited to compete in the Mobile Jazz Festival April 2 and 3 in Alabama. Trudy Desmond, one of the vocalists participating in IJF has also been accepted by the preliminary judges at Mobile. Jazz in Jersey, a new festival slated for May 28, has offered to book the North Texas band for the Newport-like show.

The winners were selected by a panel of top jazz names which included John Hammond of Columbia records; Hal Cook, the publisher of BILLBOARD, the widely read music weekly; Dan Morgenstern, associate editor of the jazz bible DOWN BEAT; Bob Share, administrator of the Berklee School of Music in Boston and Dr. Jack McKinney, president of the New York Neophonic Orchestra.

This year's show hosted close to 250 musicians and over 4,000 persons in the audience. Bill McCloskey was chairman for IJF '66. At the close of the festival Dennis Montefusco was named chairman of the 1967 Festival.

BLIND GIRL "SEES" NATURE'S WONDERS

Sidney Poitier, who has befriended a lonely blind girl (Elizabeth Hartman), describes what a caterpillar looks like in a scene from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "A Patch of Blue," which will open at the Lane Theatre, early in March. Miss Hartman, a brilliantly talented newcomer, makes her screen debut in the new film, which also stars Shelley Winters. "A Patch of Blue," which the New York Post called "One of the year's 10 best," has already been nominated for several awards.

Duprey's Play Misdirected

By Joseph Linsalata

How not to direct a movie; how not to rewrite a play for the screen; how to assemble a mediocre cast and how to make a segmented, non-sequitur and disjointed movie could all be learned from WCAU's Repertory Workshop.

The specific details involve a 59-minute "art" film on channel 10 last Sunday at 4:30. The title -- THE JOEY -- written by Richard A. Duprey of the Villanova Theatre department.

This one time potentially serious drama was turned into a Sunday afternoon soap opera that should be shown on TV at prime time on weekdays.

The story of a gargoyle clown that was originally staged at the Playbox was turned into a completely sentimental story resembling one of Dicken's novels.

The plot tells how the worldly bitterness and human hatred of a hunch-back joey, Anton Droller, was transformed into love and appreciation of people through the efforts of one girl, Elina. The circus clown was conditioned by his father not to plug-in his heart or not to get too close. He was mistreated by the bigots of society who had no pity for his deformity.

All this was changed by a woman Anton eventually marries. She eventually is killed in a heroic effort to save children in a circus fire. Afterwards, there appear numerous stories in magazines about a one-time joey who travels to a grave every Christmas eve to perform an old circus act. The joey is Anton returning to Elina's grave for an annual ritual in her honor.

The main fault of the film is that the director, James Hirschfeld, does not seem to grasp and fuse the script with the media of presentation. Hirschfeld presents a story -- a story which is in documentary form. The picture has no integration of scene to scene. It lacks the poetry achieved by foreign directors. It excells in action and is void of rhythm.

The entire film is a series of flash-backs that Anton has on a train on his way to his annual grave site performance. The violent cutting of the script from a two-hour play to a short film makes the train exist as a vehicle; a dramatic device that allows the action to flow. The train does not live as an integral part of the script.

For the film to exist as a work of art as compared to a documentary, every segment, each rhythm, every camera position, and each actor and even the music must jell into a whole poetic piece as the parts of a modern painting or any work of sculpture blends.

Only the opening scene at the train station, the scene in the hospital when Elina's father died and the final scene at the graveyard conveyed a sense of continuity to something. That something was the lack of excellence which was so wanting in the rest of the film.

As far as the acting, it could be said to have been good to poor. Geoffrey Garland as Anton was good. Barry Cassel as Charlie, the owner of the circus, was poor -- completely miscast. Mariclare Castello as Elina was sufficient.

One problem the actors faced was that their characters had been unmercifully cut with the rest of the script. Elina was a perfectly flat character with no more integrity than love -- a terribly unrealistic creation.

The lack of character development was another result of massive cutting. This forced a character onto the scene, and boom! something was done to display her personality.

The only remedy for the film to exist as anything other than a maudlin story is to re-write the script into an hour movie and re-film the show with a director who has a creative imagination for something besides documentaries.

Fr. Gill Talks to SGA

By Tom Dabney

Last Wednesday night Rev. Robert Gill, O.S.A., Villanova's Dean of Men, spoke before the Student Government Association. The speech was concerned with the recently proposed Student Court System.

Fr. Gill punctuated the opening of his speech with a very surprising incident. He told how two Villanovans tried to annoy Rev. Marshall Halphen, when they threw two firecrackers into his room several weeks ago in the early morning hours. Fr. Halphen, a dorm prefect in Corr Hall, was not hurt, but extensive damage was done to his room.

Fr. Gill put particular stress on the fact that two students saw the bombers, but only retained a flimsy physical description of them. He said while these two students and quite possibly many others are aware of the incident, a code of "never inform" prevails among the students.

Using this basic premise, Father went on to say that while one sided ethics of this type prevail a student court will never be successful in its objective. He stated that where such a distorted collective morality is so deep-seated, no objective decisions could ever be reached by a court.

He went on to berate the students in general for their lack of maturity and sense of ethical principle. He said that condonement of this "never inform" code is a serious strain on the student body in general, and does not speak well for the moral and ethical fiber of the students.

He related this obstacle to his own work and the work of the security force. He said that both he and Captain Cunnane (head of the security force) often find themselves up against a solid impenetrable wall which is the result of this code of "never inform."

As for the student court, itself, he felt that there was a definite lack of prudence and serious consideration on the part of students setting up the court. He said that they had committed a great oversight on their part when they failed to account for the great apathy among the students.

He said it appears to him that by their attempting to railroad this program through without more study, the student leaders showed a serious shirking of their official responsibility.

He felt that a more constructive course of action for them to follow would be to try and instill in the student body a sense of ethics. It was his contention that no student court of any value would ever come to much unless this most basic of principles was present. The presence of the "never inform" code is a void which must be and can only be filled when the students in general accept their status as mature and responsible individuals.

Fr. Gill closed by saying that it is quite easy to sit in judgement of one's peers. It requires, however, a very mature student to step apart from the crowd and stand up for an ethical system that he believes in.

The Student Government Association subsequently withdrew the motion for a Student Court System.

ACES' Discussion To Be Held March 8 In Bartley at 7:30

The Rev. Phillip F. Barrett OSA, Dean of the college of Commerce and Finance has announced that once again this year the Americans for the Competitive Enterprise system will appear on the Villanova campus. The group, know as ACES, is comprised of Philadelphia business leaders who have expressed concern over our free enterprise system.

The organization is a non-profit, non-political organization in the field of economic education, headed by Theodore Roosevelt III. Discussion programs, sponsored by ACES are presented before practically every college in the Greater Philadelphia area annually.

ACES is sponsored on the Villanova campus by the organizations in the school of Commerce and Finance. This years committee is chairmaned by Francis Fleming, president of Pi Sigma Epsilon fraternity. The other members of the committee are: Jeffrey G. Deluca, Pre-law Society; George D'Ambrosio, Accounting Society; Anthony Giachtti, Gamma Phi; James G. Thorton, Finance Society; Stephen G. Kearney, Marketing Society; John Rabenau, Delta Pi Epsilon; and James Giardina, Society for Business Achievement.

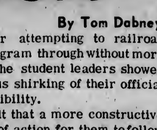
The discussion will be held on March 8, commencing with a dinner for the guests at six p.m.; the discussion will start at 7:30 p.m. in 110 Bartley Hall. The topic for the discussion will be "How Free is Free Enterprise?"

The panel will consist of top men from all phases of business. The members of the panel are: Harrison Dunning, President of Scott Paper Company; Joseph Livingston, Financial Editor, Philadelphia EVENING BULLETIN; James N. McGeehan, Education Director, United Steelworkers of America; and William B. Walker, President, First Pennsylvania National Bank. The panel will be moderated by Mr. Curtin Winsor, Executive Director of ACES.

This discussion program presents a good opportunity for Villanova seniors to meet personally and question these four distinguished panelists. All members of the Villanova faculty and student body are invited to attend.

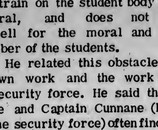
Striking Notes

By Pete Conserva and Kevin Tobin



Lately the Cleveland Orchestra has not been able to drum up enough business, and as a result they are on strike. Recent peace overtures have failed, mainly because the musician's union refused to scale down their demands. It seems as if the musician's are quite high strung and cannot pic-ca-lo wage agreement. If by chance, they can band together and re-organize, they may reach-a-chord.

There have been no repercussions or signs of violin-ics, unless you consider that the 1st flute player was asked to leave the aria and certain pickets declared that the conductor is off-the waltz. Those kids have more Brahm than Brains. Unfortunately, negotiations have halted, so-nata word has been said.



It seems that in the opinion of the musicians, they should not stoop solo, of course, in this strata-various points of criticism obviously arise. If agreement is reached soon, the union will be in complete rhapsody. If not, oboe, we're really going to be in treble. Let's just hope they du-et. Don't fret, I'm sure they'll be Bach playing soon. They wouldn't pun-ish us any longer.

and education be given the opportunity to decide which of the five sciences they are to take.

That the Administration reaffirm its policy, both to the faculty and the student body, on the status regarding the mark XF.

That the Administration make a University-wide policy whereby teachers would have to accept validated excuse cards.

That the Administration reaffirm the policy that a student's marks cannot be changed after one month of the reception of his grades.

That the Administration form the policy that no student would have to take three final examinations on the same day. The third exam would be considered a conflict.

That the SGA reaffirm to the Administration the desire to conduct a student course and teacher evaluation.

That, in conjunction with the course and teacher evaluation, the SGA requests the Administration to list the teachers of all courses by the time of pre-registration. (20) That a better system of teacher-student report be established. This could be done in two ways:

A--By the installation of an additional free period, on 10:30 each Monday.

B--By the Administration encouraging teachers to have informal meetings at some suitable place, e.g. the home of the teacher. The cost of these meetings would be subsidized by a joint SGA-Administration fund.

That the SGA reaffirm its desire to have the Administration alter the current snow policy.

programs. The program would also give a tremendous impetus for student spirit -- some 175 students trying to raise funds for their fellow students. The program could be played up in the local press as evidence of Villanova student initiative.

A program such as this must come to Villanova in the near future. The senior class president believes that this is the best time to start. Next year's class would naturally strive to outdo the results this year. The goal for this year is modest, and even if some extent of failure is realized, the program would be a true and meaningful step forward. A motion will soon be presented in order to get S.G.A. support (and extra publicity).

The senior class president is certain that by organizing the powerful forces of the Class of '66 such a program is bound to succeed. This class has treated the school to three energetic campaigns, scoring the highest voter turnout each time. This year the campaign void could be filled with equal enthusiasm by a Senior Pledge Drive.

There will be a meeting at 10:30 Thursday, March 3, in Vasey Hall Auditorium for all those involved.

Respectfully submitted,
James D. Griffin,
President, Class of '66

French Professor To Play 'Batman' On TV-10 Saturday

Batman can come under all sizes, shapes, and professions. The most recent WCAU-TV Batman is a French professor at Villanova University.

He goes by the alias of Edward Bell.

He will be seen this Saturday on the Gene London Show at 9 a.m.

Mr. Bell has done some theatrical work at the Playbox and he is presently working for his Masters in Villanova Graduate Theatre Department.

Mr. Bell came to Villanova in 1963 after receiving his bachelor's from the University of Miami in 1958. He received his master's in French from the University of Iowa in 1959. He also taught at the University of Maine.

He said of the half hour TV show that "you had to attune your mind to the style of dialog. Most of the lines were made-up on the spot and at the same time they were taping the show."

The Gene London Show is a full hour of cartoons for the kiddies and this week it will feature a Villanova professor as Batman, the singular element of that dynamic duo.

IC'S APPROACHING

'Cat Thinclads Look Tough

by Aurel Villari

In recent weeks, the Villanova trackmen have really been turning it on, making quite a few pre-season pessimists renew a hope that had, not too long ago, all but flickered out.

Times in all events have been steadily falling, and the 'Cats can now be counted on as a strong dark-horse entry for the upcoming IC4A's, March 4 and 5. Why such a turnabout? It is indeed difficult to account for -- almost as difficult, in fact, as it is to explain why a President of the United States would flunk a literacy test.

HARD TO EXPLAIN

Let us just repeat that it is hard to explain. The loss of long-time stalwarts such as Carroll and Sullivan did of course have its effect at first; but time heals all wounds, and several boys are showing people things that just might make them forget about Noel Carroll.

TIDBITS

Here are some tidbits for the skeptics. At the recent New York A.C. Meet, the 'Cats 2-mile relay squad, composed of Al McCafferty, Ian Hamilton, Craig Nation and anchor man Dave Patrick, blazed the course in 7:32, which is now the fastest time in the nation. The 1-mile relay team, Earl Horner, Harold Nickter, Ken Prince and anchor man Bill Hiedelberger, is also making time; 3:19.8 is their best to date, and don't bet that it won't fall even more.

Trip to IC4A's Saturday, March 5.

Irv Hall, a tremendous frosh prospect, flew over the 60-yard hurdles in the college division of the U.S.T.F.F. Meet in 7.4 seconds, literally walking away from the rest of the field. In the New York A.C. Meet, Hall outdid himself, coming home in 7.3 this time, but only to be nipped at the tape by the great Richmond Flowers of Tennessee -- high-class campany, indeed.

Expect to hear a lot more about Irv in the future. Another frosh who has been making his presence felt is Tom Donnelly. All Tom did was run the 2 miles in 9:09 at the New York A.C. Meet, second only to another great, O'Reilly of Georgetown.

Freshman Frank Murphy ran the 1000 in 2:12.8, which was good enough for 3rd. Murphy is generally expected to develop to be BETTER than Noel Carroll. Endowed with heaps of natural ability and a lot of confidence, Frank has had enough experience to season his potential. Coming to Villanova from Ireland, Frank needs only to get used to running in the U.S.

Next week, the IC4A's will be getting under way. At the present time, Maryland is the favorite, although Villanova has won the indoor IC's for the last seven years. With just a little bit of luck ....

ROMAN IN THE GLOAMIN'

Now as the end of the first semester draws near, one fact emerges clearly: you are all going to flunk out of school.

There are two things you can do about it. First, you can marry money. (I don't mean you marry the money itself; I mean you marry a person who has money. Weddings between people and currency have not been legal anywhere in the United States since the Smoot-Hawley Act. Personna® Stainless Steel Blades, on the other hand, are legal everywhere and are, indeed, used with great pleasure and satisfaction in all fifty states of the Union and Duluth. I bring up Personna Stainless Steel Blades because this column is sponsored by the makers of Personna Stainless Steel Blades, and they are inclined to get edgy if I omit to mention their product. Some of them get edgy and some get double-edgy because Personna Blades come both in Injector style and Double Edge style.)

But I digress. I was saying you can marry money but, of course, you will not because you are a high-minded, clean-living, pure-hearted, freckle-faced American kid. Therefore, to keep from flunking, you must try the second method: you must learn how to take lecture notes.

According to a recent survey, eleven out of ten American undergraduates do not know the proper way to take lecture notes. To illustrate this appalling statistic, let us suppose you are taking a course in history. Let us further suppose the lecturer is lecturing on the ruling houses of England. You listen intently. You write diligently in your notebook, making a topic outline as you have been taught. Like this:

I. House of Plantagenet.
II. House of Lancaster.
III. House of York.

Then you stop. You put aside your pen. You blink back a tear, for you cannot go on. Oh, yes, you know very well that the next ruling house is the House of Tudor. The trouble is you don't know the Roman numeral that comes after III.

It may, incidentally, be of some comfort to learn that you are not the only people who don't know Roman numerals. The fact is, the Romans never knew them either. Oh, I suppose they could tell you how much V or X were or like that, but when it came to real zingers like LXI or MMC, they just flang away their styluses and went downtown to have a bath or take in a circus or maybe stab Caesar a few times.

You may wonder why Rome stuck with these ridiculous numerals when the Arabs had such a nice, simple system. Well, sir, the fact is that Emperor Vespasian tried like crazy to buy the Arabic numerals from Suleiman The Magnificent, but Suleiman wouldn't do business—not even when Vespasian raised his bid to 100,000 gold piastres, plus he offered to throw in the Colosseum, the Appian Way, and Technicolor.

So Rome stuck with Roman numerals—to its sorrow, as it turned out. One day in the Forum, Cicero and Pliny got to arguing about how much is CDL times MVIX. Well, sir, pretty soon everyone in town came around to join the hassle. In all the excitement, nobody remembered to lock the north gate and—wham! before you could say ars longa—in rushed the Goths, the Visigoths, and the Green Bay Packers!

Well, sir, that's the way the empire crumbles, and I digress. Let's get back to lecture notes. Let's also say a word about Burma Shave®. Why? Because Burma Shave is made by the makers of Personna Blades who, it will be recalled, are the sponsors of this column. They are also the sponsors of the ultimate in shaving luxury. First coat your kisser with Burma Shave, regular or menthol—or, if you are the devil-may-care sort, some of each. Then whisk off your stubble with an incredibly sharp, unbelievably durable Personna Blade, Injector or Double Edge—remembering first to put the blade in a razor. The result: facial felicity, cutaneous cheer, epidermal elysium. Whether you shave every day, every III days, or every VII, you'll always find Personna and Burma Shave a winning combination.

Mermen Hand LaSalle 1st Loss, Lose to Yale and Schollander

by Bob McIntyre

Last Thursday night, before a packed Field House crowd, Villanova's swimmers dealt La Salle College its first loss of the season to erase the big zero in the loss column, which had remained untouched for 11 straight meets. The final score was 57-38.

EARLY LEAD

The Wildcat mermen, under the coaching of Mr. Geisz and his assistant Mr. Lumsden, were really up for this meet and they jumped off to an early lead and never let up while the Explorers tried to fight back, only to fail by almost twenty points. Thus La Salle ended their season on an unpleasant note at 11 wins and one loss.

The opening event, the 400 yard Medley relay, was won by Villanova quite easily, perhaps because La Salle had no entry to submit. The Cats, consisting of Bill Livingood, Ken Herr, Chip Friday, and Joe Parell, swam a very slow time of 4:32.3, saving themselves for later events.

A tired Mike Fitzmaurice, won the 200 yard freestyle in 1:50.3, with Rich Lamb finishing a close second. The 50 yard freestyle event saw a new pool record set as Jon Walheim beat Joe Parell in the quick time of 21.8.

Villanova star Mike Fitzmaurice chats with Olympic star Don Schollander after Saturday's dual meet. Yale won 58-37.

Bob Biese had another good day on the diving board as he and Borhmann took first and second respectively. Bill "Wildman" Livingood won his specialty the 200 yard backstroke against Bill McElwee in another feature race of the evening.

FITZMAURICE BEATEN

In the 100 yard freestyle one of the major upsets of the year happened as Jon Walheim, a really good swimmer for the Explorers, knocked off previously unbeaten Mike Fitzmaurice, when he swam a 47.7 giving him his second pool record of the night, the old record being 47.8 set by Rick Girdler in 1965.

In the final event the 400 yard freestyle, Villanova won handily in 3:20.4 with a team composed of Fitzmaurice, Parell, Musico, and Captain Donnelly. Even though La Salle won 6 of 11 events Villanova took 8 second places in 9 individual events and showed how depth could be the death sign against a team such as La Salle.

YALE

On Saturday, the Elis of Yale, invaded the Villanova campus, led by their Olympic champion, Don Schollander. They proceeded to bring their record to 10-1 and even the Cats at 6-6 as Schollander and company won out 58-37.

Schollander anchored the Elis in the 400 yard medley relay as they won in 3:39.2, a pool record. A pool mark of 3:16.5 also was set by Yale in the 400 freestyle relay as Schollander swam the third leg.

However, in both races Villanova's Mike Fitzmaurice was clocked in faster time than the Olympian. In the medley event Fitzmaurice completed his leg in 0:47.0 compared to Schollander's 0:48.2. In the freestyle race, Fitzmaurice did 0:46.9 as against 0:47.2 for Schollander.

Fitzmaurice won the 100 yard freestyle race from teammate Joe Parell in the pool record time of 0:47.3. Bob Beise gave Villanova its other victory in diving.

Wildcat Nine in Practice

by Jerry Bruderle

Amid the football players working out in the Field House and the basketball team scrimmaging every day, the Villanova baseball has been trying to loosen up for the fast-approaching 1966 season. Bad weather has forced all practices indoors so far, but since the opening game is only three weeks away (March 26 vs Penn at home) Coach Art Mahan will have to move his squad outside for serious practice soon.

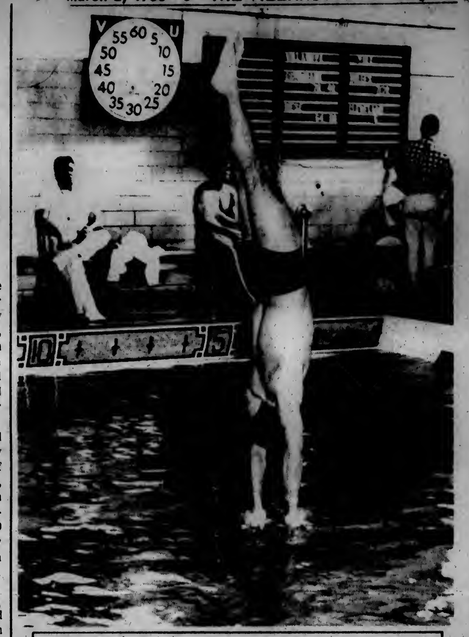
Outfielder Jack Emery, who hit .346 last year, second-baseman Artie Mahan, catcher Andy Camelio, and Vic Majewski (5-3) all graduated from last year's team, and the 'Cats lack the depth they had last year when, as Mahan put it, "we had a lot of good ballplayers hanging around."

The 'Cats just missed making the N.C.A.A. tournament closing with 12 straight victories for a 15-5 finishing mark. Junior lefty Jack Grasing will head the pitching staff after posting a fine 6-2 mark as a sophomore. Grasing's 78 strikeouts in 75-2/3 innings and 2.14 earned run average had a number of big league scouts watching him. He struck out 14 for his season's high against Fordham, and fanned 13 apiece against Temple and Princeton. His only two losses were a 3-2 decision to Army and a 2-1 loss to Seton Hall

Grasing will not be able to pitch every day however, so Mahan must find two other starters to fill out the rotation. Junior righthander Gene Rampone (4-0 last year) will be one starter but the other spot is open for now. Sore-armed senior Tom Edwards has played in the outfield for two years but Mahan says, "If his arm is healthy he'll pitch." If not he will stay in the outfield where he is a good hitter and a solid defender. Lefty Jim Johnston and Ed Parello are also contending for the third starting job.

Junior Sam Greenwood is a fixture in centerfield after hitting .361 and driving in 45 runs last year to lead the team in both departments. Jake Theisen (.214) also returns in the outfield, along with Pete Lagos and Bill Bergold (.288). Mahan says that both Bergold and Lagos "can hit and they can both play first base, but I'd like to get both of them in the lineup." As a result, one or the other will have to move to the outfield and the other will stay on first.

The second base job is wide open and it could be the key to holding the infield together. John Stevens, Paul Pecararo and Tom Rogers all returned but none played much last season. Quarterback Billy Andrejko, who was an infielder at St. Francis Prep, is also going to try out for the first time.



Shortstop is in good hands with Dion Von der Leith returning. Von der Leith hit .264 and drove in 33 runs, and he covers a lot of ground in the field. Sophomore Steve Krines will play third although he can also fill in behind the plate and in the outfield.

Catcher is another spot that is open although Mahan hopes George Pond can do the job Camelio did last year. Pond has been kept out of action by first a knee injury, and then a sore elbow, but he is the best prospect if he is healthy. Mike Yantiss is also available along with Krines.

The schedule this year is tough as usual and it is a little shorter due to the new semester schedule and the season ends about two weeks sooner than last year. This means that more depends on the weather, not only for practices but in order to get the games in.

Penn State and Lafayette will once again be the toughest in the east. Lafayette finished high in the N.C.A.A. tournament last year although the 'Cats beat them 3-2 late in the season. Temple, La Salle and St. Joseph's (who tied with Villanova last year as Big Five champs) will again all be tough in the City Series competition.

But as Mahan said, "If we can settle our second base problem and find a third starter, we'll be all right." He forgot to mention about the weather as another problem. It may not let Villanova have time for any outdoor practice but it could make us the best indoor team in the country.

Save some leading questions for Xerox

(They can lead to some pleasant surprises.)

Especially in R&D.

When our representative visits your campus, take advantage of an interview session to probe beneath the surface of a company that means many things to many people. Because it never stops coming up with new surprises.

Don't be too surprised when he gives you a complete run-down of our research and development groups... and you suddenly realize that our well-known office copiers share the "internal" spotlight with more than a score of other seemingly unrelated studies, devices, products and systems.

Ask him what we mean when we say that the real business of Xerox is graphic communications. Draw him out on how we came to start a revolution in office copying, and transformed this success into an interdisciplinary assault on the global information explosion.

Let him explain LDX (Long Distance Xerography)—what it is today, and what it implies in the context of tomorrow's integrated computer/communication networks. Learn the roles of chemistry, physical optics, mathematical analysis and systems engineering for new products still as much as a decade away from the light of day.

Then, if you're intrigued enough (and there's time enough), let him ask a few leading questions of his own.

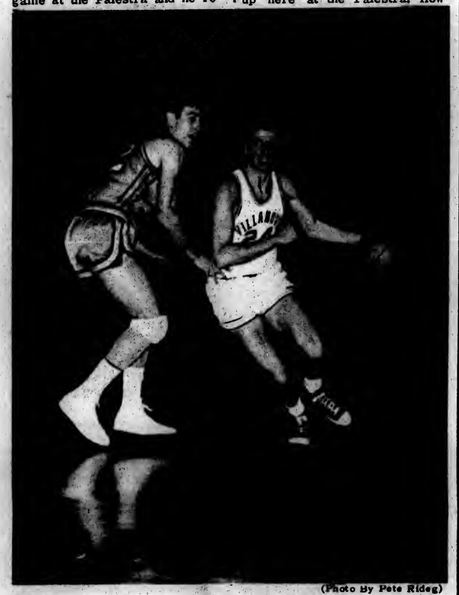
KRAFT WINS 100TH

Melchionni's 39 Paces 84-78 Win

by John DiGennaro

Last Saturday night, before 8310 fans at the Palestra, Villanova scored its eighth triumph in its last nine outings by nipping a surprisingly tough Memphis State club 84-78. The victory was Coach Kraft's 100th since he came to the Main Line five years ago. It also assured the team of a winning record for the year, and further enhanced their chances for an NIT bid.

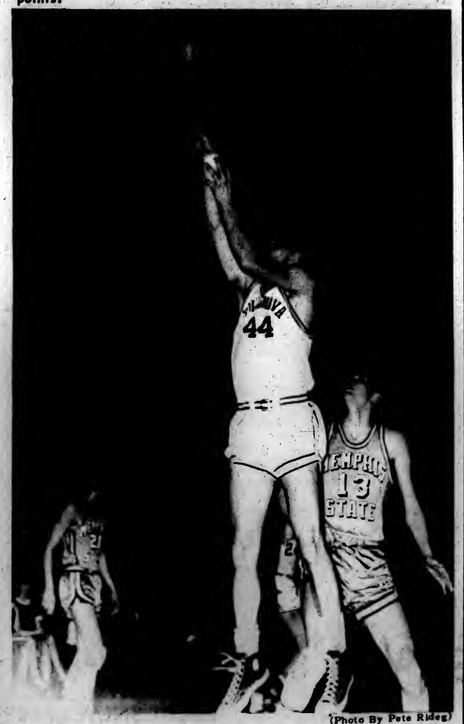
It was Billy Melchionni's last game at the Palestra and he responded with a brilliant 39 point performance, hitting 14-23 from the floor and 9-10 from the charity line. Joe Crews added 16 points and 6 rebounds and Frank Gaidjunas chipped in with 13 points and a Wildcat high of 9 rebounds.



The two teams met earlier in the year down in Memphis and the 'Cats squeaked out a 70-69 win in what was not one of their better efforts. Consequently, they were expected to crush the Tigers up here at the Palestra. However, MSU had different ideas, and played a real tough ball game, leading for a good part of it, and displaying a well coordinated offense that picked a number of holes in the Wildcat zone.

Memphis State jumped out to a quick lead as Villanova had trouble finding the basket. With about seven minutes gone the 'Cats had only accumulated 8 points and called a time out. They came back with a brief surge and took the lead for the first time at 17-16 on a Joe Crews' jumper. Memphis State came back strong and opened the lead to five at 33-28, but Melchionni hit four straight points and the 'Cats were finally able to tie at 37 all on a Kevin Traynor jumper a second before the buzzer.

Melchionni had 15 in the first half, but really went to work in the final 20 minutes. He hit 8-10 from the field, added 9 more on free throws, and gave Villanova the lead for good with 3:40 left in the game when he hit two straight baskets. However, the Wildcats needed all of his heroics to offset good games from MSU's B.G. Petty and Charlie Neal.



Before he fouled out with a little over seven minutes remaining to be played Petty had netted 16 points, 11 in the first half, and it was his shooting in the first half that kept the 'Cats at bay. Neal, a husky 6'7" center, kept piercing the Wildcat zone, constantly breaking free in the left lane underneath, and cashing in with a number of easy layups. He wound up with 26 points, second only to Melchionni, while shooting a scorching 84.6 percent from the floor.

After Melchionni's go ahead baskets, Joe Crews hit on two consecutive one-and-ones boosting the lead to five and virtually sewing it up. Pete Coleman turned in another good floor game feeding off for five baskets and adding 9 points himself.

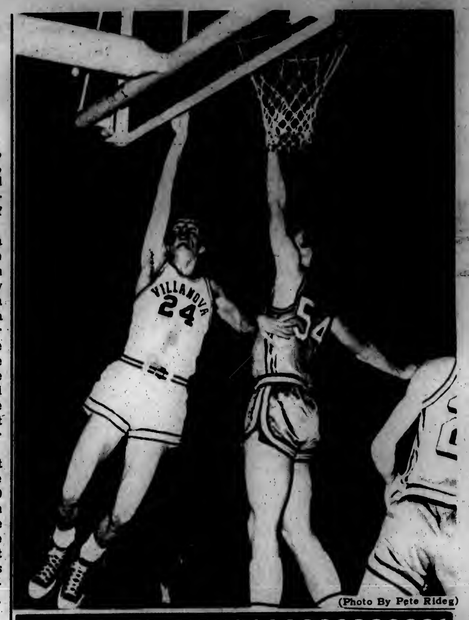
Rugby Club Meets; Schedule Announced

by Don Campbell

The Villanova Rugby Club is anticipating its best spring season ever in light of the A teams' 8-2 fall mark. At the first organizational meeting of the spring, Captain Haller LaRue greeted 56 candidates for the 45 positions open on the A, B and C teams.



Secretary Mike Cain announced a nine-game schedule with seven being played at home. Besides hosting traditional rivals Princeton and Philadelphia's First Troop, it was announced that Duke and the Bermuda Nationals will also play before the Villanova crowds.

Treasurer Tom Priory reported on the details of the clubs receiving only a very small amount of money from the Administration. It seems that the well-established and nationally recognized Rugby Club was the victim of "Administration Apathy."

Coach Francis "Doc" Coughlan discussed the plans and hopes for Villanova's first unbeaten season. Two members of the fall's "first fifteen" graduated in January and stars Jim McCusker and Rich Ward must be replaced.

The club held its first party Saturday night to introduce the new candidates. Following the precedence of other clubs, the team this year announces that social memberships will now be opened to members of the student body.

The team begins practicing this week, Monday through Friday. All new members will be welcome.

Maff's Musings

By Joe Maffongelli

Is the NIT the only possible period at the end of a good sentence? Does the success or failure of a season depend only on whether or not a team gets a post season bid, be it for a tournament or a bowl? This is certainly not the case. If the Wildcats are not "lucky" enough to participate in the NIT this season the effort can still be considered successful regardless. There are a number of other criteria which can be applied in order to judge the success or failure of the year.

As we mentioned once before in this column, Coach Kraft has built a solid ball club this season from practically nothing. He took what material he had and combined all the available talent into the best possible system. Now this system has been more than adequate. The Holiday Festival was ample proof of this. Although the 'Cats fell to a heavily favored Army club in the first round, they did overcome a pair of prominent squads in the succeeding consolation rounds. One of these teams - Colorado State - is now the possessor of an NCAA berth. Georgetown, the other victim of the "Claw", has also enjoyed a rather good year. Many critics have gone so far as to call this the best Hoya squad in history.

But, although this tournament was the turning point, there have been many other tremendous moments since then. The 'Cats fell to the second and third best teams in the east - St. Joe's and St. John's - by small margins in hard fought contests. Both games were decided in the fading moments on what can best be described as "lucky" shots. Although there is no substitute for victory, there should be enough idealism among the members of a team, and a student body, to turn losses such as this into cherished moments.

Aside from these experiences however, there have also been some victories over real good competition. Duquesne, Saint Bonaventure's, Niagara, etc. These are clubs with long traditions of winning basketball. All these things should do nothing less than make Villanovans proud of their cagers and coach.

WHAT ABOUT DIGNITY

The Ivy League has finally decided to lend their consent to the NCAA policy that all participating tourney players must have maintained at least a 1.6 cumulative average. Was their initial hesitation a show of dignity or a lack of cooperation? Surely any body which really maintains dignity would cooperate with any betterment which does not undermine their own standards. The NCAA set a uniform minimum. The member schools have their own prerogative as to further restricting participation.

Jeff Radowich, SGA representative, explains the presidential succession motion as a few student government members indulge themselves in hearty laughter.

Student Government Meeting Hosts Political Battles

John Graziano has resigned as Vice-President of the Student Government Association. His decision was prompted by what he called "the chair's continued use of parliamentary procedure to promote massive political agitation."

Steve Freind, SGA President, accepted the resignation almost immediately after it was offered at the SGA meeting Wednesday night, despite the protests of several members of the Congress that Graziano reconsider. Freind, nevertheless, let it be known that he would probably re-instate Graziano if he asked for the position back. The VILLANOVAN has learned however that George Valva will probably be appointed to the post if Graziano refuses to reconsider.

The resignation came amidst a fast-paced battle between Jim Griffin, Senior Class President and Pete Tyrell, Senior Alumni Representative over handling of relations between the Alumni and the class. During this flurry of parliamentary procedure Griffin asked for Tyrell's resignation which was not tendered. Tyrell in refusing attempted to refute charges made by Griffin that he (Tyrell) had "misrepresented the views of the Alumni Association to the class officers.

Financial Editor Livingston Addresses Political Union

A Pulitzer-prize winning journalist will be the guest speaker Monday evening (March 21) when the Villanova Political Union debates the question of budget cuts in non-defense spending.

The Union's guest will be J.A. Livingston, financial editor of the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin, and winner of a 1965 Pulitzer Prize for international reporting. The meeting, open to the public, will be held in Dougherty Hall on the University campus at 7:30.

The resolution which the Union's Conservatives, Moderates and Liberals will debate is: Resolved, this house supports substantial cuts in the federal budget in the area of non-defense spending. The debate will focus on a question which has come increasingly into public discussion: Can Americans have guns and butter as the Vietnam war increases in intensity?

Mr. Livingston received the Pulitzer Prize for a series of articles he did on the subject of the growth of economic independence in the Soviet Bloc satellite countries and their desire for trade with the West. It was based on a ten week trip behind the Iron Curtain which he took in 1964.

The series was described by Walter Heller, former chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers as "politico-economic journalism at its best."

Laird of Wisconsin; Dr. Edgar F. Shannon, President of the University of Virginia.

Nominees Announced As SGA Gives Test for Candidates

The Student Government Association has announced that the final offering of its test for prospective officers will be given tonight at 6:30 p.m. in 215 Tolentine. All candidates for offices which provide a seat on the SGA must pass this test. A similar exam was given on Monday night.

A score of 70 per cent will be considered the lowest possible passing grade. The test is objective in nature and will be taken from the SGA Constitution and By Laws and Roberts Rule of Orders Revised.

The SGA has also announced that it will sponsor debates between the Presidential candidates. These will be held on Monday and Tuesday, March 21 and 22, with times and places to be announced. These debates are not compulsory, but they will be extensively publicized. The Elections Committee recommends that each presidential candidate take advantage of this opportunity to announce and defend their platforms.

The West Lounge of Dougherty Hall will be used as an Election center on election day, March 24. Running totals will be available on each candidate from the Alumni gym and Bartley cafeteria polling places from approximately 1:30 p.m.

The following students have been nominated to the offices of their respective classes:

Parents Program Fat City

Dr. William A. Tomasco, Chairman, has reported that over 900 parents have already contributed to the Library Program this year. The total amount contributed thus far is $54,282.00, and with two months still to go it is possible that the goal of $60,000 will be exceeded.

A record number of 917 contributors was set during the 1964-65 campaign.

All funds from parents, unless otherwise earmarked, are being used to furnish and equip the University's Library. The Parents Committee felt that since the Library is a tool that all students need, it would be appropriate to concentrate their interests there.

This program has done much to aid the University during the past couple of years and is appreciated by all here at Villanova. The Villanovan takes this opportunity to congratulate all those parents who have demonstrated their support - and helped bring national honors to Villanova University through the Parents Program.

Senior Frank Eck Elected Catholic Youth of the Year

by Bill McCloskey

Frank Eck has been elected the Catholic Youth of the Year at Villanova by his peers in the Student Government Association.

He was elected by "a good majority," according to Steve Freind who announced the results. There were eleven seniors nominated for the award. In recognition of the award Eck will be presented with "an appropriate plaque."

In addition to his service with the Student Government Association as president during Steve Freind's period of ineligibility, Eck is a member of the Blue Key Society and was named to Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities.

He served as President of his class in his Junior year and is currently in the executive committee of Delta Pi Epsilon Fraternity. He was recently named to the post of National Sales Coordinator for WWVU Radio in which position he also represents member stations of the Inter-collegiate Broadcasting System to national advertisers.

He is a past member of the Gamma Phi honor society and served as Chairman of the Sophomore Orphan's Outing.

The Catholic Youth of the Year is elected annually at Villanova by the SGA. He is typified as an outstanding Catholic gentleman.

Eck was surprised by the results of the polling, but nonetheless pleased. "I'm very proud of that award," he told the VILLANOVAN after the meeting.

Donald N. Serafano Elected As President of Blue Key

Donald N. Serafano was elected President of the Blue Key Society of Villanova University for 1966-7 at the organization's March 1st meeting.

Serafano, a junior Biology major with a 3.27 cumulative average, defeated engineer John Zoubek. In accordance with Blue Key tradition, the vote totals were not announced.

Running on a platform of expansion of Blue Key activities, dynamic leadership and personal responsibility, Don continues in the Presidential theme of enlarging the influence of the Blue Key on campus.

Technically an Executive Standing Committee of the SGA, the Blue Key is more property construed as an honor-service organization, which functions predominantly in a public relations role as an adjunct to the Admissions Office and the Office of Development.

In his sophomore year, Serafano was Vice-President of the Class of 1967, Chairman of the Steering Committee and General Chairman of the Sophomore Cotillion.

This past year he was Co-Chairman of the Orphans' Party during Charity Weekend, a member of the Junior Class Central Council and is presently working as Co-Chairman of the Junior Week concert.

The SGA representative from Lambda Kappa Delta fraternity, Don was a member this year of both the very important Student-Faculty and Academic Affairs committees.

A Rugby stalwart, this future surgeon was the past secretary of the Blue Key, the Co-Chairman of Refreshments (Candidates' Day) and the Co-Chairman of Communications (Parents' Weekend).

NEWLY-ELECTED PRESIDENT

When asked about his future plans here at Villanova, Don thought for a moment and then replied: "I firmly intend to do a good job for the Blue Key as their president, but I think that I can be an effective worker in other areas, also. My record indicates that I was able to do this in the past. I will probably involve myself in both Class and SGA activities."

Dean Gallen Offers Sessions For Senior Engineers

Dean Gallen, head of the College of Engineering, has begun a series of informal discussion sessions for senior engineers. The purpose is to hear the various complaints, praise, and criticisms which may be offered by the students and to become personally acquainted with each student.

Although there is no specified order for students to appear, a steady stream of about seven seniors each meeting is achieved.

In the meeting held last Thursday, the opening topic concerned senior thesis projects. One senior pointed out that occasionally thesis advisers are changed midway through the semester causing a disruption of testing and even basic aims. He requested this be checked into and corrected if possible.

Replacement of certain courses, employment picture for 1966, laboratory work and schedules and transfer credits were some of the topics discussed. No plans were established for curing the problems since the dean stated that in most cases the various department heads would be more likely to offer the best solution.

Before the seniors left, the dean asked each student about his particular plans for the future and next year in particular. Most students stated that they were going to get jobs and mentioned the specific firms. Two reported that they were going on to graduate studies.

Bob DeLauretis and Rick Prendergrast are chairmen for this event which will be free for all juniors.

Thursday, the Juniors will venture to the VFW in Conshohocken for a Smoker which will include championship game films, speeches by sports personalities, awards to Junior athletes, and refreshments. Frank Gaidjunas and Kevin McGuinn are Chairmen.

Friday, April 22, the Field House will reverberate with the unique folk sounds of the Kingston Trio. John Stewart, Nick Reynolds, and Bob Shane strum a variety of ballads -- exciting tales of high adventure, humorous tunes, and tender love songs. Each is delivered with the imagination and spirit that have brought them tremendous acclaim. Don Serafano and Ken Hedges are preparing this concert.

The highlight of the week, the Dinner Dance, will take place Saturday night at the Sheraton Hotel in Philadelphia. Jeff Radowich and John McKeever are making the arrangements for this memorable evening which will include a cocktail hour, dinner, favors, and entertainment. Bob Layne has arranged for the favors and a Queen Contest will be held.

All the ingredients for a great JUNIOR WEEK, 1966 are present. All that is needed now is the support and participation of the whole Class of 1967. Tickets for all events go on sale Monday, March 28.

The FBI offers a starting salary of $9500 per year, plus generous medical expenses and many other fringe benefits.

Also open to all students, the Pre-Law Society is sponsoring a field trip to New York on April 14. The trip will include tours of the New York Superior Courts and the United Nations. Desk Side Computer System Introduced at Villanova

by Dale Pappert

Students have long been aware of the IBM 1620 computer located in Mendel Hall, but this year a new idea in computers has been introduced by two members of the Civil Engineering Department. Mr. Jamis Brown, Jr., instructor of Civil Engineering; and Mr. Robert Lynch, assistant professor, Civil Engineering, are the men responsible for a Desk Side Computer System. This system uses General Electric's GE 235 computer for an hour a day over a one year period.

The GE 235 is not on campus yet, but in Valley Forge Space Technology Center. It is, however, of access to anyone at Villanova. In this Civil Engineering office is located a terminal system, that resembles a teletypewriter. It communicates with the computer in the same fashion one would make a phone call, but in a different language. The language is fed in the computer, and is called Fortran.

The real benefit of the system is having many terminals located at school, all being serviced by the GE 235 computer. This makes the computer accessible for many users. Those who use the IBM 1620 in Mendel are familiar with the long wait to use it; this desk side computer eliminates all this.

The system works as follows. The remote terminal is connected with a Datanet 30 computer at Valley Forge. The Datanet 30 could be analagous to a telephone operator. It connects the user with the GE 235. Presently there are 15 lines to the computer.

The remote terminal is rented from the phone company at $80 per month. Villanova is allowed to store 32 programs in the computer, each containing 200-300 statements each. These programs are in Fortran, with the user having the choice to either use a present one or submit a new one. The computer calculates the time each student uses, then prints it at the end of the program.

Mr. Lynch sees possibilities of this system being used in an educational manner. He feels the computer can make man a better professional. By knowledge of computer systems at graduation, the student stands a far better chance of employment opportunities.

Present figures show Villanova Grads trained in computer techniques already are demanding higher salaries. Computers also supplement present theories being taught. With a terminal in the classroom, the student can make direct application of what is being taught to the presence of the computer. The computer system can also measure the effect that using this tool has on theory.

Both Mr. Brown and Mr. Lynch feel that Villanova's closed circuit TV can be used to instruct from the one terminal presently located here. Looking into the future, an ideal situation would be to have a complete system on campus.

A GE 235 computer would be located at Villanova, with terminals located throughout the university. The Philadelphia Public Schools have presently ordered such a set-up, proving its assets to all students.

Professor 'Par Excellence'

by Walt Baginsky

Dr. Donald Brooks Kelley, one of the History Department's newest acquisitions, came to Villanova in September, 1965 after a summer teaching sojourn at the University of Delaware.

He acquired his undergraduate education from two Jesuit schools: Georgetown University, which he attended for two years, and Wheeling College, Wheeling West Virginia from which he graduated Summa Cum Laude.

Upon receiving a National Defense Education Association fellowship, he entered the University of Mississippi and after two years, received his M.A. at Tulane University, he served as a graduate assistant while in the process of acquiring his doctorate.

The subject of his doctoral thesis was "A Comparison of the 1928 and the 1960 presidential elections for Mississippi." A sub-title of which may be: "A study of the continuity of American ideas." Dr. Kelley acquired his doctorate when he was 26 years old, he is now 28.

Dr. Kelley's major field of interest is in social and intellectual History. His secondary field is Modern Europe, and he has expressed considerable interest in the field of American Literature. Since his primary area is intellectual History, Dr. Kelley has said that his "Teaching career has been a protest against mere memorization of disconnected facts." He believes that historical facts have no value in themselves except as integrated in a broad field of understanding. He feels that in teaching any course of history the general views should be presented first, and the more particular should be integrated within it, not vice versa.

Also, Dr. Kelley, a relative newcomer at Villanova, has some interesting views concerning the University as a whole. He is convinced that "The University has good potential," yet is cognizant of the fact that Villanova is not terribly wealthy and believes that it should not attempt to compete with other more wealthy universities in the post-graduate and doctoral areas.

He has stated that "Villanova should strive to be a first rate Liberal Arts University and a feeder school for the more wealthy universities across the country."

Dr. Kelley feels that because of Villanova's size the obvious advantage of closer contact between professor and student is conducive to a good intellectual climate: one with increased research and maxiumum student participation. Dr. Kelley frowns upon the use of televised classes, calling it "rather impersonal," and believes that Villanova should not increase its student body too extensively, but rather keep the small college atmosphere.

Dr. Kelley is convinced that a student honors system, concerning the taking of examinations, can be instituted at Villanova on a gradual basis. He has stated that "The growing maturity of Villanova's students must be fostered before such a program can become a reality."

CONTRIBUTOR

Dr. Kelley has written five articles, dealing with the deep South's political and intellectual thoughts, which have been published in the JOURNAL OF MISSISSIPPI HISTORY. He also enjoys reading THE JOURNAL OF SOUTHERN HISTORY, THE AMERICAN HISTORICAL REVIEW, and HARPER'S AMERICAN magazine.

In the classroom, Dr. Kelley feels that "The students learn more with an entertaining as well as an informative lecture." He has successfully intermingled both. He is convinced that in intellectual areas, "Students should not be spoon-fed, but should think out problems for themselves and must come, in the end, to their own convictions."

Dr. Kelley is married and has two little boys, Kevin and Colin. He and his family reside at present in Malvern.

Barbara Ward Speaks On World Economics Monday in Field House

Barbara Ward, famed British economist and author, will lecture on "Organizing the World Economy" at the Field House, Monday, March 28th.

Formerly Foreign Affairs Editor of THE ECONOMIST of London, she is regarded as one of the most influential writers in England. Lady Jackson was born in Yorkshire and educated in Paris. She studied in Germany and at Somerville College, Oxford, where she received degrees in Philosophy, politics and economics. Lady Jackson has received honorary degrees from Harvard, Columbia, Smith, Fordham, and many others.

Lady Jackson, author of ten volumes, is best known by her books FIVE IDEAS THAT CHANGE THE WORLD and THE RICH NATIONS AND THE POOR NATIONS. Her speaking ability has been demonstrated on such programs as THE GREAT CHALLENGE and MEET THE PRESS.

Both as a writer and speaker, Barbara Ward is notable for the clarity with which she can make complex issues intelligible to the general public. Described as a "woman who is unfairly talented," Barbara Ward will make her second appearance on the Villanova Forum. Admission is free, and curtain time is 8 p.m.

Dean Reuschlein Presides At Annual Dinner-Dance

Some 310 couples, including the law students, law faculty, and their ladies, gathered at the Falcon House on West Chester Pike last Saturday, March 12, for the Annual Student Bar Dinner-Dance, which was the occasion for the presentation of a number of student awards.

With Dean Reuschlein doing the honors, nine awards were presented. Edward J. O'Malley received the Robert C. Duffy Administrative Law prize, given annually to the student who best demonstrates a grasp of the problems involved in subjecting public administrative action to the rule of law.

Clarence P. Melia and Joseph A. Tate were jointly presented with the Lawyers Title award for achieving the highest grade in the courses in Property Law. Joseph Tate also won the Herman J. Obert award, given annually to the student attaining the highest grade in the course in Corporations.

Thomas Carroll received the Reverend Joseph Ullman award, a prize given each year by Jacob Kossman, Esq., in memory of the late Joseph Ullman to the student attaining the highest grade in Criminal Law.

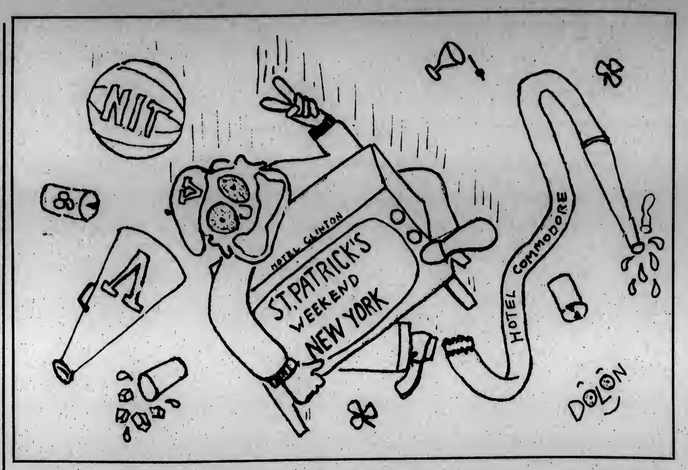
The coveted Vincent A. Carroll award, presented to the student with the highest cumulative average in the second year of law study, in memory of the Very Reverend Joseph M. Dougherty, O.S.A., was won by Miss Dolores B. Sesso. Raymond Lettule was presented with the James Rinaldi award for outstanding contribution in classroom work during his first year, while the Rose B. Rinaldi award went to Joseph Mullin for outstanding contribution in classroom work during the second year.

The Law Alumni award, presented annually to the third year student showing the greatest scholastic improvement during the first two years of law study, was received by Jay MacNeill.

Dean Seminars Needed

Last month a program was initiated in the College of Engineering by which all seniors are given the opportunity to meet with the dean on an informal basis to discuss their problems and to offer any suggestions. This is accomplished by groups of seven to ten students at a time and it is hoped that in the course of a full scholastic year every senior will be able to talk to the dean. As far as the dean is concerned, he will gain benefits in two ways: he will have a first-hand knowledge of each student's troubles and he will meet each student personally to learn his interest and plans for the future.

The meetings are informal--akin to "bull sessions"--where close contact is maintained among the participants. Since success even at this early stage appears evident, it seems reasonable to expand the program to include the Nursing, Arts and Science, and Commerce and Finance colleges. Admittedly, the meetings could become burdensome when a large number of students participate, but the benefits to the number of students who could attend and to the administration would be enormous. The deans will become aware of the students' problems and possibly incorporate their ideas into upcoming ventures. Another benefit is that of cutting through the walls of impersonalism that may develop in a university of Villanova's size.



The VILLANOVAN urges the class representatives of each college to call upon their respective deans and to suggest that this program be considered immediately and to offer aid in its establishment.

'No Policy' Hurts

Speech 214 - Principles of Radio and Television Broadcasting - has planned a field trip to New York City. While there the class is scheduled to tour the facilities of three networks and to be addressed by the President of the American Broadcasting Company Radio Network, the President of the American Broadcasting Television Network and the President of the Mutual Broadcasting Network.

The University administration has refused to pay for a bus to transport the students to New York because there is no set policy governing field trips. It appears inconsistent that the University has specific policies regarding other educational purposes and extracurricular activities, but none for field trips. This University allocates funds for many activities and there should be a priority for educational use.

On Second Thought

The SGA

by Gene FitzMaurice

The clarion call throughout the country is "Vote for the party of your choice, but vote." In the Soviet Union, the motto is "Vote the state party, and the life you save may be your own." With the SGA elections coming up soon, and at the risk of sounding anarchistic, the best advice that any of you could take would be to not bother with the elections. As you progress down the Yellow Brick Road to the SGA meeting land, if you do, then bear in mind that this advice, like all free counsel and the SGA is worth just what you pay for it.

If you are an underclassmen and do not know many of the candidates, your most likely move will be to vote for the fellow next to you in Math. 116. Do not heed the voice that tells you that he is a cipher, bear in mind only that his opponent is in another division and less likely to appoint you an O.C.

As you progress in age, wisdom, and political maturity you will find that the work-horses of your earliest days now seek to be justly rewarded. Since that is forbidden by both civil and moral law, it is best to simply elect them to two year seats on the council, where, with their fellow solons, it is not the student body that they will lose touch with, it is reality.

You should be careful in your choice of upper class officers, for in them rests the final choice of chairmen for your two major social functions, rare islands in a sea of beer. (It must be admitted that the Chairmen for the Class of 1966 have been truly outstanding.)

If you are in a club, aren't we all, then you will be asked to choose someone who will represent you in the Congress. Choose carefully. It is not your club he represents, but the future of the SGA. Rather than have someone chip away at this tower of integrity, he will be asked to carefully scrutinize the credentials of those who aspire to be SGA head. See to it that your representative in this most solemn of all electoral colleges is well equipped for the awesome task that confronts him.

The leader that he selects will be called upon to furnish leadership and initiative; to create new and exciting bills; to appoint a minister of propaganda to explain why the bills were never implemented. (The VILLANOVAN had planned to run an entire page with a list of implemented motions, but later discovered the prohibitive cost of blank sheet printing.)

The leader of the SGA should be all of the things that one expects a leader to be: tactful but aggressive; cautious but determinded; respectful of the beliefs and feelings of others, but still firm in the philosophy. In short he should combine the best qualities of the legendary Jubilation T. Cornpone, who looked good while promising to look into things and Hoff A. Brute, who littered the Faculty Dining Room with the good intentions of the Congress in order to satisfy the whims of ambition. (Both of these served the old Student Council in the exciting days of yesteryear and bear no resmeblance to any member of the current Congress.)

Finally, it should not be assumed that I mean to be critical of the two hard driving, forthright, yet reservedly complacent leading contenders for the SGA lightweight crown. Ward Williams exciting new proposal that the University Shop be required to stock Cordovans shows that he is not only unaffraid of a tough fight, but that he is also willing to make his position on controversial issues known before the elections actually take place.

Brenden Brett's equally startling suggestion that all members of the Congress be required to go on record as either supporting or opposing the current wording of cafeteria menus shows him to be a man of firm resolve.

You are to be commended on the excellence of your Congress. You have created it, and you are required to live with it. As you add and delete, do so with care, if you bother to do so at all.

Letters to the Editor

To the Editor:

A thoughtful reading of your editorial in the VILLANOVAN last issue sent me rushing to my notes. After a thoughtful re-evaluation of my position, in all fairness to myself -- and who is not fair to himself? -- I don't believe I'm as muddleheaded and backwater as the VILLANOVAN would have its readers believe. Let me state my case this way.

Villanova students are on the whole a peaceful, law-abiding crowd who are serious in their education. They work hard to keep up their cumulative averages and they comport themselves well. Villanovans do credit generally to Catholic education. Another quality you find Villanova students have is that they mind their own business.

Perhaps there is virtue in the latter, perhaps there is not. I would not have brought up the question were it not for the fact that the student leaders have seriously petitioned to participate in the administration of student discipline. The SGA wishes to lead the student body into an era of student responsibility and self-regulation the like of which Villanova has never known. Here is a praiseworthy ambition. My simple question to the SGA leadership is this: hadn't you better look over your shoulder now and then to see if your student body is still following you? Are you sure they want you to punish them? You cannot administer good discipline if the climate of the place is working against you. Your student court will not work unless the judges and the judged both agree that good discipline is everybody's business and everybody's responsibility.

The VILLANOVAN says it wants the right to try now. You know it will work. Well, your student court pushed through hurriedly now might work for a while on a few petty cases. I might cause a flurry of enthusiasm like any other novelty, but a student court rushed on to the stage and forced to perform simply because the crowd is clamoring for something new would be a heart-ache for those whose eyesight is clear. Some see beyond the excited present to the time when a thorough-going student-oriented court could perform a solid function at Villanova and win the respect of those who took the time to study it.

A court rushed hastily into service will die. It has to. The issues it must face are too serious for hastiness. Be sure of this, once a student court gets its chance to show what it can do here at Villanova and it fails, the whole idea of a student court will always wear a heaviness and suspicion that will render it defenseless to its enemies.

As I did before the SGA Congress, I now respectfully submit to the VILLANOVAN the following three suggestions:

1. Seriously explore with your readers in your newspaper the real value of the code of "never inform" and put its reputed nobility to the test. In the same way explore the possibilities of the code of honor.
2. If student-oriented administration of discipline is ever to become a reality at Villanova, it most likely will begin in the resident halls. In your columns encourage resident students to explore the possibilities of a dormitory system of self-discipline in which the students themselves correct troublemakers, not because of any external pressures brought to bear, but because the residents themselves are convinced they are serving their own best interests.
3. The SGA has authorized an official study committee to examine all aspects of a student court at Villanova. Evaluate this committee. Let us watch its progress with a growing interest. It is something considerable, a good start, a noble achievement. Long may it live to produce results a hundred to one.

To the Editor:

In the two previous issues of the Villanovan there were editorials about the Theology Courses and the Theology Department. Although I respect some of the ideas which were expressed I think I should make a few clarifications in regard to both the Courses and the members of our Department.

Perhaps the biggest reason for this letger is to clarify a few of the ideas in the second editorial (March 2). I think this reflected the writer's (and at least some of the students) opinions and personal experiences and, although he has made several good points, I would like to point out a few facts to give more balance to the picture.

In regard to the quality of background for the priest-teachers, I would note that three of the non-Augustinian priests have Doctorates in Theology along with Masters degrees in related fields. The fourth non-Augustinian priest is currently preparing his thesis and hopes to receive his Doctorate this Summer.

In regard to the Augustinian priests, several of us have received an M.A. in Religious Education from our Seminary in Washington. Although the Seminary Courses may lack something (and are currently being revised) it is interesting to note that a Masters Degree in Theology from Villanova (or any University) requires some 30-credit hours of Courses, while we received at least 120 credit-hours of Courses in our four full years in Theology.

In the field of Scripture, for example, a student with a Master's degree in Theology with a Major in Scripture will take four 3-credit Courses, while our Seminary presents Scripture during eight Semesters for five hours each week. As your writer pointed out, Academic credentials are not the only credentials for a successful Course presentation, but I do feel that we do have a background which qualifies us to teach Theology on the undergraduate level at least.

I do think more of our Augustinian priests should continue to pursue their Degree or at least attend Courses at other Universities in order to continually update their presentations, and we hope to be able to do more of this in the near future.

In regard to the matter of grades, I think most teachers would like to eliminate grades altogether, or at least adopt the Pass-or-Fail system, but this would apply to every Course and not just Theology. In our real world, however, no grades- no tests- no study- no work- no attendance- no knowledge- no Course- no Schools-...?

In a system which preaches that grades are not the main thing but which acts as if Grades really are the main thing. (e.g. 1.999 means no graduation, 3.5 means a very intelligent student) what can a teacher and/or student do about it? We of the Theology Department need some improvement in this area of grading, but I see no reason why our Courses should be treated any differently than the other Courses in your Curriculum.

I do think that more of our Theology Teachers are beginning to grade their students according to the scale proposed by the University, but many of the students seem to resent this. I don't think the students resent the Religion as much as they resent the teachers who try to take this part of their job seriously.

In conclusion, I would like to thank you and the Staff for some worthwhile observations. I feel very strongly about listening to student opinion in our evaluation of our presentations, but I also feel that some good points have been overlooked in your expression of opinions. Since we are in the progress of re-evaluating our Courses and Curriculum, I would like to take this opportunity to invite interested students and faculty to contact me or any member of the Theology Department about any constructive criticism they may have about the Courses or the Department.

To the Editor:

As the head of one of the largest organizations on campus, the Knights of Columbus, I would like to register a complaint which I am sure affects a majority at our school.

In the beginning of the Fall Semester, the heads of all organizations were informed that the public address system in Dougherty Hall had been completely revamped and was going to function most "efficiently."

I'm sure that we are all aware that we have not heard any announcements in a long time. I propose that the proper authorities forget their "Roberts' Rules of Order," their motions off the floor and GET SOME USEFUL WORK DONE!!

If the public address system cannot be run properly, I would like to request that all organizations receive permission to use the public address system themselves.

To the Editor:

I would like to clarify the events which took place at the last meeting of the Student Government Association concerning the proposed Student Court. Contrary to the report in the VILLANOVAN, the SGA UNANIMOUSLY voted for the installation of a Student Court. Father Gill did not speak to the Congress concerning the Court until AFTER the Congress voted for it.

Only then did the Dean of Men address the Congress. In his speech, Father Gill made it clear that he WAS in favor of the Court. He only wished to point out the huge problems involved in initiating such a project and the dedication needed on the part of the Student Body if a Student Court was to be successful.

The SGA did NOT withdraw the motion requesting a Student Court. The motion that was withdrawn concerned putting the Court into effect immediately, dealing only with the judicial powers of the Student Senate. The Senate has jurisdiction only over SGA matters. Father Gill suggested that this motion be withdrawn for the very good reason that when a Student Court goes into effect, it will have quite enough work dealing with student discipline matters and thus should not bog itself down in SGA matters. This was the reason that that particular motion was withdrawn.

I have never been accused of making concessions to the Administration. (To say the absolute least.) However I do wish to make it known that Father Gill has been invaluable to the SGA with regards to the Court project. Father has not only been completely cooperative, but has, in fact, been a driving force in striving for a Court. He definitely is in favor of the concept of a Student Court at Villanova. Towards the achievement of that goal, he has suggested that a committee be set up to work with him on the intricacies involved in beginning such a project.

This has been done and tangible results will be forthcoming. I hope it will become obvious to the Student Body that both the Student Government Association and Father Gill are quite sincere about the installation of a Student Court at Villanova.

Student Body President

To the Editor:

I hope you will print this letter to make public a state of affairs which is not only generally known but a stale joke around the Villanova campus: I am referring to the virtual isolation of the School of Commerce and Finance from the rest of the university. C&F students have almost all their classes in Bartley Hall, which is at the far eastern end of the campus; they usually eat lunch in the same building, and then leave at the end of the day because most of them are "day-hops."

This physical isolation would not be so bad if it were not accompanied by social and intellectual isolation. Among the rest of the undergraduates there is a genuine disdain for the C&F student and his course of studies as well. In general, Commerce and Finance students return the contempt and keep to themselves in their ghetto to the East.

I don't think the situation should be allowed to continue unfought. Are C&F students really "second-class," and thus to be considered incapable of adding much to the campus life from which they are excluded? Isn't participation in that life an important part of a college education, and thus something lacking in theirs? Finally, isn't factionalism and ill-feeling disgusting in itself?

I think people should talk about this problem and try to get something done about it. A good first step would be simply to give C&F students classes all over campus, and make Bartley Hall "just another building." Then at least the so-called "Comics and Follies" students would go into the Pie Shoppe more often, and (barring fistfights) perhaps a "dialogue" might be developed between the "separated brethren" of Villanova.

LIVE IT UP, LEANDER...

. . . you're only young once!

Come to think of it, that's the whole problem! If you were young more than once in a lifetime, that time of life when you will no longer be young wouldn't be a problem now, would it?

We can't help you find eternal youth. We can help you find the best way to make the most of the "young-only-once" time of your life . . . with life insurance.

Life insurance is one investment you can make today that's guaranteed to take the strife out of life years from now. That might be worth more, from the very beginning, than you put into it. That could be worth as much, at any time, as you planned to put into it in a lifetime. And the sooner you start, the less it costs.

You're only young once, Leander. Make the most of it. Then you may live it up . . . with our blessings.

The Barstool Philosopher

A column written for the soul satisfaction of its author . . . others be warned.

By Ron Javers

They tell us that philosophy arises in wonder. If this is true, then poetry must have its seeds in curiosity. It takes a precise and penetrating curiosity to compose 85 lines on a waterlilly. What makes a man curious about a daffodil, you ask? Or a blade of grass?

A grown man must be quite silly indeed to spend a few precious hours contemplating a lilac. After all, flowers are for florists and corpses, and to wear in little girl's hair. A man should concern himself with making a living.

Recently, Mr. James Bostain, a Yale graduate, and representative of the U. S. State Dept. Foreign Services Institute, said in a speech here at Villanova: "We are an underdeveloped nation ... barbarians with gadgets ... You almost never see an American sitting down talking to a tree."

We've spent many years collecting the following. We suspect everyone has a favorite quotation or other. The principal trouble is that one never gets an opportunity to use it, and here are a few of ours:

"We and worlds are less alive than dolls & dreams."

"And nothing, not God, is greater to one than oneself is."
-Whitman

What does it mean, this barren age of ours?

Here are the men, the women and the flowers.

The seasons and the sunset as before. What does it mean?

Shall not one bard arise to wrench one banner from the Western skies

And mark it with his name forevermore?

(Incidentally, these quotes can be easily expounded on to make excellent theme topics - or newspaper articles.)

Anna Moffo and Singing City Presented by V.U. Arts Forum

by John Ruggeri

On Saturday, March 12, 1966, The Villanova Arts Forum presented Anna Moffo and the Singing City Choir to a large and enthusiastic audience in Villanova's Field House.

The choir, ably directed by Elaine Brown, presented a varied program whose selections ranged from the precise art of Vivaldi and Bach to the spirited sounds of Greek folk music and Negro spirituals. Throughout the demanding repertoire, they demonstrated skill and emotional conviction. The piano accompaniment of Mr. Robert Plimpton, especially in the Vivaldi selection, offered further evidence that this talented and well trained group is an example of chorale art at its best.

Miss Moffo, possessing a face as beautiful as her voice, was the star of the evening. Her voice is one of the loveliest and most flexible in the world. When she sang the aria from "The Barber of Seville," Miss Moffo demonstrated the remarkable clearness of tone and agility in the ornate passages which have made her an international star.

She was least impressive in the "Libera me" from Verdi's REQUIEM, for her voice lacks the power and depth necessary to elicit the dramatic intensity of the music. In everything she sang, however, Miss Moffo showed a keen musical intelligence and a positive emotional involvement so that she seemed to assume a different personality which complemented each musical selection.

Miss Moffo responded to the ovation of the audience by singing as an encore "Un bel di" from Puccini's MADAMA BUTTERFLY; and at the end of the program she was presented a bouquet of roses, which she accepted gratefully.

With the success of Saturday's program, The Villanova Arts Forum should be encouraged to continue to bring outstanding vocal and orchestral talent to Villanova.

Woodrow Wilson Winner

by Matt Roche

He may be found in the fourth floor stacks of Falvey Library seated comfortably with the chair tilted back and his feet propped up perusing a copy of the MEDITATIONS OF MARCUS AURELIUS. His name is John J. Walsh III. John is Villanova's third Woodrow Wilson fellow since 1945. He was among 1100 students who were chosen by the national committee from an initial nominating list of 11,000. The honor entitles a student to $2,000 for one year plus tuition and fees at any school he prefers.

John J. Walsh

The classics major came to Villanova from Austin High School, Detroit, Michigan, where he was the valedictorian of his Senior class. In his Freshman year in college John wavered in his choice of a major, finally choosing Classics -- majoring in Latin and minoring in Greek. His interest in languages has led him to take electives in advanced French and elementary German.

SIMULATION

Required courses in philosophy stimulated John's interest until now he would like to combine his two loves, classics and philosophy, range goal of a teaching career in mind.

The Senior of medium height has brown eyes and hair framed by an acorn-shaped face topped by a widow's peak. Given to a propensity for puns, John also likes a fast game of tennis.

When asked to what he attributed John's record of all A's and two B's, a friend replied, "Hard work." Vice-President of Delta Epsilon Sigma, the National Catholic Honor Fraternity, John also is a member of the Classics Society as well as the Literary Society. A diversity of interest influenced John's choice of such electives as a computer course, and Medieval Courtly Literature in French.

INCENTIVE

In between his current academic reading of the historian Polybius, John has found time to work in a reading of C. P. Snow's book

THE TWO CULTURES

When approached concerning the Wilson award, John commented, "Relax? No, of course not. Rather than an award for past achievement, I must take this as an incentive for future work."

Hard work brought him to the position of number one in his major and the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences; hard work will continue to push John J. Walsh III on to greater heights of accomplishment.

Faculty Comment

On Teaching the Teachers

Ed. Note: All faculty views on any relevant question are most welcome. We reserve the right to edit for space.

I have examined very carefully the proposed plan for student evaluation of Villanova faculty and suggest below a few, scattered thoughts.

I certainly agree that the students should have a chance to comment in print concerning their teachers' abilities. They are paying the tuition and it is they who receive the credits. More idealistically, the practice of evaluating professors is a long and noble tradition. During the middle Middle Ages, when education was more peripatetic, the professor in many cases was paid directly by the student.

Then the students surrounded their teacher, in a semi-circle, and felt free to vociferate at an irrelevancy or at an early dismissal. Some more dedicated learners even demanded that the speaker talk at a rapid clip. In today's less ambulant academe tediousness and ineptness still plague the aspirants.

Less jocosely, though, I wonder whether even the average student, much less the random pick of one quarter of ALL the students, is properly qualified to judge more than the technical skills of his professors. I am reminded of Erskine's comment that glib praise given to a teacher at the end of a course is a sign that the teacher has failed. The professor's task is to seed thoughts, that will gestate by reflection only after school years.

And for a student to assess the knowledge of his teacher or the adequacy of his text requires information and experience of which the random sampled student (or perhaps any student) is devoid.

Certainly, one advantage of the higher education system is its selective nature.

I feel, then, that some method of evaluation, more restricted than the presently proposed one, is a necessity. Too many students are subjected to teachers with little or no ability to communicate, who rest secure in their microcosms of arbitrary grades and general unpreparedness.

Ah, but whatever happened to the courageous lad who personally marched to the Dean to complain? Did he perhaps flunk out?

General Electric is passing out GENIUS buttons. What's the point?

We want to spread the word that there's room at General Electric for talented people who want to take on big challenges.

We like to call these people GENIUSES. But what they're called isn't so important as where they're headed. And at the General Electric Company, there's plenty of room for GENIUSES, no matter what their particular field of interest.

If you want to be recognized for your talents come to General Electric, where the young men are important men.

Lawrence and Lee's 'The Laughmaker' Premiers at Playbox

Two new lyrical productions by Jerome Lawrence and Robert E. Lee are opening in Greater Philadelphia within the next few weeks --and one of them is at the Villanova University Playbox.

While "Mame," a Lawrence-and-Lee musical, awaits an April 4 opening in Center City, "The Laughmaker" will premier at the Playbox.

Friday night is opening night for the two-act lyrical play. Mr. Richard A. Duprey, graduate theatre department chairman, will direct the productions March 19, 20, 25, 26 and 27, and April 1 and 2.

Mr. Lawrence and Mr. Lee are expected to attend the April 1 performance, Mr. Duprey said. He and the Villanova Players have worked closely with the playrights during rehearsal.

The curtain will rise at 8:30 p.m. for all eight evening performances. Student tickets, as well as reserved seats, are available at the Playbox ticket office.

Rev. William DuBay Starts Union Drive For Catholic Priests

The Rev. William H. DuBay of Santa Monica has done far more than his share in the modernization of the Roman Catholic Church.

The thirty-one year old priest has formally initiated a drive aimed at the unionization of the nation's almost 60,000 Roman Catholic priests.

DuBay, terming his fellow clergymen as "employees" of the Catholic religion, hopes eventually to obtain a charter within the benevolent arms of the AFL-CIO along with the plumbers and carpenters organizations.

One would think that the revolutionary Fr. DuBay was trying to organize a group of railroad men when he continues on about a machine for grievances, tenure policies, "arbitrary and oppressive" transfers, uniform leave policies and a professional salary et cetera.

Realizing that he might well be suspended or excommunicated for his organizing efforts, the young priest, in the occasion that something of this nature might occur, would seek protection under Federal and state statutes in what is a purely religious matter.

As Fr. DuBay continues to play his role as a sort of spiritual John L. Lewis, one wonders if the young clergyman is able to make the distinction between religious "employees" and servants of the Lord. Certainly he seems not to be able to discern between the concepts of "profession" and vocation.

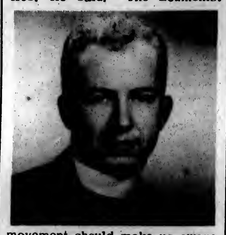
Such then is the basic idea of Fr. DuBay's union, but it might be interesting to consider (no matter how improbable it may be) the American Federation of Priests as a highly organized and powerful element of established unionism. The situation is this: Due to some grievance, the AFP, under the expert guidance of Fr. DuBay, has just struck the majority of Catholic schools and churches in the United States.

The pious pickets are being counter-picked by school children and would be worshipers. Sinful scabs, no doubt. Certainly the situation is nothing less than ridiculous, but then, what can be said about an organization of religious men joined together by a charter granted by the AFL-CIO rather than by a religious bond.

Diversified Priest

by Joe Sassani

Reverend Royce W. Hughes recently joined Villanova's Theology Department where he teaches an apologetics course on Christ and His Church. However, Father Hughes did not start his education with the intention of becoming a priest or even studying Theology.



In 1950 Father Hughes graduated from Saint Edward's University in Austin, Texas with a major in biology and chemistry. He then worked as a chemical analyst for a year and taught chemistry in the Salt Lake City, Utah public school system for four years. Finally in 1955 he began his studies of Theology at Notre Dame University.

Upon graduating from Notre Dame with a M.A. in Theology in 1960 Father Hughes traveled to Romé where he received a Licentiate in Medieval Studies from the Latern University. In 1964 Father Hughes was ordained.

During the last three years before his coming to Villanova, Father Hughes specialized in Ecumenism at Saint Thomas University in Rome and completed study for his doctorate to be received in June at Rome upon presentation of his doctoral thesis.

Father Hughes enjoys swimming and playing pool, watching television and traveling. When he goes to Rome in the summer, he plans to extend his trip to include an automobile tour of Europe including Italy, Austria, and German Bavaria.

In a recent interview Father Hughes explained the way in which today's Ecumenist movement should affect each of us as Catholics. He said: "The Ecumenist movement should make us aware of the problems of Christian unity and cause us to do what we can on the practical level to bring this about. This means a recognition of Protestants as fellow Christians with an emphasis on the points we hold in common without overlooking the differences between us."

"Throughout our day to day contacts with non-Catholic Christians we must impress upon them our concern with Ecumenism. To do this we must have a knowledge not only of our own faith but also of the Protestant faiths."

Killing in Kansas

by Jim Brennan

IN COLD BLOOD
by Truman Capote
New York: Random House

There are no surprises in this excellent shocker, but there are terror and horror on an extensive scale. The story is simple and clear. It tells of the murder of four members of a Kansas family -- father, mother, teenage son, and daughter -- the flight of the two killers, their capture, trial, and hanging five and a half years later. But Truman Capote has done more than present a documentary or police file on the case by reconstructing the crime in shocking detail. He has written what he and his publishers are calling a new literary art form -- the nonfiction novel.

He has employed the novelists techniques: flashbacks, detail setting, dialogue. His story is true -- but even though in this case the reader knows exactly what will happen -- he manages to hold the reader's attention as he reconstructs the crime that rocked the farming town of Holcomb, Kansas, November 15, 1959.

It is with the killers Perry Smith and Dick Hickock that Capote has done his best work. He outlines their sorry lives in minute detail never sympathizing or condemning them. Though it is difficult to feel pity for them, the reader comes to know and understand them. Capote never lets his feelings -- revulsions at their crime, a fondness of sorts for the men once he was known to them -- interfere with his reporting.

Capote obviously spent a long period of time in and around Holcomb, interviewing anyone who had the slightest connection with the case. The picture that he gives us of this locality and the people who inhabit it, is brilliant in its coloring. We come to know it as if we had lived there, and we come to know dozens of people from principals to minor characters.

The background of Smith and Hickock show the importance of environmental factors. A psychiatrist declared that Smith was suffering from severe mental illness. He was the child of a Cherokee Indian woman and an Irish father who bitterly battled each other. His home was broken and he was in institutions (where he was maltreated) from an early age. His schooling stopped at the third grade and he was first arrested at the age of eight.

Hickock's parents were poor Kansas farm folk. He finished high school, was an all-around athlete, but began stealing when very young and was regarded by neighbors as a scoundrel. He was extremely envious of people who possessed more than he. Twice divorced he excelled in passing worthless checks.

Though some claim John Hersey's HIROSHIMA was the first non-fiction novel, Capote's IN COLD BLOOD will best be remembered as the original.

Superlatively organized and written, this is a sustained adventure not only of crime and detection but also a study of the depths and complexities of human beings and the strange chances which play so important a part in human lives.

Villanova's Jazz Festival Realizes Financial Rewards

In addition to being the musical success which was reported in the last edition of VILLANOVAN, the Sixth Annual Intercollegiate Jazz Festival and also a huge financial success, according to a report by Bill McCloskey, general chairman for the event.

In his presentation to SGA President Steve Freind, the outgoing chairman indicated final profit of close to $1000. This is after expenses estimated at $5000. IJF'66 is the first Jazz Festival to make money for the Student Government in such large proportions. Before this year total overall profit for the first five years was $23.

The report credits a slight price rise and excellent publicity cooperation from local radio and TV stations and some area newspapers for the profit. In addition, many expenses were cut down or completely out this year in an effort to make the event a financial success. Most of these cuts were in areas which had little or no effect on the overall presentation and thus did not detract from the quality of the show.

Fine co-operation from the 47 students who allowed their room to be used by the high school band and a few others whom the festival had agreed to house at the campus was also a big financial break for the Festival.

The Festival was re-broadcast by the ABC Radio Network last weekend and Donna Jean, winner of the WIP trophy as best vocalist, was a guest on the Aquarama show with Ed Hurst on KYW-TV on Saturday. The week before the combo winner was featured on the same program with Hurst.

Exact monetary figures will not be available until mid-April because of many bills which may not come in until the first of the month, according to Jerry Iby, business manager for the Festival, "but the $1000 figure is certainly very close to what the final figure will be."

Student Government

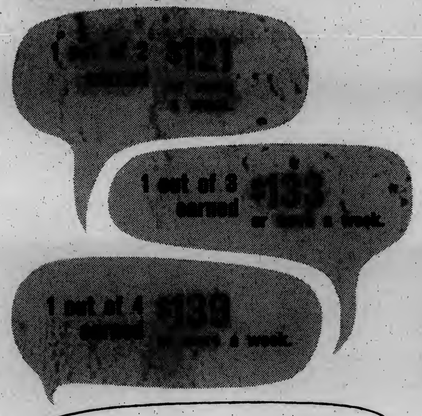
Despite the refusal of Tyrell to resign, Griffin announced the formation of a committee, headed by Vice-President Jim Morgan, to co-ordinate class activities with the Alumni. The whole issue was brought up in debate on a motion which was admittedly by and large purely a publicity idea, to have the SGA "whole-heartedly support the proposed Senior Pledge Drive." The basic point of contention in the debate was the timing of the plan and how much preparation was put into it. Although discussed for several months in the upper echelons of the class government, the plan was not unveiled to the students until the last issue of the VILLANOVAN and was not fully explained, according to Griffin, until a letter which was mailed the day after Wednesday's SGA meeting.

Another hassle, this between Public Relations Committee Chairman Jeff Radowich and President Freind ensued over the idea of whether or not Radowich was to get Presidential approval before he took a poll. Apparently, Freind ordered a poll taken by Radowich about the Senior Pledge Drive not published because "it is going against us." Friend told the meeting that it was his judgement that the class was not sufficiently knowledgeable on the idea of the Drive to make a sound judgement on the matter. At any rate, the poll was published and distributed by Tyrell to the members of the Congress.

There was one other major skirmish as Pat Mahadey took the same tact as last week's WWVU Editorial and questioned the Student Loan Program which will lend $15 to students who agree to pay back within a month. There is no interest charged. The question was why the Congress or the Senate or Ways and Means Committee had not been consulted. Mr. Freind explained that the President may appropriate funds as he sees fit "so long as he so informs the Senate at the next meeting."



This he says he did. In a way the Ways and Means Committee also approved the program according to Jim Proud who told the VILLANOVAN. Our meetings are usually quite informal and I got together with those I thought might be against it and we basically agreed to it. However, this was never really formalized specifically."

Other motions at the meeting congratulated Coach Kraft and the team for their efforts, requested longer lunch hours in the Resident Cafeteria during Finals, urged investigation of the use of a room in Dougherty or the new book building as an evening and weekend recreation center.

In addition, the Presidentail succession motion finally passed and another bill calling for its immediate implementation was also voted through after a small debate. The Senate met Monday and the SGA meets again tonight.

Fastest Sport in U.S.:Lacrosse Has Past and Present at V.U.

Lacrosse, America's fastest sport on two feet, is truly an American institution. This game and basketball are the only two sports that have sprung solely from our native soil. Its origin was by the American Indians. How much more American can anything be than American Indian?

Way back in history, Hiawatha and his fellow braves wandered the fields and forrests of what later became the Dominion of Canada. One of the young bucks started to hit and chase a nice round stone. He used a hooked stick to propel his "ball," and in seeing the stick, the French Canadians thought it reminded them of a crozier, and they called it "la crosse."

The energetic and athletic brave had a ball with his "ball" and stick, and others wanted to join the fun. He was reluctant to share his fun, so some of the others decided to take his ball away. However, having had considerable time to become adept at guiding his round stone, he was able to thwart attempts to capture it.

But one inventive tribesman devised a more efficient "crosse." HE took a forked stick, strung some thongs in the fork, and had himself a far superior implement. He could not only snatch the ball away, but he could also carry it in the net he had formed, out away from his body.

He was able to retain possession far longer than those who just tried to roll the ball along the ground. Other Indians soon saw the wisdom of the netted stick, and followed the example. Now that each of them could carry the ball, additional refinements were necessary.

The first and most logical seemed to be to club the ball carrier over the head with his own stick, and triumphantly -- if only momentarily -- carry off the prize.

In modern times, the game has gradually become a little less ferocious. Now players are required to wear helmets and protective gloves. Most players also wear shoulder or arm pads as protection from the swinging sticks. Rules prohibit -- but not necessarily prevent -- ferocious stick swinging.

For those who are not familiar with the modern game, the field of play has been narrowed down from the whole area between villages that the Indians used, to a space roughly the size of an American football field -- 60 by 120 yards, to be exact. Goals, somewhat similar to ice hockey goals, are 10 yards inbounds from the end lines and are surrounded by a circular area, exclusively for goalies, called the crease. Hence, play moves around and behind the goal cage in addition to out front, much the same as in ice hockey.

Ten men -- three attackmen, three midfielders, three defensemen, and a goalie -- make up the team. There are restrictions on how many men may be in the offensive and the defensive halves of the field at any one time.

The hard-rubber ball, about the size of a tennis ball, is carried in the net of the sticks or passed until an offensive player has the opportunity to shoot at the opponents' goal.

Generally speaking, the rules of the game are very similar to and much like a combination of the rules of basketball and ice hockey. That explains why lacrosse is called the fastest sport on two feet.

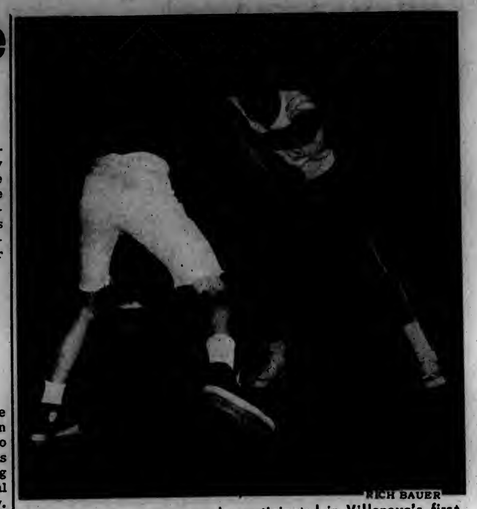
Coming out to see the games is the best way to become familiar with the rules. Even without knowing the technicalities, lacrosse is an interesting and exciting sport to watch. Villanova's lacrosse team will meet its first opponent of the year, C. W. Post College, at Long Island, on March 26. The first home game will be on March 3 with Washington and Lee University of Lexington, Virginia. The first games could well be the toughest on the schedule.

The club has had one outside scrimmage so far this year. That was with and at the University of Pennsylvania. The team fared better than in previous years against the Quakers, but more improvement and smoother team play is needed, according to Coach Gene Melcher.

The next two weeks should be enough to jell the team into condition for a fast but hard start. Despite rough spots in the Penn scrimmage, valuable game-condition experience was absorbed by the 'Cat stickmen. A scrimmage with the University of Delaware at their Newark campus is scheduled for Saturday, March 19. This should prove an even better indicator of the future in store for the Villanova lacrosse team.

VU's Marksmen Shoot Merchant Mariners; Boast 14-1 Record

by Frank Miller



The Wildcat Marksmen, who are enjoying their greatest season in VU history, added more laurels to their ever expanding list of honors last week with their fine showing in the Conventional Pistol Sectional at the Merchant Marine Academy.

The team snared second and third team honors but it was individual efforts, however, which attracted all the attention. All American Jim Durborow shot a total of 842 points out of a possible 900 to lead all scorers in the individual competion, while another VU All American Tony Mascia was racking up third place with a 836 score.

Still another stellar performance was turned in by Marty Plante, who earned the annual ROTC award for the highest score among ROTC shooters in competition. Plante turned in an 805 tally.

In the team battle Navy avenged an earlier setback at the hands of Villanova by nipping the Wildcat "A" team 1119-1115. The 'Cat "B" squad garnered third place honors with a 1070 total. The "A" team was composed of Jim Bushong, Ted Laven, Tony Mascia, and Jim Durborow. The "B" team consisted of Bill McGettigan, Chuck Croney, Mike Reitan, and Larry O'Malley.

The Marksmen, who are under the mentorship of Sgt. Migliacci, have now posted a 14-1 record. They are currently in competition in the Delaware Valley Pistol League. The 'Cats having knocked off their toughest competition, are planning a sweep of league competition and more honors.

Villanova's Rugby Club Avenges Two Early Losses

by Don Campbell

The Villanova Rugby Club started off its quest for an undefeated season on a successful note Saturday by crushing the Philadelphia First Troop 10-6. The victory was doubly sweet since it avenged one of the two losses suffered during the fall season.

The hustle of the 'Cats paid off as they were heavily outweighed especially in the forward wall. Taking advantage of this the troop was able to take a 3-0 lead at the end of the first half on an end sweep past the Main Line backfield.

The forward wall was unable to stop the combination of the visitors as they controlled both scrums and line-outs.

The second half however was a completely different story. During the half-time coach Francis Coughlin made some changes in the foward wall and this turned out to be the deciding factor.

Now pouring through time after time, captain Haller La Rue and Andy Sears kept their backfield on their backs.

Finally the momentum paid off when John Thomas set up by Bill Clarke darted past everybody on a 40 yard gallop to tie the score. The conversion was added to make it 5-3 with 27 minutes left in the game.

The backfield then got into the act and showed some of their potential by excellently working the Forns-Crawford-Kain to Conserva combination that allowed the organ playing "9.8" dash man Conserva to leave the opposition with their mouths open as he zoomed 35 yards for the final Wildcat goal. Again the free kick was added to make it 10-3.

The troopers were able to make one last try but were contained by some great kicking and tackling until the final whistle.

The Rugby "B" Team consisting of many underclassmen playing Rugby for the first time were crushed 12-0. The inexperience and score was overshadowed however by some sterling play by Bob Gallo and Jim Stillwagon.

The injury ridden 'Cats hope to be at full strength Wednesday when they will play St. Joseph's. The VU-Hawks game will be played 4 o'clock Wednesday at the Villanova Rugby field.

Trackmen Look Toward Future; Sophs Shine in Ic's and NCAA

by Aurel Villari

For the first time in four years, the Wildcats were defeated at the annual IC4A Indoor Meet, placing second only to Maryland, with a final total of 17 for Villanova and 28 for the Terps. Although the meet as a whole was basically a disappointment, in so far as the 'Cat's four-year skein was broken, there were, nevertheless, several outstanding individual performances contributed by the trackmen, which helped to brighten the overall disappointment.

In the mile, for example, Dave Patrick set a new IC record, by blazing over the course in 4:06.7, eclipsing the old record of 4:08.1 which had been set by another Villanovan, Fred Dwyer, back in 1953. Pole-vaulter Vince Bizzarro broke his own record (he has now cleared 15'4") and tied the winning height, but took third place because of his greater number of missed attempts.

Ken Coniglio took fourth place in the 60-yard hurdles, which event was won by Boston University's Dave Henery in a record time of 7.1. The Wildcat 2-mile relay squad, usually composed of Ian Hamilton, Craig Nation, Al McCafferty and Dave Patrick, finished a disappointing third place, due mostly to the absence of Patrick, the anchor man, in that event.

The 1-mile relay team also took third but, because of the loss of Earl Horner, who dislocated his shoulder in practice, this finish was better than had been expected. Bill Grant, who substituted for Horner, turned in a fine effort.

But the look is now to the future. The Wildcats are eagerly anticipating their re-match with Maryland on May 28, in the Outdoor IC's, to be held at Randall's Island, New York. By then, Earl Horner will be back in shape for the 100- and 220-yard dashes, in both of which events he is the current defending champion at the Outdoor IC's.

This past weekend, in Detroit, was the last of the indoor competition for the Wildcats this year; the outdoor season will now commence, with hopes being especially put upon the development of the sophomores.

In the javelin, soph Jim Shillow is a fine prospect, needing only experience to season his potential. Pole-vaulter George Conway, who broke his pole in the Indoor IC's, is waiting to even the score with Maryland. Soph Bill Martin, who was hurt in the indoor season, is also eagerly anticipating the outdoor season.

Bob Massie is a very promising sophomore sprint man. Chuck Preas and Joe O'Neil are mainstays in the broad and triple jump. Preas placed fourth last year in the triple jump in the IC's.

These two events will make a great difference in the outdoor competition, and help boost Villanova to the top in the final standings. All in all the 'Cats boast a very strong crop of sophs (17), only one junior (Heidelberger), and the five seniors.

'Cat frosh prospects for next year are good, including some great distance men and one of the best hurdlers ever at Villanova. Frosh Irwin Hall recently broke the school indoor record of 7:2, which had been held by Ken Coniglio, in the 60-yard hurdles. Hall's new mark is 7 flat, which will probably stand for a long time.

Another fact which attests to the potential of Hall is that at the Baltimore Sun Meet last February, Irv came in second only to the great Richmond Flowers of Tennessee. Another top frosh prospect is Tom Donnelly, who is being counted on to give the Wildcats a big boost in the distance events. All in all, the young and potential-laden crop of freshmen promises to become one of the greatest group of track stars ever assembled at Villanova.

Not to be forgotten are three weight men -- Richie Moore, Augie Zilincar, and Hugh O'Callaghan -- who have also shown a lot of promises, and are sure to help boost Villanova once again to the top. The dates of the most important outdoor meets in the near future follow:

April 16, Penn State (new competition in a dual meet).

April 23, Iona Relays, New York

April 29 - 30, Penn Relays, Franklin Field (biggest meet except IC's)

May 6-7, Quantico Relays, Virginia

The capper will be the Quantico Dual Meet here on the Main Line. The end of this track season, by the way, will mark the termination of a hallowed tradition here at Villanova -- Ed "Phantom" Geigengack will be retiring from his position of assistant track coach. Through his infectious enthusiasm and spirit, Ed has more often then we'd care to remember shocked the guys into reaching new athletic achievements.

Wrestling Tournament Held NCAA Official Gives OK

by Bob McIntyre

A new face was seen the other day on Villanova's campus. It was the latest in a number of new sports to come upon the Wildcat scene in recent years. After weeks of preparation, the 1st Intramural Wrestling Tournament took place inside the Field House from Monday, March 7, through Thursday, March 10.

The finals were held Thursday night at 7:30 p.m. in the Field House. That night as well as the ones proceeding were under the supervision of Intramural Heads, Ed Giesz and Jim Moran.

The Tournament was a great success with over 60 entries and some 200 spectators at the finals on Thursday.

FOUNDER

The Tournament was run by its originator Sophomore Jack McGarvey, who is currently running for Arts and Science Representative and Junior Mike Mulvey of the Intramural Dept.

Special thanks must be given to referees, Dick Paini, Bob Horter, and Tim Wahl. Trophies are to be presented to the winners of the different weight classes in the near future.

The most interesting matches came in the 171 pound class, where riding time decided the win in favor of Dennis Kelly over Burke Ward, 2-1, and in the Heavyweight division where Tom Richards won out 3-2 over John Alden.

CHAMPIONSHIPS

The Championships got off to a fast start as Paul Maluccia pinned James Vlein in the 1st period of the 123 lb. match. Then Don Sbrew flattened Bill Oler in a 130 match. Frank Giorgini defeated George Blassiole by a score of 7-2 in the 137 lb. class. Another quick pin in 142 lb. class where George Albre defeated Phil Friedrick. Dennis Kerrigan won by a score of 2-0 over Paul Gallegher in the 148 group.

Bruce Randell was pinned by Jerry Williams in the 154 lb. division, and Joe McKinley defeated Michael Grant, 6-1 in the 162 class. In the 180 lb. championship, Brian Fitzpatrick defeated Bob Harter, 11-2.

As the NCCA referee for the championships put it, "Villanova has a basis for a real good wrestling team and would be capable of holding its own against any wrestling team in the area." Grapplers of Villanova Unite!

Melchionni Receives Sports Award From Schmidts on TV 10

The SCHMIDT'S SPORTS AWARD, presented to a sports personality outstanding in Philadelphia's sports news during the preceding week, was given to William Melchionni on Tuesday, March 1 on the extended TV10 BIG NEWS, 6:00 to 7:00 p.m.

Bill Melchionni, captain of the Villanova University basketball team, was chosen for the award by this week's guest panelist John Dell, sportswriter for the Philadelphia Inquirer.

Presented by TV10 Sports Director, Tom Brookshier, the SCHMIDT'S SPORTS AWARD was won by Melchionni for the fine basketball ability he displayed last week in scoring 34 and 39 points respectively to lead Villanova past Niagara and Memphis State.

The 6'1" senior was graduated from Bishop Eustace High School in Cherry Hill, New Jersey. Having played 23 games this season for the Wildcats, Melchionni averaged 27.7 points per game and recently set a Big 5 Palestra scoring record by firing in 44 points against St. Bonaventure. He is the fifth highest scorer in Villanova's history and leads his team this season in assists.

Cats Down St. John's in NIT; Dove Contained in Revenge Win

by John DiGennaro

It took Villanova a year to prove to the St. John's rooters that Joe Lapchick went out a winner because Billy Melchionni caught the flu, but the wait was well worth it. The way Billy gunned down the Redmen in leading Villanova to a thrilling 63-61 opening round victory, he could have made General Custer a winner.

The win, the Wildcat's eleventh in their last twelve outings, and their seventh in a row, was by far their biggest and most satisfying in a season just packed with satisfaction. It also upped their record to a very respectable 16 and 10, and paved the way for their quarter final showdown with longtime nemesis Boston College.

Melchionni clicked for 13 field goals and 7 free throws, good for 33 points, and a long afternoon for Bobby Duerr and Albie Swartz. A tenacious 'Cat defense held Sonny Dove and Bob McIntyre (averaging 42 points a game between them) to a joint output of 8 first half points, as the Kraftmen opened up a 33-24 advantage.

St. John's two big men regained some of the touch in the second half, but it was not quite enough to overcome the Melchionni magic.

Both teams apparently realizing that the first 39 minutes were just a formality started slowly, with Bobby Duerr netting the game's first two points after almost two minutes of play. In the next five minutes St. John's could manage only one free throw, and Villanova, with Melchionni netting 7, held an early 9-3 lead.

The 'Cats seemed headed for trouble as their two "board" men Bernie Schaffer and Frank Gaidjunas each picked up three early fouls, but Terry McGuire and Larry Livers turned in good backup jobs, and the Wildcats opened the lead to nine at half time.

Bob McIntyre found the range in the second half, but the 'Cats took turns exchanging baskets with him, and they still led 43-34 at the 14:45 mark. Five minutes later it was all tied up at 46 apiece, as the Redmen surged for 6 quick ones, two straight follows by Sonny Dove, and Hank Cluess' long one-hander from the corner.

St. John's tied it twice more at 48 and 49, then took the lead for the first time since the opening basket on a McIntyre jumper with a little over seven minutes left to be played.

For the next few minutes both teams rode the proverbial seesaw, and it was all even again at 54-54. Then Frank Gaidjunas hit one of his patented hook shots, and Billy Melchionni turned a steal, and a pretty feed-back from Pete Coleman, into a 58-54 Villanova lead.

Sonny Dove pulled the Redmen back to within 3 with his free throw, as the clock showed only 4:05 remaining in the ball game. Billy Melchionni then had the ball stolen from him by Albie Swartz, but Cluess missed the short jumper off the fast break, and "Desire" McGuire streaked downcourt to pick off the rebound.

Once again as Melchionni dribbled in the back court he had the ball stolen, but this time St. John's cashed in as McIntyre hit on a short pop shot, and the 'Cat's lead was down to one.

Pete Coleman converted both ends of a one-and-one, but McIntyre came right back with two for the Johnnies, and it was 60-59 with barely over two minutes to go. Now it was Melchionni's turn to get even, and that he did as he took a steal all the way home for a layup and a three point lead. A few seconds later, at the 1:41 mark, he upped the lead to 4, as he closed out the 'Cats scoring with his charity toss.

St. John's was far from finished, however, as they closed the gap to 63-61 with 38 seconds left. With only 16 seconds showing, Rudy Bogad missed a chance to tie on a one and one, and the 'Cats rebounded -- three seconds later St. John's had the ball again. With 8 seconds on the clock Albie Swartz was called for walking, and Melchionni dribbled away the time, and St. John's chances of defending its title.

RICH BAUER

It's all over at the garden as a triumphant Bill Melchionni is carried on the shoulders of the jubilant Wildcat rooters. Final score: 'Cats 63, St. John's 61. Krause 0.

Frosh Close With 131-82 Win; Two "Titles" Highlight Season

by Jerry Bruderle

Last December when the basketball season was just starting, not much was expected of Villanova's varsity, so with optimism many turned to the freshman squad and took a "wait til next year" attitude. Now, in the middle of March the big 'Cats are winning and you don't think so much about next year, but when you do you still must be optimistic.

The 'Cats hung up a 13-1 mark, losing only to La Salle and in the process captured two championships. Villanova won the freshmen Big Five Title proving they were the best in the city, and they won the Villanova "Town and Country" championship proving they were the best in the town of Villanova.

Maybe you didn't know there was another team in town but there is one, probably closer to the Pie Shoppe than some of the more remote parts of the parking lot. It's the Northeastern Christian Junior College located somewhere beyond the Law School or St. Mary's Hall but technically located in Villanova. The school doesn't recruit quite as hard as UCLA or Villanova (or even St. Mary's, I guess), but anyway the Cats put it to them 132-81 on February 5.

That brought Villanova's record in the Villanova "Town and Country" league to 1-0 and with that victory they clinched the title. George May scored 48 points in the game, one short of Hubie White's freshman record, and Johnny Jones had his usual 24 to pace Villanova.

May's total closed out a good second half effort in which he averaged 23 over the last seven games. Earlier he was averaging seven a game and didn't have a starting position, but losing 20 pounds over the Christmas vacation helped and his 29 points in the second La Salle game helped shoot down the highly-touted Explorers.

Jones, on the other hand, was so consistent that he was taken for granted. Nine times during the year (out of 13 games) Johnny scored between 24 and 28 points, and he finished with a team high 25.4 average. (May was second with 13.9.) The Pompano Beach product, who averaged 32.6 in his senior year in high school, had his best game against Seton Hall with 41 points and 30 rebounds, but this hardly compares with the 89 he had one game in high school.

That output got his picture in Sports Illustrated's "Faces in the Crowd" where Villanova's ace recruiter George Raveling noticed him and ultimately enticed him to leave the warm Florida sun.

But Jones and May didn't do it alone. Jim McIntosh consistently got the rebounds, Frank Gillen got the assists and Bob Melchionni got the steals. It's a talented squad and one with a lot of promise. Now if only the varsity hadn't messed things up by going to the NIT people would be saying, "Wait til next year." Sometimes you just can't win.

Cats Down Seton Hall, 91-65; "Cyclops" Deflates DePaul

by John DiGennaro

The 'Cats earned their bid to the NIT by closing out their regular season in a blaze of glory, winning six in a row, and 10 out of their last 11. In their final Field House appearance, two weeks ago, they crushed a hapless Seton Hall quintet 91-65.

Bernie Schaffer was the game's leading scorer with 21 hard earned points, and doubled as the rebounding king hitting the boards for 14.

Seton Hall got a good 20 point performance from Tony Cuccolo, but it fell way short as the Wildcat's balanced attack saw five men hit double figures. Following Schaffer was Melchionni with 19, Crews with 14, Gaidjunas 11, and Coleman 10. McGuire, Traynor, and Livers came off the bench to combine for some 8-13 shooting, and round out a good team effort.

DE PAUL

The final game of the regular season found the 'Cats in Chicago at the DePaul Field House. The Blue Demons with an 18-6 record, an NIT bid, and on their home court, were heavy favorites to end the Wildcat's season on a sour note -- Billy Melchionni had other ideas.

The "Cyclop," shooting 14-26 from the floor, and 9-9 from the line, totaled 37 points and led the 'Cats to a convincing 76-73 victory. As it was the Wildcats came uncomfortably close to blowing a 7 point lead in the last 23 seconds, but Frank Gaidjunas' free throw in the closing seconds put it on ice.

The taller Blue Demons hurt Villanova off the boards, but they had no way of stopping the Melchionni scoring machine. Billy got some fine assistance from fellow guard Pete Coleman, who added 14 points, snared 5 rebounds, and played a good floor game. Joe Crews was the only other 'Cat in double figures with 11, and pulled down a team high of 8 rebounds.

High scorer for the losers was Dave Mills with 22. He also had 13 bounds. Game honors in rebounding went to DePaul's Errol Palmer who skyrocketed for 19.

Villanova won the game on the foul line, hitting on 24 of their 28 attempts. DePaul managed 21 more shots from the field, but only connected for one additional basket.

The 'Cats closed the regular season with a 15-10 mark. Melchionni is leading the scorers with a 27.7 average, good enough to rank him in the top ten in the nation. Joe Crews has nipped Bernie Schaffer for second spot by three points, and breathing right down both their necks is Frank Gaidjunas. Gaidjunas is the team's leading rebounder; Bernie Schaffer is second.

So far this year Melchionni has been a first team selection on the Holiday Festival All-Star team; a six time member of the weekly ECAC All-East team; the leading vote getter on the final ECAC All-East team; a first team choice, and MVP, of the Catholic Standard and Times' All-Big 5 team; and the new owner of the Palestra Big 5 single-game scoring record. Before the basketball season finally draws the curtain he should have a lot more to add to the list.

Big 5 All-Opponents Named; No Villanova Foes Listed in Top 15

Syracuse All-American Dave Bing led the voting for the 1965-66 Big Five Palestra all-opponent team. All five first team selectees were new to the team. Bing received 19 of a possible 22 votes from the newspaper, radio, TV, Big Five Coaches and Palestra officials.

Following Bing in the balloting were Neil Johnson, Creighton and Wade Houston, Louisville, with 15 votes. Houston is a senior while Johnson is a junior. Rounding out the team was Providence All-American Jim Walker, also a junior, and sophomore Don May of Dayton with 12 votes apiece.

Seventeen players received first team votes with Sonny Dove of St. John's heading the second team with nine votes. Also on the second team were Wes Unseld, Louisville, Dave Newmark, Columbia, Henry Finkel, Dayton, Steve Cram, Cornell and Bob Leonard, Wake Forest.

Players receiving honorable mention were Dave Brown, Lafayette, Stan Washington, Michigan State, Mike Klahr, Albright, John Rodgers, Bucknell, Manny Leaks, Niagara, and Bob McIntyre, St. John's.

Campaigns in Home Stretch; Elections Set for Thurs.

By Jim O'Hare

Elections for Class offices will be held tomorrow in Bartley Cafeteria and Alumni Hall Gym from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. There are some 31 offices at stake. Elections chairman George Valva anticipates a heavy turnout from the student body and hopes that more than the 74% that voted last year will go to the polls tomorrow. Valva feels that the goal of the elections should not be just to provide representation for the student body but to spurn greater interest among students concerning student affairs and University activities.

New this year will be an "Elections Central" in the Center Lounge of Dougherty Hall, where running results of the election will be posted from 2 p.m. on. Running results will also broadcast over Radio Station W.W.V.U.; final results should be in by 4 p.m.

Before even running for office, all of the candidates were required to pass a uniform set of minimum standards, including at least a 2.50 cumulative average, approval of the administration, and a passing grade on a test on the S.G.A. constitution. Valva pointed that the S.G.A. test was certainly not a "snap," as over one third of those taking the exam for the first time failed, and were forced to re-take it or withdraw from the election.

In addition to the list published in last week's VILLANOVAN, two more candidates have entered into contention for the office of Engineering Day hop representative for the Class of '67: Joseph Rathkonic and Walter Schoppe.

Leading the list of races the election of the President of the Class of 1967 Incumbent Rick Holwell is opposed by John Bosacco in what promises to be a fight right down to the wire.

Class of '68 President Tom Conway will have to beat challenger Jay McGinness to retain his position next year. James D'Asostino, Greg Fusco, and Peter Welsh are candidates for the Class of '68 Resident Representative.

New to the world of collegiate politics are Freshman Joseph Kilroy, Dave Mullin, and Art Halleran, all candidates for the office of President of the Class of 1969.

These and many other contests promise to make this year's elections more exciting and unpredictable than ever.

Times' Capitol Bureau Chief To Receive Augustine Award

By Joe Sassani

Tom Wicker, Washington Bureau Chief for the NEW YORK TIMES and one of the country's top all around journalists has been named winner of Villanova University's "St. Augustine Award" for 1966.

Announcement of Wicker's selection as the eleventh recipient of the annual journalism award was made today by the Very Rev. Joseph A. Flaherty, OSA, University President.

Named for St. Augustine, Patron Saint of Printers and one of history's great writers, the award is given yearly for "Distinguished Achievement in Communications Journalism."

Presentation will be made on Saturday evening, April 16 during a dinner at the Bellevue Stratford Hotal in Philadelphia.

The 1966 "St. Augustine Award" winner is a native of North Carolina and a graduate of the University of North Carolina. He served in editorial positions on several Southern newspapers and was a Naval Officer in Japan and Korea.

A Nieman Fellow at Harvard, Mr. Wicker joined the staff of the NEW YORK TIMES in 1960. Since joining the TIMES he has covered the Washington Scene and both the Presidential campaigns of 1960 and 1964.

Thomas Wicker

Wicker was with the press corps travelling with the last President Kennedy when Kennedy was assassinated in Dallas in 1963. His moving account of the incidents of that day and a poignant appraisal of the late President entitled "Kennedy Without Tears" are exceptional works of writing. In 1965 Wicker was named Chief Correspondent of the TIMES' Washington Bureau replacing James "Scotty" Reston who was given editorial duties for the paper in New York.

In addition to his talents as a writer of hard news, Wicker's magazine articles are examples of the best in writing and his editorials prove thought provoking and incisive. He is the author of six novels, three of them mystery thrillers written under a pen name.

Wicker will receive the "St. Augustine Award" during the annual VILLANOVAN-WWVU dinner dance to be held this year in the Burgundy Room of the Bellevue Stratford Hotel. The dinner will begin at 6:30 p.m.

During the dinner the new editorial staff of the VILLANOVAN and new appointments to station WWVU will be announced.

Rev. Louis A. Rongione, OSA, Librarian and Chairman of the "St. Augustine Award" committee will make the presentation and serve as Toastmaster.

Wicker is the eleventh recipient of the journalism award. Previous recipients were: James T. Quirk, Publisher of TV GUIDE magazine; John T. Facenda, WCAU-TV newscaster, John Calpin, political editor of the Philadelphia Bulletin; Monsignor Anthony L. Ostheimer, editor of the CATHOLIC STANDARD & TIMES; Leonard McAdams, Reporter, the PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER; William R. McAndrew, Executive Vice President for News, the National Broadcasting Company; Rev. Albert J. Nevins, President of the Catholic Press Association; Monsignor James I. Tucek, Press Director, First Session of the Vatican Council; Marciarose (Shestack) television producer and Patrick Scanlan, Editor of the BROOKLYN TABLET.

Miss Barbara Ward Lectures On Organizing World Economy

by Dale Pappert

Barbara Ward, famed British economist and author, will speak on "Organizing the World Economy" this Tuesday, March 29, at 8 p.m. in the Field House.

Miss Ward has had an extraordinary career, both in the United States and in England. Born in Yorkshire and educated at the Convent, Felixtown, she studied in Germany and at Somerville College, Oxford, where she took on first class honors degrees in philosophy, politics and economics. She has received honorary degrees from Harvard, Columbia, Smith, Fordham and many others.

In 1939 she became assistant editor of THE ECONOMIST of London, and has been connected with the paper ever since. Her writing talents cause her to be regarded as one of the most influential writers in England.

Barbara Ward has ten volumes to her credit, and is currently writing a book on Africa, and another on the plight of cities. Most people know her through "Five Ideas that Change the World" and "The Rich Nations and the Poor Nations." Her articles appear regularly in the NEW YORK TIMES, and she has made appearances on such programs as "The Great Challenge" and "Meet the Press."

Miss Ward is the only woman to have delivered the Commencement address at Harvard University. Living in Europe, America, Australia, India and Africa she has gathered material on all the economic systems of the world.

Barbara Ward

"We can build up our defenses," says Barbara Ward, "We can multiply our material satisfactions. In the end we shall fail because if there is no vision, the people perish." Miss Ward tells us how to keep that vision of protection of the individual's rights.

Both as a writer and speaker, Barbara Ward is notable for the clarity with which she can make complex issues intelligible to the general public. She has been described as a "woman who is unfairly talented." It is for this reason she will grace the Villanova Forum for the second time.

Law Dean Reuschlein To Serve on Board Naming Police Head

Dean of the Villanova Law School, Harold G. Reuschlein, has been named by the City of Philadelphia to serve on a special board to select a new police commissioner for the city.

The post became vacant when Howard Leary left the Philadelphia post to take over a similar position in New York City in the Lindsay administration.

In addition to the Villanova dean, the committee is made up of two other educators from Penn and Temple and members of various movements in the area for crime prevention.

Course-Teacher Evaluation Set on Exploratory Basis

Steve Freind, SGA President, has announced that work has begun on the first student Course and Teacher Evaluation in the history of Villanova. Permission was given to begin work on this project at a meeting of the Student Faculty Committee on March 4. The concept of such an evaluation has been discussed for years, but this is the first time that tangible steps have been taken to initiate such a project.

The evaluation this year will not be published, but rather reviewed by committees of the Administration and Faculty. If the evaluation is considered a responsible and honest reflection of student opinion, the evaluation will be published annually beginning next year.

Freind was extremely pleased over the progress that has been made. He expressed gratitude over the cooperation the students have received thus far from members of the Administration and Faculty. Father Driscoll, the Vice President for Academic Affairs and Mr. Mentzer, Mr. Nolan and Mr. Murrey, faculty members of the Student-Faculty Committee were particularly praised by Freind for their help and encouragement.

Freind also had high praise for the students who have worked on this project, particularly Brendan Brett, Charlie Murphy and Rick Galli. "These boys spent two full months doing research on this project," Freind said. "It was apparent in the Student-Faculty meetings that their homework had been done."

Basically, the way the evaluation will be run is that students who have volunteered to work on this project will be chosen as interviewers. They will be given a course and section and from this section they will interview approximately one-third of the students, chosen by a purely random basis. A three page evaluation sheet has been drawn up which is the basis of the interview. The questions, gleaned from various college evaluations throughout the country, are designed in such a way as to insure the maximum amount of objectivity.

Resident students will be interviewed in the dorms and day students will be interviewed in person on campus and by telephone at night. When an interviewer has completed his course, he will write up a one or two paragraph

Fall Convocation Committee Plans Honors for Academics

by Bill Tavani

John J. Gallen, Dean of the College of Engineering, has announced the plans for this year's Fall Convocation.

Members of the Fall Convocation Committee met recently to discuss the aims and scope of the assemblage. The committee is comprised of: Mr. Gallen, chairman; Dr. Felix Belduk, Physics Department; Alvin Clay, Accounting Department; and Thomas Mentzer, History Department.

The decision was made that the purpose of the Convocation is strictly for academic honors. With this end in mind, the gathering will give due recognition to three separate areas of achievement.

First an honorary degree will be bestowed upon a prominent scholar who will present the principal address. He may be distinguished in any academic field. Selection of the recipient rests with the Board of Trustees who will choose one of the several names submitted to them by the committee.

Also, honors will be conferrred upon certain faculty members. Those who have given outstanding and distinguished service to Villanova University will be honored, as will those who have received other distinctions or completed advanced study. Recipients of the Lindback Award (an annual award to an outstanding teacher) and noteworthy teachers as suggested by the students (through the S.G.A.) will be likewise recognized.

The third area for commendation will be exceptional work done on the student level. All Villanovans, including 1966 graduates, who have won awards, fellowships and scholarships or have been graduated cum laude, magna cum laude, or summa cum laude will be praised.

Student Apostolate Sponsors Lenten Talk, Rosary, in V.U. Chapel

The Student Lay Apostolate will sponsor a talk by Rev. George Lawless on March 30, at 7 p.m. Father Lawless's talk is entitled "The Fifteenth Station," and will be given in the campus chapel.

We urge as many students as possible to attend this event, since we feel that Father will provide an interesting and inspiring discussion.

Also, in an attempt to instill in the entire student body an apostolic spirit, and in a true lenten spirit, the Student Lay Apostolate will sponsor practical meditations, everyday at 3 p.m. in the chapel during the week of March 28 - April 1.

All Villanovans: residents, dayhops, faculty, office employees, and administration, are invited to participate in a true community spirit.

Social Activities Feature Annual Fraternity Weekend

Villanova's Inter Fraternity Council will hold its annual Fraternity Weekend on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, April 1, 2 and 3. All the social fraternities will partake in the event.

The weekend will get under way at 9 p.m. on Friday with a party at Town Hall in Philadelphia. The entertainment listed for this event is the Thornton Sisters, with music to be provided by the Fat City Four. Members of all the frats are invited to this affair.

Saturday's activities will begin with a picnic scheduled for the afternoon. The main action centers around an inter-frat football contest. This too is an effort of the IFC's combined participating groups.

The evening, however, will consist of separate functions. Each fraternity will conduct its own dinner dance for its members. Most of these events will start about 7 p.m.

Lamba Kappa Delta plans a dinner dance to be held at the "Timbers" in Newtown Square. The entertainment will be supplied by the Fat City Four.

Delta Pi Mu's dinner dance will take place at the Falcon House in Havertown, Pa. "The Heard" was named as music makers for the dance. Along with the festivities, various awards will be presented and an official induction ceremony for new brothers will take place.

The weekend closes out its activities with a second picnic on Sunday, again sponsored by the entire IFC membership.

This Inter Fraternity weekend is not only the highlight of the year's social calendar. In addition it is the first social event the newly inducted members (who are now in the midst of pledging) are permitted to attend. In this respect, it is a welcoming party for the newcomers.

All the functions of the IFC and its individual fraternities are under the auspices of the Student Activities Office.

Course and Teacher Evaluation

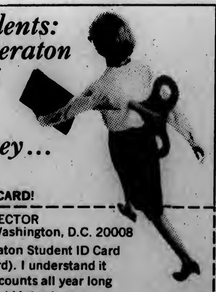
summary of the evaluation of the course and teacher. This summary will be checked by a student board of editors for lack of objectivity and mistakes in spelling and grammar.

A minor obstruction has presented itself in the form of the Dean of Student Activities' refusal to allow the SGA to install the telephone needed for the evaluation in the SGA office. No concrete reason was given for this refusal. Freind could not understand why the SGA would not be allowed to install telephones in their own office with their own funds. "In the Student-Faculty meeting, we were given permission to pursue the Course and Teacher Evaluation with whatever means we thought was best. This refusal to allow us to install telephones, which are vital to the success of the project, seems entirely inconsistent with the agreement of the Student-Faculty meeting. Time is now of the essence and such an obstruction could definitely jeopardize the success of this project," said Freind.



Anyone interested in helping on this project is urged to sign up in the SGA office or see Charlie Murphy, director of the project.

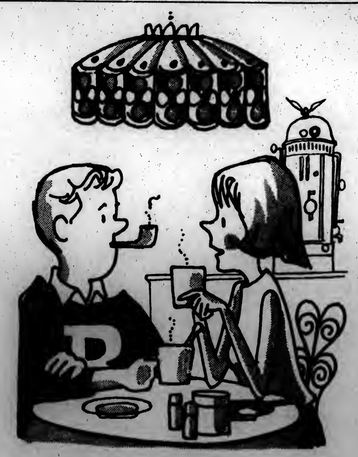
Amherst College Historian Concludes Lecture Series



The Villanova History Department will sponsor its final lecture of the Spring Semester on Wednesday, March 23, at 4:30 p.m. in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall. The guest speaker will be Dr. George Rogers Taylor, noted Economic Historian from Amherst College.

Dr. Taylor received his Ph.D. from the University of Chicago in 1929, and he has been a Professor of Economics at Amherst College since 1939. Aside from his teaching duties, Dr. Taylor served as senior agricultural economist in the U. S. Department of Agriculture in 1938, and as a special advisor to Paraguay.

Editor of the JOURNAL OF ECONOMIC HISTORY from 1955 to 1960, the lecturer is presently one of the editors of the Amherst series entitled "Problems in American Civilization." He is the author of TRANSPORTATION REVOLUTION, 1815-1860, and co-author of THE AMERICAN RAILROAD NETWORK.

In keeping within his field of specialization, Dr. Taylor will speak on "American Urban Development and Economic Growth, 1783-1860." The History Department cordially invites all students, faculty, and friends to attend.

Al Norcott Elected As Station Manager Of Campus Radio

Al Norcott, a sophomore electrical engineering student has been elected Station Manager of campus station WWVU. Succeeding Bill McCloskey, he will assume office on April 16. The changeover will officially take place at the annual VILLANOVAN-WWVU St. Augustine award dinner. At the same time the St. Augustine Award will be presented to a top name in the journalistic field, selected by the University.

Norcott will name his staff officially at that time although a staff meeting at the station has been called for tomorrow at 10:30 a.m. to present the new staff heads and co-ordinators to the members of the station's staff.

Norcott is 19 years old and a resident of Verona, New Jersey. He, like McCloskey, is looking toward a career in professional broadcasting. He hopes to begin his ambition sometime this summer at a station in the Philadelphia-Trenton area.

Other candidates for the office were Essa Abed, John Lellis and Dave Buscher. Elections were held last Monday night.

Security Officer Thomas Reilly Dies In Dougherty Hall

Mr. Thomas Reilly of the Villanova campus police died suddenly in Dougherty Hall on March 15th. The cause of death was an apparent heart attack. Mr. Reilly, a retired member of the Philadelphia police department, had been here at Villanova for the past four years. He is survived by a sister and several nephews.

Mr. Reilly's viewing took place last Friday evening at the Fitzpatrick Funeral Home in Roxborough, and a Solemn Requiem Mass was offered on Saturday at the St. John Baptist Church in Philadelphia. He was buried at George Washington Memorial Park.

Belle Masque Set for Play 'Death of a Salesman' to Bow

The Belle Masque Drama Society of Villanova University will present its Spring production, DEATH OF A SALESMAN, by Arthur Miller, on March 31, April 2, 3, at the school's field hours.

A suburban epic of tragic stature, the play is marked by expressionistic tendencies by its stream of consciousness technique. Willy Loman, the main character, is a positive figure believing that there is something of value in life. Yet he fails in his striving for security--for himself and for his family--because of his utter faith in dreams and business cliches. Miller, unlike other modern playwrights, is unafraid to make definite moral pronouncements on approaches to life.

Showing that the fable created by Miller in 1949 is just as suitable here in 1966, several changes have been made by the director, Mr. Kenneth Resinski. Included, for example, is a set with heavily realistic and moderately expressionistic overtones.

First presented on Broadway in 1949, the play won immediate acclaim from the critics as well as several awards, including the Pulitzer Prize, the Drama Critics Circle, and the Donaldson Award.

The lead role will be portrayed by Mr. Brian Morgan, a Junior General Social Studies major at Villanova. Morgan, who starred in A MAN FOR ALL SEASONS, describes the play as "a tragedy of American suburbia, exhibiting the modern trend in drama extolling the anti-hero." The play will be directed by Mr. Kenneth Resinski. In addition to Morgan, the cast includes, among others, Mike Sutherland, Jackie Hallmark and Angie Mywick. The last two mentioned are students at Immaculata College. Gene Gleason is production manager, technical director is Rick Berry, and Mike Sutherland designed the set and lighting.

Prices of tickets are $1.25 for students and $2 for general admission, with group rates available for those interested. Curtain time is 8 p.m.

Electrical Engineering Dept. Receives NASA Grant

A second year of study is being begun by the department of Electrical Engineering in the field of the application of digital computers as an engineering tool of electronic circuit analysis. The study is undertaken by virtue of a research grant from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration in Washington.

The purpose of the research is to evaluate the existing digital computer programs of circuit analysis from both industrial and governmental sources, to make recommendations for meeting the space instrumentation requirements, and to develop theoretical background for new approaches in the general area of computer-aided design.

As the research program is entering its second year under the grant of $30,000 its principal investigator is Dr. Tsute Yang assisted by Professor J. J. Hicks and Grad. Student C. P. Rich, Jr.

At present these men are using computing facilities both on and off campus. Part of the computations are being performed at the computation center in Mendel Hall. Other phases are done at other institutions which feature more extensive compution accommodations.

One of these facilities is a direct access line between the Engineering college and the General Electric computing facilities at King of Prussia.

Keep It Clean!

With the elections of Class Officers fast approaching, the VILLANOVAN feels that some notice should be taken of the manner in which the elections have so far progressed.

Although the races for most offices are just getting under way, and candidates have announced their candidacy, despite their great reluctance to push themselves on their fellow students, the race for President of the Student Government Association has been going on for some time, albeit somewhat unofficially. To date, this election race has progressed as one might expect an unofficial campaign to advance: quietly, with the two leading candidates discussing their platforms and their qualifications with all those who possess, influence, or can spell the magic words: VOTE AND HALF-VOTE.

The VILLANOVAN has had the opportunity to watch both men at work, and cannot fail to be impressed by the fact that both seem determined that this campaign be conducted on a level befitting the office which is sought.

Both men concede the unquestioned abilities of their opponent; but they do more than that: they avoid the smear phone-call, the personal comments in all their irrelevant glory, the personality attack which some view as the ultimate weapon.

The programs of the two candidates are irrelevant to our purpose: like all campaign platforms they are built, of necessity, on the rotted timbers of something for everybody.

What is relevant to our purpose is to point out that last year, the University community in general and the members of the Congress in particular were subjected to a carnival. Neither side can be made to shoulder the original guilt, but once the first pot full of mud was thrown, all hands jumped in and revelled in the filth bath as if it were a beauty treatment.

This has, so far, been avoided. The VILLANOVAN applauds the fact that no one's shirt has been splattered as yet. We do know that the campaign poster, at least the faces shown to the student body, are clean. We hope they stay that way.

You Can Help

The VILLANOVAN has a staff of newsmen who report; rewrite men who turn the reports into readable, meaningful, material; and featured columnists who reflect a diversity of opinions on a world of matters.

However, the core content of this or any publication must be the editorials and "think pieces," the stories which seek to reflect not just personal opinion, but also mature judgments of the world around us.

Some members of the staff have been lax in their duties, working only sporadically or not at all.

But when the last tally is taken, the blame cannot be placed upon the few who failed; it could not even be considered the liability of those who have made the effort. In the last analysis, the blame must lie with you, THE STUDENTS. You do not seek after the posts open to you; you do not look at the world around you; you do not commit yourselves as adults should, must do.

We have no illusions about the VILLANOVAN: it is not perfect, only attempting to approach that state.

On Campusing

In the area of discipline we do admit there is a need for a certain amount of remedial action in order that Villanova be better able to fulfill its functions as a University and its duties to the parents of resident students.

In light of several recent complaints, we find it necessary to make note of some apparent incongruencies.

In the first place it is basically agreed that punishments should be where possible both related to the offense and where possible constructive. It is our belief that campusing is a destructive form of punishment. In a series of interviews with students we find that basically campused students do NOT use the time for study since they are usually in a bad frame of mind because of the penalty.

We learned in a series of interviews with members of the administration that there are in effect, apparently on a limited basis, a series of lesser punishments. These include, among others, getting up early in the morning to report to the guard house and for lateness, deduction of time from the next late permission. We heartily endorse these and other methods of discipline for less serious breaches of the rules.

It is pointed out that many of Villanova's rules are "in line with those of other local colleges." In this light we would like to make two points. One, that other area girls' schools have a system of grace minutes for their students to use over an assigned period to avoid the possibility of being campused for being a few minutes late. Unfortunately this punishment still takes place here.

Secondly, we would like to point out that while we agree that some sort of similarity should exist between rules here and those at other schools, it does not follow that just because other schools have a rule that the particular rule is good. Villanova should be striving to be the best in all fields.

In order to avoid some recent problems we would like to call for some modifications of the present system:

1. Bulletin boards should be used to notify students of required meetings when there is a chance that these students cannot be individually contacted. These boards should be in Dougherty, or other halls, where most students congregate sometime during the day. Students should be informed how often they must check these boards to avoid missing notices. Word of mouth communication is not enough. For large meetings there should be at least 24 hours notice.

2. If a student is to be disciplined in such a way that the plans of others besides that student will be affected, he or she should be notified BEFORE permissions are given and preferably by the Monday before a weekend campusing.

The obvious solution to a lot of the time problems facing the freshman girls at Villanova is the addition of a dormitory for their use on campus. We join members of the Administration in hoping that this is feasible in the near future. However, during the period that this is not possible, we side with the student in asking that all girls be given permission to stay on campus to use the library in the evening. Use of the library is an important factor in building higher marks and we fail to see how low marks can be used as an excuse for not permitting someone to remain on campus for library use.

We welcome suggestions from all involved for more constructive and related punishments. In the long run we look to the day when a student court will be in use here. We also congratulate the administration on the enviable overall deportment of the student body. It is due, we are sure, in great part to their planning and involvement.

Letters to the Editor

To the Editor:

Last week, the annual A.P. and U.P.I. "All-Publicity" teams were announced. Some guy named Goukas made second team, but Bill Melchionni's name was given honorable mention. For those of us who have had the pleasure of seeing all of Billy's games this year, the omission of his name from the first three teams can only be viewed as a great injustice.

One need only compare the abilities of Bill and Goukas to see this. Our 'Clops has hit for 27.6 ppg. and 47 per cent from the floor. Goukas can't hold Billy's sneakers in this respect. They are equal in defense, Bill being quicker, Goukas just plain bigger. Even in assists, supposedly a Goukas monopoly, statistics should prove them about equal, and Goukas has better shooters supporting him.

So again a fine ballplayer and Villanova are deprived of well-earned recognition. Last year it was "Wash" -- he didn't score enough, remember? What's 27 points and 6 or 7 assists a game while being double- and triple-teamed? Probably doesn't rebound enough!

Phil DiGiacome, Jr.
Class of '68

To the Editor:

A note of congratulations to the Class of 1966 for launching the Senior Pledge Drive. This is a program that has been highly successful at other colleges and universities, particularly Boston College, and will, I am sure, meet with like success here at Villanova. If it does, the Seniors will have much to be proud of, and justifiably so. The effects of a successful drive, conducted by the students to the students are too many to be able to list in such a short letter. However, let me point out the most important as I see it.

Villanova is the largest university in the state of Pennsylvania receiving no part of its operating income from taxes. Consequently, they must depend on other sources of revenue in order to stay on top of today's very competitive business--private education. As a result the University turns to those it services for financial aid: the alumni, the parents, corporations and foundations. The first two groups are captive audiences because of the obvious relation; the later two are not so captive. They must be convinced of the need.

When the school can point to her own students who have recognized this need and are doing their part to meet it, half the battle is won. Likewise, this is an incentive to alumni and parents who know that their efforts in be-

Bible History Redone

by Jim Brennan

In this massive historical novel, Michener attempts to bring to new life the history of the long dead - and simultaneously to provide the unscholarly reader with a course in Biblical history. Michener's new novel is set in the Galilee region of Israel, where an archaeological team has been assembled to excavate the site of the fictitious Biblical city of Makor.

As in HAWAII a series of historical novellas are embedded in a meandering narrative. They run through 12,000 years and 909 pages and include thoughts on mythology, theology, sociology, philosophy, ethics, political science, and the history of religions.

At each of 15 chronological levels extending from 10,000 BC to 1948 AD, the archaeologists make a significant discovery and for each discovery the author creates a tale.

The shaping of the Jewish religion has a special fascination for the author and this interest enables the reader to better understand key chapters in the history of Judaism.

Through the major characters, Michener discusses some of the perplexing issues confronting the new Israel: the treatment of the Arab minority within the state; family life in the collective villages; the constant dialogue between the Israeli and the American Jew, each committed to his own way of life, and, perhaps most important, the conflict between religious orthodoxy and the needs of life in a modern state.

Examples are given where application of the old law seems harsh and obsolete compared to the liberal standards of today. Yet Michener strives to view such questions in their historical context, and sympathizes with the necessity for adjustment rather than a rejection of the religious heritage in a secular Jewish state.

Of course for the less imaginative reader there is the usual amount of sex and sensation; Cannaite fertility rites, Roman butchery, Spanish torture and nondenominational rape.

The Source is a study of the old and new Israel - a work you will not read in one night and maybe never even finish.

Sutherland of Belle Masque Fights CBS for Production

by Jim O'Hare

Michael Sutherland, President of the Belle Masque Society, is a person who will stand up for his rights and fight for something he believes in, but when he decided to challenge the Columbia Broadcasting System, no one thought he would have much luck.

Much chagrined when C.B.S. announced the airing, via national television, of the play THE DEATH OF A SALESMAN, for April 3, the same weekend that Belle Masque was planning to present the same play here at Villanova, Sutherland decided something must be done. Since the Belle Masque is doing the play March 31, April 1-3, he felt that a televised version of the same play on April 3 might hurt attendance at the Villanova production.

Sutherland felt it would be only fair that C.B.S. postpone the showing, since Belle Masque had announced those dates long before C.B.S. had.

Of course, no one thought the mighty C.B.S. would rescind their decision, but none the less, the following letter was sent to C.B.S.:

Dear Sir:

A theatrical undertaking involves preparation insofar as planning, co-operation, and time are concerned. When we selected the dates (March 31, April 1-3) for this semester's show DEATH OF A SALESMAN, we did not realize that it would conflict with your showing of the same play on April 3. Since our commitment was made last year previous to the announcement of your forthcoming production, would it be possible in the interests of college theatre to cancel or postpone your showing, at least in the Philadelphia area.

We realize that the interests of CBS will most likely prevail, despite the strong possibility that it will be a financial loss. Therefore, as an alternative would it be possible to arrange a private showing for our organization?

Please do not think us presumptuous, but we must consider our own interests. Our commitments have been made and it would be impossible to change our dates.

Respectfully,
Michael Sutherland
President

Two weeks went by, and it was beginning to look like the letter probably arrived at C.B.S., was read, provided a few laughs, and was then discarded. So Belle Masque would have to go on with the production and try to do their best in fighting this overwhelming competition.

However, to his complete amazement, Sutherland received this reply March 4th.

Dear Mr. Sutherland::

I want to acknowledge your letter to Mr. John Schneider, and to thank you for writing to us.

For reasons unrelated to your letter, we have just announced the fact that our presentation of DEATH OF A SALESMAN has now been scheduled for Sunday, April 17, instead of Sunday April 3. This was a scheduling decision, but I note from the dates indicated in your letter that, happily for you, this does not conflict with your own theatrical presentation of the play at Villanova.

I trust that your own production is a successful one, and I hope that you and your colleagues will have an opportunity to enjoy DEATH OF A SALESMAN when it is presented on April 17 on the CBS Television Network.

Sincerely yours,
Charles S. Steinberg

And thus everyone was satisfied; Sutherland got what he wanted and C.B.S. got a free plug in the VILLANOVAN.

Wilkinson Stresses Class Participation

by Walt Baginsky

Dr. Robert E. Wilkinson, who next September will receive an associate professorship, came to Villanova in 1957. In a recent interview, he said sincerely, 'I like Villanova, and have been very pleased during my stay."

Dr. Wilkinson received his A.B. from Stonehill College in 1952; MA. from Boston University in 1956; and acquired his Doctorate at the University of Pennsylvania in 1965. Dr. Wilkinson's doctoral thesis concerned the works of Theodore T. Dreiser.

His main literary field is Modern American Literature with special emphasis on the 19th Century era. He is most intrigued with the area of American Naturalism.

When asked to comment on his teaching philosophy, Dr. Wilkinson replied: "The college professor must like the student, like to teach, and like his intellectual field; if he likes all these he will be successful in his profession and will make a success of his life." He also feels that the college professor should always pile the work on the individual, and keep the students busy. He believes that the teacher should never talk down upon the student, but rather should attempt to raise up the student intellectually.

Dr. Wilkinson feels that Villanova's students are maturing intellectually and beginning to appreciate an education for its intellectual value. He believes that too often Villanovans take too great a pragmatic attitude toward an education. He believes that the pendulum may have started to swing in a new direction.

Dr. Wilkinson believes that the true student should be a thinker, questioning affairs in the intellectual realm, and should not accept per se a professor's lecture. Rather, he feels that a student, if he has valid grounds, should challenge a teacher's possible static discourse.

For extra-curricular interests, Dr. Wilkinson enjoys swimming. Also, for the past three years he has been moderator of one of Villanova's fraternities, Delta Pi Mu, but has admitted that he has not been able to give as much time to moderating as he would have liked.

If communications were good enough you could stay in the sack all day

Moving your body around is highly inefficient.

If communications were perfect, you would never have to. Of course, you would still have to get exercise. But that's your problem.

We want to make it easier for you to contact people, learn, get information, attend lectures, and hold meetings.

We developed Picturephone* service so you can see as well as talk when you call. And be seen, too. We introduced Tele-Lecture service (two-way amplified phone calls) to let you hear lecturers in distant locations. And so you could ask them questions no matter how far away they were.

Right now, many students can dial from their dormitories to a language lab. Soon a student will be able to dial into a computer thousands of miles away to get information for his courses.

Depending on the nature of the information, he might get his answer back audibly, printed on a teletypewriter, as a video image, or a facsimile print.

Some of these services are available now. Others are being tested.

For the next week or so, better get a move on.

SENIOR WEEKEND 1966

Friday
March 25
And Saturday
March 26

This Senior Weekend Supplement is the first in the VILLANOVAN'S history. The Class of 1966 has been unique in many aspects of its performance. Setting records on the political scene, the class has always been in the fore of social and extracurricular activities. From the Halls of Orientation to the Shores of the Parting Festival, the 66ers have 'hung in there.' Let this supplement stand, then, as a tribute to the graduating class. Best of Luck in Viet Nam.

This Year's Concert

By Tom Dabney

On Friday night the Senior Class will host a unique combination of musical talents. The artistry of Peter Nero and Dionne Warwick will lead off the weekend festivities with a three-hour program of highly enjoyable music.

Both Mr. Nero and Miss Warwick have attained prominence in the field of popular music for their individual styles.

Miss Warwick, whose musical training started with choir and gospel singing, has progressed to become one of the leading vocalists in her field both here and abroad. She enjoys great acclaim not only for her many single hits, which include "A House is Not a Home," "Wishin' and Hopin'," "Don't Make Me Over," and others, but also for her concert tours throughout Europe, which have gained her an international reputation.

Mr. Nero began his climb to fame with a classical musical education at The Julliard School of Music, which he has since integrated with his love for jazz. His reputation rests not only on his style, but also on his tremendous ability to entertain with music. He has played in the country's leading night clubs and concert halls and is the winner of two coveted Grammys, the music industry's equivalent of the Hollywood Oscar.

Both will offer an outstanding selection of music which will undoubtably cover selections from their newly released albums as well as some of their already popular "trade-mark" numbers.

The Past Years' Concerts

Peter, Paul and Mary, the Four Freshmen, Sarah Vaughn, George Shearing, and the Roof Top Singers. These are among the entertainers that have performed before the Villanova Senior in the last four years.

The Class of '66 was first exposed to a college concert in October of 1962 when the Four Freshmen highlighted Homecoming Weekend. Later that year the Junior Class presented Peter, Paul and Mary, at that time the newest and most popular folk group in the country.

As sophomores, the Class of '66 enjoyed a Villanova Homecoming victory over the University of Buffalo. That night the Chad Mitchell Trio made their first Field House appearance. Sarah Vaughn and the Four Preps were presented by the Class of 1964 later in the year in a concert that was a Villanova innovation, the appearance of two major performers in a single concert. The Juniors outdid the Seniors, however, by presenting three featured performers, the Phoenix Singers, Carolyn Hester, and the Four Freshmen.

Last year the Class of '66 presented Peter, Paul and Mary for their second appearance in three years. Homecoming weekend featured the jazz piano talents of George Shearing and the popular folk singing group that recorded, "Crooked Little Man," the Serendipity Singers.

Controversy and Contradiction

By Don Franz

Gene FitzMaurice is a contradiction causing controversy.

He won nearly a dozen titles for the Beta Gamma Society, then quit the team halfway through college. He is an outspoken critic of the SGA, yet one of its most active chairman. His editorials on the Theology Department have caused great comment, pro and con, but at the same time he has rescued the Religious Affairs Committee from oblivion with bold new programs.

He has taken the Fraternity system to task while a member of Pi Sigma Epsilon. On the staff of the LYNX, he never reviews it favorably. A theatre buff, he thinks nothing of nearly libelling the Graduate Theatre, yet puts aside his preconceived dislike of Jazz to hail LJF as an important Villanova accomplishment.

His column sometimes seems an uncontrolled attack on the college mystique, but when writing at the height of his unquestioned powers, he glimpses for us rare insights into the workings of that mystique as in "It is our Junior Week": and his short story "Who Told You To Say That?", recently won the Literary Society's award as the best contribution to the University Literary Edition for the Fall of '64.

Winner of the Political Internship, sometime Dean's List student, full-time Chairman of the VPU's Moderate Party, his activities are too numerous to mention.

As General Chairman of Senior Weekend he has reintroduced the Senior Class Concert; directed the first sellout Dinner Dance; begun the Class Party and elective Queen Contest; and supervised the first Senior Weekend section of the VILLANOVAN.

Perhaps the contradictions and controversies can be encapsuled in an irony that he would not fail to appreciate: he has a charge account at Brooks Brothers and still manages to get on well with Steve Freind.

A Message From The Senior Class President

Dear Senior:

The most rewarding social events at the school are undoubtedly the "big weekends" -- the ones you look forward to. These are the times when the class comes together for continued activity. These are the weekends that are remembered long afterward.

There has been a lot of work done to insure that Senior Weekend 1966 meets with your approval. With an honest realization of our limitations, I feel that we have quite a show in store.

I suppose that the most rewarding feeling for us is to see you enjoying yourself. It makes the long hours of work worthwhile. How about giving us the chance?

Sincerely Jim Griffin

'The Committee'

By Terry Mills

The preparation of Senior Weekend seems, on the surface at least, to be an easy task. The booking of a Concert, the choice of menu, favors, and dance band can be made in only a few hours. But under the surface is the task of following through and bringing Senior Weekend to a successful completion.

To accomplish this task, a committee of chairmen was assembled to accomplish the almost impossible task of making the Class's final social function one which would be perfect in every way.

The most important part of the Dinner Dance, staging it, was under the direction of Don Franz. Beginning last August, he directed the overall idea of the dance, and he will not be finished with his difficult task until the morning after the night before. John Gonzalez handled all of the technical arrangements at the Sheraton, while non-technical administration was supervised by Don Koshlap.

The awesome tasks of the Ticket Chairman were handled by Curt Seifert, who turned in his usual flawless performance. After four years of service to the Class, it was assumed that Curt would do us the courtesy of making at least one mistake, but all phases of his committee's work: setting up of floor plans, supervision of ticket sales, official Class invitations, outside purchases, and financial supervision were handled without error. Al Vendrasco handled all non-technical aspects of tickets sales, and the distribution of ticket materials.

Favors were entrusted to Larry Hannaway, who helped in the technical arrangements; Frank Reardon, who took charge of distribution; and John O'Loughlin who took on the little sought after tasks of delivery, auditing, and the handling of the final arrangements.

The Queen Contest this year was divided into three sections: publicity, voting, and awards. Bob Fennel handled all publicity through the VILLANOVAN. Sam Cucinotta will direct the voting aspects, and John Barrow will supervise the awards.

Class Secretary Jack Cooney teamed with Tom Ryan to keep the Class informed, beginning in October, through the Class Bulletin. Publicity co-chairman was Bob Elschner, who coordinated all newspaper publicity.

Rick Berry and John Fenlon once again teamed to handle all of the necessary arrangements for the Concert. They were appointed, as always, in October. They then, as always, disappeared. No one will see them again until after the Concert, when, as always, the evening will have been entirely successful due to their efforts.

Leo Carrol directed Ticket Sales for the Concert, while Gerry Nicastro set up all technical facilities, and Bill Woody coordinated Sales and Publicity.

All of these experts were carefully watched over, and frequently calmed down by, Bill Dolon, who handled not only Committee Coordination, but also did the art work for the Dinner Dance programs.

It may be a cliché to say that there were many others who cannot be named here because of lack of space, but it is not a cliché to say that without all of the others, it could not have been done as well, and that no other Committee could have done it better.

WHEN THE HOUNDS OF SPRING

For winter's rains and ruins are over,
And all the season of snows and sins;
The days dividing lover and lover,
The light that loses, the night that wins;
And time remembered is grief forgotten,
And frosts are slain and flowers begotten,
And in green underwood and cover
Blossom by blossom the spring begins.

A Letter From The Student Body President

Fellow Members of the Class of 1966,

As we approach the end of our college career, it is fitting that we gather together for a weekend of enjoyment and reminiscence. With the exception of the Senior Parting Festival, Senior Weekend should prove the most enjoyable and memorable event of the year for a class whose contribution to Villanova has been immense.

The history of the Class of 1966 has been one of participation, from class elections to Madison Square Garden, from scholastic excellence to Aquarama. This weekend will prove no exception. A weekend such as this provides an excellent opportunity to solidify the friendships which have been made in the past four years and temporarily cast aside those rivalries which are also prevalent.

It is my hope that each member of the Class of 1966, with a full week to recover from the New York expedition, will enjoy their Senior Weekend to the fullest.

Sincerely,
Steve Freind
Student Body President

She paused at the top of the staircase. The sensations attributed to divers on spring boards, leading ladies on opening nights, and lumpy, husky young men on the day of the Big Game crowded through her.

She should have descended to a burst of drums or a discordant blend of themes from "Thais" and "Carmen". She had never been so curious about her appearance, she had never been so satisfied with it.

Beth Burns, Senior at Chestnut Hill College, date of Ed Cusack, Mechanical Engineering major;

Mary Ann Clark, School teacher at Epiphany of Our Lord School, date of Joseph Kehl, Marketing major;

All Seniors may vote for the Queen candidate of their choice by coming to the Student Government Office, second floor of Dougherty Hall, Wednesday and Thursday of this week, March 23 and 24, and presenting their matric card at the Queen Contestant's Voting Table, each day between 10:30 and 1:30.

If any Senior is unable to vote at these times, he may pick up a ballot in the VILLANOVAN office on either of those days, at any time, and leave it in the ballot box in the Newspaper office. For your convenience, pictures of all five candidates will be posted in both offices.

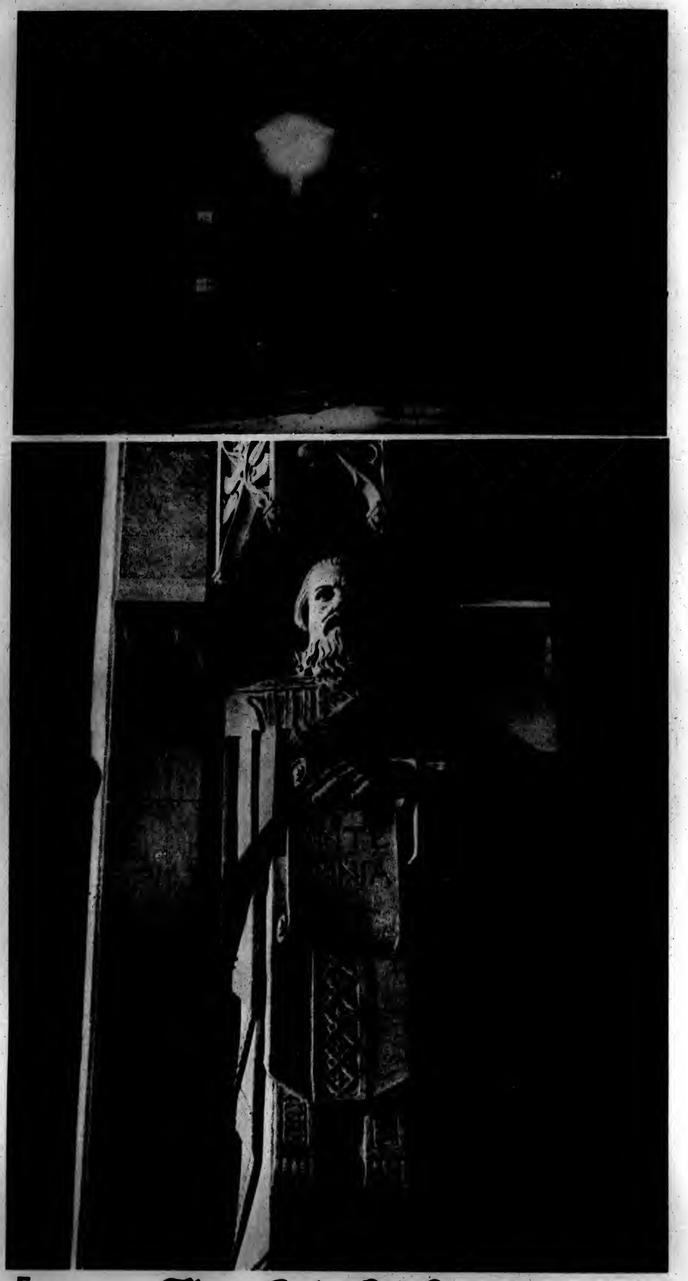
ON SECOND THOUGHT

They Have To Take You In

By Gene FitzMaurice

This section is presented to annoy the English majors; to puzzle our parents; to bore the athletes; to amuse the professors; to alienate the alumni; to snatch the placards from the protesters who are left with nothing when their foe has become their friend and their cause passe; to snatch the club matches from the contented; to rip the satisfaction from those who are contented; to assuage the fears of those who feel that something has gone unnoticed.



We have no romantic Escadrille to cross to join; we have no songs to remember; no pictures to come across in years to come. To the extent that we possess these things, they are irrelevant, because for us they are not firm enough.

We have only the realization that we do not change from one generation to another: at least not in these years. If we find, because it must be sought, all that we are expected to enjoy; and if we tell ourselves that we enjoy all that we have found, then we have lied to ourselves, because we are satisfied.

Satisfaction is for us a spore: it produces complacency, and this soon covers us and we suffocate. If we are never satisfied, then we have succeeded, for we carried throughout life our building.

Here's To You

Senior Weekend is one of those weekends in a concatenation in which the student puts away the things of the mind for a pleasant few days of relaxation and revelry. Of course, it may be hard to find a weekend when this isn't done, but then this is something special -- especially when you have to wear a tux.

The Concert starts things off -- half dedicated to those of us who still listen to WIBG and half to those of us who still listen to Larry Ferrari. But who really cares? As someone once said: "A concert is a concert is a concert." Looking back over the concerts in the last four years, it wasn't the performers who put on the shows.

Dinner Dances are always fun -- which fork should I pick up? ... my cummerbund is hiding my midriff bulge ... do you serve Bud here? ... When is dinner going to be over so that we can do some serious dancing? ... Do me a favor will you (said the date to her partner while he was picking up a favor)? ... It is now 7 a.m. and the thing is finally over ... where is the nearest Catholic Church? And a good time was had by all (Cliché City).

From This Side Of Paradise

By F. Scott Fitzgerald

"The sum of all our knowledge is ourselves to know." Milton

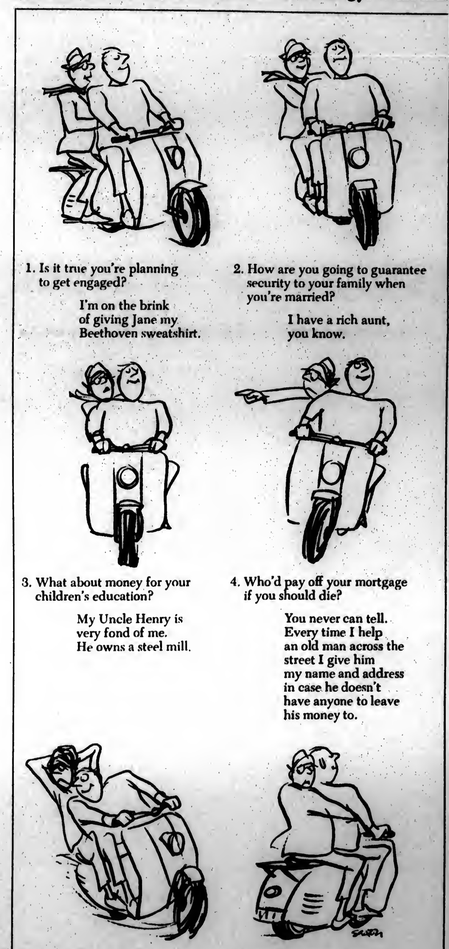
Long after midnight the towers and spires were visible with here and there a late-burning light -- and suddenly out of the clear darkness the sound of bells. As an endless dream it went on; the spirit of the past brooding over a new generation, the chosen youth from the muddled, unchastened world, still fed romantically on the mistakes and half forgotten dreams of dead statesmen and poets. Here was a new generation, shouting the old cries, learning the old creeds, through a revery of long days and nights; destined finally to go out into that dirty gray turmoil to follow love and pride; a new generation dedicated more than the last to the fear of poverty and the worship of success; grown up to find all Gods dead, all wars fought, all faiths in man shaken ...

Amory, sorry for them, was still not sorry for himself - art, politics, religion, whatever his medium should be, he knew he was safe now, free from all hysteria -- he could accept what was acceptable, roam, grow, rebel, sleep deep through many nights ...

There was no God in his heart, he knew; his ideas were still in riot; there was ever the pain of memory; the regret for his lost youth -- yet the waters of disillusion had left a deposit on his soul, responsibility and a love of life, the faint stirring of old ambitions and unrealized dreams.

"It's all a poor substitute at best," he said sadly.

And he could not tell why the struggle was worth while, why he had determined to use to the utmost himself and his heritage from the personalities he had passed ...



He stretched out his arms to the crystalline, radiant sky. "I know myself," he cried, "but that is all."

... Where are they now?

Where are Walter Jenkins, Captain Video, Arthur Godfrey, Charles Van Doren, Joe Bananas, Jack Paar, Fats Domino, Fabian, Batman, (well, we know where he is), Nikita Khrushchev, Davy Crockett, Luci Link, the Dave Clark Five, Tarzan, Charles V, the Rudds, Little Lulu, Christine Keeler, Kate Smith, Jim Scanlan and Ron Meyer? Where are you, little star? What ever happened to the World's Fair, freedom rides, canasta, saxophones, yo-yo's, Studebakers, hula hoops, aviator caps, flannel-lined jeans, Happy Tooth, the French Foreign Legion, Winky Dink and You, skateboards, the Liberty Bowl, white bucks, 78's, the Alamo, dirigibles, Alan Freed, New Jersey, sac dresses, Betty Boop, the Peppermint Lounge, Dragnet, jelly rolls, Jerry Rholz, Mr. Potato Head, the Hardy Boys, the Lucky Buck, friction-motor flamingos, the Beef N' Brew, and Cocoa Puffs? But what happened to Lyndon Johnson, Philadelphia, illegitimacy, final exams, and contempt for people who deviate from your "normal"? Nothing, I'm afraid.

I'm on the brink of giving Jane my Beethoven sweatshirt.

2. How are you going to guarantee security to your family when you're married?
I have a rich aunt, you know.

3. What about money for your children's education?
My Uncle Henry is very fond of me. He owns a steel mill.

Nothing can do all that.

Letters to the Editor

To the Editor:

The article on the Student Government Meeting by Tom Dabney contained in the March 2, 1966 issue of the VILLANOVAN misquoted the section of Motion 60 concerning re-evaluation of the theology course at Villanova. This article was ammended at the S.G.A. meeting on February 24 to delete ANY specific recommendations. This section, which had been recommended for DEFEAT at the Student Senate Meeting on February 14 originally contained two alternate recommendations:

A--that if the purpose of the courses is to be primarily a religious one, there be only a mark given of Passing or Failing, not to be counted in the cumulative average.

B--that if the purpose is to be primarily academic, then a set criterion for qualifications for a Theology teacher be established by the Administration.

In its editorial entitled "Theology: Passing or Failing" in the same issue, the VILLANOVAN called for BOTH an academic improvement in the courses and abolition of the grading system used in other academic courses. I agree that the Theology Department should be urged to put its courses on a higher academic standing, and that certain present members of the Theology Department are more qualified by their education for endeavors outside of the academic field of theology. I would, however, like to commend the Theology Department for its number of eminently well qualified members, several of whom hold S.T.D.'s and other advanced degrees.

I most emphatically want to protest the recommendatin made by the VILLANOVAN for a change in the grading system in the theology courses to merely passing or failing because this change would symbolize, as inferred in the original motion placed before the S.G.A., a non-academic shift in emphasis in the theology courses. This change in the grading system would result in the theology courses being considered merely as compulsory sermons.

Nothing can take the press out of Lee-Prëst slacks

Not that it's on his mind right now. And it needn't be. Those Lee-Prest Leesures can't help but stay crisp and neat. No matter what you put them through. They have a new permanent press. So the crease stays in. The wrinkles stay out. Permanently. And that's without ironing. No touch-ups, either. They're made from Lee's special blend of 50% polyester and 50% combed cotton. For wash and wear...with conviction.

Incidentally, that permanent press is the only change we've made in Leesures. They still have that lean, honest look...smart, tailored fit. New Lee-Prest Leesures. Test their permanent press yourself. It isn't necessary, but it's a great way to spend an evening. From $6.00 to $8.00.

High Cost of Education

by O.C. Carmichael, Jr.

The high cost of higher education is much discussed these days by the professional educators, politicians, students and, understandably, by the students' parents.

Ways must be found to ease the growing burden of tuition and fees. New sources of scholarship funds must be created. These objectives must be attained with a minimum of senseless controls and without skyrocketing administrative costs. The situation calls for fresh, imaginative thinking--precisely the kind of thinking that created the tuition tax credit proposal that soon will come to a vote in Congress.

Under the tuition tax credit concept, each taxpayer will be allowed to subtract from his tax bill a specified share of the amount he spends for college tuition and fees. Since taxpayers will be permitted to pay tuitions for any student and receive credits, new sources of funds for scholarships will be created.

As explained in the Ribicoff-Dominick bill, the maximum tuition tax credit would be $325. For example, a parent or individual who paid out $250 in college tuition or fees could subtract that amount from his tax bill. If his bill was $750, he would send the Federal government a check for $500.

Through tuition tax credits, parents and students will be aided. They will have more freedom to choose from among the nation's many fine public and independent colleges and universities. The fabric of higher education will be strengthened.

The tuition tax credit concept deserves the support of students and parents. Please write your senators and urge their support of the pending legislation.

Laughmaker at Playbox Unorganized Cliches Abound

By Joseph Linsalata

The program at the Playbox reads, "The prominent American (playwriting) team" which gave the theatre INHERIT THE WIND and AUNTIE MAME -- and now the musical MAME -- have created a sparkling lyrical play that is fun, wit and pathos. THE LAUGHMAKER is the arresting tale of two actors, the perverse wish of a woman and the world of the French theatre; it is more than a story about the theatre -- it IS pure theatre.

Perhaps these are the kindest words that can be said about THE LAUGHMAKER which opened at the Playbox last week-end for a run until April 2.

Probably the best advice to the "prominent American (playwrighting) team" of Jerome Lawrence and Robert Lee would be to re-write AUNTIE MAME and put THE LAUGHMAKER on the shelf.

A play which they call a "Valentine kiss to the theatre" comes off as an unorganized cliches of theatricality.

It is the story of the two greatest French comedians, Bocador and Gringoire who have their own comedy theatre built by a wealthy widow, Angelique. Later, she decides to marry the one comedian who is the better actor of the two. Bocador wins the contest and the play turns into a dramatization of how an actor chooses the theatre over his wife.

The production has many obvious faults, the bulk of which falls upon the playwrights. Their main problem lies in that they have neglected to portray characters: full-drawn real people. Instead they depicted narrow, underdeveloped, unmotivated confused people which they tried desperately to pawn off as characters. Bocador was the only character with any stability as compared to the others but still he doesn't come off in any profound manner.

A second major problem is the plot. The playwrights are attempting to write a serious theme, how the theatre exists as a temple and a refuge from the tragedy of the world, but in the presentation there is an inconsistency in two level of realities they try to present. The mythical and real worlds of the theatre and life are fused, disjoined and vacillated into an awkward production. The director, Richard Duprey seemed undecided as to how to separate these two worlds. His solution turned out to be a mixture of Brechtian theatre and realistic theatre.

However, it is questionable as to whether Lawrence and Lee were even able to get to the core of their subject matter.

The third major fault is the embarassing attempts at humor. Whenever the playwrights felt that the script dragged a bit, they adeptly squeezed in the worst cliches and the most immature type of comedy to allow the show to fulfill its title.

Perhaps it would be charitable to say that the actors were plagued with a poor script and an off night when I saw the production (Sunday night). Though each actor tried desperately to give justice to the little characters they played, they were more hampered by having nothing to do on stage but talk. French audiences might thrive upon this technique but American audiences refuse to accept this intellectualness. Unless the play is written in poetic style, the director must "find" some type of action to busy the actors and stop them from wondering and

Grief is graduating with a B.A. degree and no idea of what to do with it. A lot of grief is graduating with a B.A. degree and the wrong idea of what to do with it. And wasting the most important years of your life discovering (the hard way) that you chose the wrong career.

Enrolling in our Campus Internship Program now could save you a lot of grief at graduation. How? By giving you the opportunity to become involved in—not just exposed to—life insurance sales as a career. You learn life insurance as a profession, from a professional. You put what you've learned into practice, and find that a life insurance sales career pays off in dollars as well as a sense of satisfaction. By graduation, you know what you're going to do with that B.A. degree.

To the Editor:

On March 15 the foreign students of the University received a communication from the Office of the Foreign Student Advisor inviting them to form a foreign student association under the sponsorship of Mr. Narendra K. Shah of Portugal. Among Mr. Shah's proposals was the construction of a dormitory on campus exclusively for foreign students. The undersigned would like to go on record as strongly opposing any such organization or dormitory exclusively for foreign students for several reasons - to wit:

Firstly, foreign students are in the United States as guests of the American people, and it would be an insult to our hosts, to say the least, to ask for a special organization or a separate dormitory on campus.

Secondly, our main purpose in receiving our college education in the United States is to absorb all we possibly can of the best aspects of American civilization, in order to translate our experiences in this country into useful undertakings in our native countries. Obviously, a separate organization or dormitory for foreign students would be not only divisive but also destructive of the ultimate aims of study abroad.

Thirdly, we believe that any student organization of international character should have at least as many American as foreign members so that communication between American students and their foreign counterparts may be enhanced.

To that effect we suggest that the Administration approve an international association of equal number of American and foreign students with social, service, and educational goals.

To the Editor:

Re: Professor Bonniwell's letter to the editor of issue number 16, volume 41. I, too, believe that letters to the editor should be brief and to the point (if the subject matter permits). Thus: I am all in favor of his "Institute for the Study of Man"--it is just what we need here! Questions: Whom do we see? How do we start? Where do we meet?

In truth I must confess that I was disappointed that more members of the university did not express a reaction to my letter, especially the students, whose minds are not hindered or blocked by any of the prejudices that affect so many of our faculty members' minds.

One final note if I may. Having taught Commerce and Finance students both here and at other institutions, I can only agree completely with the sentiments expressed in Mr. Burt's letter (No. 17, Vol. 41). A number of my students in this school have shown a remarkable ability to cope with the concepts of the more difficult philosophy courses the university offers.

P.S. Witness the very fine work of Mr. Eugene Fitzmaurice as one of the editors of the VILLANOVAN.

To the Editor:

In the March 2nd edition of the VILLANOVAN an article concerning the meeting of the Rugby Club stated that the treasurer reported that the club received only a small amount of money from the Administration and was a victim of "Administration Apathy." I would like to point out that there was no treasurer's report given at the meeting, nor was there any talk of "Administration Apathy." I strongly request that the author express his personal opinions under HIS name and not mine.

The team does not feel that it is entitled to any financial assistance for the simple reason that it operates on a CLUB BASIS, supporting itself through the collection of dues. It is true that we have submitted a club budget and there is a possibility of receiving some assistance, which would be greatly appreciated. In my opinion the club has been the victim of "false and inaccurate reporting" rather than of "Administration Apathy."

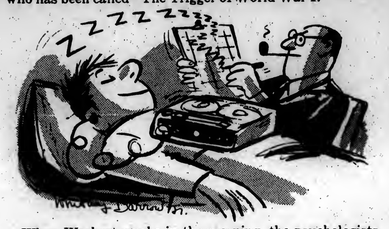
WAKE ME WHEN IT'S OVER

The trouble with early morning classes is that you're too sleepy. At late morning classes you're too hungry. At early afternoon classes you're too logy. At late afternoon classes you're too hungry again. The fact is—and we might as well face it—there is no good time of day to take a class.

What shall we do then? Abandon our colleges to the ivy? I say no! I say America did not become the hope of mankind and the world's largest producer of butterfats and tallow by running away from a fight!



If you're always too hungry or too sleepy for class, then let's hold classes when you're not too hungry or sleepy: namely, while you're eating or sleeping.

Classes while eating are a simple matter. Just have a lecturer lecture while the eaters eat. But watch out for noisy foods. I mean who can hear a lecturer lecture when everybody is crunching celery or matzo or like that? Serve quiet stuff—like anchovy paste on a doughnut, or steaming bowls of lamb fat.

Now let us turn to the problem of learning while sleeping. First, can it be done?

Yes, it can. Psychologists have proved that the brain is definitely able to assimilate information during sleep. Take, for instance, a recent experiment conducted by a leading Eastern university (Stanford). A small tape recorder was placed under the pillow of the subject, a freshman named Wrobert Wright. When Wrobert was fast asleep, the recorder was turned on. Softly, all through the night, it repeated three statements in Wrobert's slumbering ear:

1. Herbert Spencer lived to the age of 109 and is called "The Founder of English Eclectic Philosophy."
2. The banana plant is not a tree but a large perennial herb.
3. The Archduke Ferdinand was assassinated in 1914 at Sarajevo by a young nationalist named Mjilas Cvetnic, who has been called "The Trigger of World War I."

When Wrobert awoke in the morning, the psychologists said to him, "Herbert Spencer lived to the age of 109. What is he called?"

Wrobert promptly answered, "Perennial Herb."

Next they asked him, "What has Mjilas Cvetnik been called?"

Wrobert replied, "Perennial Serb."

Finally they said, "Is the banana plant a tree?"

"To be honest," said Wrobert, "I don't know too much about bananas. But if you gents want any information about razor blades, I'm your man."

"Well," said the psychologists, "can you tell us a blade that shaves closely and cleanly without nicking, pricking, scratching, scraping, scoring, gouging, grinding, flaying or flensing?"

"Yes, I can," said Wrobert. "Personna® Stainless Steel Blades. Not only does Personna give you a true luxury shave, but it gives you heaps and gobs and bushels and barrels of true luxury shaves—each one nearly as truly luxurious as the first."

"Land's sake!" said the psychologists.

"Moreover," said Wrobert, "Personna is available not only in the Double Edge style blade, but also in the Injector style blade."

"Great balls of fire!" said the psychologists.

"So why don't you rush to your dealer and get some Personnas at once?" said Wrobert.

"We will," said the psychologists, twinkling, "but there is something we have to do first."

Whereupon they awarded Wrobert an honorary L.L.B. (Lover of Luxury Blades) degree, and then, linking arms, they sang and danced and bobbed for apples till the campfire had turned to embers.

BC, Army Fall in NIT Play

came back with two straight buckets. Once again Army came back, this time narrowing the lead to 33-30 at half time.

The second half was all Villanova, as Joe Crews and Bernie Schaffer combined with Melchionni to open the lead to as much as 17 before settling for an 11 point victory. Crews scored 15, Schaffer 14.

Along with Melchionni, Bernie Schaffer, Kevin Traynor, and Larry Livers all played their last college games during the tournament. Schaffer turned in a tough 17 point performance in the Boston College game, and closed out his career with 14 against the Cadets. He was Villanova's big man in rebounds throughout the tourney, and finished his college career averaging over 10 points and 8 rebounds a game.

Traynor, a backcourt man, was not known for his scoring, but his hard-nosed defense, and coolness under pressure saw him start many a ball game this year, and he was a key factor in many a 'Cat success with his hustle and aggressiveness.

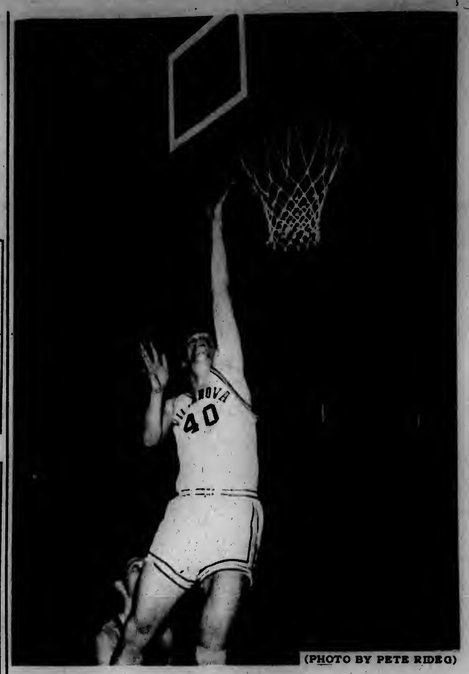
Livers, playing organized ball for the first time since high school, proved an invaluable sub, and ignited the spark to victory on several occasions this year. Used mainly on defense because of his quickness and leaping ability, it was his scoring that proved the key factor in a couple of close ball games won by the Wildcats this year.

A lot of credit also goes to the development of several of the underclassmen. Frank Gaidjunas started picking up steam almost half way through the season and went on to become the 'Cats leading rebounder, while he raised his average to over 9 points a ballgame.

Pete Coleman returned to the team after mid-semester and not too long after had cracked the starting lineup. The flashy 5'11" guard was a perfect running mate for Melchionni, and on more than one occassion showed sparks of the form that had made him a High School All-American.

Joe Crews, only a sophomore, developed into a good, steady college forward. He rallied the second half of the season to take over second place in the team scoring with an average of almost 11 points per game.

Terry McGuire picked up the nicknames "Desire" and "Super-Sub" due to the hustle and drive he showed while filling in as the number one frontcourt reserve. The 6'5" junior forward made the difference with his scoring and rebounding on more than one occasion, and virtually became the "Coach's boy" by the way he responded in so many clutch situations.



Above all, special credit should go to Coach Kraft for the wonderful job he has done in turning this year's team into a winning combination. Before the game Coach Kraft told the boys to "go out a team." They could not help but -- that was what he has made them.

The Sports Department of the Villanovan Wishes to Extend Congratulations to Coach Kraft and the Team for Their Fine Season and Third Place Finish in the NIT.

Cats 2-Mile Relay Wins at Cleveland; Hall Third in Hurdles

By Bob McIntyre

Villanova's Indoor-Track team traveled to the state of Ohio, last Friday to compete in the final indoor track meet of the season. The meet was held in Cleveland and the Cat's coaches decided to take only nine members of the squad with them.

All nine men garnered points in the events they competed in. In the two-mile relay event, Villanova took first place, outlasting a tough Eastern Michigan team, in the time of 7:35.1. The all sophomore team was composed of Al McCafferty, Craig Nation, Ian Hamilton and Indoor I.C.C. Mile Champion, Dave Patrick.

MILE RELAY

The mile relay finished third behind the strong teams of Georgetown and Eastern Michigan. The team of Harold Nickter, Ken Prince, Bill Hiedelberger, and Bill Grant ran well, but the absence of injured Earl Horner, is sorely missed.

Frosh sensation, Ervin Hall, ran the 50 yard hurdles and placed third against Willie Davenport of Southern University and Pat Pomphrey, Tennessee. It can be said that much will be heard from this hurdler in the future.

The coaches of the track team would like any sophomore, junior, or senior, who has had practical experience in shot-putting either in high school or elsewhere, to report to Mr. Tuppeny immediately.

Wildcats Place Third in NIT

Terry McGuire goes up for a layup in the 86-85 win over Boston College.

By John DiGennaro

Villanova, led by senior captain and All-American, Bill Melchionni, defeated a scrappy Army team 76-65 to take third place in the National Invitational Tournament, and close out one of their finest seasons with an 18-11 mark.

Melchionni, playing his last game for the Wildcats, led all scorers with 29 points and was voted the Most Valuable Player award of the 29th annual NIT. Previously, he had scored 33 against St. John's, 30 against Boston College, and 17 against NYU. His 109 total points place him 26 ahead of runners-up Stan McKenzie, and Mal Graham, both of second place finisher NYU, and made him fifth highest scorer in the history of the tournament.

He finished the season with a phenomenal 801 points, good for a 27.6 average, and bringing his career total to 1612 points, which ranks him fourth on the all-time Villanova scoring list behind only Bob Schafer, Larry Hennessy and Phil Arizin.

Actually the boys ended their season the same way it began with a game against Army. It was back in the Holiday Festival last December when the team was struggling along with a losing record that they met Army and were humiliated by 21 points. However, from that game on they were a different team, so much so, that they ended the season by taking 13 of the last 15, and then beating Army by 11 in their Consolation Game rematch.

The 'Cats set the stage for their third place finish by knocking off St. John's and Boston College, before falling in Thursday night's semi-finals to a determined NYU team. The Boston College game promised to be a honey, featuring a big, fast, Eagle team and their soph hot-shot Steve Adelman, against a hustling, defense-minded Wildcat quintet and their own super-scorer Bill Melchionni.

After five and a half minutes, led by Melchionni's two steals and 9 points, the 'Cats held a 12-9 advantage. Boston tied it at 14 all, but from there on in the Wildcats, paced by Melchionni's 18 first half points, slowly pulled away to a 46-39 advantage at intermission. For awhile it seemed like the 'Cats were going to run away with it as they streaked to a 70-55 lead with a little over 10 minutes remaining to be played, but the Eagles had other ideas, and were soon using a three-man press to good advantage while nibbling away at the lead.

The closing minutes were frantic as the Wildcat's once commanding lead had been narrowed to under five. Both teams threw away numerous chances, Villanova on the foul line, and BC with floor errors, but the 'Cats managed to hold a three point lead into the final 10 seconds. The Eagles had the ball, but the 'Cats were not about to help them as they scattered to let Doug Hice drive in for two points. With three seconds on the clock Villanova never tried inbounding, and the buzzer treated them to a thrilling 86-85 victory in the quarter finals.

Thursday night was to be a battle of the Cinderellas, as the last two teams selected to the 14 team field bared their teeth for the semi-final showdown. Billed as a "battle of the guards," Mal Graham vs. Bill Melchionni, it was anything but that as Graham fouled out, and Melchionni was held to his tournament low of 17. Meanwhile, Bruce Kaplan was connecting for 17 second half points, the 'Cats were having trouble finding the range, and NYU was turning a five point half time deficit to a game winning total.

Kaplan a 6'4" senior forward found his outside touch and kept breaking the Wildcat zone with his 20-25 footers. With NYU ballhandler, and shooter Graham fouling out, the 'Cats had over 7 minutes to try and cut their 9 point disadvantage, but Kaplan turned glove on Melchionni, NYU kept converting their one-and-ones, and the Violets were on their way to the finals.

Usually consolation games are more a burden than a pleasure, but not so for the 'Cats -- they wanted another shot at Army. With a little over four minutes gone in the game Villanova had jumped out to an 8-2 lead, and they were never to be caught. Army closed the gap to 23-20 with 6:22 left in the first half, but Melchionni

'65-'66 Kraft's Finest Year; Five Season Total 105-37

By Tom Wilson

Sportswriters, pre-season prognosticators, and opposing coaches had predicted a dismal season for the Wildcats. Debilitating defeats suffered at the hands of Penn and Princeton seemed to confirm these dark predictions, and even Bob Vetrone of the evening BULLETIN stated that the Wildcats would be fortunate to win five games.

Wildcat fans reached a consensus that the outlook was dim, but saw a faint glimmer of hope through the despicable criticism aimed at the Wildcat cagers. For Jack Kraft remained at the helm, faced with the insurmountable task of molding an atypical Villanova squad into a semblance of a basketball team that would uphold the Wildcat tradition of post-season tournaments.

Lacking the fast break, run-and-shoot tactics, so characteristic of Villanova teams in the Wally Jones-Hubie White era, the 1965-1966 season would tax Kraft's coaching skills to the limit. Kraft's basic strategy in each game shifted to a tough switching defense and a controlled offense.

The 1-2-2 zone was temporarily shelved when the situation called for a man-to-man or full-court press. By quickly switching defenses and skillfully manipulating players, the inexperience disappeared and confident, experienced ball-players emerged.

Coaching involves a critical analysis of strengths and weaknesses, combined with the responsibility of maintaining spirits among the players. After an ignominious defeat inflicted by the Cadets of Army in the Holiday Festival, Kraft made it known that he was displeased with the team's performance, and the players realized that his coaching was ineffective unless they responded. Respond they did.

Billy Melchionni, Frank Galdjunas, Bernie Schaffer, Kevin Traynor, and Joe Crews displayed an indomitable spirit and drive that overpowered Colorado State, and Georgetown in the Holiday Festival, serving notice to all opponents that the Wildcats had come of age.

Billy Melchionni set a sizzling pace with his prolific scoring and fine playmaking. The vastly improved Wildcats were determined to land an NIT berth under the expert coaching of Jack Kraft. Victories over Detroit Duquesne, Memphis State, Niagara and St. Bonaventure had impressed the NIT selection committee, but it was the tough victory over Depaul in Chicago that convinced the NIT that Kraft's 'Cats were of tournament calibre. Garnering an NIT bid was no easy task for the 1965-66 Villanova team, but talent was replaced with sheer hustle, desire and determination, and plaudits are due all members of this year's edition of the Wildcat cagers.

St. Patrick's weekend found the Wildcat squad in Madison Square Garden. After avenging last season's championship loss to St. John's, the Wildcats clipped Bob Cousy's Boston College team in a rugged contest, that saw Kraft's chargers advance to the semi-finals, the Wildcats had convinced the NIT that their desire for success and thirst for victory would take them further than the opener against St. John's.

Thus, our third place finish in the NIT earned Jack Kraft more national recognition as an outstanding coach, with great analytical ability. Perhaps even more gratifying to Jack Kraft and the rest of the team was Billy Melchionni's being named the Most Valuable Player in the New York tourney. The jubilant Jack Kraft told the press that he was deeply pleased with Billy's leadership and ability this season.

Consequently, Melchionni's MVP award was no small tribute, as Billy the Kid paced the Wildcats to a magnificent triumph over the Cadets for a third place finish in the NIT, and led all NIT scorers with 109 points. Kraft would call this a fitting climax to a fantastic collegiate career. "Billy deserves all the recognition that he gets;" stated Jack Kraft. But so does Jack Kraft. Kraft-coached teams have received two NCAA bids, 3 NIT bids, won 2 ECAC championships, the holiday festival in New York City, and the Quaker City Tournament at Penn's Palestra.

Kraft's 105 victories, according to Bob Vetrone of the Evening Bulletin, place him on an elite national list of only 15 coaches to reach this pinnacle of success, 100 victories in five years. Jack Kraft has remarked that this year's team has given him "more satisfaction than any of the other four." Jack, we agree -- this was not only your greatest season -- this was one of Villanova's greatest basketball teams.

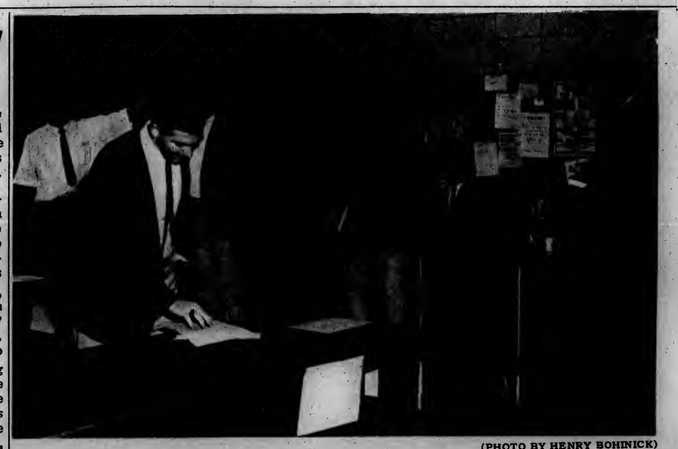
Belle Masque Presents Play 'Death of a Salesman'

The Belle Masque Drama Society of Villanova University will present its Spring production, DEATH OF A SALESMAN, by Arthur Miller, on March 31, April 2, 3, at the school's field house.



A suburban epic of tragic stature, the play is marked by expressionistic tendencies by its stream of consciousness technique. Willy Loman, the main character, is a positive figure believing that there is something of value in life. Yet he fails in his striving for security--for himself and for his family--because of his utter faith in dreams and business cliches. Miller, unlike other modern playwrights, is unafraid to make definite moral pronouncements on approaches to life.

Showing that the fable created by Miller in 1949 is just as suitable here in 1966, several changes have been made by the director, Mr. Kenneth Resinski. Included, for example, is a set with heavily realistic and moderately expressionistic overtones.

First presented on Broadway in 1949, the play won immediate acclaim from the critics as well as several awards, including the Pulitzer Prize, the Drama Critics Circle, and the Donaldson Award.

The lead role will be portrayed by Mr. Brian Morgan, a junior general social science major at Villanova. Morgan who starred in A MAN FOR ALL SEASONS describes the play as "a tragedy of American suburbia, exhibiting the modern trend in drama extolling the anti-hero." The play will be directed by Mr. Kenneth Resinski. In addition to Morgan, the cast includes, among others, Mike Sutherland, Jackie Hallmark and Angie Mywick. The last two mentioned are students at Immaculata College. Gene Gleason is production manager, technical director is Rick Berry, and Mike Sutherland designed the set and lighting.

Prices of tickets are $1.25 for students and $2 for general admission, with group rates available for those interested. Curtain time is 8 p.m.

Students vote in Bartley Cafeteria for their favorite candidates as last week's elections reached a fever pitch. From Go-Go Girls to the Greyson Girls, it was an unprecedented election year.

Elections Set Precedents, Go-Go Girls Draw Crowds

By Bill McCloskey

At least three precedents were set Thursday as members of three classes elected their officers for the coming year.

For the first time in recent memory sisters were elected to similar posts in separate classes, two class presidents were re-elected and go-go girls were introduced to Villanova elections.

The go-go girls were probably the least successful of the innovations, based on reports available so far. John Bosacco, sponsor of the dancers, lost the election 392-250 setting up half of one of the other precedents. Rick Holwell, the 1967 incumbent President won that election. The other repeat winner was Tom Conway, Class of 1968 president who was an almost 3-1 victor over Jay Meginniss (466-182). Dave Mullen, at the head of the CATS ticket, took the Class of '69 presidency by 2-1 over both of his competitors actions Joe Kilroy and Winning Hand's Art Halleran.

The sister-act was won by Phyllis and Rosemarie Greyson who were elected Secretary of the Class of '67 and '69 respectively, both by wide margins.

There were few surprises in the elections but several very close races. The biggest winners were Conway by 272 votes and Jeff Radowich, vice-presidential candidate in the Class of '67 who won by 272 votes.

Winners were announced by George Valva over WWVU Radio which had set up election coverage headquarters in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall. The radio coverage was also unprecedented; for the first time the elections committee allowed WWVU to have early totals for broadcast starting at 2 o'clock. The final tabulations were announced at 3:40, less than an hour after the polls closed. This was the earliest announcement of the winners in SGA history.

There were few changes between 10:30 figures and later figures, indicating that minds are not changed on election day. In almost all cases those ahead in the first figures were the winners in the final counting. The go-go girls had a negative if any effect on Bosacco's drawing power. Many politicos on campus attributed this to the fact that the appearance by the KYW dancers went too long and kept people from the polls.

The Juniors had the highest voting percentage, 70%. This was still several percentage points behind the Class of '66 record turnout of a year ago. The Freshmen with 852 presidential voters had the highest number turnout, with 64% of the class turning out at the polls. The Class of '68 had a 55% voter participation.

DeVries to Appear April 13; Baginsky Chosen President

The best-selling novelist and contemporary satirist, Peter DeVries, will speak at a Literary Society meeting on Wednesday, April 13, at 7:30 p.m. in Vasey Auditorium. His topic will be "Laughter in Theory and Practice."

A native of Chicago, the 56-year old writer attended Chicago Christian High School and graduated from Calvin College, Grand Rapids, Mich. After doing newspaper work and free-lance writing, Mr. DeVries was hired as an associate editor by POETRY magazine in 1939. His novels, appearing shortly after, were BUT WHO WAKES THE BUGLER, HANDSOME HEART and ANGELS CAN'T DO BETTER. Later he resigned from POETRY magazine and joined the NEW YORKER staff.

In 1952 appeared a collection of his short stories entitled NO BUT I SAW THE MOVIE. Up until this time Mr. DeVries wrote that his readers comprised a "small but undiscerning band." The New York Times Book Review commented, "There's the meat of social satire here."

His best-selling novel, TUNNEL OF LOVE, was selected by the Atlantic Book Club and later was adapted for a long run on Broadway and the movies. This was followed by COMFORT ME WITH APPLES, THE MACKEREL PLAZA which attacked the foibles of suburbia, and THE TENTS OF WICKEDNESS. A Book-of-The-Month Club selection satirizes the revolutionaries who have become stereotyped and conformist.

Mr. DeVries has received a grant from the American Academy of Arts and Letters and the National Institute of Arts and Letters. The Literary Society lecture is free and is open to the public.

Officers for 1966-67 were announced after the elections. They are: Walter Baginsky, 1967 president; Gerald Shoelkopf, 1967 vice-president; and Richard Wagner, 1969 secretary-treasurer.

Concert and Dinner Dance Highlight Junior Week '67

With the 1965-66 scholastic year coming into the homestretch here at Villanova, the Class of 1967 is focusing its attention on Junior Week, 1966, which will ensnare the Villanova scene this year from April 18 to April 23.

Under the leadership and organization of President Rick Holwell and General Chairman Jim Donegan, the Junior Week Committee has planned a stimulating and enjoyable week of activities.

The week kicks off on Monday, April 18 with Mother's Day. The main events planned by Chairmen Brant, Ruth, and Zoubek are an outdoor Mass in the grotto, a catered luncheon and entertainment in the Field House. Also included in this eventful day

Singers, Band, Glee Club Perform at Spring Concert

The musical organizations of Villanova will present the annual Spring Concert on Sunday, April 17. The concert, in conjunction with the Junior Mothers' Day will feature the Villanova Singers, the Wildcat Band, and the Women's Glee Club.

Highlighting the program, the singers will premier Mueller's "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God," Nelson's "Behold Man," as well as a medley of lighter numbers. Old standards such as "Waltzing Matilda," the unofficial national anthem of Australia, and "Night and Dreams" are given a delightful and entertaining treatment. Specialty selections by the "Spires" will add some lighter folk numbers to the program.

The Wildcat Band, perhaps better known for their performance at rallies, football games, and basketball games, will occupy a segment of the program. The highlight of their program will be Richard Rogers' stirring "Victory at Sea." Also appearing on the program will be Cacavas' "Days of Glory," as well as "Concertino for Clarinet Solo" by Von Weber, featuring Don Nardone as clarinet soloist, and "Concertino for Flute Solo and Band," featuring James Watson as flute soloist.

Poli Sci Lecture On Urban Renewal Set for April 13

The Executive Director of the Philadelphia City Planning Commission will give the spring political science lecture on Wednesday evening April 13 at 7:30 p.m. in 110 Bartley. Edmund Bacon's topic will be "The Renewal of the City of Philadelphia."

A world-famous city planner, Bacon has helped to guide the renaissance of Philadelphia which has taken place in the last fifteen years. His work -- especially in the Penn Center and Society Hill projects -- is a mecca for architects and city planners throughout the world. Recently Bacon's picture appeared on the cover of Time magazine.

At the recent White House Conference on Natural Beauty, Bacon was one of six participants who summarized the conference for President Johnson in the final session held in the East Room of the White House. Among Bacon's special concerns at that Conference was the threat to urban parks from expressways.

Senior Giachetti Awarded Fellowship for High Honors

By Jim O'Hare

Anthony Giachetti, a senior Economics major has been awarded a National Science Foundation two year Fellowship for study toward a Doctorate in Economics. The fellowship, which can be used at any University that accepts the winner includes full tuition for two years plus a stipend of $1800 for the first year and $2200 in the second.

In addition, Giachetti will be eligible to apply for aid for a third year of study if he does satisfactorily in his first two.

President of the Gamma Phi Honor Society, Tony has attained a cumulative average of 3.79 through seven semesters. Accepted for graduate work at Harvard, Columbia, and the University of Pennsylvania, he will most likely attend Harvard starting this fall.

A native of Glen Cove, Long Island and an alumnus of St. Mary's H.S. in Manhasset, he plans to concentrate in the area of monetary theory at Harvard. After he attains his Ph.D., Tony is looking forward to a career in teaching or research.

The personable senior is not the only Fellowship winner in his family; his sister Adele, a senior at the University of Toronto has recently been awarded a Woodrow Wilson Fellowship for Graduate study in English.

There are three men in particular Tony believes who helped him to attain the fellowship: Mr. C. Gerald Walsh and Mr. J. J. King of the Economics Department and Dr. Robert Rowland, Graduate Study Advisor. The first two, Tony feels, did much to encourage him and help him in his major field. Dr. Rowland helped immensely, as he has helped dozens of others desiring to do graduate work, by his unselfish devotion and interest.

Inside Kopper's Kettle

By Bob Elschner

A Twentieth Century drama scholar, Dr. Edward Kopper received his undergraduate education at St. Joseph's College. He was awarded his M.A. in 1961 and his Ph.D. in 1963 from Temple University.

Recently appointed an Associate Professor of English, Dr. Kopper has been teaching for the past eight years with experience at Temple and St. Joe's. He has written a monograph entitled,

Dr. Edward Kopper

"Catholic Allusions in FINNEGANS WAKE" published by Northwestern in 1964. During his leisure time he might be found hunting in Green Mountains, Vermont.

In a recent interview, Dr. Kopper commented that the big difficulty with Villanova students is that they are trained to see one correct answer. "In discussing literature," he said, "they fail to see that truth can be approached in many ways. This helps to destroy academic curiosity." To alleviate this difficulty he suggested that students come to class with the realization that they have probably seen only one aspect of what they have read and that the class discussion by both the teacher and the other students will reveal other levels of meaning equally valid.

Dr. Kopper cited several prerequisites for improving the educational process at Villanova. He believes that the system should be more tutorial, that more work should be done outside of class especially in the freshman liberal arts courses. "More time should be allotted for conferences in place of a highly stylized three class meeting a week."

Evaluating liberal arts students, Dr. Kopper said, "I have found that many of them are very much interested in my own field, the Twentieth Century, and that several of them are able to apply the ideas in the works to contemporary problems."

He believes that the increase of modern literature courses in the curriculum has helped to make Villanova a more liberal institution than many Catholic colleges.

When asked about the student course evaluation, Dr. Kopper replied "Generally a good idea, but I feel a bit uncomfortable being judged by the very students that I am expected to elevate by my teaching."

In discussing student, faculty and administration relationships he thinks that the desire of the students, especially the upper classmen has tended to lesson rigidity. It would be helpful if the administration and the faculty assist this movement, which is apparently countenanced by the more and more open debate on Church practices throughout the Catholic world. "For example," he continued, "it is difficult to maintain an atmosphere of intellectual curiosity when such works as the innocuous novels of Thomas Wolfe and the outdated social critiques of Theodore Drieser are placed in Villanova's separate Index called 'the Cage'."

Dr. Kopper feels that it is the joint responsibility of literary critics and students to decide whether a work of English literature is of value or not. "We should bear in mind," he emphasized "that Villanova students are being educated to cope with both moral problems and secular difficulties and that they will enter not only a Catholic world upon graduation but a social world which is frequently antithetical to Catholic Doctrine. Here ignorance is once again a man's worst enemy."

In concluding the interview, Dr. Kopper positively emphasized that he has never been forced in any manner to refrain from saying anything in class that he would have said in another university.

Zoubek Named New Editor; Yearbook to Be Out Apr. 20

John Zoubek, a mechanical engineering major from West Orange, New Jersey has been appointed editor-in-chief of the 1967 BELLE AIR.

The announcement of the appointment was made today by Mr. Thomas Linahan, of the Mathematics Department, moderator of the yearbook. Zoubek is the first engineering student to hold the post in several years.

The appointment of Zoubek gives two of the major posts on campus to students who live within two miles of each other. Al Norcott, station manager-elect of WWVU holds the other post. A similar situation existed this year with Steve Freind, SGA president and Bill McCloskey, WWVU manager who both live in Upper Darby and attended Malvern Prep together.

In addition to his activities as social editor of the 1966 Belle Air Zoubek is co-chairman of Mother's Day and Vice-President of the Blue Key Society.

He has appointed Sue Sharp to succeed him as Social editor. Other appointments include Tom Sebastian as Business Manager, Terry Wilson as Senior section editor, Frank Samer as organizations editor, and Laurel Kerwin as typing editor.

Zoubek told the VILLANOVAN that the other appointments will be made shortly.

The 1966 edition of the book will be out April 20.

Pictures are now being taken in St. Rita's Lounge for the 1967 BELLE AIR. Juniors who have not made an appointment are urged to go to the lounge and make an appointment. Pictures will be taken until next Wednesday.

Quite A Year

It has been a banner year. A year of controversy -- no doubt -- but in spite of, or perhaps because of that controversy, it has been a 'time to keep.' Each year has its highlights. This year has been a highlight unto itself.

The tendency to disparage such things as the SGA, the Administration, the Faculty, school Spirit, student politics, and individuals who are notorious for 'making waves,' has found more than fulfillment in the pages of this journal. Yet each of these entities has borne remarkable fruit. A list of accomplishments would consume the rest of this page. It would include such things as the SGA's Academic Improvement Bill, Course and Teacher Evaluation, Used Book Exchange (saved students nearly $7,500), and Student Court; the Administration's increasing concern for THE STUDENT (examples: agreements on new Book Store, Evaluation and student self-discipline); the Faculty's growing willingness to express their ideas, to develop closer relations with students, and to work for improvement of the University; the Basketball Team and Basketball Club's tremendously successful NIT campaign; and the students' unprecedented degree of PARTICIPATION.

But these accomplishments pale in comparison to the atmosphere of which they are products. A momentum has been developed. The campus exudes a certain excitement -- best characterized perhaps as an 'aura of eagerness.' It is a vibrancy created by the students themselves -- and we salute it.

A Time to Move Ahead

The intellectual climate at Villanova has never been at a high level -- the term "intellectual" implies a man with a complex of intense and deep interest in scholarly and cultural pursuits; an openness to and an active seeking out of the mysteries and beauties of life. In the past few years, it is apparent that the climate has been improving -- with the advent of such notables as Mantovani, Anna Moffo, Martin Luther King, et al. However, these things are external manifestations of a growing awareness that Catholic education must become more involved in the real world of people and ideas. Men with different views must be brought to campus to lecture on their specific fields. Literary figures, significant people associated with the history of ideas, and great philosophers should also be on the program of the Villanova Forum along with the politicians and the statesmen.

We have some suggestions for the improvement of the intellectual atmosphere at Villanova:

1. All students should promote the idea of Federal Aid to Catholic Education -- especially higher education.
2. Students can gain more responsibility by deserving it. We can deserve it by taking an interest in our education, student government; by giving an opinion of the education we are getting to the school newspaper, to our teachers, and by asking for needed improvements. The administration can cooperate by listening to students who are not afraid to say what they think about the school.
3. We can improve the student-faculty relationship by getting to know our teachers better, by having informal coffee clatches, and by necessitating a change in certain courses.
4. We can and should demand more freedom on campus. For example, there should be no compulsory class attendance, complete freedom of publications on campus, less emphasis on conformity, and freedom of inquiry in all intellectual endeavor.

Letters to the Editor

To the Editor:

Perhaps a total lack of coverage by your newspaper is one of the fringe benefits which accrue to a newly christened major sport.

If it still has not come to the attention of your sports staff, it may interest them to know that on March 10-11-12, the Eastern Intercollegiate Swimming Championships were held at Navy.

Exceptional among the many fine performances turned in by Wildcat swimmers were those of Mike Fitzmaurice. Fitz, easily the outstanding swimmer of the meet, not only posted the fastest time for the 100 yd. freestyle, but also won the 200 yd. individual medley and the 200 yd. freestyle in meet and pool record time.

For this feat he rated a six-column headline in the March 11th edition of THE NEW YORK TIMES, but not so much as one sentence in the weekly newspaper of the school he represented.

Reporting (or a lack of it) such as this is indicative of the attitude of the Athletic Department, the student body and the university newspaper toward swimming at Villanova. Why not get on the ball?

Ray Curran
Class of '66

Ed. Note: Sometimes in the welter of activity on and off campus, a reporter will not cover a story assigned to him. This has been the case with swimming. Every week, articles on swimming and other sports are assigned. Unfortunately, they are not always covered. The printer's deadline precludes us from writing stories when they are not turned in by the reporters.

To the Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to thank all those who worked for us and supported our ticket during the recent elections. But most of all, I would like to thank the majority of our class, those who voted. We must have this type of participation and interest if we are to have a successful year. Concerning plans for the coming year, I would like to assure the members of our class that we plan to incorporate the good points of all the platforms of the three candidates and work with them to make our Sophomore year as perfect as possible.

To the Editor:

The petty, flamboyant displays of sour political bickering seen at several of this semester's SGA meetings have been exceeded for their bad taste only by your Editorial on the subject last week.

VAMP Aids Mexican-American Relations

By Karl A. Kottman
Graduate Assistant

For many years the United States and Mexico which neighbors on its southern border existed independently, exerting little influence on one another. Both passed through remarkably similar colonial periods. When the United States was formed from some of the American colonies of Great Britain, Mexico was just completing extension of the Spanish Empire into Northern California. However, in time, it too officially broke with the European mother country during the general collapse of the Spanish Empire that followed upon the fall of that country to Napoleon.

The two young republics still had little common cause. In fact the United States developed politically and economically very rapidly, eventually at the expense of half of Mexico's territory, now the states of the Southwest. Our prime national concern with Mexico was an effort to keep potentially harmful European interests out of America, this being the interest of the Monroe Doctrine.

Territorial invasion of Mexico in 1845 was soon followed by the economic invasion of the late 1800's during which time large investments were made there by American interests anxious to obtain the materials necessary for use in developing industries at home. At this time Mexico became an appendage to the economy of the United States.

This situation was severely modified by the series of violent political revolutions in Mexico in the early part of the present century. These solidly established Mexico as a national identity, giving it sound government and an increased awareness of its national destiny and goals. Mexico today is a nation hard at work establishing the economic and political framework it needs to achieve its new national purpose.

Today, however, these two nations are fully sovereign entities occupying the same continent. Mexico now influences this country. We have common interests in which we cooperate as full equals. In short, Mexico now matters. It behooves us to know our neighbor.

In recent years, this new interest in Mexico has been obvious in the changing attitude of our government. It has been becoming in Mexico. Many Americans have travelled there for business and pleasure, resulting in an increased awareness of this nation to the south. Mexicans are equally interested in the United States. Many are coming to see this country. Most important for the future, however, there is currently a great exchange of students in preparation for the greater international contact that is to come.

This trend has reached to our own campus at Villanova in the form of the Villanova Aid to Mexico Project. This movement is perhaps not really an aid project in the sense that a charitable organization is. Its real purpose is to promote an international awareness on the campus and in its work in Mexico. It is just one facet of the whole development of Mexican-American relations.

VAMP is a group of students, unfortunately a very small group, who are interested in going to Mexico to see what is there at first hand and to know some of its people on a personal basis, and to be seen and known in return. They go offering what help they can to their hosts to manifest the spirit of neighborliness they wish to see promoted on an international level.

Who are the members of VAMP? They are average students from all sections of the university, freshmen, graduate students, seniors, and sophomores. They include coeds as well as students from fields connected with Mexico in some way.

All have felt the influence of their experience in Mexico and carry it into their life's work. VAMP has reached most Villanova students through its appeals for financial aid. This year it hopes to send 13 students to Mexico at a cost of about $3000.

It has received help in this in the past from the administration of the University, from the SGA, from the Knights of Columbus, and from the subscriptions of many students and their parents.

VAMP has just completed the raffle of a Honda to raise funds. Its value to Villanova is found in the fact that it affords a concrete opportunity to the students and faculty to enter into the growing awareness in our country of its neighbor, Mexico, and in Mexico's awareness of us as we really are.

VAMP holds its weekly meeting on Tuesdays at 7 p.m. in Corr Hall. The agenda of these meetings include weekly lessons in Spanish, given by Juan Garcia, a VU student; lectures on culture and conditions in Mexico, the one most recently being given by Dr. Cyrus Sharer on the geography of Mexico, and coordination of fund raising efforts. All this leads to the day when the group will depart on its eight week stay in Mexico.

After VAMP at Villanova, VAMP in Mexico should be considered. VAMP is one of several hundred such groups on campuses across this nation and Canada. All these groups are coordinated by the Conference on Inter-American Student Projects, a non-profit Mexican corporation located in Mexico City.

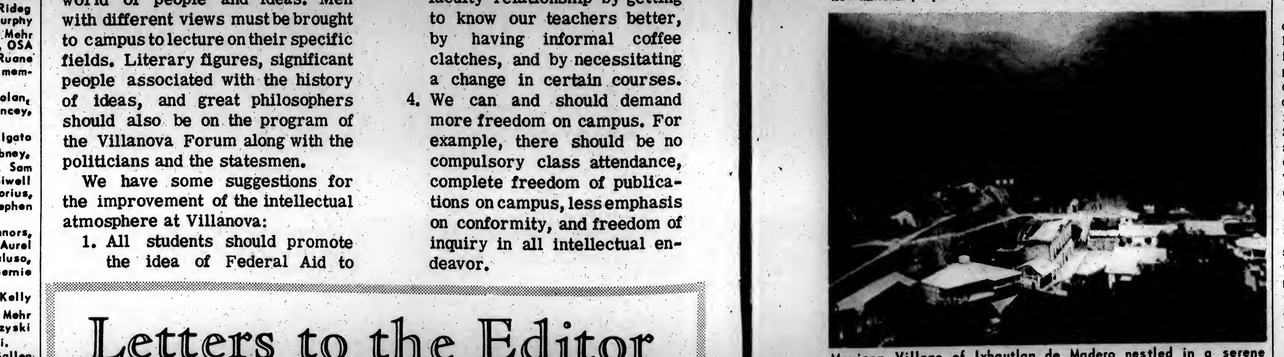
It affords a week-long orientation program in the Mexican capital including lectures given by experts from its own directory and from the National Institute for the Protection of Infancy, an agency of the Mexican Government.

This program gives an insight into the Mexican culture and national life which are so different from our own. The Conference also provides such essential services as general supervision of the placement of student groups in projects, health insurance and general advice in the execution of the project taken on. Usually these projects are located in small Mexican towns or villages, but sometimes as well in the larger cities.

What have Villanova's projects been like? Last summer a group of four students from Villanova took as their project Ixhuatlan de Madero, a small town fifteen miles or so from Alamo, the site of the previous year's project. After the initial week of orientation in the capital the group drove to Alamo where they left their automobile.

They journeyed thence by third class bus, climbing higher into the mountains of Veracruz state in the area directly west of the coastal city of Tuxpan where the aquatic part of the 1968 Olympics will be held. The bus trip ended at a small rancho where they were met by Padre Alfredo Anguiano who had invited them to his pueblo. After a quick meal of meat in sauce, tortillas (flat corn cakes), beans and cheese, the priest and his four visitors continued on horseback.

The trip to Ixhuatlan entailed crossing a swift river in a dugout which meant removing the saddles and leaving the horses to swim behind. The river prevents any trucks or buses from getting to the town. All commerce is on the backs of men or mules.



The entry into the town was at night. Candles and kerosene lamps reflected on the tile floors of houses whose doors were open to the balmy summer evening as they passed.

After a night in an inn the group had its first view of the pueblo. It is no more than a large plaza with buildings facing it with one street of houses behind them. Here live the townspeople who are the merchants, tradesmen and ranchers of the area. At one end of the plaza is the church, partially in ruins. At the other end is the Mexican Village of Ixhautlan de Madero nestled in a serene valley.

All this has altered relations between our two countries. No longer do we have a weak and divided nation at our doorstep. We cannot consider it as relatively unimportant to ourselves. Mexico does not fit the old stereotypes of land of poverty and heat, of peon and ranchero.

It is, rather, a unified hard-working nation whose future holds great promise. Up to now there has been little cultural contact with it, however. Americans have felt little need to concern themselves seriously with what happened below the border. Both peoples have developed from their respective English and Spanish origins, each knowing little of the other.

nearby campuses. They are individuals of differing interests, some in one field, some in another. They all are desirous, however, of knowing Mexico and are willing to take what hardships they will have to undergo in spending eight weeks of their summer in a rather remote part of that nation in order to gain the experience that will serve to greatly develop their personal outlook on the world.

No one who has ever been on a VAMP project came back unchanged in his attitude toward Mexico, toward the United States or in their idea of their own place in the world. VAMP is a challenge taken up by those who wish to become aware of what is going on in the world at large.

VAMP was started at Villanova in 1963 and has continued under the moderation of Father Michael Gallagher though many of its former members have since graduated. Some of these graduates have become medical students, social workers, graduate students in

It's All in the Mind

THE SERPENT WALKED
By Jose Middlecovf
Putham Sons Ltd.
London

The scene is an upper middle class neighborhood somewhere in Harlem. From the outset Mr. Middlecovf makes it clear to his readers that he is a disciple of the neo-Reichian school of political thought. All of his characters are sexually frustrated, or at least wish they were.

The noble protagonist in this tale of the social and political intrigues of the Poverty Program in New York is Busby Abraham, a local administrator and small potatoes ward heeler.

His efforts to secure front doors for two penurized families are met with scorn and chuckling disbelief by the appointed Co-ordinator of Front and Rear, Hinged and Swinging Entrance and Exit Facilities. All this merely because Abraham's secretary (his wife @ $1500. per) misspelled the address on a request form on the fifteenth and sixteenth copies.

The scene soon shifts to the lavish and imposing office of Earl McCool, the local criminal big wig behind the selling of cheap wines to winos and the weekly WHO'S CHILD GETS ET BY RATS pool. McCool is represented as the free swinging tight fisted, old school con-man type. (He carries a violin case.)

The author tries to show off his tremendous vocabulary in the next sequence of dialogues between McCool and Bill Buckley, another small time, big mouthed politician from the upper sixties.

Buckley has a master plan to establish relief money for all the people on relief. At this point the whole thing turns into one of those Joycean Fantasies with Abraham, McCool, Buckley, and a fellow named Wagner from the local Nazi goon squad, all running down a tread mill near the river Liffy screaming "alms for the poor," and getting kicked in the back of the head by an irate Klansman from Staten Island.

Admittedly, the plot becomes a bit difficult to follow at this point, but it's well worth the effort.

HEROINE

Next we meet the heroine of the whole (N P I) tale, a certain Mrs. Wallace, whose husband follows her around wrapped in an old bedsheet murmuring bible tracts. It seems Mrs. Wallace wants to straighten the mess out by running for governor of the state of confusion.

The whole bunch next turns into a screaming mob of blood crazed junkies, all of whom have been duly elected to some office or other. They settle down to a rational discussion of the Negro problem, and finally decide on a mass fix for the entire city of New York.

This seems to be the central theme of Mr. Middlecovf's work! The city needs a fix. Of course, this line of thought is covert and heavily creamed over with deep symbolism. The city is represented by a map of the United States being injected with a Symbolic hypodermic needle in the form of an inter continental ballistic missile.

Mr. Middlecovf's style is vaguely reminiscent of Thomas Wolfe. This similarity is strikingly apparent in the following passage, a soliloquy by Abraham:

> My thoughts are pulsing like a great locomotive, full of steam, and sweat and glory, they swell up in me wrenching my shaking trembling body from the very roots of its self conceived oblivion.

Of course, as might be expected, Abraham gets it in the end. He is slain in the quiet of a Harlem night by an itinerant slum lord run amok. All of his noble intentions go up in an existential smoke when his files are burned during the wild days of wine and rioting that serve also as his epitaph.

Mr. Middlecovf is to be congratulated for his cogent and capable handling of so much controversial material. Mark Twain could not have done better.

Villanovans in Mexico

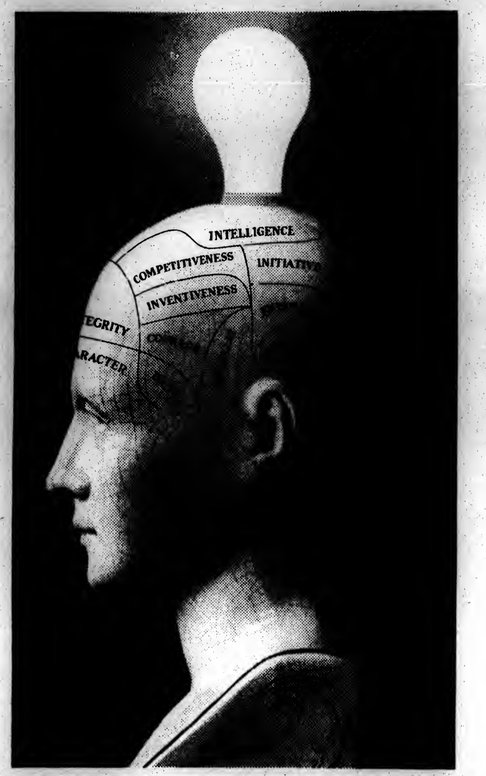
municipal "palace" - equivalent to a country court house. Here are housed the local government and a detail of soldiers sent to enforce a law against carrying weapons.

It was not long before each VAMP member was given over to one of the families who took care of his meals and in one case his lodging. Three of them slept under a corrugated steel roof adjacent to the church. The group began working with the priest to excavate dirt and stone in preparation for building a retaining wall on the church grounds. This constituted several hours work each morning for the seven weeks they were there.

At the invitation of the director of the local school, three of the group taught English to the two fifth grades and one sixth grade. This proved to be an enjoyable experience for all concerned. All Mexican children regularly study English in the secondary school (junior high school) so the group was giving them a clue to what was awaiting them.



The day in Ixhuatlan started at 7 a.m. Breakfast was usually sweet rolls, tortillas or some varient of this Mexican stable, beans, cheese, and usually eggs, meat or avocadoes. Fresh milk and coffee, both locally produced were abundant. Since there is no refrigeration, all meat has to be dried for use during the week since it is butchered only on Saturday.

The larger meal was at 1 p.m. It always consisted of the staples - tortillas, beans, cheese and avocado and a MOLE or sauce with meat. Supper was at 8 p.m. It was dark at suppertime. They ate by kerosene lamp and candles. Afterwards, without proper lighting, there was nothing to do but retire.

Sundays were always different. It was market day. The plaza was set up with tentlike shelters and Indians from the surrounding ranchos streamed into town to buy and sell. There were two Masses said by Padre Alfredo, but only a few Indians attended. The Mexican townspeople almost never went to church.

The food was always good on Sunday for the market brought fresh meat, vegetables and fruit that would not stay fresh through the week. In the evening on Sundays the group was invited to a gathering of the young people for dancing and some drinks. These were rather formal affairs by our standards, but it was good to dress up a little at least once a week.

General Electric is an easy place to work.

All you need is brains, imagination, drive and a fairly rugged constitution.

Oh, yes. Something else that will help you at G.E. is an understanding of the kind of world we live in, and the kind of world we will live in.

There's a lot happening: The population is continuing to explode. The strain on resources is becoming alarming. At a time when men are being lured by the mysteries of space, we're faced with the task of making life on earth more livable.

There's a lot happening at G.E., too, as our people work in a hundred different areas to help solve the problems of a growing world: Supplying more (and cheaper) electricity with nuclear reactors. Controlling smog in our cities and pollution in our streams. Providing better street lighting and faster transportation.

This is the most important work in the world today: Helping to shape the world of tomorrow. Do you want to help? Come to General Electric, where the young men are important men.

What's Wrong With Evaluation?

By Donald Brooks Kelly
History Dept.

I have had an opportunity to study rather carefully the proposed Villanova Faculty-course evaluation procedure and to talk with a number of faculty members concerning it. The typical response of our faculty, it seems to me, is to approve of student faculty-evaluation in principle, while killing the proposal in effect by a welter of qualifications, objections, and endless "protective" amendments.

Let us begin with the admission that there is risk involved in such a procedure, just as there is risk perpetually involved in any attempt to enlarge the freedom or responsibility of the individual. But concomitant with risk there is opportunity--opportunity to approach more nearly the self-professed goal of teaching excellence to which Villanova aspires.

The proposed Villanova student faculty-evaluation is, with minor exceptions, a rather conservative and moderate one. It is radical only in the sense that it forces faculty members into a competitive world where dedicated service to the students is of the essence. If Villanova is to become a great university, its faculty must compete, not only among themselves, but with other university faculties. This competition can take the form of student evaluation of teaching ability, or it can move in the direction of "publish or perish," that baneful doctrine which has stifled teaching excellence and filled our scholarly journals with a sea of pompous trivia.

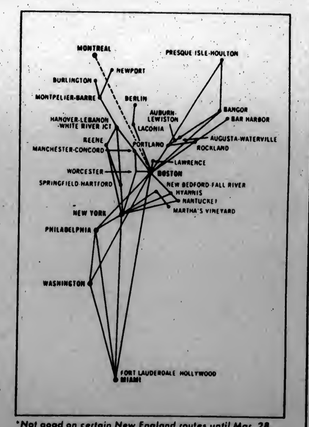
What is the major objection to student faculty-evaluation? In essence, it centers on the alleged immaturity of our student body and its presumed inability to evaluate its own educational process. On the face of it, this seems to me a damning admission of the total failure of our whole system of collegiate training. But let the allegation stand, at least in part. It is certainly true that students are not qualified to evaluate everything. They cannot, for instance, assess professional competence in depth. So student faculty-evaluation should be taken for precisely what it is: STUDENT evaluation.

But students are competent, it seems to me, to evaluate, and evaluate rather fairly, the preparation their faculty expend on class lectures; the care with which their teachers organize and articulate their material; the effort with which their mentors seek to combine the interesting with the informative and to make their class discussions as relevant and pertinent as possible to the needs of their students.

Villanovans, as with all college students, are capable of separating teachers who work with them as genuine human beings, from those who treat them as intellectual ciphers to be disregarded as much as possible. It just might be, also, that Villanovans have an ingrained sense of justice and fairness and that they can tell the difference between a teacher (however difficult) who carefully and meticulously grades his own papers, from one who turns the whole job over to his graduate assistant. Would it be too irreverent to suggest that, with a few of our faculty members, this is precisely what is "wrong" with the proposed student faculty-evaluation?

HEY!
WHILE YOU'RE STILL AT THE GREAT AGE FOR DISCOVERY (12-21)
COME WITH US. WE'LL MEET YOU HALF WAY

Northeast's new ½-fare plan puts that dream trip almost in your pocket.



If you're 12 through 21 years old and have the urge to discover, Northeast Airlines' new "great rate" club card lets you fly anyplace we go (except Montreal) for half the price of a regular jet coach ticket.*

From Maine to Miami, the coast unrolls for you like a map. Ski trips, surfing, to and from school—whatever—it's all yours at half the price.

You'll travel on a space-available basis, and the deal doesn't swing on a few special days of the year—but that's hardly a hitch at all.

Easy to get? A cinch. Go to any Northeast Airlines ticket office. All you need is $3 and proof of age. Get your card and zoom. (As a matter of fact, if you already have a card from another airline, that's good enough for us. They'll honor ours, too.) And here's an important thing to remember: any age, any place, Northeast treats you like a guest, not just a passenger.

It's a great deal . . . at half the price.

*Not good on certain New England routes until Mar. 28.

Occasionally Padre Alfredo would go into the hinterland to make a circuit of the ranchos where the indians who work the land live. He always took a different member of the group with him. Once two members walked to a far away rancho in the next state called San Lorenzo where the only Spanish speaking inhabitants were the priest and schoolteachers. It is a fact that a majority of the indians of the area speak no Spanish. There are three distinct languages spoken there. One is Nahuatl, the tongue of the Aztec. The indians labor on the ranchos owned either by themselves or by local Mexicans. The main crops are corn and chili. They receive a wage of 80 cents a day when they work. They are really desperately poor, but do not have the means to improve their lot.

They are outside Mexican life in that they have their own culture and language. They can move into the mainstream of the national life only with an adequate education which the government is striving to give them. Nearly all the ranchos of the area have at least two or three year schools. The towns have complete primary schools. All education is free, but indian parents often do not like to let their children attend for they are useful in the work at home. Only those who can afford to live away from home go to other towns and cities for higher education.

Last summer all that was really established in Ixhuatlan by VAMP was an introduction. The goals of VAMP can be accomplished only if succeeding groups follow through. The people warmly received the members, supporting them during their entire summer by letting them eat at their tables. No matter the economic status, Mexicans are perfect hosts and stand by every courtesy. But single visits are not enough. It is only through years of such projects that the American students will become sufficiently familiar to the people to allow any positive contribution they might have to be accepted.

What does VAMP need? It needs moral and financial support. It needs ideas - good ideas - whatever the source. It needs members whose interest will carry them through successive projects in Mexico during their college years and even afterward. It needs you - student, parent, faculty member - and your good will.

FOOD BID ANNOUNCED

In line with the Pie Shoppe motion, Bob Dean, vice-president of the SGA announced that Stanford Industries (Dutch Treat) of Philadelphia has submitted a request for consideration of a bid from them to operate the Pie Shoppe and Day Hop cafeteria with major changes in prices, hours and menus. This is one of several such requests received from time to time by the SGA or the Administration. Any that have been considered in recent years have been turned down. The current concessionaries for eating facilities on campus have long term contracts.

Dean also announced that the Student Government is still attempting to get Financial Vice-President Rev. Joseph Curran, OSA to implement several past motions regarding cafeteria, meal-ticket systems, sidewalks, public address systems and dormitory food machines. "So far there has been no favorable response and little response whatsoever," according to Dean. Some of the motions are over a year old.

Other motions before the Congress dealt mainly with further amendments to the already much-amended SGA Constitution. Most dealt with elections procedure or recognition of organizations for SGA membership. One, proposed by Jim Griffin, president of the Class of 1966, called for the president of the SGA to vacate his seat on the Congress upon election. This seat would then be filled by an appointee chosen by the President of the Senior class with the approval of the SGA president.

BIG BROTHER

The class of 1969 inaugurates its Big Brother program today. Aimed at clearing away some of the problems next year's frosh will face, the program will parallel similar programs which are being successfully used on many campuses throughout the nation.

Since this is the first project sponsored by the class of '69, a combined effort on the part of both the officers and members of next year's Soph class will be necessary to insure success. So if you plan to reside on campus next year, please sign up and put your application in the box marked BIG BROTHER in the Pie Shoppe.

Art Exhibit—Fools Rush In

Since it seems that we are living in an age of criticism, constructive and otherwise, I would like to jump into the mainstream of the spirit of the times by giving my humble and unsolicited impressions of the "Art Exhibit" sponsored under the august aegis of Villanova University, during March 21 and 22, 1966.

In order that you might know that it is not a neophyte nor a flighty dilettante writing this critique, but one who has been associated with art as an artist and with artists of the highest caliber, I offer my credentials (and you can take them for what they are worth,) to establish my qualification to make judgement upon this cultural sally into the field of Fine Arts at Villanova.

This portion of the letter may prove a bit boring since it is autobiographical. In the very words of an editorial (VILLANOVAN, March 2, 1966) authority seems to be of the essence. "No course is of any value if those who present it lack authority." In this part of the letter I am doing exactly that. I am establishing my authority to make judgement in a field in which I know I am competent!

I began taking art lessons when I was 14 years of age from two New England artists, Wilfred Cyr and Cyril Cyr. I remained with them for about a period of four years. During this time I spent my summer at the Gloucester Art colony and there continued my lessons with Cyril Cyr. In 1939 I entered the Novitiate in New Hamburgh, N.Y. in preparation for the Priesthood in the Augustinian Order. After that I entered Villanova where I metriculated for four years and obtained my B.A. degree in Liberal Arts.

While at Villanova I continued painting and experimented with media and techniques on my own. It wasn't until I arrived in Washington, D.C. that the opportunity was once again presented to me to put my talents and ability to use. Through Andreas Zarega, a well known Washington Artist from whom I had obtained a number of private lessons, I had the opportunity of meeting a number of Washington artists who proved to be a source of tremendous inspiration and encouragement in my work as an artist.

The Augustinian Order then sent me to the Catholic University Art School to obtain a degree in Fine Arts. After having taken the required entrance examination for the Art School I was informed by the University that I would be permitted to begin my graduate work towards my Master's Degree without the necessary undergraduate credits.

After two and a half years of study under the able guidance and tutelage of the Head of the Art Department, Clare Fontanini (respected Washington Sculptress,) I was ready for my Master's Degree. The University offered two types of degrees.

One was the M.A. in Fine Arts and the other was the M.F.A. (Master of Fine Arts). Only those approved by the University Fine Arts Faculty were permitted to receive the M.F.A. Degree. I was chosen along with two others out of a graduating class of eighty-two art students to receive the M.F.A. Degree.

My masterpiece for my degree, a hand-carved crucifix of Christ the Eternal Priest was on exhibit in 1948 at the University Art Salon. This same crucifix can be seen in the vestibule of the Augustinian Chapel in Washington, D.C.

From 1952 to 1956 I spent my summer vacation time at Provincetown, Mass., where I met and associated with many of the better known artists who had their studios and conducted art classes there. In 1960 I was asked to design thirteen plaques for the altars for the new Augustinian Seminary.

Of my thirteen designs two were accepted and elements of the remaining drawings were incorporated into the other plaques. The two designs which were accepted and may be seen in the Seminary Chapel are the St. Monica and St. Nicholas of Tolentine altars. In 1961 the Prior, (Fr. Kropp, O.S.A.) of St. Thomas of Villanova Monastery requested that I design a series of Augustinian saints for the purpose of having hand-carved wooden statues made.

These statues may be seen over the altars in the Monastery chapel. The pedestals upon which they rest were designed and made by me. A few years previous to this, the years 1958 and 1959 I taught the course "Art in Education and Methods," during the summer sessions. Since 1957 I have been in charge of the Art Department at Cabrini College and am still there in the same capacity.

For the last two years I have maintained my own little studio in the garrett of the old garage behind Moriarity Hall. It is here that I continue to work in the field of art when not teaching or preparing my Theology classes.

I hope that this (admittedly long and egotistical) documentary may suffice to establish my authority in the field of Fine Arts.

Now for my criticism of the "Art Exhibit" -- I might say as a starter that "Fools rush in where Angels fear to tread."

I went to the exhibit with the greatest of expectations hoping to see a fine professional job worthy of the sponsorship of the Sophomore Class of Villanova University. After all the publicity given the Art Exhibit, up and down the Main Line and in most of the colleges and universities in the area, what should one expect but an A number one job.

As soon as I learned that the Exhibit was going to be held in the Centre Lounge, I began to have my misgivings knowing the size and lay-out of the room. Well, when I entered, my misgivings were confirmed. More than that, I was confounded! The tasteless manner in which the art work was exhibited showed a sheer amateurism and an absolute lack of knowledge of how to exhibit art.

It was one big hodge-podge of paintings. A virtual mess with no regard for categories or spacing. Paintings and drawings resting on tables, - (ugh!), paintings resting on chairs and on the floors against the walls and windows, -(sacrilligeous!). Water-colors were mixed with oils and interspersed with drawings and collages.

A real conglommeration and manifestation of poor taste. On top of all this, as if this wasn't bad enough, the exhibit pieces competed with the permanent collection (of professional artist,) on the wall. Chaos made real!

Didn't those responsible for the exhibit realize that all framed and matted pieces, -- drawings, oils and water-colors are ALWAYS hung, and that with regard to the best advantage of the work exhibited? Didn't they know that good exhibits usually categorize works by placing drawings in one area, water-colors in another, oil in another, etc.? NEVER lean paintings against anything, especially a window.

If these basic requirements cannot be filled, then is it not a bit presumptuous to even want to have an exhibit? Do you think it is fair to the artist who certainly believes that his or her work will be shown to best advantage? There is a great deal more to putting on an art exhibit than simply showing a lot of pictures. (I'm sure that some of the better artists, (and I know there were some there,) who exhibited their work at this "Art Exhibit" would NEVER have permitted their works to be shown had they known that it was going to be the unfortunate tragedy it proved to be.

I know, I for one as an artist can truly say that I would not permit even my poorest attempt at painting to be exhibited in such a manner as was shown at the "Villanova University Art Exhibit." I think too much of my work to bastardize it in such a way.

The exhibit had a very sad run and as far as I am concerned the manner in which it was conducted was most unfortunate. So much so, that I think we would have been much better without it. Perhaps the next time an exhibit will be held at Villanova it will be done properly. I hope so.

I'm sure that all concerned with the "Art Exhibit" had the best of intentions and wanted to do a good job. But, let's face it, they just didn't have it. Next time, if there will be a next time, let us hope that it will be something worthy of Villanova.

Pessimistic? No! -- Optimistic, yes!

With best wishes and regards,
Rev. Henry B. Syvinski, O.S.A.

Father Syvinski teaches Art at Cabrini College, and Theology here at Villanova. He is a competent artist and respected art critic. (Ed.)

FOOTLOOSE AND FANCY-FREE?

Or just at loose ends? There's a big difference, you know.

Like the difference between the guy with a pie-in-the-sky scheme to get rich quick, and the man with a plan for financial security.

Or the difference between a savings plan that's hale and hearty as long as you are, and a life insurance program that keeps going strong even when you can't.

Life insurance is one investment you can make today that's guaranteed to take the strife out of life years from now. That might be worth more, from the very beginning, than you put into it. That could be worth as much, at any time, as you planned to put into it in a lifetime. And the sooner you start, the less it costs.

Got some loose ends that need pulling together? We're specialists at it . . . especially for young people.

Jeff Newman, Penn's basketball captain, took over as pitcher, but in the seventh he got tagged for two more runs as the Wildcats made it 9-3. Greenwood, who drove both pitchers crazy, drew his fourth straight walk and went to third on a double by Vonderleith. Sophomore, Steve Krines, then hit the longest ball of the day for a double and two R.B.I.'s.

Rampone, in the ninth, retired the side in order and struck out two and thus the Wildcats, finished on top 9-3, to give them a 1-0 record and make Penn 0-1.

As far as Mahan was concerned, he was pleased over the cat's showing in as much as it was their first game. The N.C.C.A. Tournament is a long way off, and the team will have to beat some excellent teams if it expects a crack at it.

The overall play of Steve Krines at third base was above par. He hit a clutch double to secure the win for Rampone and made two excellent defensive plays.

Sam Greenwood, might be shooting for "walk on" of the year, if he keeps up the pace he set in the opening game. He walked four times and scored four times, showing both teams some excellent base-running which could be a big threat in close games.

On Monday the Cats faced a tough Bowdoin nine and go against Rider today.

College men today are finding it increasingly difficult to qualify as a commissioned officer in the United States Navy. Lt. Jim McElhenny (Villanova '59 - Arts) will be in Dougherty Hall this week daily from 10 am - 2 pm to explain the opportunities awaiting those who can qualify as a naval aviator. Fabulous Fitz

By Frank Miller

For the last four months the V.U. campus has been buzzing with excitement over the merits of Jack Kraft's hardcourt magicians, and of post season tournaments. As Spring now enters the Villanova scene, everybody's attention is turning to Baseball and Track among other things. Lost in this shuffle of seasons are the accomplishments of the Wildcat Mermen, especially their soph standout Mike Fitzmaurice. "Fitz" has run up quite a list of accomplishments in his short Villanova career, and his future looks very bright.

But Fitz is no stranger to success. He was an outstanding swimmer at St. Mary's H.S. in his home town of Greenwich, Conn. After graduation from St. Mary's he earned High School All American honors for his efforts at Malvern Prep. Fitz, who with his tall and lanky appearance looks more like a hoopster than swimmer, broke in with a big splash at Villanova last season when he broke two NCAA records.

His record shattering performances were in his specialties of the 200 yd. Individual Medley (2:01.3) and the 200 yd. Freestyle (1:47.2). This is a pretty tough act to follow for a sophomore, but this potential All American pulled through amiably by leading Coach Geisz's charges to a successful season.

This season Fitz's accomplishments have been many. In the Eastern Seaboard Championships earlier this month at Annapolis, this affable star set the meet record for the 200 yd. Individual Medley (2:00.5) and as Anchor man on the 400 yd. Medley relay team brought back a new Villanova record.

Also on his list of accomplishments are five Villanova pool records in the 200 yd. Freestyle (1:45.8), the 100 yd. Freestyle (:47.3), the 500 yd. Freestyle (5:10.8) and the 100 yd. Butterfly (54.0). Additional stellar performances include the beating of Yale's All American and Olympian Don Schollander time wise in two relays earlier this season. An invitation to the NCAA swimming Championships climaxed a terrific season for Fitz.

Fitz has done much for Villanova's Swimming teams in the last two seasons and faces a very bright future. His strong competitive spirit and strength should bring this Social Science Major many more laurels in the future, including All America mention and possible Olympic consideration. On the other hand his outgoing and friendly spirit should bring to Villanova many friends along his road to Stardom.

Spring Practice Begins; Team Spirit Rejuvenated

By Aurel Villari

Practice for next year's football season began on March 14. Although at this time it is far too early for anyone to make some kind of an accurate forecast for the success, or lack of success, of the Fall grid schedule, we can confidently make mention of several encouraging notes which have presented themselves thus far.

First of all, the turnout was one of the biggest in memory. Virtually every position will be hotly contested by several candidates vying for berths. Team spirit has greatly improved in comparison with the rather low ebb it hit last season, as have the all-important relations between the players and coaches.

Scrimmages, which are indicative of both spirit and ability, have been coming along well, the coaches being more than satisfied.

The team will be bigger and stronger, especially in the line, and is sure to have greater depth than last season. The line, which was greatly weakened last season because of the loss of stalwarts like Atkinson, Strofolino, Smith, Quigley and others, will be much improved.

George Hunt, John Fry and Barry Grossman have especially shown the coaches a lot of potential so far. Linebacker Fred Levinski may be a great one. John Kolmer and Paul Sadowski, among others, are helping to insure a strong backfield for the coming season.

The quarterbacking is so far in a tossup between Gerry Belotti and Bill Andrejko, with Belotti at this time having the edge. Belotti, a better runner, is reminiscent of Richie Richman, while Andrejko is a better passer. In any event, watch for this team to make us forget about last year.

Rugby Because...

Wrestling Begins

By Joe Maffongelli

Have you seen the new trophy in the case downstairs in Dougherty Hall? It is quite an interesting piece in that it represents an entirely new idea at Villanova. This trophy was awarded to the newly formed weight lifting club on campus. This new group, under the tutorship of Hank Burke, moderator, and coach Hugh O'Callaghan, has already achieved a claim to fame.

How did this all start? Well, it seems as though Mr. Burke, who is a counselor in Corr Hall and in his second year at Villanova Law School, kind of ran into the situation. Burke recounted to us that he stopped in at the weight room of his previous alma mater, Scranton, over Thanksgiving recess. While there he was approached by a few of the undergraduate lifters who inquired about the possibility of a match with Villanova.

Upon returning to school, Hank talked to some of the regular clientele in the Goodreau Field House chamber of strenuous activity -- the weight room. His suggestion that they get together and take up the generous offer went over immediately.

Now that the idea had emerged, and this small group was about to take on their first opponent, they needed a coach. The time and place were perfect; and Hugh O'Callaghan stepped forward. This freshman track hope for the Wildcat's future board and under men is merely the possessor of some twelve Irish National weight-lifting records. Being the son of a famous Irish hammer thrower, he won three consecutive Irish weight-lifting championships.

HISTORICAL EVENT

That first match at Scranton, on February 27, had all the makings of a historical event. Captain John Dzurenko unofficially broke the national record for mid-heavyweights in the "dead-lift" by picking 640 pounds off the turf. This feat earned him the "best-lifter" trophy. John Prigmon took second in the same event. Jim Repucci, Augie Zilinian, (of track repute), Richie Moore, Pete Pizzi, and Pete Roselli rounded out the Cat contingent.

Just last Sunday this same group went out to Penn State where they engaged in an "epoch," according to O'Callaghan. Apparently the warm-ups began at 12:45 and the events were not completed until 8:45. This error was due to the presence of so many lifters. In any event the 'Cats went on to take a second in the meet.

Only powerful Maryland current NCAA champs in the Olympic lifts, was able to outclass Villanova's lifters in a battle which could have easily gone the other way. Had Pete Pregmon been able to pull out a hardly fought match with a Penn Stater, it would have been a different story. The Nittony Lions wound up third in the day's activities.

UNDYING LUNGS

Coach O'Callaghan had praise for the club's spirit, and he singled out Roselli, or the unofficial "cheerleader," due to his undying lungs, which would not quit throughout the day.

Both Burke and O'Callaghan extended a welcome invitation to all those interested in the club. Plans for a complete schedule next year, as well as a possible match with Princeton this season, are underway.

Few people realize that weight lifting has evolved from a mere conditioning process to a sport in its own right. Villanova's sports historian, Father O'Donnell has verified the fact that this is the first lifting group of any kind on the campus; and they are already among the elite in the collegiate lifting circles. Maybe it's time for another trophy case.

Wildcats' Rally Falls Short; Lacrosse Team Loses 9-7

By Chub Connor

The temperature was 35. The sky was overcast. At Long Island the scene was set for the loss that snapped the streak.

After seven consecutive wins of last season, C.W. Post College edged out the 'Cats Lacrosse Club 9-7 last Saturday on the winners' home field. The ultimate victors were quick to break the ice by scoring a goal after little more than two minutes of play. Four more scores were whipped into the Villanova net by the time 20 minutes had elapsed.

The 'Cats were down 5-0, but far from out. In a flash, the Blue and White clicked like the fighting team they are and came rushing back with three scores of their own.

Ed McFadden bulleted one past the Post goalie after an assist by Chip Allen. The Villanova Riches, Hook and Santoro, cashed two more quick ones and the Mainline stickmen were right back in the ball game. With the 'Cats pressing hard for another goal, the gun sounded to end the half.

After the midway break, the double V's (visiting Villanovans) quickly came within one goal at 5-4. Post then gained a further advantage to a two-goal spread that held until the final 9-7 was reached early in the last period. Post then played "keep-away" with a basketball-style freeze.

Their remaining few offensive moves were on sure-shots from their "slow-go" attack. The pressing defense of the 'Catmen was not quite strong enough to capture the ball for a sustained offense of their own.

Villanova goalie Chuck Tyler made 13 good saves against the perennially strong Long Islanders. The Blue and White goals were three by Rich Hook, and one each by Ed McFadden, Rich Santoro, Jim Ryan, and Pete Mills.

Although the game appeared to be a runaway with the early show of power by Post, the entire contest had a hot and fast tempo until the home-team stickmen chilled the torrid pace to protect their narrow margin.

More lacrosse is on tap for the Wildcat club before the Easter vacation. Saturday next, April 2, they will travel to Fort Schuyler, New York, to oppose the New York Maritime College. Next, the University of Pennsylvania will host the 'Cats on Tuesday, April 5, at 3:30 on River Field, the Quaker's home grounds along the banks of the Schuylkill River

After the Easter break, Lebanon Valley College, in the heart of the Pennsylvania Dutch region where they throw the referee on the field the ball, will host our stickmen on Saturday, April 16, at Annville, Pa., site of the Flying Dutchmen's campus. The following Wednesday, April 20, will find the Villanovans playing the Mules of Muhlenberg College at Allentown, Pa.

The schedule of home games will appear in the next edition of the VILLANOVAN.

Wynne? Wally Jones? Try Guy Rodgers. Wrong again. You have to go back 12 years to the days when Tom Gola led La Salle to the top of the basketball world to find the last 800 point man.

Yet if you've seen him play much, you know he's not out just to score points. In the Seton Hall game for example, his last game in the Field House, he scored only 19 points when he could have scored 49 if he wanted to. But the "nothing" games mean exactly that to "Cyclops" -- nothing. He plays for the pressure games -- like in his sophomore year when he scored 23 against Xavier out in Cincinnati after Wally Jones had fouled out. Or the Duke game in the NCAA tournament that same year when he scored 17 to make up for Richie Moore's below par effort.

The low point in Billy's career came last year when it was decided that Villanova would not go to the Mid-East Regionals of the NCAA because the players would miss too much class time, and would go instead to the NIT. When it was suggested that it was just as well since in the NCAA Villanova would have run into powerful Michigan whereas in the NIT the 'Cats could go places, Melchionni replied, "So what. You still go for the big ones. You still try." And that's what he lives for -- the big ones. "We'll win the NIT easy," he said then, and they would have too if Billy hadn't gotten sick for the final.

There's more to Melchionni than basketball however. Things like visiting the wheelchair basketball league and standing around signing autographs for the kids indicate that it hasn't all gone to his head. The trophy he received from the six young girls this past week reveals his popularity with the kids.

But what's ahead for Bill Melchionni. There are backcourt positions open in the NBA with San Francisco, Detroit and St. Louis, and Akron in the AAU League has made an attractive officer. Whatever he does elsewhere it will be a long time before another player carries a team the way Melchionni has carried this one. Whether it's the NBA or the AAU, the Marines or the Eastern League, don't worry about the "Clop." He'll make it. He's determined.

Ruggers Undefeated: Down Lehigh, St. Joe For 8-0 Record

The Wildcat Ruggers made it three in a row over the weekend by swamping the Engineers from Lehigh 13-0. The away match victory rejuvenated spirits after a 8-0 win over a St. Joseph's squad on the previous Wednesday.

Some say it's how you played the game that really matters. Well, if this is the case, the Rugby Club deserves a resounding Boo for a poor performance against an even more dismal agression from the Arts and Crafts College on City Line.

"After fighting to stand still" is how it is usually worded but in this game it was -- after standing to a standstill. Anyway, nobody did much of anything during the first half except Bill Clark who broke his nose.

Joe Forns was lucky enough to be able to scamper untouched for the only goal. John Wolfe then added the conversion to make it 5-0 with 15 minutes to go. The educated toe of this no less educated sophomore later tied on an extra three points by making a penalty kick.

This game was a sequel to a superb performance against talented First Troop the week before. Flickers of light in the darkness was the play of Vic Sarcissian and the consistent hard nosed hustle of Mike "Killer" Kain. CATS -3 - LEHIGH 0

The first away game was played on top of a mountain overlooking the little town of Bethlehem with its steel mills and workers' slums. The game was played in 50 m.p.h. winds next to a stable.

The heralded hustle of the Main-Liners was contained during the first 30 minutes by the kicking of the engineers who just had to put the ball up in the air and then to watch it sail down to our goal. However, the pressing pressure finally broke as the backfield unleashed Pete Conserva on a picture 105 yard run down the sidelines. John Wolfe put it through the "H" to make it 3-0 at the half.

The teams switched sides and Villanova now had the wind with them and for that mattter the win also. Persuing Andy Sears complimented the action provided by returning vetern Don Donlon. Ned McGovern filled in admirably in the scrum and Bill Cameron set up some ill-fated runs to help the Cats gain their third win without a loss.

Jersey Joe Forns scored again in this match to add to his notoriety of being the only guy ever to lose a 15 ft. vaulting pole in his room. Don Donlon pounced on a lose ball for the third score. The team cried Wolfe and he came through again to make the conversion and his point 14th for the still young season.

The "B" team won its first game by knocking off Lehigh B 8-3 to make the trip double the pleasure. Mark McGovern kicked and scored for five points in an exciting exhibition of the rapid improvement of the new players, many of whom have played only two weeks. Vin Bolliscasto, Merlin McCusker, Mike Doyle and Mark Christian are all to be praised for their enthusiasm and good play.

Maff's Musings

When an era comes to an end, the people involved in it are bound to become a bit sentimental. Well an era has just reached that point in Villanova sports. The Age of Melchionni has come to a halt with Billy the Kid's participation in the east-west All Star game. Now the manager can put his uniform to rest for good.

For the many seniors who will soon leave the Main Line campus, Billy has provided numerous thrills. But this leads directly into another thought -- that of the basketball story at Villanova for the past four years.

Back when Billy was playing frosh ball with a couple of other kids, such as Lou Benn, Richie Moore, and Bernie Schaffer, another bunch of courtsters were struggling away at the big time while wearing the same blue and white uniforms. That was the year that coach Jack Kraft began to wave his magic wand. That was the year in which a team improved from a 5-5 record to an over-all 19-10 mark.

One Wally Jones led that '62-'63 club, which eventually finished fourth in the coveted NIT. He, and a guy named Washington, have already become campus legends. Hardly a fourth year Wildcat who's alive could forget that upset of Wichita State in the quarter finals of the NIT. The big Schockers were ultimately destroyed by a midget named Warren Winterbottom.

The next season was a banner one for the 'Cats. Led by Jones, Washington, George Leftwich and a "sub" named Melchionni, the 'Cats rallied to a 24-4 record and seventh place in the nation. In one of these games this "sub" scored some twenty points in the last eight minutes to save the night.

Then along came 64-65, and Billy Melchionni, alias "sub," took the reins. He led a club, minus at least 20 points per game Richie Moore, to a 23-5 record and second place in the NIT. This was not enough, however.

After being denied all-American recognition once, Billy rolled into this past season and just plain "carried" the team until it later matured. Without taking anything away from the other members of the club, it is fair to say that he was a lonely star. His fifth place rank among all Villanova scorers attests to his stardom, but so do his 109 points and MVP award in the NIT.

Is it possible that a boy who carries a team to such heights single handedly is not an all-American? When Bill Bradley did it he was referred to by many as the "best ever."

Cats Down Penn in Opener Rampone and Greenwood Star

By Bob McIntyre

Villanova's baseball team opened up their season on a happy note last Saturday afternoon, with an impressive 9-3 win over the University of Pennsylvania. The game was played at Villanova and the cold weather didn't seem to bother Art Mahan's starting nine at all.

Mahan started Gene Rampone at pitcher and was very pleased with his performance. Rampone, who was 4-0 last year, struck out five men.

PENN FIRST

In the first inning, Nocito of the Quakers, singled and went to second on a tag up. He proceeded to score the first run of the season for both teams, when Shields singled up the middle to make it Penn 1-0.

In the cats half of the first, Sam Greenwood, who hit .361 and drove in 45 runs last year, got a free pass to first. He then stole second, went to third on an overthrow and finally scored on a wild pitch by Brian Kochunas of Penn to tie it up 1-1.

After a scoreless second inning, Penn's shortstop drew a walk to start off the top of the third. Rampone then gave up two successive singles to Malloy and Felser and the cats were now down 2-1. Bruce Malloy, one of Penn's football stars, scored on an infield out to end the inning with the score 3-1.

The bottom of the third, saw the home team score twice to tie it up 3-3. Rampone and Greenwood walked and then both scored on an overthrow by the shortstop.

In the last half of the sixth, the Wildcats opened up with Greenwood again starting the rally. He walked, stole second and again took third on an overthrow. He scored on an error, when Dion Vonderleith hit a liner to left field. Vonderleith, who hit .264 and drove in 33 runs last year, took third on a passed ball. Then Bill Bergolf was hit by a pitch and senior George Pond hit a smash to the shortstop who overthrew first. Vonderleith scored and then Rampone hit a two run single to end Penn's hope of a victory. The score was now 7-3.

Determination Plus

By J. Bruderle

Determination. If there's one word that Bill Melchionni personifies on the basketball court it's determination. Quiet and reserved off the court, he approaches every basketball game with such intensity that it shows in every phase of his game, whether it's shooting, playmaking or defense.

You can even see it when he commits a foul. His hand shoots up immediately as he recognizes his guilt, his fist clenched so tightly that the knuckles turn white. He jerks his head around, grits his teeth, and stalks off toward mid-court suffering in his own little Purgatory.

At the close of an outstanding career at Villanova, you might expect Melchionni to be satisfied, to settle back and enjoy his success. But when you have something inside you that drives you and drives you and drives you, always closer to perfection, but of course never reaching it, you can't stop. You can't settle down or relax. You've got to keep going. That's the way it always has been for Melchionni, and it's too late to change now.

How many hours of practice do you think it takes to develop a shot so accurate yet so quick that even much taller players have trouble blocking it? How many times have you seen a picture of Melchionni, high in the air, releasing his jumper, while his two or three defenders are still on their feet? A lot of sneakers have been worn out on the Melchionni's backyard court, which is almost the size of some smaller high school courts, in practicing that shot. It takes determination, but it has paid off.

When Billy stole the ball from Army and went in for the layup with 48 seconds remaining in his college career, he passed the 800 point mark for the season. Do you know who the last player in the Big Five was who scored 800 points in a season? In the entire Big Five? Hubie White? Matt Goukas? Frank Corace? George Raveling? Hal Lear? Tom

Melchionni Honored: Receives Trophy From St. Thomas Girls

Bill Melchionni was honored in the Pie Shop Thursday, and received a trophy that he will probably never forget. The trophy was given to him by six girls who make up the Billy Melchionni Fan Club.

The girls, ages ten through fourteen, go to St. Thomas of Villanova School and have been fans of Billy's since he started playing ball here at Villanova.

The trophy was a silver bowl that was engraved "Billy Melchionni, The Greatest." The trophy was filled with Reese's Peanut Butter Cups. The girls saved up their money to buy the trophy and the candy.

When asked why they gave Billy the candy and the trophy, they replied, "We gave him the trophy because he's the greatest, and we love him."

The girls also had a theme song for Billy. It went like this:

We love you Billy, oh yes we do.
We love the way you shoot,
the ball right through.
When you are near us we're happy.
Oh Billy make it snappy.

The trophy and the song really had quite an effect on Billy. After receiving the award, he said, "I was really surprised and happy when the girls gave me the trophy. It means a lot more to me than many of the other trophies that I have received, and I really appreciated it."

President's Letter

Dear Mothers...

Today is your day. We have dedicated this Monday to you in an attempt to honor all of you, who have given so much of yourselves on our behalf. Though at times we might not show it, inside we are aware of the many things you have done for us. You have given us many material and temporal aids, but more important, you gave us a spiritual foundation for life. You gave this intangible part of yourself willingly and now after so many years we are slowly realizing what we have. Up till now we have given you only a cursory repayment, but with maturity that age brings, we feel a penetrating desire to express ourselves.

And so Mothers, today we thank you. To be sure, we can only offer you a mere token of our appreciation, but please accept this day as the embodiment of the love, gratitude and devotion that we have held in our hearts for twenty-odd years.

On behalf of my fellow classmates, it is my pleasure, to welcome you to our campus to celebrate Mothers' Day 1966. Please find in today's activities the joy and love which have gone into their preparation.

Respectfully yours,
Richard J. Holwell

Hannon's Potpourri Features Questions Without Answers?

By Dennis Hannon

These three years at Villanova have meant a great deal to me. But I have a great number of questions to which I still have found no answers. Rumors have lived and died, factual facts have been sworn to, and yet no answers have been satisfactory.

These are some of the questions that recur in my thoughts. I'm sure that you've wondered about some of them, too.

-Have any buildings designed by Villanova engineers fallen over yet?

-Is the Falvey Library guard the culprit stealing books from under our noses?

-What would I like to say about Professor ... in the faculty evaluation?!

-Who sponsors "television races" and "firemen's games" in New York City hotels on St. Patrick's Day weekend?

-How was Mr. Bell able to top Father Gallagher in the "Batman" role? Holy Elan!

-Monty Rock III for next year's Senior Concert?

-Are "letters to the editor" about this Junior Week edition to be answered in next year's issue?

-Do you really believe that the infirmary nurse takes those "all-purpose" pills when SHE'S sick?

-Did Father Jenkins really discover synthetic rubber during World War II in his Tolentine Hall lab before it burned down?

-Will Father Syvinski be next year's Sophomore Class Art Exhibit advisor BEFORE the exhibit?

-Would CBS dare cross Belle Masque's path a second time?

-Has the Administration agreed to permit the engineering department to use the Mendel Hall passageway as a wind tunnel?

-My Lord, man! Do you really think Mr. Tich would wear that beard if he were on the Business School faculty?

-Is the rumor true that Congress candidate Professor John Logue doesn't have the Political Union's endorsement?!

-Are the campus police "on the take?"

-Where does everyone keep his obsolete skateboard?

-Am I mistaken, or is Father Papin's accent Brooklynese?

-Has the political science department ever sponsored more than one lecture a year?

-How does a Villanova nurse ...?

Junior Week Tradition Has 42 Year History

The traditional Junior Week at Villanova has had a long and classic history. From its birth in 1924, to the present day, the Week of varied entertainment and activities has been one of the most important social events of the entire year. The first Junior Dinner Dance was held in 1935 and "Mothers' Day" was inaugurated in 1938. The year 1942 saw the last Junior week until after the war years. The tradition was resumed by the Class of 1947, which introduced the custom of giving each mother a corsage. The "Diaper Dan" contest was started in 1948.

Mom's Welcome

By Frank Pavlica

Today's events are all planned to please the most deserving "girl" in the Villanova Student's life. Each mother receives a beautiful corsage of white carnations when registeration begins at 9:30 a.m. The grotto of Our Lady of Good Counsel is the scent for the 11:30 a.m. outdoor Mass that formally begins the day's many events. Immediately following the Mass the Junior Class President Richard Holwell will present his Class' gift to the University. A leisurely stroll through the campus or a good laugh at the Diaper Dan Contest ("We can take it on the chin!") photos in Dougherty Hall should sharpen the appetities for the big surprise of the day.

A catered luncheon is ready at 12:30 a.m. in the spacious Field House! Prime rib au jus is the succulent main course that is bound to satisfy even the best cooks present. Entertainment follows the meal. A special presentation, have made the Trio one of the most popular concert and night club acts in America. Nick, John and Bob will sing the best of their hits and the brightest new songs as they range through their wide repertoire.

The Trio has the distinction of having recorded more "golden" albums than any other popular folk group. Several of their many hit songs will have special significance for certain segments of the Junior Class. For instance, for those saddled to a 1.89 average, the carefree "Worried Man" can dispel all distress if accompanied by "Scotch and Soda." "Tijuana Jail" is a hint for those searching for a unique post-concert party setting. Or how about "M.T.A." for those with unusual memories of week-ends in Boston? Other favorites include "Everglades," "Greenback Dollar," "Where Have All the Flowers Gone," and "One More Round."

The Kingston Trio began their professional careers almost by accident. A music promoter discovered them in a Stanford University campus hangout, the "Cracked Pot." The amateur college trio were singing to their friends for little more than fun, pretzels and beer. Dave Guard was a graduate student at Stanford; Nick Reynolds and Bob Shane were students at Menlo College. Dave and Bob were reared in Hawaii, where they had learned to love the Island and Polynesian melodies. Nick Reynolds, a native Californian, had learned songs from around the world from his father, a Navy career officer.

Months of preparation were spent in constant practice to develop their own unique style. Each spent hours in research for old and new material and in writing their "Kingston" songs. San Francisco's "Purple Onion" was the Kingston Trio's first booking. What had been planned as a one-week engagement became a seven month stand that had the music critics raving! The Trio had become the

Jr. Class Officers Offer Guidance and Inspiration

By Walt Baginsky

The planning and hard work that went into organizing the events of Junior Week certainly is attributable to a large number of unsung heroes, but the guidance and inspiration provided by the 1965-'66 class officers should not pass without some recognition.

President Richard J. Holwell hails from Amityville, Long Island, graduating from Amityville Memorial High School. Praised by his Vice-President as the "Approachable President," Rick Holwell has been the backbone of all class activities. His spirit and direction has enabled the class of '67 to make steady improvement in all its projects and services. Elected as incumbent president for another year in office, Rick looks with great promise to the year ahead saying, "The class' progress over the past two years is a foreshadowing of future greatness as a senior class." He also feels that the unity and spirit of the class of '67 is definitely on the rise.

Besides his presidential duties,

Saturday Night Formal At Sheraton Climaxes Week

By Bill Keane

This Saturday the Class of 1967 will culminate the events of JUNIOR WEEK, 1966 with a formal dinner dance.

To be held in the Grand Ballroom of Philadelphia's Sheraton Hotel, the event is the first formal affair in the history of the Class.

Chairmen Jeff Radowich and John McKeever have planned the cocktail hour to begin at 7 p.m. This is to be followed by a Roast Beef dinner at 8 p.m. All interested couples will then take to the dance floor till one in the morning.

Musical entertainment will be provided by Paul Judge and his 12-piece orchestra with the Fat City Four playing the breaks. Arrangements have also been made for a small combo to play appropriate dinner music.

Individual favors will be distributed to each of the five hundred couples expected to attend. Bob Layne has handled the arrangements in this regard.

The Junior Week Queen will be announced at the Dinner Dance. The details for this contest have been supervised by Special Problems Chairmen Steve Seitz and Ed Cunningham.

Arrangements have also been made for Juniors to rent their tuxedoes and purchase flowers through the Class. Joe Eckler has made arrangements for tuxedo rentals and Mike Kirchner is in charge of flowers.

Among those gracing the head table will be Rev. Richard Appicci O.S.A., Vice-President for Student Affairs, Rev. James Ryan O.S.A., Dean of Student Activities, and Rev. Michael Gallagher O.S.A., Class Moderator.

Chairman Radowich has announced that the dinner menu will consist of fruit cup, tossed salad, Roast Beef Au Jus, oven-roast potatoes, french-green beans, Baked Alaska, and coffee, tea, or milk.

Tickets for this gala affair went on sale March 28 in the Student Council Office. First week sales indicated that the Dinner Dance would be an early sellout. The price of the ticket is $18.00.

The Dinner Dance is the final activity of JUNIOR WEEK, 1966 and all indications are that it will be one of Villanova's finest.

'Amiable' Father Gallagher Active Class Moderator

By Essa Abed

Often seen around the campus either bouncing a basketball or with a smoking pipe, this short, young Irish priest is the amiable Father Michael Gallagher, O.S.A., moderator of the class of 1967.

Father Gallagher

Born in August of 1934, Father entered the Augustian Academy of Staten Island in 1948, went on to the Novitiate at Hamburg, New York in 1952, finished his philosophical studies at St. Mary's Seminary in 1957, and finally in June of 1961 was ordained a priest in the Order of St. Augustine. Father Gallagher received his Master's Degree in Religious Education from the Catholic University in 1963.

When asked about the class of 1967 here's what Father had to day: "I believe that the junior class is very well-organized, harmonious, and thought-out. There seems to be great class unity and harmony and this type of situation always elates one who is directly involved with the class. I have not discerned any political factions in the class of 1967. The Class officers have done their utmost to keep their classmates informed via the Newsletter and Class bulletin-board. I consider the Sophomore Spring Project, instituted by the juniors in 1965, the most important undertaking thus far in the class' history. This project enabled many underprivileged youngers from the poor sections of Philadelphia to enjoy themselves and to see something else besides their gloomy and dismal environment."

Father strongly feels that the juniors and all Villanovans, for that matter, should more actively participate in community affairs.

Chairman Jim Oversees Junior Week

By Dave Barr (and Rick Holwell)

Jim Donegan brings to Villanova the rare combination of practicality and imagination. As general chairman of Junior Week (under the leadership of gallant, handsome, witty, and just all-around great guy, Rick Holwell), Jim has had the opportunity to put these attributes to use. The results speak for themselves.

For the first time, an event has been scheduled for every day, and several innovations, such as reserved seats for the concert and an off-campus smoker have been effected. Due to the dedication of Jim and his competent chairman, each activity has been planned with the maximum pleasure of Juniors in mind.

In his previous year at Villanova, Jim has headed several committees and is a member of the 'Intramural Staff. During his sophomore year he served as a member of the Orientation Committee and the Sophomore Cotillion. This past year, Jim was the Class Treasurer and worked on Charity Weekend in addition to his present chairmanship.

Boy Wonder

Looking into Jim's past we see his ability already appearing.

During his high school career, even though it was interrupted by attending two schools, Jim spent more than a year debating and earned the National Forensic Society Debates Degree of Excellence. Later he was to become President of the United Nations Club comprising 13 area high schools. Closing out his high school career, Jim was presented with the Junior Chamber of Commerce award.

In the future Jim hopes to work in the personal relations field where success should certainly be his.

new sound for the concert-night club circuit. New York's "Blue Angel" and the "Village Vanguard" were soon the sights of the Trio's immediate success in the East. College concerts were sold out. After "Tom Dooley" became the nation's number one song, the Kingston Trio averaged one college concert every two days!

The Trio's successes continued. Since 1959, the Kingston Trio's kudos have included "Best Group," and "Best Attraction" and the awards of two coveted "Grammys" (the record industry's equivalent to the Oscar). Eight of their LPs have sold over a million copies each.

An innovation in the seating plans gives the Juniors the assurance that they will have the best seats for their concert. The floor seats are divided into seven sections. Each section has a different colored ticket to correspond to that section. Since Juniors have advanced ticket sales they have reserved the best floor sections.

It all sounds good! It will sound fine Friday evening when the Juniors are "In" with the Kingston Trio!

Junior Smoker Off Campus

By Ron Fletcher

The Junior Class will start the weekend early this week by holding its annual smoker on Thursday, April 21.

Frank Gaidjunas, who is in charge of the affair this year, has announced a major change in this traditional part of the Junior Week festivities. In previous years the smoker was held in Dougherty Hall. This year is the first time that it will be held off campus and that beer will be served. The smoker will be held at the VFW Hall in Conshohocken.

ATHLETES HONORED

The purpose of the smoker is to honor the Junior athletes. To accomplish this end, the coaches of the five major sports at Villanova will be present to reminisce about past glories and to distribute awards to the Junior members of their teams. Following the presentation of awards, three sports films will be shown. At the time that this paper went to press, the exact films had not been selected. However, it is probable that two of them will star Villanova basketball greats such as Wally Jones or Hubie White.

TRANSPORTATION

Aware of the fact that transportation will be a problem for many resident students, Gaidjunas has promised that buses will be on hand and that they will leave the campus at approximately 7:30. Tickets, costing $1, must be purchased in the Pie Shoppe, since they will not be available at the door. Gaidjunas hopes that as many Juniors as possible will be on hand to honor the athletes and to have a good time with the class.

Officers

Rick gives time to various other activities. He is currently treasurer of the National Federation of Catholic College students; member of the sailing club, Knights of Columbus, and the History club.

Rick's back-up man for the past year, Vice-President Brenden G. Moore, comes from New York City, New York, graduating from White Plains High School. His stalwart, straight-forward approach as Vice-President has given invaluable leadership to the positions of chairman of the Spirit Committee and of the Missing Link contest. He also served as treasurer of the Blue Key for the past year, and will serve next year in the capacity of Parliamentarian for the Student Government Association.

The post of class treasurer for the past year was ably filled by James E. Donegan. He feels that, "The class has really come together during the past year." This was exemplified by the huge success of Charity Weekend. Jim has also served as chairman of the Orphan's party, and presently as chairman of Junior Weekend. Residing in Leominster, Massachusetts, and having graduated from Burnthills high school in New York, Jim hopes to continue and increase his faithful service to the class of '67.

Last, but not least Maria Gadren who hails from Oaklyn, New Jersey, and who graduated from Saint Mary of the Angel's Academy, has graced the secretarial position of the class for the past year. An ardent worker, Maria is amazed at the progress that the class has made over the past year commenting, "We have certainly come a long way since the end of our sophomore year." All the best to Maria who next month will be married.

A Time to Speak

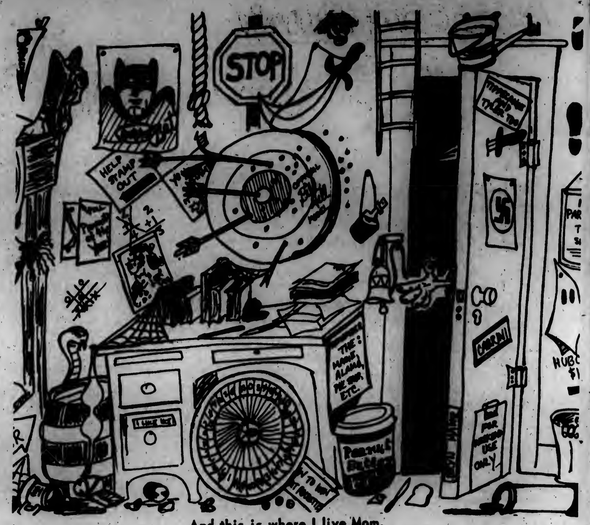
... And a time for everything under heaven. Yes, for everything there is a time. And right now, today, is the time to speak to you, our mothers.

It is very difficult to say something to a mother--something that hasn't been already said by other sons in other ages. It is very difficult to begin to say love with words.

We are not in an age of love, or of sentimentality, or even of sincerity. We are living in a careless, screaming, dollar world, full of banality and useless speed.

You mothers have seen us grow and speak, and walk in this world. You have seen us become individual persons, with sometimes strange seeming, and to you, unfathomable ideas. You are here today, for a moment of quiet pride. Or for a moment of sentimentality, and wonder at this strange ivy covered world where your sons for a time must live.

So what can we say to you? We could thank you, or praise your virtue, or pledge tiresome assurances of our love. But if you did not know of our gratitude, or of our respect, or especially of our love for you before this one small day, then you would never know.



So instead, let us give you the words of a great man when he spoke of mothers and their children, he said:

You may give them your love but not your thoughts, you may house their bodies but not their souls,

For their souls dwell in the house of tomorrow, which you cannot visit, not even in your dreams.

And to this we would add the certainty that when we get to the house of tomorrow; we will surely not forget the hands, and the heart and the love that put us there.

RJ.

And this is where I live Mom.

We Try Harder

In this issue we have attempted to capture in print, some of the spirit which enables a group of 900 students to create the best Junior Week the campus has ever had.

CLASS PROPHECY

The Best of All Possible Worlds

By Ron Javers and Brenden Brett

The shadow of the hulking rusty, dirty gray bridge completely blotted out the sun.

The two men sat talking quietly, with the muted tones of frustration and despair barely audible in their creaky voices.

"Winter's comin on Jeff. Gotta get me one of those big heavy coats like yours to keep out the chill."

JEFF RADOWICH smiled. He looked down at the frayed cuffs of his much too large overcoat. He looked at the worn out tennis sneakers with the big toe sticking out the top. He almost cried. If it hadn't been for the crash of '83, he'd be a rich man today. As it was he was earning just enough to get by. The "golden-tongued bum" was what they called him.

WALT BAGINSKY didn't like being on skid row either. He didn't even have a heavy coat for the coming winter. JEFF had talked him out of it.

River Life

The two men sat watching a launch coming up the river. It was one of those plush jobs that the Mayor owned. Mayor PETER CONSERVA smiled tauntingly at the two tramps, then brushing a wisp of his long hair aside, ordered cabin boy MIKE STIBICH to put another olive in his martini.

"Boy, them big wigs got the life of KENNY RILEY, remarked JEFF. But who's the little skinny guy standing on the poop deck?"

Why that looks like Brenden Brenden, or BRETEN BEND, NO I mean BRENDEN BRETT, THE ex-politician. He sure is skinny."

The stately launch sped on up the river, sinking JIM PROUD'S rowboat in it's wake. PROUD was the treasurer for the itinerant fisherman's union, at least that's what it said on the back of his rowboat before it went down.

Bored

The two tramps were bored with watching the river life and making the MARK TWAIN scene. They were waiting for the newsboy, little JERRY BRUDERLE, to come by with the evening edition.

"Here comes JERRY now. But who's that chasing him? It looks like ANDI CORRAO, the bartender down at SPIKE KEANE'S place.

JERRY ran right on by, throwing a newspaper at the feet of the two men.

"Well look at this would you. It says here that TONY MASTROPIETRO won the election for Big Brother this year. Look at that picture, bald as an eagle. And who's that fat guy standing next to him?" That's BOB ATTMORE and TONY AVERSA, you can't tell which is which."

"Why here's an ad for BROOKS BROTHERS, the world's ten best dressed men," it says; DON SERAFANO, BOB LANE, DEAN GOODWIN, STEVE CARNEY, KEN HEDGES, ART JOHNSON, KEVIN TOBIN, HUGH LEAHY, JOE DILEO, and ESSA ABED. And look, there's a picture of FRANK HERMES X, looks like he didn't make it.

Haircut

The two tramps, for want of something better to do, decided to go over to the barber shop and watch DAVE COMO give JIM STILLWAGON a haircut. On the way over they encountered a good old fashioned street fight. There in the middle of the muddle, clinging to a bloody lampost and screaming, "There goes my image," was WARD T. WILLIAMS, LEADER OF THE NOTORIOUS Cub Scout Troop 107-A. Slugging it out in brutal hand to hand combat were; FRANK GAIDJUNAS and JOHN MCKEEVER. JOHN KOLMER, JOHN FRY, CHIP BENDER, and JOHN SHUNKE were being gouged but good by fearsome PHYLLIS GREYSON, TIGER TARA SIEGAL, LEFTY LUCILLE CERCHARIO, and a cast of thousands. It was a real Roman spectacle. MARIE GADREN, and some nurses from the hospital ship DESPAIR, WERE ON HAND ADMINISTERING first, and sometimes second aid, to the battle-crazed combatants. RICK HOLWELL was standing on the corner selling outlines for action, blueprints for progress and Nazi armbands. "Gee, these street brawls are educational," quipped RADOWICH.

"But, since all of life must pass, let us, my friend make haste and split for yon barbershop." "Oh fudge," says BAGINSKY, "I'd rather mosey on over to BIG JOHNNIE BOSACCO's Go-Go Palace. They have STEVE MORRISON and his trained dog act this week. The food is excellent. AUDLEY A. CAAMPORCERO is the head chef. His assistant is BOB YOCKAVITCH. Between the two of them, they make a great alphabet soup."

The two Tramps (in mud time) wandered off into the twilight to seek out thrills and excitement, and also to gape at the exotic dancing of LOU-LOU MORDA, accompanied on the harp by LOU TRAVER.

Bistro

The bistro was not, crowded, and smoky. Over in the corner, engrossed in deep conversation were DENNY BILOUS, STEVE WARNER, and NEIL GALLAGHER. The subject of the conversation was IRISH MOORE'S strange new habit writing VILLANOVA cheers on the backs of old match covers.

Sitting at another table looking over a Spritzlers catalogue, and murmuring inanities was JIM DONNEGAN. The poor boy was still trying to forget about the three thousand dollars that were never accounted for, and his extended vacation to Brazil.

Insurance

Just then, a commotion in the corner made JOHN RUTH look up from his stale beer. It seems that HENRY MACKNEY was tryin to sell insurance to everyone at the bar. He had BRIAN MORGAN cornered, and as he gave out with his sales pitch, BRIAN would scream lines from SHAKESPEARE at him. The two of them caused such a commotion that JOHN THOMAS completely forgot about the girl he had been busy inviting back to his apartment. The girl got mad, picked up JACK BRADLEY'S butterfly net, and bashed KEVIN GALLEN in the mouth with it. Poor KEVIN was only trying to sketch the scene as it was happening. He was trying to make some extra money sketching drunks for tips. His regular job of dishwasher at MIKE MEDWAY'S KOSHER KITCHEN hardly paid enough to keep old KEVIN in crayons.

All of the noise and confusion was too much for the two tramps. They decided to leave and seek even more amusement watching the rich midcity residents stroll on Rittenhouse Square. GEORGE WHITE asked them for a dime as they went out onto the street. They smiled and passed on.

Square

By the time they reached the Square it was dark. The tall stately apartment buildings gathered around the green plot of grass as concrete arms pointing to the sky. Lights shone in windows 125 stories from the ground. And at the very top of the tallest edifice, wrapped in a silk dressing gown, smoking an enormous cigar, drinking a rare blended wine,--there amidst splendor and glory sat none other than ED ROGERS?, the famous philosopher. Ed had made all of his money in Existantialism before the market for that particular commodity had declined. Now, to make ends meet, he was selling interviews to the SATURDAY EVENING POST. He sat just now surrounded by JOE ANDREWS, MIKE GOTWALLS, BOB VIOLA, JIM ROOS, JIM DONNEGAN, BOB RHODES, TONY SOMANGO, RON FLETCHER, JACK HEWITT, BILL WALEN, and FUZZY JOE KELLY--the entire New York Giants football team. They were discussing BILL NEVILLE'S latest movie: LOVE IN A BREADBOX.

While all of this was taking place in a plush apartment, WALT DORN sat in his cab, waiting for a fare. Tips had been lousy recently, and WALT was having

CLASS COMMENTARY

A Story... As Yet Unfinished

By Nick Rongione

A long long time ago and farther away than that, we were nothing. And we continued being nothing until today, for today is the first day of our Junior Week. And we shall be something this Week, even if we must fake it, for now, finally, is the time for us.

Yes, this Week, space-time will become absolute. This Week that dirty filthy war will not call. This Week cigarette smoking will not be hazardous. And this Week we shall speak our mind, for now, finally, is the time for us.

We Shall Speak

We shall speak our mind even though our moral fiber has been described as non-existent. Even though our mental stability has been shattered by our cultures' too-rapid advancement. Even though some say we lack leadership ability. Still, we shall speak.

We shall speak about many things because this Week we realize not only what we are but what we can be -- and can become -- if only for now. And Villanova can become, because we shall tell them how.

And we shall tell them about the Administration, Faculty, Student Body, and about other things too. And we should tell them because we are going to be in Communications next year, or in the Student Government, or in the Pie Shoppe, or in Nothing. But we all have something to say.

Scapegoat Speaks

Perhaps it would be well to hear first from Brendan "Irish" Moore, that sometime student leader, sometime scapegoat, always gentlemanly guy who will be Parliamentarian of the Student Government Association next year.

Brendan feels that one will find on our campus "the greatest bunch of guys you could meet." But, unfortunately, he notes that "Villanova is comprised not only of the Student Body."

This conviction, held by many other Juniors as well as by "Irish," is very telling. It is so, because it points to the fact that Villanova's main asset is the type of student it enrolls.

Mixed Emotions

But the same conviction also notes that, since the student cannot compartmentalize his existence, "he is going to have mixed emotions about Villanova." This is to say, simply, that there are two sides to every coin, and one of them is usually bad.

So let us look at the Villanova undergraduate a little more closely. And let us listen to him. And then let us consider some of the things that he bumps into, and some of the things that bump him.

What are friendship's ceremonies? You drink each other's health, you open an artery and mingle your blood with that of the friend. It is difficult to say when the proper moment for this arrives, but it announces itself mysteriously; you feel some way that you can no longer address one another formally. When once you have had this feeling, then it can never appear that you have made a mistake, like Geert Westphaler, who discovered that he had been drinking to friendship with the public hangman.

S. Kierkegaard
"Either/Or"

Phyllis Greyson was even more emphatic than Moore in her praise of our Student Body. Our part-time Secretary, part-time Cheerleader, all-the-time lovely blond, said that she would come back to Villanova if she had to do it over again.

Worthwhile Experiences

She would return only because of the people she has met here. Phyllis feels that "almost every one of her acquaintances" has been a worthwhile experience. And when you say "almost every one" you are going some, no matter what group you are referring to.

Walt Doran views the Student Body from a slightly different angle. But then he would have to, since his most recent claim to fame, aside from being elected President of DPM, was getting a date for Inter-Frat Weekend five days in advance. (You see, Walt is still not accustomed to having a date before Saturday afternoon.)

Anyway, he is quite satisfied with his friends because of their background. That is to say, Walt feels that Villanova is fortunate to draw its Student Body mainly from "Eastern middle class" families. He wishes only that these families had as many sisters as brothers.

Praise from Proud

James Proud, too, feels that the fellows here should be praised -- "for their prudence." By this he means that Villanovans have an "excellent attitude" in that they know when to study and when not to study.

Perhaps we can gain some insight into what Jim is saying if we realize that he is Treasurer of the SGA, that he sleeps with a vest on, and that he considers Villanova "a hiatus between high school and professional school." In other words, he feels that there is a place for everything, and that everything belongs in its proper place.

So we can see quite clearly that the Class of 1967 has no complaint with the type of student here at Villanova. As a matter of fact, the aforementioned people believe that it is just this conglomeration of individuals who comprise Villanova's main asset -- not the Faculty, not the Administration, not the Education, but the type of Student Body.

Of course, while opinion on the type of student here was unanimous, it was not so on his caliber. In fact, Aurel Villari and Larry Ogurko agree that there are plenty of nice guys at Villanova. But both of these Junior Classics majors feel that the intellectual atmosphere here is lacking something. And they tried to pinpoint it.

Student Apathy

Aurel, a witty type with a mind to back his quick mouth, called it "student apathy." Larry, a quiet sort, who reasons subtly, thought of it as a "lack of academic initiative." In either case, they think that admissions standards should be raised to correct the situation.

Another aspect of Villanova life about which the Juniors are not in complete agreement is the Faculty. Those interviewed were about evenly divided in their opinion that you must take the good with the bad. And the criterion for judging who is good or bad revolved around the word "communication."

Talkers and Teachers

That some of the Faculty do not communicate was underscored by Vic Sarkisian when he said that "some are just talkers but some are teachers." But then the Vice-Captain of the Rugby Club sadly noted that he had had "too many talkers."

But what is even worse than having too many talkers, is having men who do not even attempt to communicate. Miss Greyson found this shortcoming prevalent particularly among Ph.D.'s, because "they think that their degrees alone insure rapport."

Some Satisfied

Of course, many Juniors have no complaint with the Faculty. Dennis Hannon, who is studying everything about Political Science except how to win elections, said that most of the Faculty "really try to be interesting and informative." And this is at least half the battle won.

But whether the Villanova Junior feels that the Student Body is poor, average or excellent; whether he feels that the Faculty is inadequate, capable or very good -- he is in unanimous agreement about the Administration. But this is a shame because the consensus is adversely critical.

Red Tape

Perhaps Charley Murphy, our Alumni Representative and Vice-President for Educational Affairs, pinpointed the trouble when he noted that Tolentine Hall is so close, yet so damn far away. He was referring, of course, to the infamous red tape.

In connection with this, "Murph" also noted that "student diplomacy" was the ideal means to bridge the gap. But, quite sadly, diplomacy is currently being stomped down. And so, we must resort to "fighting them for what we think is right."

And fight them we must, for while our Administration is far more forward-looking than St. John's, it is far more backward than Princeton's. This is the case precisely because, as Aurel Villari says, "they simply will not allow any kind of change." And "since they are inflexible, they will not experiment."

Chief Defect

But if it is difficult to fight a conservative Administration that opposes you, it is almost impossible to bargain with one that ignores you. Jim Proud feels so strongly about this that, for him, Villanova's chief defect is "the way at times the Administration turns its back on the student."

Perhaps Dennis Murphy, a Junior Sociology major, found the reason for this. He noted that Villanova is not run for the student, and, that the Administration is "too impersonal." They are so because "they are too mercenary." That is to say, they are more interested in money than men.

I shall be as willing as the next man to fall down in worship before the System, if only I can manage to set eyes on it. Hitherto I have had no success; and though I have young legs, I am almost weary from running back and forth between Herod and Pilate.

S. Kierkegaard
"Concluding Unscientific Postscript . . ."

But if we were simply opposed openly, we would overcome -- eventually. And, if we were simply ignored, we would yell long enough and loud enough to be heard -- eventually. But when we must crusade on empty or sick stomachs, then chivalry is being pushed too far.

It is just impossible for Pete Roselli to sustain himself on the food here. This Classics major, who lifts very heavy weights very far off the ground, feels that "for the money, we are getting cheated."

Atrocious Food

Jack Moscardelli, the Les Keiter-without-tact of WWVU, agrees that the food here is "atrocious." He also mentioned the fact that far too many residents "must spend far too much money eating off-campus." This situation is, of course, absurd.

But what is more, the Administration does not seem to care about correcting the food problem. As Pete notes, they have adopted a "if you do not like it, get out" attitude. And Jack reasons that all that is necessary to solve the problem is to "have everybody in Tolentine eat in Dougherty for a week." But they have not accepted this hospitable invitation.

One possible explanation for the Juniors' failure to depict the Administration in a favorable light was offered by Mark McGovern. The Chairman of the Liberal Party in the Political Union and Vice-President of the Young Democrats, Mark feels that perhaps just because Villanova is run by the Augustinian Order and the Catholic Church, it cannot be excellently administered.

Stagnation

What Mark means is that "you just do not do certain things at a Catholic school." He also feels that we are too dependent on the Order, for if some short-sighted priests win elections, then the whole University suffers. And since it is difficult to fire a priest, stagnation could creep in.

But Mr. McGovern does not see our Administration as inherently ineffective. He points out that they are excellent when "they go out on a financial limb." The best example of this is, of course, the School of Law. But then the question arises, "why don't they gamble more?"

So the Junior Class feels that Villanova is made of many tremendous guys, some tremendous teachers, and few tremendous administrators. A mixture of these ingredients yields a palatable dish, but one that needs something added if it is to become a delicacy. And so we made some suggestions.

Villanova Inn

Jimmy Proud, for instance, would like to see an "Arts Complex" on our campus along with a "Villanova Inn." The Complex would house facilities for Music, Drama, Communications, etc.; while the Inn would house upperclassmen and faculty for informal discussions in a pleasant atmosphere.

And Brendan Moore would like to see Villanova "grant many more academic scholarships to upgrade the caliber of the Student Body." While Pete Roselli says that a "Recreation Complex" is necessary so that when it is time to play, there will be a place in which to do it.

Top-Notch Faculty

But the most consistently heard suggestion had to do with the acquisition and maintenance of an excellent Faculty. For Ed Rogers, a Junior majoring in Sociology, this means luring to Villanova "the real brains from the top-notch graduate schools."

For Mark McGovern, it means "insuring the quality of the teachers we already have," by substantially raising their salaries. In fact, Mark would go so far as to say that "you can learn in a barn" as long as the teacher can communicate.

Fringe Benefits

And for Larry Ogurko, it means "improving the conditions" under which the Faculty works. By this Larry means that, while salary is important, more fringe benefits are also "vital." Among these benefits would be much more office space and secretarial personnel for each teacher.

What has been written here can be considered the first draft of "The Junior Story." It is a tale about life at Villanova as it is lived by the members of the Class of 1967. But only the general theme has been depicted, for the story is as yet unfinished.

If anyone feels that the script has been completed, he has failed to read between the lines, failed to realize that the important things are not said but pointed to. And what the things said here point to is a new and dynamic attitude on our campus.

No Status Quo

This new and dynamic attitude might well be expressed by the exhortation, "no more status quo, please." It is in evidence, not so much in Tolentine Hall, more so in some Departmental Offices, but mostly it is in evidence in the Student Body.

That's correct. The Student Body at Villanova is now ready. So Faculty beware; or better yet, better yourself and your course offerings. (For we want difficult teachers and difficult courses.) And Administration beware; or better yet, get back in front of us and lead us forward with far-sighted improvements. (For this is where we want you.)

Revolution

But if the Faculty and Administration do not get where they belong and where we want them, namely in the vanguard leading us, then we will push them there. For remember, as Wendell Phillips once said, "revolutions are not made; they come."

And one is coming at Villanova. And it is only fitting that the Faculty and Administration should lead it. And it will make Villanova the best Catholic school in the country. Maybe it will even make us one of the best of any-kind of schools in the country too.

But whatever it makes us, there is no mistaking the fact that it is now upon us. And this is the unfinished part of our story. And we have told you about it because we had to. You see, this is our Junior Week, and it is truly a time for us."

CLASS HISTORY

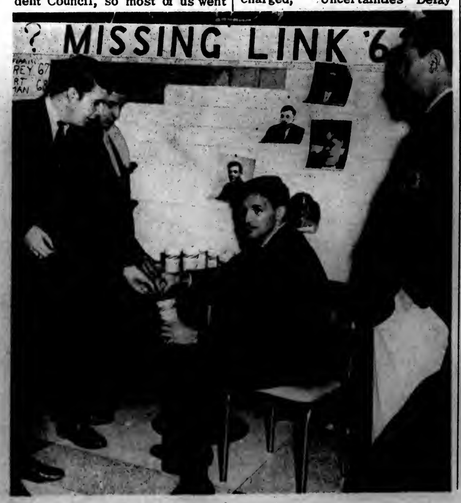
From OC's...To Hy Lit...To Go-Go Girls

By Jerry Bruderle

The first thing you're bound to remember about Villanova, and the thing you'll never forget is Orientation; marching around campus, singing and yelling, paying quarters, and in general, acting like a fool. That's the way they want you to act: like a fool. And the fact that every quarter you pay fills another mug at the OC party helps to inspire the OC's to greater heights.

I remember during our Orientation one kid kept giving the OC's a hard time, yelling at them and all, and they'd get him up on the stage in Vasey Hall, and they'd beat him and kick him, and throw stuff at him. And he'd just keep yelling, and I thought to myself, "This kid must be some kind of a nut." Later, it turned out I was right: the kid was a sophomore disguised in our ranks to help the orientation run smoothly. It ran smoothly except on that kid's head, which had a few lumps.

I also remember one time down in front of the Field House, one member of the class of 1967 was there with his parents, and he had his dink on and a stack of books in his arms and all that junk they give you. You could just see his parents saying to themselves, "How nice to send Arnold to such a lovely school." And then the friendly OC came over and said Hello to Arnold and his parents, and the parents were impressed with his friendly attitude. The OC asked the frosh his name and what he was taking, and then he asked THE QUESTION (which we were supposed to know the answer to), "Where ya from, frosh?" Arnold said Upper Squidunk or someplace and he smiled and his parents thanked God for a school such as Villanova. But the OC said a little louder, "Where ya from, frosh?" Upper Squidunk. Three or four times he asked the question, each time a little louder, 'til the final time he asked him the Field House almost shook. Somebody finally tipped the kid off to say "Villanova" but by that time his mother had had a stroke, and his father had decided on perhaps some other Eastern school. One thing for sure, Arnold will always know the answer to that question when he hears it . . . If his hearing ever comes back.



We won our first two football games that year, beating West Chester and Toledo, but then our Rose Bowl hopes were shattered as Buffalo beat Villanova 14-7. Then came the BC game. Earlier we had been taken on a peaceful tour of Philadelphia by the Student Council, so most of us went on a tour of Boston when we got there. Only this one wasn't run by the Student Council - maybe run over the Student Council, for we were now Villanovans and Villanovans tour Boston like Attila the Hun. But Boston gets even. They play the game. It was 34-0, and although our offense was bad, our defense was lousy. But not even the Mets win them all.

Intellectual

The intellectual life at Villanova that first year was astounding. William Buckley, Leopold Stokowski and Robert Weaver all came, and the Political Union had Penn Chemistry Professor Charles C. Price whose fame extended at least as far West as 34th Street in Philadelphia, although certainly no further than 36th Street. Jeff Radowich distinguished the freshmen class by winning a $300 award from President Kennedy for an article on rehabilitation centers taken from over 100,000 entries.

The VILLANOVAN, which set the pace for student opinion in their very first issue of the year with a story headlined "Down With Everything," ran an editorial stating that the Villanova administration must make a decision on compulsory attendance. If you assume an intelligent student body, you don't need compulsory attendance. Which will it be? So compulsory attendance remains.

Student Council

In October in the hallowed halls of the Student Council the issue of girl cheerleaders first raised its ugly head - or her ugly head. One headline in the VILLANOVAN charged, "Uncertainties Delay Debut Of Girl Cheerleaders." Of course, many students had been uncertain all along, but now it was official.

The football team finished 5-4 and everybody turned to the basketball team which was ranked in the top 20 in the nation at the beginning of the season. The Cats beat our freshmen team with Billy Soens, Frank Gaidjunas, Pete Coleman and Joe Turk 86-55 and ran off four wins before losing at Buffalo 63-57. They came back to win the Holiday Festival in New York, and Wally Jones was named MVP. Wally, who set the style around campus with his favorite outfit - Villanova blazer and dungarees, was later named "Villanovan of the Year" over Student Council President Jim Murphy and Vice-President Jim McErlane (earlier named "Catholic Youth of the Year"). It's a good thing the Pope wasn't running against Wally. It might have been embarrassing.

Sports Illustrated graced our campus with a visit and jinxed our team. We lost to both La Salle and St. Joseph's, and one sign in the Palestra said, "5th in the country and 5th in the Big Five." We had our own signs but . . . well, you know how it is.

On most campuses March means Spring is coming, but at Villanova that year March meant to the Seniors "we hope Bishop McDevitt isn't coming." But he did and was an excellent commencement speaker. Determined to get a "name" personality, WWVU invited Bill Wright of WIBG to come to Villanova, and TV personality Marciarose was given an award by the VILLANOVAN.

The basketball team lost to Duke to finish 24-4, and the Villanova Symphonic band announced they were "going places," although they didn't say where or at whose suggestion. The sounds of Spring were all around us - the tuition was raised - quietly. In the "Daily Pennsylvanian" Barry Lesch criticized Villanova - loudly. And as election time and warm weather rolled around (the warm weather had nothing, however, to do with the hot-air campaign speeches) Jim Proud and Ken Hedges were elected to the Student Government as representatives of the Class of 1967.

The VILLANOVAN set the tone for Sophomore year: desperation. In the first issue of the year they urged: "Join the VILLANOVAN." The second issue said: "Join the VILLANOVAN Now!" If someone hadn't finally joined, they might have started threatening. One of the Senior nurses made all high school seniors who were thinking of taking nursing at Villanova stop and think when she wrote in the VILLANOVAN that Villanova nurses all have one thing in common: fear. And Surprise, Surprise, we beat the freshmen in Muff Day.

Since it was an election year a mock Presidential election was held which Lyndon Johnson won without even coming to campaign. But the President persisted and held the regular national election anyway. The nation's voters, having waited with bated breath to see how Villanova would vote, followed in our footsteps and elected Johnson. Twenty-five million Americans, however, apparently thought it was still a mock election and voted for Barry Goldwater.

The football team ran up a 6-0 record and sold out the stadium for the BC game, but a blocked punt in the last quarter set up a BC touchdown and the Cats lost a tough one 8-7. Tickets were so hard to get for the game that one student got in line at 11 PM the night before they went on sale, and he bought $80 worth of tickets the next morning. He bought tickets for so many kids, he charged each one a quarter and got himself a small fortune as well as pneumonia. But when basketball season came around, the ticket office got even. The first students in line got the worst seats in the house for the St. Joe game, although they still did manage to catch pneumonia.

It really didn't matter because the game was a bomb anyway. We led 10-0 and then lost 69-61 as Jim Washington and Billy Soens fouled out. But in the next game we beat previously unbeaten Providence and never did "It's all over" mean so much.

But the Field House was used for many other activities that year. Villanova reached to the heights for its speakers and got Mt. Everest conquerer Woodrow Wilson Sayre to appear, not to mention the Karate Club demonstration which brought a fine show of hands. Dr. Martin Luther King jammed the Field House and impressed us all with his sincerity and determination. Peter, Paul and Mary also filled the Field House, and you'd have to admit that any group that does toilet imitations is worth seeing.

The basketball team rolled to the NIT final (as did many of the Villanova students) only to lose a heartbreaker as sickness stopped Bill Melchionni. The Sophomore Orphans Outing at Malvern with movies, games and pony rides was a success to all except Mark McGovern who was thrown by one of the horses.

To finish the year in typical Villanova style, Hy Lit pitched WIBG to a 16-4 softball victory over WWVU; one of George Washington's letters was stolen from the library; and the baseball team won 12 straight and finished 15-5 and received no NCAA bid.

This year when we returned as Juniors everything seemed changed: Father Flaherty replaced Father Klekotka as President of Villanova; Frank Eck replaced Steve Freind as SGA President; courses were given on television; and gambling came to Villanova in the form of the Spritzler's football quiz. Some things were the same though. Villanova lost to BC and beat West Chester. But things at Villanova are usual only when they are unusual. And that they were.

The first spectacular of the year was titled "The Return of Steve Freind" and starred your friend and mine - (trumpets) Steve Freind as the handsome, windblown SGA President. The intramural department expanded its program to include girls field hockey (which outdrew the SGA press conferences) and a wrestling tournament. Villanova led the way in sending Christmas cards to Viet Nam, and Gene Fitzmaurice wrote an excellent tribute in the VILLANOVAN to one of his favorite subjects - Gene Fitzmaurice.

Jack Kraft had perhaps his finest year as Bill Melchionni once again led the Cats to the NIT. In the recent elections John Bosacco brought in some Go-Go girls, but since the girls' names weren't even on the ballot they really didn't have a chance, and as a result Rick Holwell won handily. With Holwell and Ward Williams, SGA President, at the helm the Class of 1967 appears to be well represented for next year. If next year is anything like the past three years, only one thing can be promised: it won't be dull.

JEFF was weary. He put his dirty hand into his torn coat pocket -- there wadded into a crumpled ball was the letter, the last he had received from Villanova in a long time.

On the Field, in the Pool, Even Everywhere, Juniors Star

By Bob McIntyre

Sometimes in a football game, the quarterback must be able to make that all important decision which could decide the outcome of that particular contest.

Next years varsity football team will be fortunate to have two quarterbacks who have the know-how to make the right decision.

GERRY BELLOTTI is a 6'0", 205 lb. running quarterback who has shown in the past he has the ability to take a team up the field in a matter of minutes and score. He is strong under pressure and likes to use the off tackle power plays to undo the opposition.

Right along Gerry is another junior, BILLY ANDREJKO. This blond haired, 5'11, 175lb., from Brooklyn, always keeps the opposing team on its toes since he is capable of throwing the down and outer or the long bomb at any time. Coach Bell will go to Billy many times this fall in passing situation.

Leading the backs for next year, will be 5'10", 190lb., JOHN KOLMER. John has the will and desire to get through any defensive line and over the white stripe. He has cat-like moves and is extremely hard to bring down once he hits the line.

TONY FERRAINOLO, is a 210 lb. fullback who should provide many an exciting moment next year when the blue and white return to glory.

The cats are jammed with excellent defensive halfbacks and should cause plenty of trouble for any team to face Villanova in the fall. Among the best are juniors CHIP BENDER, 6'0, 190lb., JOHN CONNOR, 5'11, 190lb., RAY COVI, 6'1, 195lb., and BUD PIPER, 6'2, 210lb. In addition Piper will also handle all the punting chores for the Wildcats.

JIM CASE, will again perform the place-kicking chores in the fall. This 6'0 averaged close to 80% on the P.A.T.'s.

Football at Villanova has been mainly a running game for the past couple of years and the fans have often wondered why the coaches don't allow more passing. Well, Fall 1966, will see the pigskin in the air quite often, and the cats could produce two of the best ends seen in recent years around Villanova.

JOHN SCHUNKE, who surprised everybody last year when he came from nowhere to become one of the best recievers in the East, is back to cause havoc on the enemy. At the other end of the offensive line will be PAUL SODASKI. Paul, is a big, strong 6'1, 210lb., who will run right over you if you let him. Look for these two juniors in the end zone a lot next year.

The all-important line duty will be handled by a number of juniors next year. Among the best are LOU MORDA and JOHN FRY. Lou, a 6'1, 220lb., was both the roving monster and the leader of the defence last year, and liked it so much he intends to be jumping around there next year waiting to pounce on the opposition. John Fry is a tall, quiet guy off the field but when the whistle signals the start of the game this 6'2, 230lb. is transformed into a solid brick wall.

Backing up these two will be two more starters from last year, AL STOPKO and BRIAN McDONNELL. GEORGE HUNT and CHUCK ARON can also be counted on to see a lot of line action next year.

"Beaver" Doyle Coming Up for Air.

BASKETBALL

Basketball along the Main Line this year, was supposed to be really poor, according to the local sports-writers. But when the final game in the N.I.T. was finished and the cats finished 18-11, three juniors contributed much to have Coach Kraft quoted as saying "It was my most rewarding year to date at Villanova.

Many remember seeing 6'9 FRANK GAIDJUNAS come out of obscurity to become the most improved player on the team. With his rebounding and soft hook shots he greatly influenced the outcome of many games this year.

PETE "CHARLIE" COLEMAN, made a tremendous comeback when after being out half the season teamed up with Melchionni to form a brilliant backcourt combination and helped the Wildcats on their road to winning their last 12 out of 14 games with his high arching jumpshots.

TERRY McGUIRE was one of Kraft's super subs and on many an occasion this 6'4, 185lb. came off the bench to spark the cats to victory when all seemed lost.

BASEBALL

Junior GENE RAMPONE is one of Art Mahan's leading pitchers, this spring. Rampone recently pitched an artful 9-3 win over the University of Pennsylvania, allowing only five hits and striking out five. Look for this junior to better his 4-0 record of last year. Backing up Rampone are two other juniors on the pitching staff, JIM JOHNSTON and JOHN GRASING both left handers.

Another outstanding junior on the starting nine is outfielder SAM GREENWOOD, Greenwood, who hit .361 and drove in 45 runs, is off and running this year and could better his record of last year.

MIKE YENTIS, is one of Mahon's catchers and should see plenty of action this year since he proved his worth last year.

TRACK

BILL HEIDELBERGER is the only junior on the track team but won't be outshined because of it. This speedster from Nether Providence, Pa. is one of Coach Elliott's top 440 men and should help the cindermen in their drive for the outdoor IC4A's.

SWIMMING

JOE PARELL leads the junior swimming contingent on the basis of his All-American status gained last year. This freestyler provided many an exciting moment for the mermen of Villanova.

BOB BOHRMANN, has been in the shadow of Bob Beise for a few years but is still recognized as one of the top divers in the East. He will be number one at Villanova next year.

FRANK MUSICO, GREG DOYLE, and FRANK CONLIN have all excelled in the sprints and relays and will be counted on heavily next year.

TIM TURVEY and JOHN HOFFMAN were used by Coach Geisz in the breast stroke and should score points for next year squads.

We the Class of '67 feel our fellow classmates, involved in varsity competition have not only been a credit to their class and school but also to themselves. We offer them our sincere thanks for a job well done and good luck in the future.

Creating a Tradition founding of this club.

Weightlifting is not the only "minor" sport in which members of the class of '67 are keenly interested. It is also not the only sport which must operate as a club. It is also not the only sport which has shown a high degree of competence.

The Villanova Rugby club and the Villanova Crew club are two athletic groups of which we can all be proud. We as juniors can be especially proud for there are many outstanding members of our class who have shown themselves to be very capable of filling the positions on these teams.

On the Rugby team alone there are enough juniors for them to form their own squad, a very good one at that. Ruggers such as Bill Cameron, Pete Conserva, Mike Kain, Vic Sarkissian, Don Donlan, Bill Clark, and John Thomas carry much of the responsibility and also ability of this fine team. They are a few of the reasons that the team has had fine seasons for the past two years.

The Villanova Crew club is in the midst of having a great season. Thus far the team is undefeated in its competition. This is also a newly formed organization on our campus. Although the squad is not composed of as many juniors as are some of the other teams, students such as Ron Nemeyer have contributed much to the success of the Villanova rowers this season.

The Villanova Lacrosse club is another organization through which many members of the Class of '67 show their athletic ability. Many people think of football as being a rough and tumble sport, and that all other sports are somehow inferior to it in the proof of masculinity. One need only watch a segment of a Lacrosse game to see the fallacy in this belief. Although this is a sport in which physical punishment is severe, it is a sport which attracts many applicants and many fine players. Among these players are many of our classmates. Students such as Pete (Bear) McCarthy, John Rosso and Pete Tyler. These individuals have added much to the morale of the team and also to its fine record. These students through their fine ability and their attitude toward the game are indeed an asset to the class of 1967.

S.O.S. Day

By Mike Mulvey

We have waited for more than two years. Humiliating defeat at the hands of the class of 1966 on Muff Day of our freshman year has left its imprint.

The Seniors will be gone next year but the class of '67 is prepared to send them off a little prematurely this spring. And How!

This year, as part of Junior Week 1966, the class of 1967 has set aside Tuesday, April 19, as S.O.S. (Stomp on Senior Day). Four events have been scheduled for this day and the emphasis is on participation and team effort.

A basketball game will be held in Alumni Gym and a volleyball game will be played on Sullivan Field. Austin Field will be the scene of a softball game and a hardnosed bunch of Juniors will hold down the fort on Mendel Field in a fastmoving game of pushball.

Those interested in participating in any of these athletic events are asked to sign up in advance with either John Fenlon, in room 29 Sheehan, captain of the Senior team or Mike Mulvey, in room 223 Sheehan, captain of the Junior team.

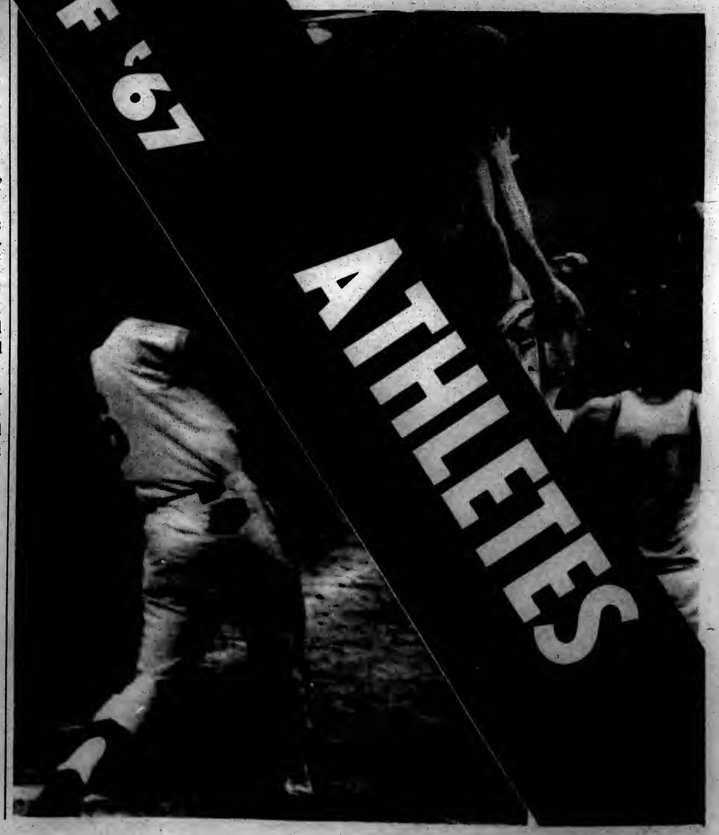
The Juniors are not worried about their own class participating in this day, but they have their doubts about the Seniors. Two years ago the Seniors had everything on their side, including the referees and scorekeepers. This year the day will be arbitrated by sophomore and freshmen members of the Intramural Staff and the scores will be kept by Mr. James Moran.

Will the class of 1966 go out in a blaze of glory or will the juniors show the seniors they are ready to move up to the top spot? The Juniors know the answer.

Unsung Heroes

By Jim Proud

While a student is acquiring his education at a University he often neglects the physical condition of his body.



This is not always due to a lack of coordination or other physical inabilities but can be due to a lack of opportunity to take part in these activities. Many students are not stellar athletes but are able to preform in the not so publicized sports such as Rugby, Ice Hockey, Weightlifting and Crew. This does not mean to say that these students are in any way athletically inferior to those students who participate in the major sports on this campus. The ability which is required to perform with competence in these sports is on a par, if not above, with that required to perform on a football field or on a basketball court.

These sports which are misnamed minor sports are for the most part financed by the students themselves. They are not school recognized sports and therefore operate as clubs. The students who participate in these sports play for one reason alone. That reason is that they have a love of the sport.

There is little or no glory to be gotten in a sport such as weightlifting yet these men are possibly the best team, in this sport, in the nation. This statement is not simply an estimation on the part of the reporter but can be substantiated by the fact that the Villanova Weightlifting team lost to Maryland, the N.C.A.A. champions, by only a few points. In that meet the Villanova Team was unable to compete in the lower weight events due to the fact that they were unable to send the men to the meet because of finances. If they had competed in these events they would have undoubtedly won the meet.

This team has only been recently founded on our campus. These students have only been together since January of this year. Since it is such a new sport here at Villanova we can expect that the founders of this club are among our class. Such students as Pete Roselli and August Zilincar are members of the class of '67 who have been very instrumental in the

Mentzer Lauds Student Body For Having 'Aggiornamento'

By Nick Rongione

Mr. Thomas J. Mentzer addressed the Student Government Association last Wednesday evening, April 13.

This well known History Professor was present at the meeting to receive the SGA award for "special cooperation, devotion and inspiration ... to the student body."

Mr. Mentzer delivered a speech in which he praised the work of the Student Government Association and urged a continuation of the efforts of the SGA towards a more complete service to Villanova.

In part, Mr. Mentzer said:

As you well know, particularly those gentlemen among you who worked so arduously on the Student-Faculty Committee, there are SOME in the Administration and among the Faculty who would as soon bury you or at least that part of you which constitutes your awakened activity, if we might borrow an idea from Shakespeare's Caesar. To these yours is at best the voice of the immature, or at the least, no voice at all. You are to be listened to, not heard. You are to be told, not reasoned with. You are to learn, not inquire. In a word, you are University students in name, but in fact you are high school extensions, only a little older. Members of the Student Government, by historical standards, I consider myself a primary witness to the fact that this year your organization in league with those two immeasurably important organs of communication, the VILLANOVAN and WWVU have by word and by action offered a trenchant rebuttal to those at Villanova who continue to dabble in the cliches of the student immaturity and/or student passivity. Incidently, speaking of the VILLANOVAN and WWVU, myself and many of my colleagues in the Arts School, at least, feel that the value of these two student communications media could rise even more were they allowed the normal professional University privilege of reporting and editorializing without any "higher" censorship, however so-

Literary Society Hears Satirist Peter DeVries

By Rich Wagner

Peter De Vries, satiric novelist and member of the NEW YORKER staff, spoke in Vasey Hall auditorium April 13, on the topic of "Laughter in Theory and Practice." The Lecture, sponsored by the Literary Society of Villanova was a combination of wit and serious philosophy.

De Vries began by describing himself saying "not only are my books first rate, but I am a top-notch person!" He gave examples of how he has been plagued by a lack of appreciation, such as the time during his collegiate days he called "a mass meeting to protest student apathy. Four people showed up." He added that "In private life I have been equally underestimated and unappreciated."

The novelist's interest in philosophy was first encouraged by a professor who heard him discussing Kierkegard. He formerly discussed his subject often because "Kierkegard was my grandmother's maiden name."

De Vries gradually changed the emphasis of his talk and discussed and rejected the various theories of humor. He told how laughter has been called sadistic, but showed that puns and other forms of humor would not allow this theory. He continued saying "that a true definition of humor must apply to that only which is funny, and on this basis he also Fabulous Junior Week '66 culminates with Dinner-Dance at Sheraton Hotel. Paul Judge and his orchestra set to wail.

'66 Junior Week Activities Conclude With Dinner Dance

The annual Junior Week events began on Sunday evening and will continue throughout the remainder of the week.

On Sunday evening the Spring Concert was presented by the Villanova Band, Singers, and Woman's Glee Club primarily for the benefit of the Juniors and their families.

Monday was Mother's Day, which was marked by an outdoor Mass in the grotto, a luncheon, and the Diaper Dan contest. There were no classes for Juniors on this day, so that they could attend all the events with their mothers.

Monday also brought the annual Junior Week edition of the "VILLANOVAN". This paper was written and edited solely by juniors, and contained a class history and a look into the future with the class prophecy.

Tuesday was SOS day, an afternoon of fierce athletic competition between juniors and seniors.

Thursday will be the day of a smoker presented in the Conshohocken VFW Hall. Championship game films speeches by sports celebrities, and awards to junior athletes will be on the program.

CONCERT AND DINNER DANCE

The highlights of Junior Week will be on Friday and Saturday nights when the class of 1967 will stage a concert and dinner dance.

Friday night the Kingston Trio, world renowned folk singing group will give a concert in the Field House at 8:30 p.m. The exciting trio will present a variety of songs.

The Sheraton Hotel in Philadelphia will be the scene of the dinner dance on Saturday night. The night's events include a cocktail hour from 7 p.m. to 8 p.m., dinner from 8 p.m. to 9 p.m., and dancing from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. Entertainment will be provided by Paul Judge and his orchestra.

Williams Edges Brett In Presidential Race

By Dale Pappert

After a heated political campaign, Ward T. Williams was elected President of the Student Government Association for the coming year at the March 30 meeting.

The meeting, which began at 6:30 p.m. was earmarked by a series of nominations and acceptance speeches which continued for almost two hours. At the outset of the meeting was the nomination speech given by Mr. Frank Eck, former President of the S.G.A., Mr. David Banmiller, this year's President of the Associated Student Government of America, seconded the nomination.

Following these speeches Williams accepted the nomination with a speech emphasizing potential of the Student Government to "enter into areas where the S.G.A. has yet to enter in the previous years."

The nominating and seconding speeches for Brendan Brett were given by Mr. Jim Griffin, President of the Senior Class, and Mr. Rick Holwell, President of the Junior Class. Brett, emphasizing the "challenge" which awaited the Student Government, accepted the nomination.

It was announced by President Freind shortly after that Williams was to be President of the S.G.A. for 1966-67.

The nominating speeches were then given for prospective candidates for Secretary: Greg Fusgo, Dan Vasti, and Tim Wahl.

This election required to separate ballots, the second of which resulted in a run-off election between Vasti and Wahl. Freind then announced Wahl was the new Secretary.

In accordance with a motion presented by Greg Fusco, the Treasurer Jim Proud was then Villanova Professor John J. Logue (right) talks with Russell Train, President of the Conservation Foundation of last week's Regional Seminar on Natural Beauty held on the University campus. Logue was Arrangements Chairman for the Seminar.

Villanova Hosts Seminar On Regional Natural Beauty

A Regional Seminar on Natural Beauty was held in Dougherty Hall on April 11. Eighty conferees from the three-state, eleven county Penjerdel region took part in the all-day seminar which reached a "preliminary consensus" on action recommendations which will be taken to the Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware conferences on natural beauty to be held later this year.

Professor John J. Logue of Villanova's Political Science Department served as arrangements chairman for the Seminar and Rev. William E. Farrell, OSA, Vice President for Development, gave a welcoming address to the conferees. Logue attended last year's White House Conference on Natural Beauty.

Among the recommendations which the seminar considered and reached tentative agreement on were the following: legislation to control outdoor advertising and junkyards; requiring real estate developers to set aside open land in substantial amounts; review of state highway plans in the Penjerdel area by the Delaware Valley Regional Planning Commission; putting public utility equipment, such as telephone wires, underground where feasible; and legal recognition of natural beauty as a legitimate purpose for keeping certain land from development.

Major addresses at the Conference were given by Mayor Arthur T. Holland of Trenton and Russell Train, President of the Conservation Foundation. Moderators, and panelists and participants included civic leaders, elected officials, planning commission members, business leaders, university professors and landscape architects.

LYNX Editor Names Members of Editorial Board for 1966-1967

Dennis O'Hara, editor-in-chief of the LYNX which goes on sale today in the Pie Shop, has announced the editorial board for next year's staff.

Michael Stibich, a junior social science major and last year's layout editor has been named editor-in-chief. Working closely with Michael will be Steve Carney as managing editor.

Art Johnson and Fred Hetzler are the new associate editors, and Jeff Radowich will be poetry editor. Research editor, a new post on the board in charge of interviews, is George Handran.

The following were also named to the editorial board by O'Hara: Kevin Mahoney, business manager; Peter Conserva, art editor; Neil Sheehan, publicity, Kevin Tobin, exchange editor; Bob Layne, layout editor; Ray Legen, copy editor; Frank Hermes, and Mark Merkle, circulation. Bob Layne will also act as SGA representative for the LYNX.

Father George Lawless serves as moderator, and the faculty consultant is Dr. Joseph C. Reino.

The new editor has some plans for improvement, but also intends to keep the many traditions behind the LYNX.

"We will again offer a $25 prize for the best article submitted. We feel that the prize is worthwhile because it not only spurs people to write, but also increases the quality of the work," said Stibich. The new editor voiced hopes of increasing the publication to three issues and possibly four "to put the LYNX back in its original position as a quarterly."

Sociological Society Stages Second Annual Hootenanny

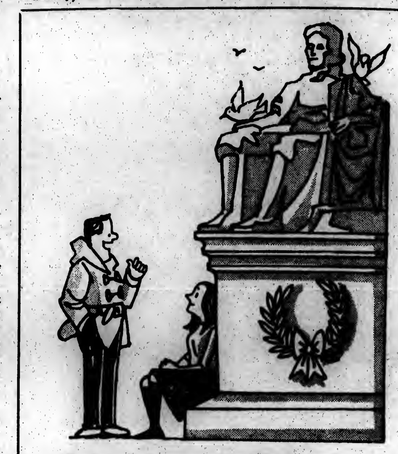
The Villanova Sociological Society presented its second annual Hootenanny for the benefit of St. Gabriel's Hall on Friday, April 15, at 8 p.m.

This year's show was staged in the auditorium of St. Gabriel's in Phoenixville, Pa. (Pawlings Rd. off Audubon Rd.). Maps were distributed at last week's club meeting on Thursday, April 14 at 10:30 a.m. in Room 207 Vasey Hall. Donations were $.75 single and $1. for couples with all proceeds going to St. Gabriel's.

This year's entertainment was provided by the following: Ken Cavender, Bob Chaves, Jack Cipriano, Karl Fehrenbach, Bob Fumento, Mike Glazer, The Havveners, Larry Healy, The Millstone Trio, The Roman Numerals, The Spires, Scott Thomas.

Special mention should be given to Bob Chaves and Karl Fehrenbach, who assisted Club President Lou Lombardi and Club Activities Chairman Rich Koob in directing and organizing the show. Dave Buscher will serve as the show's technician. Ed Imp, Hank Mackney, Sue Hughes and Florence Ligato took care of the show's publicity.

The Club's third annual picnic will be held on Sunday, April 24, at 1 p.m. on the grounds of St. Gabriel's Hall. This event will be highlighted by the annual Queen Contest. Reigning Queen Maggy Cavenaugh (Junior, Chestnut Hill College) will be on hand to crown the new Queen.



VU Conservative Club To Sponsor Lecture By Dr. Richard Allen

Joseph Ragonese, Chairman of the Villanova University Conservative Club, has announced that the organization will hold its third and final lecture of the Semester on Thursday, April 21 at 7:30 p.m. The Lecture, held with the assistance of the Rosemont Conservative Club will take place at Rosemont College.

Dr. Richard Allen, Research Associate and director of the Study Program on Communism of the Georgetown University Center for Strategic Studies, will speak on "Communist Strategic and the National Wars of Liberation."

Dr. Allen, one of the most prominent men in his field, received his A.B. and M.A. from Notre Dame University and did Doctoral work at the University of Freiburg and Munich, Germany taking his degree from the latter.

He has also received a Congressional Fellowship from the American Political Science Association.

HE: First time I ever made the Dean's List.

IFC Elects Sales President; Drafts Stronger Constitution

At its April 4 meeting the Interfraternity Council of Villanova elected a new President and finished writing a stronger and more progressive Constitution. The highly successful Interfraternity Weekend of April 1 and 2 was also reported on.

The IFC consists of fifteen members - three from each of the four fraternities and one sorority. Only ten were in attendance at this important meeting but it was a sufficient quorum and the election was held.

Mr. William Sales of Delta Pi Epsilon was elected President for the 1966-67 academic year. Runners-up in this important election were Bill Keane of Delta Pi Mu and Bud DeSantis of Phi Kappa Pi.

Mr. Sales, who hails from Newark, New Jersey, is a Commerce and Finance student and the present treasurer of the IFC. Elections for Secretary and Treasurer will be held at a meeting of the new Council.

The council has just finished writing its new Constitution, which, if approved by the fraternities and the administration, will give the IFC greater jurisdiction and control in many areas of fraternity life.

The new charter gives the IFC power of approval and control over all social activities of the fraternities. The newest and most important innovation, however, is a three-week Interfraternity Rushing program during the first semester to be designated and coordinated by the IFC.

The Interfraternity Council will also be able to determine the Pledging Period and will have strict control over all pledging activities, a member of the IFC attending all pledge meetings and functions.

Mr. William Hurley, this year's President, reported on the Interfraternity Party which was held at Aquarama on Friday, April 1.

Naval ROTC Presents Annual Spring Review In Goodreau Stadium

Midshipman Battalion Commander Girard Brett has made known the plans for this year's Villanova NROTC Unit Spring Review to be held on Friday, April 22 at 5:45 p.m. in Goodreau Stadium.

The Midshipmen will present the Unit Band, the nationally ranked Unit Drill Team, "Whiskey Company," who will perform its award winning fancy drill routine, and the Battalion of Midshipmen who will pass in review to conclude the proceedings.

Also, awards will be presented during the Review to those Midshipmen who have excelled in their scholastic or military performance.

There are 21 awards listed in all, and among these are such honors as:

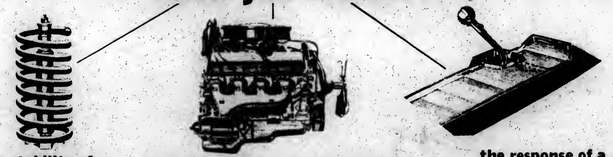
--The Capt. Theodore H. White Award presented in memory of Capt. White's son, to the senior student who has displayed "the most Outstanding officer-like qualities."

The Navy League of Philadelphia Award given to the students with the highest general average in each class.

--The Society of American Military Engineers Award which goes to the fifth and fourth year students majoring in engineering who have exhibited academic excellence.

A point of interest to the Midshipment themselves is the announcement of the winner of the company competition. The participants in this contest are: Alpha Company, Bravo Company and Charlie Company.

The competition is considered in a number of fields such as, intra-murals, blood drive, captain's inspection, rifle and pistol marksmanship, swimming, marching and drill competition and physical fitness. The Midshipman commanding the winning company selects the Battalion Color Girl, who then transfers the Honor Guidon to the winners.



Following the Review, refreshments will be served at a reception in Bartley Hall Cafeteria.

Ideals of April

They tell us that April is the cruelest month. With it come all of those sudden reminiscent pangs that accompany births and deaths. But April is the month for new things, and the VILLANOVAN is no exception to that rule. Each April finds the University paper with a new staff. The fledgling editors stand ready to comment on, and criticize, report on, and review some of those things which are pertinent to the Villanova community.

Each new crop of editors is confident that THIS paper will be the best in the history of the University. The truth is that each volume of the VILLANOVAN does get better. For this paper, like the University itself, is quite subject to the laws of evolution.

The outgoing editors leave a legacy of experience, and not a small amount of satisfaction to their proteges. The novices come in heads down, hands swinging, and full of that magic idealism which is so much a part of being young enough and fresh enough to see Truth as something to share. They come in with a challenge and a prayer. The challenge: That the rest of the University join in an attempt to make Villanova the best Catholic College in the nation. And the prayer: That those who by conscious effort, or by a malingering fear of new ideas, attempt to oppose this endeavor -- A prayer that these reactionary individuals have the good sense to sit back on the sidelines and watch, or risk being swept up in the strong tide that is running for excellence at Villanova.

The VILLANOVAN then, for the final editions of this year, and the remainder of next year will consciously endeavor to print the news, air the comments, voice the opinions and the complaints of the members of the Villanova community.

If we can competently and creatively do this much; then evolution will have again worked its own small miracle, while elusive perfection smiles, waiting in another April.

An Open Letter

Dear Mr. Williams,

First of all, congratulations on your recent election to the presidency of the Student Government Association. This is not written solely to congratulate you, but also to remind you of a feeling held by many Villanova undergraduates: that, although the personality of your predecessor Steve Freind was far from ideal, he was the ideal person for the presidency of our Student Body.

This is to say that Steve Freind was sometimes obnoxious and arrogant, and for these reasons, was disliked. His motto, which is excellent in itself, was to talk when talk was needed and to fight when fight was needed.

But when he spoke he was sometimes insolent. And when he fought, sometimes unnecessarily, he was odious, and therefore, while many of his ends were excellent, his means-that is both himself and his methods were abhored.

To say that Freind was not liked by a vast majority of students is not to say that he was not respected and appreciated by them. He was respected because of his pragmatic goals, and because he possessed an intangible quality: leadership. He was appreciated because it was necessary to have a man with certain anti-qualities at the head of the Student Body this past year.

So, Mr. Williams, as you assume the position of Student Government leader, reflect upon the goals and methods of your predecessor and attempt to guide your administration with his dynamic and inspirational qualities.

From the Editor

Fate plays strange tricks on us all.

Just a few short weeks ago, we came to you from the hip. Now we find ourselves running the whole joint. Ah well, c'est la guerre, or something or other.

We'd like to congratulate Mr. Mentzer, both for his fine work on the student-faculty committee this past year, and for his super fine speech before the S.G.A. Wednesday night. We like people who speak out. We hope to see more of this in the coming year, both from faculty and students.

Also, Mr. Nolan and Mr. Murray, the other two members of the committee, deserve kudos for their work on behalf of the student body. We need more teachers like this. Too often, men are content with the role of 'instructor', and fail to become 'teachers' in the truest sense of the word.

Another member of our Faculty who has done a commendable job in his first year in the position is Robert Rowland, Post-Graduate Study Advisor. Thanks for getting so many of us into graduate school, Dr. Rowland!

Also, while we are handing out Congrats., let's not forget Ward Williams, recently elected Student Body President. (See editorial.)

We are still looking for people to compose next year's Editorial board. Applications are available in the VILLANOVAN office.

You all remember, of course, that it was St. Anselm who "proved" that God exists.

He did this by getting an idea in his head, and then projecting it outside of his head.

Well, tomorrow is St. Anselm's feastday. So have a happy one.

Letters to the Editor

To The Editor

I was sorry to read Father Syvinski's tirade against the propriety of the Sophomore Class' Art Exhibit in the last edition of the VILLANOVAN. Undoubtedly many aspects of the exhibit were poorly organized. No doubt the Art committee deserved criticism. But does all the fault lie there?

Perhaps more art experts should have been consulted. Or an even better idea would have been that Father Syvinski offer his criticism and advice BEFORE the Exhibit.

In short, the Sophomore Class deserves much more praise for its "amateur" contribution than does Father Syvinski.

To the Editor

I regret that you felt in the recent letter published in the VILLANOVAN (March 30) was the only comment regarding the Art Exhibit sponsored by the Sophomore Class. Do you feel it said all there was needed to be said?

As an outsider, I consider this effort (admittedly shaky) a pleasant indication that the "Big V" reputation has encompassed more than that of "wild cats." Don't you see the lack that this type of activity might hope to alleviate in the majority of your population?

I was delighted to find someone interested in the work of his fellow students. I was encouraged to discover a place where we, the less competent members of the art community could examine each other's work. I was thrilled with the expectation of better things in the west.

Can you be so disinterested as to slough it off with only a comment (irate) of its lack of polish. Maybe if there were more interest, the exhibits would have had the room, facilities and competent guidance they needed.

The very fact that you had too many works to exhibit, shows the enthusiasm some of your students and those outside your institution had to note this interest "worthy" of Villanova? Are the initiators to be patted on the back and sent off with statements such as ... "most unfortunate, so much so, that I think we would have been better without it." (What would you like to replace it with-an exhibition of wildcat trophies?)

I'm sorry, but if this is the way you encourage those who seem to be distressed with some of the more stunted aspects of your campus life, you are going to get a lot narrower before you become educated. What fools are rushing in?

The situation of the Freshman is unique. This will probably be the first time that he has been away from home for any extended period of time. His parents trust, and pay, the university to take care of him. The freshman finds that he now has many new found freedoms, which in many cases he would not even think of having at home.

It has been observed that curfews might aid in this respect. However upon investigation these curfews are actually quite nonexistant for the freshman. It is also understood that "all students except those who live at home are required to live on campus". Also observed that for incoming freshman this is not usually the case.

"Necessarily, much is left to the mature judgement and sense of responsibility of the student himself." Regardless, the school could take some action as it has outlined.

Is this any way to run a university? You bet it isn't! I do not think that the moral obligation that Villanova owes its freshman is being fulfilled.

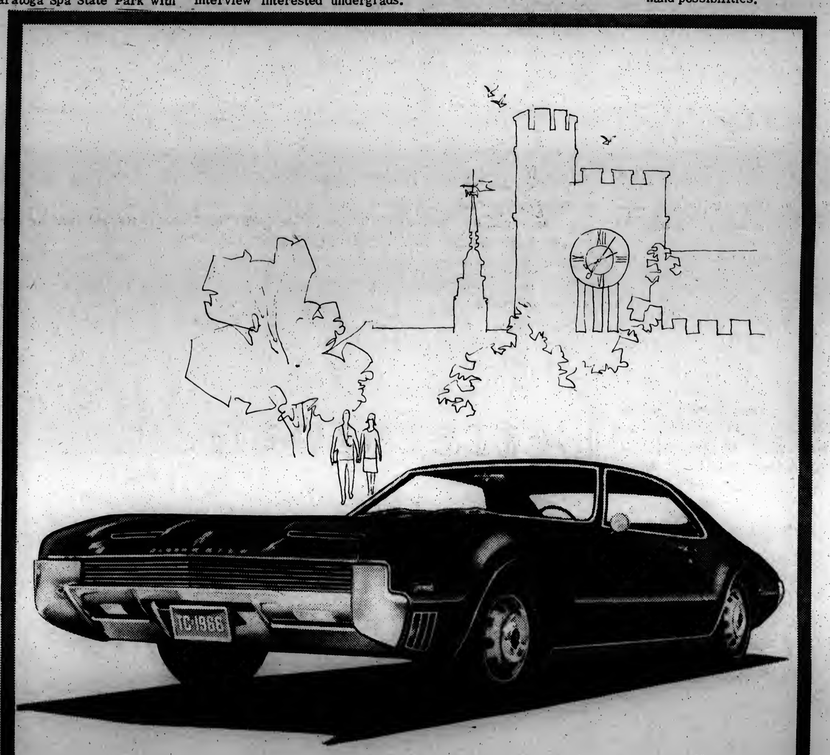
A Chance to Laugh —At Skidmore

An unusual opportunity for male and female undergraduates to be part of a unique theatre venture is being offered by Skidmore College. The College has announced its continuing sponsorship of The COMEDY ARTS THEATRE, which will open its second summer season July 6 in the historic New York resort city of Saratoga Springs.

Unlike most summer theatres, the company has been organized for a specific artistic purpose. As expressed by its founders, the long range aim of The COMEDY ARTS THEATRE is "to build a repertory company specializing in the performance of the many different styles of comedy."



A list of the highly-successful first season's plays is representative of this: THE IMPORTANCE OF BEING EARNEST, THE MADWOMAN OF CHAILLOT, ONLY I LAUGH (by Jules Feiffer), and SHE STOOPS TO CONQUER.

The group is developing a theatre worthy of the rest of the ambitious performing arts program that will be featured this summer. A lavish new ballet and concert theatre will open at the Saratoga Spa State Park with the New York City Ballet and the Philadelphia Orchestra in residence during July and August.

Slightly expanded over last year, the resident acting company will comprise a nucleus of experienced players who will carry the most difficult roles in the season of four comedies. All supporting roles will be cast from among the group of undergraduates participating in the summer program, ALL of whom will be eligible to try out for EVERY play. Several people who were students last summer will return either as members of the resident acting company or the production staff.

For the undergraduates, the Skidmore College Drama Department is offering a training program of four college-credit courses: Acting, Dance for Actors, Technical Theatre, and Rehearsal and Production.

Interested students are urged to write promptly to: The Producer, The COMEDY ARTS THEATRE, Skidmore College, Saratoga Springs, N. Y. 12866. Representatives will be attending the Yale Festival of Undergraduate Drama at the end of March to interview interested undergrads.

You Might Well Ask ...

By Neil Sheehan

New York, New York
It's a wonderful town,
The Bronx is up,
And the Battery's down
And fire extinguishers seem to find their way out of windows.

Not a very funny line, but neither were a lot of things that happened in New York City on the N.I.T. Weekend.

There were good things, though. By this I mean the fabulous showing of the basketball team. Yet one hears so much about the wins, the losses, the points, and the cigars, but there was one thing that was never written up in the papers. It didn't happen that weekend, though. In fact, it happened several weeks ago during the Villanova-Niagara game.

If you will remember (sounds like narrator of The Phantom), there was a little incident when Joe Crews was apparently intentionally attacked by the swinging right hand of a Niagara player. Even more apparent was the fact that most of the crowd noticed this and began screaming for Niagara blood.

No one would have really thought it too out of place if Joe had inflicted physical damage upon his agressor. But that wasn't the case. Joe looked to the referee for a ruling, but to no avail. Still he maintained himself and finished the game without incident. Now to me that was an amazing show of sportsmanship, so I thought I'd mention it. So I did.

At this point, while you're either reaching for your one glass of milk or inspecting Pie Shoppe potential, you might well ask why this column is not in the sports section. It all goes back to the concept of the unnoticed receiving a bit of notice. I hope you noticed that.

Mystic Marker

By Ron Javers

There is a saying, quite popular in modern jazz and art circles, that goes something like this: If you gotta ask, man you ain't never gonna know."

We wonder if perhaps this crude (by our standards) homily doesn't characterize the whole significance of the adventure in which we are currently embroiled: Education.

If education is the digestion and accumulation of great bodies of nameless and faceless facts, then our characterization is in error. If education is other peoples ideas, then read no further, but be content in you own small closet of second hand possibilities.

But if education is something else, some other animal, some process that doesn't live in laboratories, and that shuns chalk dust and dusty manuscripts, then open a door and be educated, and be glad you found out about it so soon.

So many of our "educated elite", tend to be content to count heads, to put in boxes, to label; in short empiricism has run rampant in American academic circles.

Perhaps it is a symptom of the times. As a fairly reputable poet once complained: "Everyone wants more, more, more. What the hell are we, a bunch of Morticians? The general belief is that if you can't count it, catagorize it, and stick a little plastic label on it, then why bother with it all?"

Mystic

The mystic is lost today in a world of equations and formulas. But, strangely enough, the mystic is most often happy. The mystic is concerned with the things and possibilities within. He is old fashioned and alone, and very proud. He is convinced that he will never be able to measure the depth of his own beliefs, nor the heights of his aspiration. He knows that his education can show him the way to satisfaction, but never take him there. He realizes that he has found a Way, but is sure that each path is singular. A mystic once said this of education:

"I only speak to you in words of that which you yourselves know in thought.
And what is word knowledge but a shadow of wordless knowledge? Wise men have come to

You can always fold, bend, spindle and mutilate your only identity (and we all know what that is); or better yet you can join that noble movement, Machine-O-Match. Yes, now all you computer owners can find a compatible mate for that sweet young thing sitting in your office.

Let me now show you, in a hypothetical case, how Machine-O-Match works. Suppose your RCA 503 has been acting a bit sluggish lately. Chances are he just lacks companionship. You can simply pick up a handy Machine-O-Match compatibility form no. 82862 at the Machine-O-Match office near you. (Machine-O-Match branch offices are conveniently located in 12 major cities throughout the country). Then have your computer fill our the questionnaire and mail it to the Machine-O-Match home office in the basement of Tolentine, (of all places). Your questionnaire will then be expertly processed by Machine-O-Match's qualified team of Compudate rejects. Your computer will then be sent the punch cards and circuit diagrams of the compatible computers in your area. Remember: A computer in love is a productive computer.

Faculty Profile

Dean Gallen Cuts Hair and Beards

Dean John J. Gallen is head of Villanova's College of Engineering. A Villanova graduate in Civil Engineering, he received his Masters of Science degree from the University of Pennsylvania.

Dean Gallen has been involved in teaching and in the practice of engineering for the past 39 years. He is a member of several professional organizations including the American Society of Civil Engineers where he is a fellow and past president and member of the Board of Directors of the Philadelphia Section. He is also a member of the Honorary Engineering Society, Tau Beta Pi.

A father of seven children, his chief avocations are golf, bowling, and reading, especially historical novels.

Dean John J. Gallen

In a recent interview Dean Gallen discussed the high attrition rate in the Engineering College. He said:

"The percentage of entering freshmen who graduate from the Engineering College is 53 per cent, but the figure is misleading.

Students who leave an engineering course generally do not remain in the College of Engineering but enter another college in the University, thus becoming an engineering dropout statistic though they eventually graduate from college. Actually 75 per cent of the incoming engineering freshmen will receive degrees from the University."

When asked if he had any pet gripes at Villanova, he replied:

"Beards and long hair are my chief complaint. I wouldn't mind the long hair if it were clean but too often it is slovenly.

"I also think too many students get by with blue jeans and sweatshirts even though the regulation calls for suit jackets and ties. This type of dress is all right for dirty lab work but it should not be permitted at other times.

"The students' attire makes a difference in the impression we leave on visitors. The proper dress can also add to a student's self-respect."

Dean Gallen pointed out the changes which have been effected in the curriculum of undergraduates. Under a new freshman reading program, freshmen will be assigned books to read and write papers on over their summer vacation. They will also attend classes on these books when school begins in the fall.

This course supplementing and not replacing the present English program for engineers will not have any credits attached to it.

Beginning last fall separate one-credit lab and three-credit lecture courses were given in the field of chemical engineering. This enables the students' ability in lab technique to be judged independently of his understanding of the theory presented in the lectures.

In the fall of 1966, a similar program will be inaugurated for electrical engineers.

The Ballad of the Green Berets - OR - How I Learned to Stop Worrying and Love the War

By Neil Sheehan

So far this year, U.S. Special Forces Staff Sargeant Barry Sadler has earned approximately a quarter of a million dollars. That's a lot of money. In fact, it is one twenty-fourth of what the Beatles have earned in their entire career. It should be obvious by now that someone is buying his records. What is somewhat less obvious is why two million Americans are spending their money on Sadler's songs.

From the outset, I believe that we are safe to eliminate musical quality from any list of possible purchase motives. Looking at some excerpts of his creations, it is even safer to state that Sadler is no lyricist:

Here's the mail that came today
His silver wings and green beret.

Come all ye young maidens,
and hear my sad tale,
'Bout a brave young trooper whose 'chute did fail.*

*See Time Magazine for more complete sarcasm.

It must be his message. No one can doubt that the Green Berets excell to some degree in various endeavors (e.g. trained in combat, hand-to-hand). It's a wonderful message up until the following verse:

Back at home a young wife waits.
Her Green Beret has met his fate.
He has died for those oppressed,
Leaving her his last request...

Put silver wings on my son's chest.
Make him one of America's best.
He'll be a man, etc., etc., etc.

Perhaps I am mistaken, but I am under the impression that we are fighting in Viet Nam to end war and its various offspring. Sargeant Sadler has ruined my image. It seems as if he would like the current war to go on so his son (if there is to be one), can become a Green Beret. It is the opinion here that Sargeant Sadler is adding insult to injury (and casualties) to those men in Viet Nam who are sincerely fighting for the cause of peace. What man would wish the horrors of the Viet Nam on his own son. Not many, and certainly not two million. No, it can't be his message.

There is only one other possible justification of Sadler's record sales. It is the American people's way of retaliating against last year's "Eve of Destruction" by mellow-voiced Barry McGuire, which in itself is not such a bad idea.

The University

The Administration and the Midlands

By Dr. Bernard L. Bonniwell

Editor's Note: The following is the second in a series of articles on the general theme: "The University" which are being written by Dr. Bonniwell of the Psychology Department. The VILLANOVAN wishes to thank Dr. Bonniwell for his permission to publish these articles.

"The challenges to education are as massive and staggering as those facing the American people . . . Only a strong and vital educational system can give us handholds to a better future. This is the essence of the challenge to public policy. The challenge of change is too great for modest efforts, patch-works, and simplistic short-cuts to economy and efficiency. Our High - achieving society expects much more of the American education."

The university is the human mind in an era of expectation. It is the ideal not yet realized. It is the potential of man nourished on creative change. The fatal flaw is crystallization: of students, of teaching, of research, of administration. Perhaps the administration is a reflection of all four and so bears unfairly the brunt of general criticism.

The administration is a rare heirloom to those who inherit it: to those in the University Midlands, the administration is an interesting curio from the past. The statement is disturbingly true from a transitional viewpoint which suggests that administration must change with the times and the needs of men. The stated principle is evident, although less precisely perceived, from an analysis of historical events in which the antecedents frequently mirror the growing concern of the observer group.

The behavioral dilemma, then, is not contained within the logic of the situation but rather in the psychological fact that two perfectly sincere groups perceive the same data at cross-purposes. An unforseen change has taken place on the American campus, the resultant of abnormal growth and the breakdown of communications, creating the unintended -- and presently untended -- University Midlands.

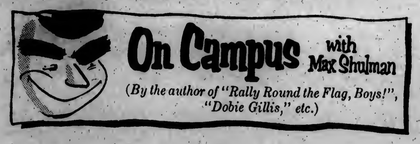
MIDLANDS

The Great Midlands of the University, that vague and uneasy area of human relations, so poorly defined and so obviously lacking in the fundamental principles of orientation required for harmonic growth of the group. The university is a single organization, dedicated to the education of the individual for the good of total society, but now fragmented into three indrawing groups: the administration, the faculty, and the student body.

The differences of opinion have been expressed publicly in recent months, ranging from the student demonstrations in California to the faculty demonstrations in New York, and to the demonstrations of growing unrest of the Teachers Unions in New Jersey and Pennsylvania. The unrest reflects the behavioral fact that education has become big business and must learn to live with the inhumanity of bigness even in the educational endeavor. The business of education has simply outgrown the traditional administrative perimeter; the university is no longer a big family and surely no longer receptive to an administrative paternalism so genuinely effective in the past.

Let the past lie fallow. The contemporary university is in a state of transition and requires a new administrative design, sharply distinguished from the old in terms of the need for new areas of authority.

PROBLEM



The problem of human relations, however vast an intricate, requires a sensitive merging of the concepts of freedom, responsibility and limitation. It is basic that ALL members of the university contribute to the university endeavor, initially through their own center of authority and ultimately through the common authority of the University Congress. It is proposed that under these conditions men will come to see more clearly -- not that which divides them -- but that which unites them.

The Great Midlands of the University, growing more diffuse and administratively tenuous under the impact of subdividing faculties, research divisions and increasing student enrollments, require meaningful unification. In some instances it would seem that overall communications have broken down entirely, leaving to chance the subtle forces of human relationships which suddenly appear as sharp points of resistence to the system. In terms of group dynamics, this is the fault of an insular system, not the isolated individual. In a recent report, by the President of a State associated university, the student problem is noted with growing concern: "Hard-pressed institutions have sought to balance the dwindling reservoir of experienced, high calibre teachers with larger classes, increased reliance on graduate assistants, and utilization of instructional TV and similar techniques.

CIRCUMSTANCES

Given these circumstances, it has not been surprising to witness a growing feeling on the part of some students in large universities with heavy concentrations in graduate areas that they are mere number and personifications of data processing cards, that the tradition and congenial pace of higher education have somehow been lost, and that the life of a student today is little more than something being processed through a giant machine."

It may be concluded, then, that the traditional university human relations program, evaluated against the personnel procedures of business, is acutely incomplete despite the fact the educational problem is equally complex and growing competitively intense. The need for a positive concept of LIAISON, capable of responding to the divergent demands of the students and the faculty, is of the first order. A professionally qualified, full time university personnel organization, servicing the Centers of Authority, represents the initial, personalized means of establishing and maintaining the lines of communication so necessary for effective unity and high morale throughout the entire university. The problem of the University Midlands is the problem of human relations. The problem will not solve itself.

ROOMMATES REVISITED

This morning's mail brought a letter from a student at a prominent Western university (Princeton). "Dear Sir," he writes. "In a recent column you said it was possible to get along with your roommate if you try hard enough. Well, I'd like to see anyone get along with my roommate! Mervis Trunz (for that is his name) practices the ocarina all night long, keeps an alligator, wears knee-cymbals, and collects airplane tires. I have tried everything I can with Mervis Trunz, but nothing works. I am desperate. (signed) Desperate."

Have you, dear Desperate, really tried everything? Have you, for example, tried a measure so simple, so obvious, that it is easy to overlook? I mean, of course, have you offered to share your Personna® Super Stainless Steel Blades with Mervis Trunz?

To have a friend, dear Desperate, you must be a friend. And what could be more friendly than sharing the bounty of Personna Super Stainless Steel Blades? Who, upon enjoying the luxury of Personna, the nickless, scrapeless, tugless, hackless, scratchless, matchless comfort of Personna, the ease and breeze, the power and glory, the truth and beauty of Personna—who, I say, after such jollies could harden his heart against his neighbor? Nobody, that's who—not even Mervis Trunz—especially not today with the new Personna Super Blade bringing us new highs in speed, comfort, and durability. And here is still a further bonus: Personna is available both in Double Edge style and Injector style.

No, dear Desperate, your problem with Mervis Trunz is far from insoluble. In fact, as roommate problems go, it is pretty small potatoes. Compare it, for example, to the classic case of Basil Metabolism and E. Pluribus Ewbank.

Basil and E. Pluribus, roommates at a prominent Eastern university (Oregon) were at an impassable impasse. Basil could study only late at night, and E. Pluribus could not stay awake past nine p.m. If Basil kept the lights on, the room was too bright for E. Pluribus to sleep. If E. Pluribus turned the lights off, the room was too dark for Basil to study. What to do?

Well sir, these two intelligent American kids found an answer. They got a miner's cap for Basil! Thus, he had enough light to study by, and still the room was dark enough for E. Pluribus to sleep.

It must be admitted, however, that this ingenious solution had some unexpected sequelae. Basil got so enchanted with his miner's cap that he switched his major from 18th Century poetry to mining and metallurgy. Shortly after graduation he had what appeared to be a great stroke of luck: while out prospecting, he discovered what is without question the world's largest feldspar mine. This might have made Basil very rich except that nobody, alas, has yet discovered a use for feldspar. Today Basil, a broken man, squeezes out a meagre living as a stalagmite in Ausable Chasm.

Nor has E. Pluribus fared conspicuously better. Once Basil got the miner's cap, E. Pluribus was able to catch up on his long-lost sleep. He woke after nine days, refreshed and vigorous—more vigorous, alas, than he realized. It was the afternoon of the Dean's tea. E. Pluribus stood in line with his classmates, waiting to shake the Dean's hand. At last his turn came, and E. Pluribus, full of strength and health, gave the Dean a firm handshake—so firm, indeed, that all five of the Dean's knuckles were permanently fused.

The Dean sued for a million dollars and, of course, won. Today E. Pluribus, a broken man, is paying off his debt by walking the Dean's cat every afternoon for ten cents an hour.

All of those words are simple. There is no jargon or verbosity. An empiricist could never have written them, but then again Kahlil Gibran probably could not tell us how many angels can be put on the head of a pin. He probably wouldn't even care.

rejected the theories of surprise, something coming to nothing, and failure of adaptation. In an anecdotal manner De Vries said that in talking to Sigmund Freud, he learned that, psychologically, humor is a release of repressions and in that way is related to dreams.

At the end of his lecture, De Vries admitted that all the theories were inadequate. Nevertheless, humor is essential to humanity, and is a worthy topic for discussion. James Thurber had equated laughter with prayer and Peter De Vries would seem to agree.

Abbreviated Semester Forces Cancellation Of Senior Fathers' Day

The Senior Fathers' Day, traditionally a second semester event, will not be held this year. In past years, the outing has been scheduled for a day on which there were several sports events on campus, including both a baseball game and track meet. This year, however, due mainly to the squeezed schedule, no such day is available.

An off-campus event was decided against on the grounds that it would defeat the purpose of Fathers' Day, the gathering of seniors and their fathers on campus for a last good time together before graduation. The relatively high cost of any type of off-campus function is another compelling objection which many seniors can recognize.

re-elected by acclamation.

Ward Williams, on April 13, announced the following appointments for the S.G.A. next year: Jeff Radowich will be Executive Vice-President for Student Government, Brenden Brett will be Executive Vice-President for Student Affairs, and Charles Murphy will be Executive Vice-President for Educational Affairs.

Radowich, a former Parliamentarian and Public Relations Director, has also taken the responsibility of implementing the Student Court here on campus.

Brett, former Educational Affairs Vice-President, has announced that one of his principal goals will be to establish a Student-Administration Committee in order to increase and better the relations between Student Government and the Administration at Villanova.

Murphy, recently elected Alumni Representative and Director of the Course and Teacher Evaluation, has set as one of his goals for the coming year the distribution of the Course and Teacher Evaluation to the entire Student Body.

President Williams also announced the formation of an Executive Council of which the above are all members.

Sophs Hold Orphans Outing Saturday at Malvern Prep

Tickets for the event are on sale in the Pie Shop and Bartley Cafeteria. Price is $2.00 for a couple and $1.50 stag.

There will be 100 orphans from Casa Del Carmen in Philadelphia and entertainment has been arranged.

Ayn Rand, 'Gath's Creed' Philosophy Club Topic

The Philosophy Club will present its fourth Forum of the current semester on Thursday, April 21 at 10:30 a.m. in Room 104 Vasey Hall.

At this Forum William J. Clark III will deliver a paper on the philosophy of Ayn Rand. Specifically, Clark will deal with "Gath's Creed."

Rand, of course, is the author of ATLAS SHRUGGED; THE FOUNTAINHEAD; WE THE LIVING; ANTHEM: THE VIRTUE OF SELFISHNESS. She has received much attention at Villanova this year since she was used in a number of courses.

As in the previous Forums, the paper is presented, a discussion period will follow. All faculty and students are cordially invited to attend.

CCP Presents Lecture By Philosophy Prof

On Monday, April 25, the Confraternity of Christian Doctrine will present a lecture at 8 p.m. in Room 110 Bartley Hall. The lecture will be given by Mr. John Tich, an assistant professor of the Villanova Philosophy Department.

Mr. Tich will speak on a topic with which he is very familiar: "Religion, Mythology, and Philosophy." Those who have heard Father Owens' lectures on Christian Philosophy should be especially interested in Mr. Tich's approach to the topic. All students and faculty members are invited to attend.

Chaplain Outlines Rationale, Answers Critics of Retreats

This article was submitted to the VILLANOVAN as a rubuttal to some of the opinions previously expressed in these pages. The VILLANOVAN prints it as it was received without editing or comment.

The purpose of a Retreat is to fix a man's gaze on the "one thing necessary" -- the salvation of a man's soul. Everything else according to the Christian view of life is a means to that end. If the end is attained, the man is a success. If that goal is not attained, he is a failure.

This is fine in theory but men are so constituted that other goals, other values, other attractions make deep impressions on many of us without our even realizing it. We believe ABSTRACTLY that it profits a man nothing if he should gain the whole world but suffers the loss of his immortal soul. But many of us live CONCRETELY, act as though an education, a good job, the sweet life, sex, status, etc., are the ends of our existence. We give only national assent to Christ but real assent to the world.

A Retreat is designed to put things back in their proper perspectives, to enable us to stand back from the trees so that we may see the forest.

The ideal method by which spiritual integration might be attained is for each man to come to the realization that he is in need of a Retreat and to undertake it freely. Many avail themselves of this method while at Villanova by making private Retreats on or off campus. But what about the "99" who for one reason or another never get around to any soul searching on their own. Should a Catholic University attempt to force religion? No! Why? Because it is impossible. Should a Catholic University intrude upon the private relationship of a man with his God? No! Why? Because it is impossible to intrude upon the inner sactum of a human free will. Should a Catholic University require nothing of its students but only hope they find their way to God, by the grace of God and their own investigations?

Villanova and most other Catholic Universities answer this last question by requiring attendance at a Retreat sponsored by the University once a year. There are many draw backs to such a response. For example: Anything "forced" creates a distaste and aversion to many. Over-crowding takes much away from the physical environment that should be present for any real spiritual profit. The moaning and groaning of some, the obvious lack of interest of some, the shuffling of feet, the pidgeons in the field house, the heat, etc., etc.--all of these do much to make Retreats ineffective for many. So let's drop it! It does more harm than good.

BUT a Chaplain known from experience, many things about the 1260 Freshmen in this year's class before he has ever talked to any of them. He knows that if there is a Retreat MANY who have been away from the Sacraments for years will return to the practice of their Religion ... He knows that if there is a REQUIRED Retreat some who would never otherwise go near a church because it would be a thorn in their side, or disturb their consciences which have long ago fallen asleep--some of these will awake from their sleep and begin to save their souls. He knows that 1100 of 1500 Freshmen received the Sacraments at last year's Retreat, many of these would not have received the Sacraments if there were no Retreat. He knows that many substantial changes of his have resulted from Retreats, but if there were no Retreat ... he wonders.

He knows that many who react violently to Retreats, do so for reasons unknown to themselves. Retreats disturb many who choose not to keep the Commandments. He knows that most people protest when they are against something, but few protest for something. He has heard MANY young men over the years say, "Father, if it were not for the Retreats, etc., etc." But these don't write articles.

He knows that Jesus Christ Himself had little success in his own day, in changing men's lives and so he does not become disturbed when everyone is not "converted" by a Retreat.

He knows that Jesus Christ in spite of His miracle, holy life passion, death and resurrection could still say that "the road to eternal death is broad and many there are who follow it but the road to eternal life is narrow and few there are who follow it." He is not disturbed then that he cannot change water into wine because it would not matter anyway.

He knows that when gray haired old men look back upon their college days at Villanova, years from now, they will be convinced--most of them--that Retreats were held because a University cared about them and their eternal salvation.

Mentzer Urges Accelerated Progress

called "loose" or "lenient" such censorship might be.

Getting back to my theme, my view of your achievements is probably not shared by a majority of my faculty associates, though I must assure you the numbers in our minority group are slowly RISING. As one of that majority condescendingly replied when asked his opinion on Student Evaluation, "What could these poorly equipped children tell me?" If you are dumbstruck by such an attitude, so was I. And angry, anger, is not the best weapon with which to wage battle against academics. Better to funnel it into an energy which relentlessly parades the truth that the Villanovan of 1965-66 is vastly different from his counterpart of 10 or 20 or 30 years ago. And at this juncture, it is not my intent to engage in a dialectic over the respective talents and contributions of different decades of Villanova alumni. Probably there is scant difference in terms of natural talent, but socially and historically speaking, there is a ton of environmental difference, between you and them. In this decade of the 1960's, rapidly maturing witnesses to an era of momentous religious change as the major religious faiths of this century seek at long last a way out of their medieval part, their way lighted by a bonafide Christian charity, first turned on by the late Pope John XXIII, you at the very same time as you bear much witness are summoned to instant adulthood as your nation asks you to serve and possibly to die in a war over which there is much division among yourselves and your fellow countrymen. In view of such an environmental background alone, the Professor, who would continue to profess your sameness with your alumni predecessor is either unpardonably aloof or disgustingly biased. In either case, his obvious deficiency could be markedly helped if he would but peruse this year's written record of student initiation and achievement.

"A" Work

First and most obvious is the work of your Body. As a member of the Student-Faculty Committee, I had an opportunity to observe first hand the work of officers like Mr. Freind, Mr. Eck, Mr. McCloskey, Mr. Murphy, Mr. Brett and numerous others. I tell you very honestly, each member of this body politic, that those gentlemen, your representatives, did "A" work. Whether it was the tedium of drafting a scientific plan calling for Student Evaluation or the beauty of the swiftly spoken, often telling rebuttal always respectively given, their performance to me and I believe to the rest of the Committe, thought I would not presume to speak absolutely for any of them, - their performance was demonstrative proof that their critics whoever they were could never stigmatize them, as the critics of St. John's students had done this past year, calling the Redmen's reaction to crisis, "torpid," meaning dull or sluggish. To be sure, we do not have a St. John's here at Villanova, and I trust we never will. Certainly a non-torpid student body will continuously augment against any such unfortunate development.

Pluria of Triumphs

As for other student successes, the major ones come quickly to mind. The Senior Pledge, Drive, a Jazz Festival, a Basketball team which silended the experts. And then there are the PLURIA of other student triumphs - the successful dramatic presentations, the concerts, the Class dances, the refreshing air of your various communications media as determined editors, managers and staff members continuously tried to roll back the stone of fear and silence, the persistent voice of this Council as it sought to induce greater harmony into Villanova University by reflecting the proposals and the complaints of that most numerous group of the tri-parte Villanova family; namely, the student body. Some might wryly say of this litany, "There is no difference in such deeds. Those are only regular things you cite. All past Villanova classes have done the same things." Maybe-maybe not. But there is an essential difference, I maintain, which for want of better terms, I would designate - "tone" or "movement." No longer do you move and speak in any of these things as silent, passive, long suffering pupils.

Students in Quest

Conscious that the world outside your present orbit is not the same as it was yesterday, or yesteryear, you now move as you must - as students in quest of an education that will help render you at once active, contributing and ably competitive. Speaking as one but in the name, I know, of some others, anyhow, I laud you for this year's triumphs and also for your own particular brand of AGGIORNAMENTO. And I urge you the new members and the new officers of the SGA led as you are by your own elected President, Ward Williams, to continue your efforts in Villanova's behalf without slack. Utilize, as you have done so capably this year, the respected methods of the academic community. Prepare your documented reports, spend more time on them if you can, and less on the oral huffing and puffing that too often stymies effective Council action. Do not misunderstand me. Debate, disagreement and even rival political factions are normal concomitants of the democratic process. But do not dissipate your strength to act as a recognizable Voice of student opinion and student desires by plying such tools too ardently. This year, for example, some faculty critics of the Student Evaluation program were able to point to what they described as the "vicious, political wrangling" within this organization as evidence that the students were not capable of judging them.

SGA Furthered Education

A NON-SEQUITUR you say. Certainly it is, but as one of my more astute history colleagues recently remarked, "Everyone's for democracy, 'til it goes against him." Anyone of you before me who has suffered the frustration of being told "no" without any reason being given knows full well the truth of which I speak. With all sincerity I tell you this 1965-66 Student Government Association of Villanova has FURTHERED not hindered the cause of more advanced and better education here at Villanova. More than many others of keener mind but weaker ears, you have heard the ramblings on Catholic campuses throughout this land. A "time-bomb" LOOK Magazine has popularly called it. Many sneer and say it isn't so. "Distortion, exaggeration," they cry. Perhaps, but what of St. John's? And what of the students at St. John's if at the end of April the Convention of the American Association of University Professors censures that University? What Graduate, Law or Medical School will accept these students? Some, maybe, but not very many.

'Half-Slave, Half-Free'

Lincoln before the holocaust of Civil War broke forth over the land warned, "This Nation cannot endure half-slave, half-free." Nor can Villanova any longer endure one part Administration, one part Faculty and one part Student. I do not say there must be equality among these three as any responsible person must know there cannot be. But there must be cooperation, cooperation that is born of reciprocal and honest communication, not an edict from a Mount Sinai.

Accelerated Progress

We at Villanova have good reason to hope, as many of you have attested to me after conversations and conferences with men such as Father Driscoll and Father O'Rourke and others, that progress is being made in this direction. For Villanova's sake such progress must not stop. Indeed, if anything, it must be accelerated.

Thank you.

We set out to ruin some ball bearings and failed successfully

The Bell System has many small, automatic telephone offices around the country. The equipment in them could operate unattended for ten years or so, but for a problem.

The many electric motors in those offices needed lubrication at least once a year. Heat from the motors dried up the bearing oils, thus entailing costly annual maintenance.

To stamp out this problem, many tests were conducted at Bell Telephone Laboratories. Lubricant engineer George H. Kitchen decided to do a basic experiment that would provide a motor with the worst possible conditions. He deliberately set out to ruin some ball bearings by smearing them with an icky guck called molybdenum disulfide (MoS_2).

Swock! This solid lubricant, used a certain way, actually increased the life expectancy of the ball bearings by a factor of ten! Now the motors can run for at least a decade without lubrication.

We've learned from our "failures." Our aim: investigate everything.

The only experiment that can really be said to "fail" is the one that is never tried.

Lacrosse Club Wins Twice

Down Lebanon Valley 11-7

By Chub Connor

Spring weather in Lebanon County, Pennsylvania, eased the chore last Saturday for the Villanova Lacrosse Club in their victory over Lebanon Valley College's team, 11-7. The 'Cats exploded for an overpowering 5-0 lead in the opening period. Sterling offense and defense by the Big V made it 7 - 2 at halftime. The visitors from Philly's Main Line deliberately slowed the pace in the second half as they coasted to a final four-goal edge.

Ed McFadden's hot stick accounted for four goals and two assists; Rick Hook's smoking war-club racked up three goals and one assist; James S. Ryan's firebrand put three more goals and two assists on the credit side; Brian MacKenzie burned the ball into the net for one goal; and Ron Meyer fed the flames with two assists. Goalies Chuck Tyler and Pat Renn together stopped 14 shots while the defensive units were responsible for saving countless other attempts.

Prior to the Easter vacations, the Lacrosse Club sunk the N.Y. Maritime College 10-5 on the Villanova campus green, and quaked the "B" team of the Quakers of U. of P. on their home turf, River Field. With Saturday's win over the Flying Dutchmen, the record shows three up, two down for the Wildcats.

Home games are scheduled for the next two consecutive Saturdays. On April 23, the stickmen will host Dickinson College at 2:30 in the afternoon. April 30, the Hoyas of Georgetown University will provide opposition, this one starting at 2:00. Both games will be played behind the stadium, adjacent to the baseball field.

Today, April 20, the 'Cat Lacrosse squad will travel to Allentown, Pa., to challenge the mules of Muhlenberg College. Starting time is listed as 3:00 PM.

The lacrosse season, like the school year, is almost over. Treat yourself to some thrills by coming out to the home games to see and cheer the exciting edition of 1966 lacrosse at Villanova BECAUSE.

Gerry Bellotti fires a pass in Saturday's full-dress scrimmage which marked the end of Spring Practice. Bellotti connected with Ed Bollinger on a 65 yard pass play to lead his "White" squad to a 3 touchdown to 1 victory over Billy Andrejko's "Blue" team.

Rugby

trol for the rest of the game. The only other score of the first half was a "try" by Rich Crawford. Crawford was set up by Villanova's flashy backfield star, Pete Conserva, who put on a tremendous display of speed and agility in advancing the ball 25 yards.

In the second half, the Villanova ruggers completely outclassed their foes from New Jersey. There was only one "try" in the second half by either team and this was scored by sophomore, Andy Sears, who picked up a loose ball on the Drew goal line and, twisting and turning, took the ball in for the score. Again, John Wolfe's attempt at conversion was good, bringing the score to 13-0. Within the next ten minutes, the ruggers had two "trys" mullified, one by Sears and another by Don Donlan, because of the opposing team's infractions of the rules previous to the score. With only four minutes remaining in the game, the Drew ruggers got their only score of the game through a penalty kick which hit the uprights and then bounced through, making the final score 13-3.

There were other highlights to this game: a re-arrangement in the backfield, which brought about the return of the Cat's hard-driving three-quarter, Vic Sarkissian, who put on a dazzling inside running display. And last, but by far from least, the return of the team's tallest man, Bill Clarke, who broke his nose in an earlier victory and whose added height showed a definite team improvement in the lineouts.

On Monday afternoon, March 28th the Villanova Rugby Club defeated the Blue Devils from Duke University by a score of 9-6. The game turned out, as most predicted, to be a "battle of giants;" Villanova's team being undefeated, and Duke having lost only to First City Troop of Philadelphia, a team defeated earlier in the season by the Villanova club.

Villanova's forwards played the Duke forward wall to a standstill throughout the first half and then continued to completely dominate play in the second half. Led by the scrum leader, Don Donlan, and the team captain, Hallier La Rue, the scrum constantly pressed the Duke backfield into making costly errors. Villanova ruggers again proved that they are one of the best rugby teams ever assembled in this area; only time will tell if they ure the best.

B.M.E., Univ. of Kansas

The college graduate's initial exposure to the world of business is often less than exhilarating. The reason? A great many companies require the recent graduate to serve a long-term apprenticeship in a role that offers little or no opportunity to demonstrate personal capabilities. That is not the way at Ford Motor Company. Our College Graduate Program brings you into contact with many phases of business, encourages self-expression and helps you—and us—determine where your greatest potential lies. An important benefit of the Program is getting to know and work with some of the most capable people in industry. One of many young men who believes he has gained tremendously from this exposure and experience is Larry Moore, a Product Design engineer.

After receiving his B.M.E. in February, 1964, Larry joined our College Graduate Program and began work in brake design. Stimulating assignments followed in product evaluation and disc brake development. Later, he learned production techniques while supervising one phase of the Mustang assembly line operations. An assignment in our Truck Sales Promotion and Training Department added still another dimension to his experience. The "big picture" of product development was brought into focus for Larry when he became associated with Thunderbird Product Planning. From there he moved to the Special Vehicles Section . . . into the exciting world of high-performance cars!

Currently, Larry Moore is on leave of absence, studying to acquire his M.B.A. degree at Michigan State. He feels—and rightly so—that we're 100 percent behind his desire to improve his educational background. Young men with talent, initiative and ambition can go far with Ford Motor Company. Think about it—and talk to our representative when he next visits your campus.

Intramural Track Championships Today

Yim Yams Champs

By Tom Hitchcock

The intramural basketball finals came to a close with the Yim Yams, made up of Senior C and F day hops, overpowering the Sophs to take the title.

Tuesday of this week is the Junior Senior S.O.S. day which has been organized by the intramural staff. The captain for the Juniors will be Mike Mulvey, and John Fenlon will lead the Seniors. Tuesday night, Joe Carnes will be presented with the outstanding athlete award. Wednesday, at 3:30 in the stadium, the intramural track meet will be held. There will be sprints, distance, relay, and field events. Plans are also being developed for a big five intramural championship. Each school in the big five will have its winners represent them in the tournament.

One of the aims of the intramural staff is to achieve greater recognition for the work that the referees have done. Because of their participation, and willingness to help, the Senior referees will receive plaques. Shirts and jackets will be given to the other referees, and all will attend a banquet.

The number of referees has greatly increased in the past few years, and they, along with the guidance of Mr. Geisz and Mr. Moran, have been a major factor in the success and organization of intramurals.

THE RAVE

By Jerry Bruderle

Kansas State basketball coach Tex Winter once said. "More basketball games are won in April than in January," No, Winter was not off his rocker, he was merely talking about the most important part of collegiate basketball - recruiting. For April is the big month for recruiting and if you don't get the good high school ballplayers in school now, you're not going to win many games next winter.

Schools like Duke can afford two or three full-time recruiters and almost every school has their superscout who gets a long look at the year's high school talent. Villanova has one of the best in George Raveling. The "Rave" (as he is known) captained Villanova's 1960 squad, and next to Jim Washington he is probably the best rebounder Villanova has ever had. He played on two N.I.T. squads and his 1960 team finished 20-6.

George played for two years in the Eastern League and later returned to Villanova to help Jack Kraft with recruiting in 1964. Since then George has gone all over the East for Villanova, and with the help of an understanding boss at Sun Oil in Philadelphia where he is a full time salesman, he has seen as many as three different games in three different cities.

The Rave is always reading out of town newspapers, and the newsman at 15th and Market Sts. would go out of business if it wasn't for George. Bill Melchionni says he saw George buy four dollars worth of papers in New York last month, but to the Rave it's worth it if you find one prize catch. This year's catch was Johnny Jones who came out of nowhere (Well Pompano Beach anyway) to average 25 points a game for the freshmen, who were sometimes known as "Raveling's Raiders."

"I usually sit up until one or two in the morning reading out of town newspapers," he says, and as a result George came name the All-County team of anyplace east of the Mississippi (including those who should and shouldn't be on the team). George says that Calvin Murphy, who scored 62 points in a high school All-Star game in Allentown two weeks ago, is "the greatest basketball play ever." Unfortunately Calvin is Niagara bound.

Ultimately the Rave's dream is a national championship for Villanova, and an airline stewardess for himself. Both may not be far off if George can come up with another fine crop of freshmen. Actually George says Kraft does most of the real recruiting. "I just contact the boy to see if he's interested in Villanova," he says. "Jack is the one who does the recruiting."

Nevertheless, The Rave's efforts have not gone unnoticed. Last month he received the Loyalty Award as outstanding alumnus from the Villanova Basketball Club of South Jersey. In accepting the award George revealed the spirit that has made him a fine recruiter in working for his Alma Mater. "As long as I can walk," he said, "And as long as I can talk I'll do everything I can to spread the name of Villanova. In my book Villanova's number one." The Rave - Villanova's Mr. Recruiter.

fair weather to put in a hard workout in preparation for later races. Rather than the morning rush hour traffic of the Schuylkill Expressway, the backdrop Sunday consisted of the Jefferson Memorial, the Washington Monument the Lincoln Memorial and the Capital building shrowded by the pink mist of cherry blossoms which lined the river.

This did not shrowd the objectives of Villanova's crew for the remainder of the season. The Hughes Cup Regatta is a grueling 4-1/2 miles across Long Island Sound. On April 30th the Cats face Georgetown and St. Josephs' on the Schuylkill, followed by the City Championships on May 7th and the Dad Vail Regatta on May 13th and 14th. The Villanova Crew will try to repay the priceless debt it owes coaches John Parker and Jack Galloway of Penn, Athletic Club Rowing Association in Philadelphia for their time and effort without personal gain, by continuing their winning ways and finishing out with the big wins at the Vail on May 14th.

Cats Down Textile in 9th, 1-0 Lose to Navy and Princeton

By Don Holmes

April 6th saw the Villanova baseball team travel to the Tigerland of Princeton University where they were stopped by the masterful pitching of Graham Marcott. The Princeton ace pitched a sterling no-hitter and was in complete command from the start as the Tigers won 4-0. Steve Kramer pitched eight strong innings for Villanova and left trailing 1-0, aided by the sparkling defensive display of sophomore Steve Krines. But in the end it was Marcott and his slider that came out on top, stopping the Cats who had won four of their previous five outings behind solid hitting.

Three days later Villanova travelled to Annapolis, where they were defeated by Navy 12-3 in a game called after eight innings due to rain. The Middies (6-1), who jumped out to a quick 7-0 after three innings, were helped out by outfielder John Naney's clutch hitting and erratic performances by the Villanova moundsmen. One bright spot for the 'Cats was the hitting of soph catcher Mike Shanley, who knocked in two eighth-inning runs with a long double.

The next two games with West Chester and Penn State were rained out, and the Delaware and LaSalle games were rescheduled for later in the season.

Last Saturday the Villanova nine trimmed Philadelphia Textile 1-0 behind the outstanding pitching of Steve Kramer and Gene Rampone and the heads-up baserunning of Paul Pecoraro. Shut out until the ninth, the 'Cats loaded the bases with none out on a single by Rampone and bunts by Pecoraro and Tom Edwards. The winning run was then scored when Dion Vonderleith's grounder forced Rampone at the plate, with the return throw to first being too late for a double play. Pecorara meanwhile raced around from second to clinch win number five. Kramer scattered four singles over 7-1/3 innings, while Rampone finished up allowing one single, gaining his third win of the season. Kramer, though not gaining credit for many wins thus far, has pitched strong ball all season and has a very impressive E.R.A., but has not had much hitting support his last few starts.

As the team approaches midseason with a 5-3 ledger, coach Art Mahan has reason to be optimistic, for his club appears to have the potential to win most, if not all, of their remaining games, and possibly garner a post-season berth in the NCAA Regionals. A solid pitching corps consisting of Gene Rampone, Steve Kramer, and Jack Grasing should provide more frustrations for future opponents, while the solid hitting of Steve Krines, Dion Vonderleith, and Sam Greenwood remain as a formidable offensive threat. Third-baseman Krines and shortstop Vonderleith, both sophomores, have been consistent long-ball hitters, with Greenwood having another fine year at the plate while helping the club with his fine baserunning.

Ruggers Remain Undefeated Knock Off Philadelphia 14-3

By Don Donlan

Last Saturday afternoon the Rugby team extended its winning streak to six games without a loss. Playing under a warm sun before some four hundred fans the team lived up to its high reputation by defeating the Philadelphia Rugby Club 14-3.

This was the largest team the ruggers had played all season. Their scrum weighed in at an average weight of 230 pounds as compared to a slight 185 for the Villanova scrum. Despite this disadvantage the Villanova forwards pushed their bigger foes literarly "all over the field." Together with the fine offensive attack of the Cats wing, the team spent most of the afternoon on the Philadelphia goal line.

Neither team was able to master any scoring punch in the first half although several long runs by "wings" John Thomas and Pete Conserva were cut short near the Philadelphia goal line. Villanova did score once in the first half as their fine place-kicker John Wolfe put a thirty yard penalty kick through the upright making the score 3-0 at the half.

Visibly exhausted from the unusually rough first half the team started very slowly in the second half until fired up by Captain Haller LaRue the team came alive and in a matter of a few minutes scored eleven points and put the game out of reach. They began the scoring spree on a blocked kick by junior Don Donlan, the loose ball was taken by Haller LaRue, Andy Sears and Donlan on a spectacular sixty yard dribbling play; the ball being kicked back and forth between the three players until finally Sears fell on it in the Philadelphia end zone giving the team its first "try" of the day. John Wolfe made the conversion making the score 8-0. Again within minutes the Cat's had their next score. Some fine kicking by substitute fullback Tom Priory put the ball on the Philadelphia three yard line. Senior forward Don Campbell took the ball in the ensuing "line-out" and fell into the end zone for the first "try" of his career. The score now stood at 11-0 but the Cat's weren't finished yet, just one minute later the team called on John Wolfe for his second penalty kick of the day. Wolfe again split the uprights but this time at a distance of forty-five yards.

Philadelphia finally scored in the waning minutes of the game but the score was of no consequence to the final outcome of the game.

When the final whistle sounded fifteen exhausted and happy Rugby players came off the field; wondering if they are really as good as their fine record indicates. With only three games remaining, it is quite conceivable that Villanova may see its first undefeated Rugby team in the school's history. This is a tribute to the team which has only four seniors, but more so it is a tribute to their coach, Professor Francis Coughlan.

One short note -- the team lost the services of junior Vice-Captain Vic Sarkissian for the remainder of the season. Vic wrenched his knee just before the end of the first half and had to finally leave the game mid-way through the second half.

On Saturday, April 2nd, the Wildcat Rugby team defeated a vastly improved Drew University team by a score of 13-3. As was the case in the team's previous win, the Villanova ruggers were slow in mounting an attack. The Cats got their first score again in this game on a 20 yard penalty kick by John Wolfe, his fourth of the season. With about twenty minutes left in the first half, the pressure defense of the Cats had completely stymied the Drew attack, and Villanova remained in complete con-

Trackmen Lose 77-63 Horner Injured in 220

By Bob McIntyre

Villanova's Varsity Track men were upset by a depth-laden Penn State squad, 77-63, last Saturday afternoon at University Park.

The Wildcats opening their first meet of the 1966 season, just didn't have enough strength in the field events to hold off the late surge put on by the Nittany Lions. The Cats took six of the nine track events in the close meet but the Penn Staters had the power in the other events to win the first meet held between the two schools in 30 years.

The defeat may have been a bigger loss in more ways than one. Earl Horner, Villanova's NCAA 220 Outdoor Champion, pulled a leg muscle in that event and did not finish. The extent of the damage that might have been incurred is still undetermined. Horner, earlier had captured the 100 in the fast time of 9.5 for so early in the season.

Dave Patrick, one of Villanova's many sophomore stars, took his special, the mile run. Patrick, the IC4A indoor mile champion, ran a slow 4:13.1. Patrick came back a while later to take a third in the two mile run.

Villanova's only junior on the squad, Bill Heidelberger, sped off a 48.8 440 to take first place over team-mates Bill Grant and Ken Prince. Ken Coniglio, pride of the Wildcat hurdlers, won his specialty, the 120 yard High Hurdles, in the time of 14.6.

Ian Hamilton, another sophomore standout on Coach Elliot's team, easily beat the Penn State competition in the popular 880 race in the winning time of 1:53.0. Up and coming Bill Grant took over when Horner pulled up lame in the 220 to go on to win the race in 22.3 to add a few more points to the Cat total.

The only Villanovan to win a field event was Vince Bizzarro, who leaped 13-6 in the pole vault. Bizzarro also took a third in the High Jump where a new Penn State record was set. The winning height was 6'8. Villanova's next stop on the track circuit are the Iona Relays, next week.

Oarsmen Win 7th Straight Set Sights on Dad Vail

By Lou Sonzogni

The Villanova Crew got under way in Dad Vail league competition by completing a highly successful New England tour Easter Sunday. The Wildcat frosh and varsity eights defeated teams from Holy Cross, Amherst, University of Massachusetts and University of Rhode Island in two successive days of rowing. The Holy Cross freshman boat and three Crusader Varsity crews were defeated on Good Friday on the 2000 meter course on Lake Quinsigamond at Worcester, Massachusetts. The Freshman rowed well to a four length victory, and the varsity beat the Crusader heavyweight varsity by three lengths, with two other Cross crews trailing.

On Saturday, the crew travelled to Amherst to defeat the remaining crews on the schedule. Since the Amherst heavy varsity boat was rated fourth best in the east, the Villanova crew established itself as a definite contender for top honors in the Dad Vail Regatta on May 14th. This regatta pits the finest national collegiate competitors from smaller schools against one another in two days of crisp competition, and their respective fans with or against one another in an enjoyable time of the same or longer duration.

The Villanova crew increased its string of victories to seven by defeating Howard University on Saturday. Both the freshman and varsity crews were successful on the Potamac River's two thousand meter course with the respective times of 6:24 (Howard 6:29.5) and 6:08 (Howard 6:13.2).

The course was choppy due to a slight tailwind which contributed to the phenomenal times. Villanova's frosh were never seriously challenged by Howard and streaked over the finish line three lengths ahead. The varsity crew got off to a slow start and was surprised to find itself behind with nearly one thousand meters of the race completed. As the old Key Bridge arched overhead the Wildcat coxswain called a forty stroke sprint which took the Villanova varsity into the lead. Although not rowing as well as had been expected, the Cats increased their lead to go over the finish line leaving Howard behind a last power twenty which opened water between the two eights. The young varsity had one of its better moments when it was found that Bill Stowe, stroke of the Vesper Boat Club's Olympic eight, had agreed with coach Jack Galloway in saying that the Wildcat oarsman did indeed look impressive flashing by the two thousand meter mark. This was not to be the last glimpse of the Potomac for Villanova. The following afternoon the varsity crew took advantage of the rough water and

Fr. Connolly Says Church Fails in Rights Movement

By Jim O'Hare

The Catholic Church in the United States has been "white, ignorant, and American."

Thus said Father Joseph Connolly speaking on the topic "Has the Church Failed the Civil Rights Movement?" last Wednesday in a speech sponsored by the Sophomore Class.

Father Connolly is from St. Gregory the Great Parish in Baltimore, and studied in Rome. He was a participant on the Civil Rights March on Selma, Alabama. Even more recently he was arrested in an attempt to integrate an amusement park in Gynnoak Maryland. He teaches in his Parish and has his own television program, "Faith to Faith," a dialogue. He is also a member of the U.S. Human Relations Commission.

IN BACKGROUND

The speaker accused the Church of being "ignorant" because it was out of contact with the problems in its community. It stayed in the background in social and political matters. To do this, says Father Connolly, is to deny God. How a person could be a catholic and not be "involved" is unthinkable.

The Church was "American" in that, like the white middle class that migrated to the South it sought social acceptance and wouldn't rock the boat; it wouldn't go out on a limb. In time, the Church became the "mirror of American mores, not Catholic mores." "In the long run," he said, "the Church has failed" and since 1956 it has done too little too late.

CHURCH COMPLACENT

Father Connolly referred to the Catholic Church today as the "whore Church" that has lived all too easily with the god Mars and since the era of Constantine has been complacent to the civil rights cause.

THE FUTURE

In the future the only way he sees to wipe out prejudice is by educating our children. Then sooner or later the Catholics will jump on the bandwagon. The church and its people should teach by action.

Postmaster General O'Brien Chosen Graduation Speaker

By Dale Pappert

Postmaster General Lawrence F. O'Brien has been chosen to speak at the graduation ceremonies of the class of 1966. He will appear at the commencement at Convention Hall, 34th and Convention Streets, on Monday, May 16, at 2 p.m.

O'Brien was sworn in as Postmaster General of the United States on November 3, 1965, in a ceremony at Hye, Texas, a post office about three miles from the ranch house of President Lyndon B. Johnson.

A top White House aide to Presidents Kennedy and Johnson, O'Brien was born July 7, 1917, in Springfield, Massachusetts. He graduated from Northeastern University in 1942 with an LLB degree. He was also awarded an Honorary Doctor of Law in 1962 from Western New England College and an Honorary Doctor of Public Administration in 1965 from Northeastern University.

He served as Director of Organization in the Second District Democratic Congressional Campaigns in Massachusetts in 1946, 1948 and 1950. He came to Washington as Administrative Assistant to then Congressman Foster Furcolo, after directing his successful 1948 Congressional Campaign, from 1948 to 1950.

On January 21, 1961, he entered government service upon appointment by President John F. Kennedy, as Special Assistant to the President for Congressional Relations and served from that time until November 22, 1963, at which time he was reappointed to the same position by President Lyndon B. Johnson. He served in that capacity until his appointment to the Cabinet.

Lawrence F. O'Brien

On March 18, 1966, Mr. O'Brien was appointed by President Johnson to the Chairmanship of the Interdepartmental Committee for Savings Bonds which encourages Federal employees to set an example as leaders in the Savings Bonds program.

High Ranking Seniors Given Non-Compulsory Attendance

By Bill Keane

All Seniors with a 3.00 or better cumulative average who have maintained this average in the preceding semester will be exempt, under certain stipulations, from compulsory attendance at classes.

This was announced by Ward Williams at last week's meeting of the Student Government Association. The stipulations as set forth by the Office of the Vice-President for Academic Affairs, are as follows: (1) Laboratories, clinicals, and seminars are still subject to compulsory attendance; (2) Each professor has the power to compel attendance at any class; (3) The absences of students will still be reported in the usual manner at the mid and end of semesters; and (4) A list of qualified Seniors will be posted by the Office of Academic Affairs.

POSTHUMOUS DEGREE

President Williams also announced that the administration has decided to award Charles Myers, a Senior who died on Holy Thursday, his degree posthumously. It was also announced that a teacher award by the Student Government Association would be given at the fall convocation in October. Three teachers, one from each College, will be given awards on the basis of students' recommendations in the form of ballots.

Examinations from previous years will be placed in the reserve room of the library this week, and the library hours will be extended to provide students with additional opportunity for study in the library. It was noted that the hour extensions might not be continued if student participation and interest is not high.

Eight motions were proposed at Wednesday's meeting; six were passed. A significant motion by Rick Holwell and Tim Coyle was passed unanimously after some heated debate. The motion provides for the establishment of a presidential standing committee on formulating the honor code system here at Villanova.

FINAL MEETING

Williams implemented a Constitutional provision and called a special session of the Congress immediately after the adjournment of the regular session. This was done in order that several motions might be passed and put into effect immediately.

The first called for the institution of a Student-Administration Committee, which would enable student members to have a means of consistent communication with the university administration. Several motions of George Valva concerning elections procedures for organizations were also passed despite some lengthy debate.

College Editors Conference Hosts Drug Addiction Talk

By Mark Morse

Some very interesting and surprising answers were given to questions fielded at the College Editor's Press Conference on Human Rights and Law Enforcement, held April 16th in Philadelphia.

Sponsored by Food Fair Stores and moderated by Donald Barnhouse of WCAU (a graduate of Harvard at the age of eighteen), the conference hosted an impressive seven-man panel.

Questioned about narcotics raids on area campuses, J. Shane Creamer, First Assistant U.S. District Attorney for Philadelphia, commented that he knew of no jail sentences given to students arrested on narcotics charges. He added, however, that rehabilitation and long probations were ordered.

Philadelphia Police Inspector Fox, answering a query about protection provided for marchers in demonstrations, said that the city has a "Civil Disobedience Squad" of plainclothesmen that protects demonstrators and counter-demonstrators alike.

PROSTITUTION

When the Philadelphia Grand Jury recommendation for legalizing prostitution was brought up, Inspector Fox pointed out that prostitution tends to become involved with organized crime, and that female drug addicts turned to it as a means of financing their addiction.

Dr. Anthony Amsterdam of the Penn Law School insisted that in countries such as Holland, where prostitution is legal, it is not connected with racketeers. Dr. Amsterdam and the rest of the panel felt, however, that there are definite moral problems involved in legalization.

Discussing their respective areas of responsibility were, also, District Attorney Arlen Specter, City Solicitor Edward Bauer and the Executive Director of the Philadelphia Human Relations Commission, Mr. Terry Chisholm.

Freind and Eck Pilot SGA Through Successful Session

The Student Government Association, under the presidential leadership of Frank Eck in the First Semester and Steve Freind in the Second, initiated a considerable amount of legislation this year in the first step in bringing the SGA to its powerful goals that it now has only in theory.

For the first time in this school's history, the SGA ran a successful USED BOOK EXCHANGE -- saving Villanova Students thousands of dollars.

For the first time, a STUDENT DIRECTORY was published with names and addresses of every student, on a voluntary basis. Together with this, a much improved, PRINTED STUDENT ACTIVITIES HANDBOOK was published.

For the first time, a variety of incisive, valuable polls were taken to assess STUDENT OPINION on many vital issues.

For the first time, a glimmer of light cut through the clouds of intransigence on the CAFETERIA situation, DORMITORY conditions, and other student facilities.

In the area of academics, the SGA, for the first time, did extensive research and made comprehensive recommendations for a wide variety of ACADEMIC IMPROVEMENTS at Villanova.

For the first time a student COURSE AND TEACHER EVALUATION was researched, proposed and adopted by the SGA. This single program alone can provide a momentous thrust in the direction of intellectual excellence, if done with clarity and objectivity.

Additionally, for the first time a STUDENT ACADEMIC BOARD was set up to hear and mediate legitimate student complaints. An outstanding TEACHER AWARD program was adopted. And the Senior Class began the first SENIOR PLEDGE DRIVE. These and other proposals this year constitute a valuable first step in a long-range effort to draw together and 'integrate' the increasingly heterogenous components which ARE Villanova: the FACULTY, the ADMINISTRATION, and the STUDENT BODY.

For the first time a subtle -- but perceptible -- change was recognized in the attitude of Villanovans toward what constitutes acceptable conduct. A change which has paved the way toward the adoption of a STUDENT COURT. And a change which was inspired by the cooperation of the Dean of Men and the Student Government Association.

And finally, even within the SGA itself, first steps were taken toward improving ELECTIONS PROCEDURES, student participation in CAMPUS ORGANIZATIONS, and services to the student body -- such as the SGA LOAN PROGRAM.

It was, in short, a productive year; a year not altogether unreprehensible, but fruitful nevertheless, and deserving of praise. The SGA has helped to develop a new and refreshing, progressive atmosphere on campus. It has laid the groundwork for the successful operation of a multitude of proposals. And it has taken a number of valuable 'first steps' in a variety of deserving directions.

By Steve Buck

The on-again off-again Senior Parting Festival has finally been set for Saturday, May 7, 1966 at Fischer's Pool in Lansdale, Pa., from 2 p.m. until finish.

Due to financial difficulties, there was some doubt if the 1966 Festival would be held. However, Chairman George Valva announced that final plans had been approved and the annual senior send-off is on again.

Featuring this year's Parting Festival will be the Ronettes, a popular group whose list of hit records includes "Be My Baby" and "Walking in the Rain," among others. Also scheduled to appear are the Fat City Four and the Bitter Seeds, a New York City band. The three groups will provide entertainment throughout the day.

The entertainment also includes the use of the athletic facilities of Fischer's Pool, including swimming, row boating, volleyball, baseball and basketball.

Tickets for the event are now on sale in the Pie Shoppe and Bartley Cafeteria. Price for the event is seven dollars per couple. There is a limited number of tickets available, and they will be sold on a first come first serve basis. There will be no ticket sales at the door.

Logue Faces Carl M. Barus In Congressional Primary

Professor John J. Logue of the Political Science Department will be facing a Swarthmore College professor in the May 17th Democratic Primary.

His opponent, Carl M. Barus, entered the primary to protest Logue's support of American policy in Vietnam.

Logue, who was unanimously endorsed by the Delaware County Democratic borough and township leaders on February 19th, has talked to a number of groups in various parts of the county. Issues he has stressed include conservation, need for a Delaware County Community College, additional scholarships for students at private colleges and universities, need for a coordinated approach to traffic and mass transit problems.

Logue indicated that Swarthmore College students are hard at work for his opponent and says he would welcome any student support. Interested volunteers should contact him at KI 3-4522 or Thomas Bruderle, chairman of the Villanova Young Democrats at HI 6-4247.

On Monday of this week (Apr. 25) Logue debated Barus on the Vietnam policy in Marple Township. Logue said he believed our Vietnam policy helped to contain Chinese communism. He said he favored free elections in Vietnam "if they are really free."

DPE Elects Bob Layne; New President Plans Next Year's Programs

By Pete O'Meara

Robert Layne, former Vice President of Delta Pi Epsilon has recently been elected President of that Fraternity.

Layne is a graduate of Chaminade High School on Long Island, and is majoring in Marketing. The twenty-year-old junior is also a member of the SGA and was last year appointed to the Blue Key Society.

As President of DPE, he plans to place a greater influence on rushing and publicity. He hopes that the 87 active members of DPE will next year be of even greater service to the University and take a greater part in charitable service to the community.

OTHER OFFICERS

Layne pointed out that DPE is open to all Villanovans, an idea DPE introduced last year. The Fraternity has also elected its other officers. Three accounting majors, Tom Loughlin, Joe Mladinitch and John Fink have been elected Vice President, Secretary, and Treasurer respectively. Moe Passanate an Industrial Accounting major was appointed social chairman, and General Business major John McKeever was elected SGA Representative.

From the SGA President

Fellow Villanovans,

As we enter into the one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of Villanova University, Student Government is faced with one of the most challenging years in recent memory. In every corner of this campus from Bartley Hall to Dougherty Hall and on up to Tollentine we see the challenge of achievement, a challenge which Student Government is anxious to accept next year.

However the Student Congress as your representatives can never hope to take bold new steps in improving the position of students on this campus until we accept the burdens of these improvements upon our own shoulders with responsibility and maturity. This is and should be one of the primary aims of the Student Government next year, responsible and mature Student Government.

Yet there is much more to responsible Student Government than just responsible representation. Student Government, to my mind, is an open end; an antenna for leadership, an opportunity for initiative and ideas. I have seen in just the past three weeks a number of examples in which the SGA has already reached out with practical plans which will benefit the student body directly.

The students at this school will see the first partial non-compulsory class attendance for a great part of the Senior Class next year. We will see the Course and Teacher Evaluation completed at the end of this year with the hope that this evaluation will add constructively to our academic program at Villanova.

The student body will see for the first time a Teacher Award Program in which the students will have a direct say in recognizing the outstanding teacher in each particular college. There will be a continuation of the Student Loan Service and the Used Book Exchange both of which are designed to aid the student body.

Yet Student Government must be prepared to enter into areas in which the SGA has failed to enter in recent years, and this we have already done. In just one Student Congress meeting your elected representatives have already entered into many new areas. A Presidential Standing Committee on Honor at this school was established in order to explore the possibility of establishing an Honor Code at some time in the future; similarly, one is being planned to improve the Cafeteria.

The Congress has expressed a desire to improve relations with the Administration through the establishment of a Student-Administration Committee, a committee which everyone on Student Government

The First Step

The VILLANOVAN welcomes last week's announcement of the new policy concerning unlimited cuts for seniors.

The implementation of this measure marks the first step in Villanova's academic renaissance. Praise from the student populace comes infrequently when anything is done by the administration. We would like to rectify that situation, but at the same time, we would not want this praise to fall on satisfied ears.

Unlimited cuts for at least juniors and seniors is an absolute necessity for a university which hopes to give students the opportunity to get an education. Does the administration -- sorry to use the nebulous term but who else passes the academic reforms -- feel that students must be constrained in order to go to class? Are they admitting that some of the courses and teachers are so worthless the only way to get them to class is by a compulsory system?

Perhaps this is a revolutionary idea -- we think not -- but isn't it possible that students, who are given the responsibility, will react in a responsible manner -- cutting when necessary, going to class when necessary, and not going at all when the course or teacher warrants it. Believe it or not, there are some students who can merit an A without ever going to class. And isn't the function of the teacher one of inspiring the student to educate himself? Too often the teacher is a fact machine, and the fifty minutes spent in his class seem more like fifty years. Students often rebel against an authority that tells them they have to do something.

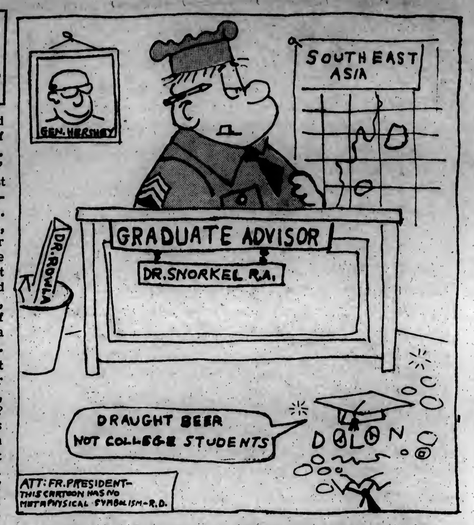
We are asking for increased responsibility. You might give it to us. We might surprise you.

murmurings
From the Editor

Well, this is our second and it would seem our final issue of the VILLANOVAN for this year. We like to call it the "war issue."

Things have been happening fast lately. And we find ourselves staring finals in the face once again. We can hardly wait to take the tests, and complete another year of our college life. On the other hand, the end of this year puts us just a bit closer to that horrible mess called Viet Nam. War's fine of course, but perhaps we should let some of the big-mouthed diplomats do a little of the fighting for a change.

What ever happened to all of that talk so popular after World War II--That talk about war being hell, and Man's inhumanity to man? It would seem that the windy fellows on Capitol Hill only preach Humanism after they've just finished off an interesting war.



All of the talk nowadays is of courage, Green Berets, and "moderate casualties." (See some of the typical ravings in this week's letters column).

We are soliciting comments and information concerning an organization on this campus called the Blue Key. Anyone who knows anything about this group can drop a line to the VILLANOVAN.

Now it's time for us to go into hibernation for another summer. We will be back in the Fall, idealistic as ever. See you then.

R.J.

Let's Get Together

While we can certainly applaud the long list of accomplishments this year by the administration, the Student Government Association, and other student organizations, we feel that the most critical area for achievement remains as yet untouched.

We refer to the unfortunately wide communications gap that exists at Villanova between the student, his teacher, and the administration. This situation is emphasized by the fact that a great many Villanovans do not know the name of their President, let alone what he looks like.

The Villanova student should be given the opportunity to meet and hear his administration officials, to find out what's happening at Villanova and what's planned to happen. It's time that the student be given the opportunity to meet his teachers outside of the classroom and in an informal, coffee-hour atmosphere, where the educational process can receive greater impetus and fulfillment.

Perhaps this is a task suited to the purpose of the Blue Key Society. By organizing coffee hours, lectures, symposia, the Key could help bring about a better rapport between the student body and the administration. Furthermore, by projecting itself to the Villanovans of today, not just those candidates for admission, the Blue Key would eradicate its tarnished 50¢ - tour image on the Villanova campus.

We, therefore, urge all responsible officials of the administration, the SGA, and especially the Blue Key, to meet and organize effective programs for next year.

Letters to the Editor

Pinko Sheehan

To the Editor

After reading Mr. Sheehan's column "The Ballad of the Green Berets-OR-How I Learned to Stop Worrying and Love the War," I was a little bit surprised at the reaction this fellow student of mine took to such an outstanding, worthwhile, American organization as the Green Berets.

If he was knocking Sergeant Barr Sadler's record, I "might tend" to agree (and just "might tend"), but if he is knocking the Green Berets I could not disagree more. If there is anything that typifies our great American dream, it is the Green Berets.

Sargeant Sadler's wish for his son to be a Green Beret is certainly not the interpretation he wanted Mr. Sheehan to take. His wish expressed the great pride which he felt representing the United States as a Green Beret, a pride which could only be more deeply felt in seeing his son don the uniform of such an outfit.

Not trying to make a pun for Mr. Sheehan's benefit, and not sounding too right wing, I would give my right arm to be a Green Beret.

To the Editor

It is regretable that Neil Sheehan has come by all his knowledge of the Special Forces through pulp paperbacks and the protestnik press.

His misreading of the American mandate in Viet Nam ("... to end war"), would be error enough, if not for the fact that it showed his ignorance of the goals of the war and the Special Forces' role in it. We do wish this war to end in a victory for the Vietnamese people, but it is precisely because we realize the nature of this war, and the unlikelihood of nuclear combat in the future, that the Special Forces was created.

If he had bothered to look more closely at Sergeant Sadler's beret, he would have seen the Special Forces crest, with its motto, "De Opresso Liber," To Liberate from Oppression. To accomplish this goal, they serve the people of threatened nations in fields ranging from education to farming to medicine, to the imparting of military skills. To claim that their only expertise is in combat is to lie.

Sheehan implies that Sadler seeks to praise a legacy of glorious death in combat to the hymned soldier's son. It is rather that he does praise the dedication of the dead trooper; that his legacy is that war is unthinkably horrible, but that when it must be waged, it should be by men aware of the causes of conflict and the need for peace.

Sadler realizes that in any war man is the ultimate weapon. If he must be used, he will be. But the legacy he imparts is the realization that the Army's mission is to wage the peace and conclude war. I believe that the waging of peace is an honorable profession.

To the Editor

We would like to dispute the views expressed by Mr. Neil Sheehan in his article about S/Sgt. Barry Sadler's ballads which appeared in the April twentieth issue of the VILLANOVAN.

It seems that Mr. Sheehan questions the probability that a father would perhaps like to pass on to his son the proud heritage and tradition of one of the first fighting forces in the service of the United States today.

It is very doubtful that any father would want to have his own son inherit a world torn by war. However a man who has served in the Special Forces would certainly be proud if his son were also worthy enough to "earn the Green Beret" and willing to fight for his country should it be deemed necessary.

We are sure that Barry Sadler would not wish his son to inherit the present war, but rather that he receive the finest training possible should future conflicts arise. In this way, he, as his father once did, could defend the God-given right to freedom of Americans and of "those oppressed" in time of need.

Pinko Replies

It might be of interest to whomever it may concern that the issue involved in "The Ballad of the Green Berets, etc." was not the Viet Nam situation itself but rather how S/Sgt. Barry Sadler's record "comes across" to the American public. It is however encouraging to see that there are a number of people at Villanova who are ready to speak out for what they believe in, and thereby enter into the previously virgin area of controversy. The War, the Draft, and Vietnam

Viet Nam is in the papers. Viet Nam is in the magazines. Viet Nam is on the tube. Viet Nam is south of Red China.

War is all over the world. War is the great population reducer. War is the solution to a depression. War is in America's comic books. War is Hell.

The Draft is the student's closest contact to the Viet Nam War. The Draft is looking over everybody's shoulder. The Draft is a big question.

The above topics are on everybody's mind and one cannot hide it. The purpose of some of these articles is to bring as much of the Viet Nam - War - Draft issue into the open and on to the soap box as reasonably possible.

The VILLANOVAN does not pretend to have all the answers to the problem. The situation at hand is going to affect you, the American youth. So you might start formulating a few answers.

Theoretically on War

By Tom Grassey

Is war -- not a particular war, but armed conflict in general -- inevitable? On what basis, may permanent peace be maintained? Or is war a cyclic occurence which man is bound to repeat?

At the outset, let us dismiss the "good guys" versus "bad guys" thesis of pure good opposing pure evil. Even the most insular must appreciate that the conflict in Viet Nam, is being fought for more than the freedom of the people in South Viet Nam. History does not permit us to make such a naive claim that all wars have been fought between bad guys with black hats and good guys with white ones.

MAN'S NATURE

One's attitude on the inevitability of armed conflict is indicative of one's estimation of man's nature. If he is progressing toward a higher level of sophistication in political dealings, then man may be perfectable at least to the point of obviating future wars. Or is there some internal flaw in the collective personality of the human race which dooms any hope of avoiding battle?

The "progressive" camp points to anthropological evidence that man's nature is evolving. The United Nations, Marxism (in its final stage), some interpretations of Christianity, and various forms of Utopianism are predicated on the assumption that armed force is, ipso facto, an evil. The removal of this evil, they contend, would permit perpetual peace.

APPEAL TO ARMS

The UN is founded on the principle that conflict can be resolved without an appeal to arms; pure communism abolishes private property on the assumption that all conflicts arise from covetousness; Quakers (to cite one group) hold that the key social message Christ brought was "turn the other cheek" -- that if everyone would absolutely refrain from force, peace and paradise would exist on earth; Deism and Utopianism of various forms have most often been fusions of communism and pacifist Christianity. The common thought of these groups is that war may be ended by removing the

Conscientious Objector

By Fred Hetzler

It seems that with the not too recent rise in the need for troops in Viet Nam, and, thus, an increase in the monthly draft call, many questions have been asked concerning the legality of the draft based on the moral position of the United States in the conflict. External signs of this can be seen in the number of anti-war posters being carried around by people who honestly feel that our country has no right to be in Viet Nam.

Those who are opposing the legality of the draft are basing their argument on the interpretation of the Constitution in regard to the draft law, the Nuremburg agreement to which the United States, with other major powers, subscribed, and international law. All these arguments are referring to the fact that the United States is not opposing a direct act of aggression on our country, and so, we have no place in the war and the draft is illegal.

LONG DEBATE

The Constitutionality of the draft has long been debated in this country. Daniel Webster in December, 1814, in addressing the House of Representatives said that the Constitution limits the power to seek "the aid of the militia" only to the purpose of "repelling invasion, supressing insurrection, or executing the laws."

"The administration asserts the right to fill the ranks of the regular army by compulsion . . ." he said, referring to the pending draft bill which failed to pass. "Persons thus taken by force and put into the army may be compelled to serve there during the war, or for life. They may be put in any service, at home or abroad, for defense or for invasion, according to the will of the government. This power does not grow out of any invasion of the country, or even out of a state of war. It belongs to the government at all times, in peace as well as in statement made. "Why should I go to the placement office? They only find jobs for engineers." This appears to be a common misconception, and I think it should definitely be eliminated. The placement service is for all graduates--and underclassmen too, I might add, since as a secondary function it aids students in finding summer positions.

I think a definite effort ought to be made to make Villanova students more aware of the placement service and its functions. This could perhaps be achieved during the freshmen orientation period and then be followed up each year by an article in the Villanovan or other campus news media explaining in detail how the placement service can benefit all Villanovans.

I, being a Junior, would like to congratulate all those who worked so diligently on the Junior Mother's Day affair. I, myself, along with my mother, (and I am sure I speak for all those who attended the affair) had a very enjoyable day. Special thanks should go to Jim Donnegan, general chairman, and also the Mother's Day committeemen. A job well done.

need for a FORCE OF BEING.

MAN'S PERFECTABILITY

The "flaw" proponents point to recorded history as an adequate contradiction of man's perfectability. Despite progressively more awesome costs in human suffering, man has made pitifully little progress in alternative solutions to interest clashes. The "flaw" cited may be either a selfish nature (Hobbes, for example) or the theological original sin resulting in man's fallen nature.

Both groups would agree with St. Augustine that "Peace in the world is based on force," and maintain that weapons for a force in being are a prerequisite for a rule of law. "One worlders" contend that if one government ruled the entire earth, no war could erupt. A military-police force would be maintained in order to implement law, since the flaw proponents agree with Blackstone: "The main strength and force of a law consists in the penalty annexed to it."

TYRANNY AND INSURRECTIONS

However, "one worlders" ignore 1) the practical danger of total tyranny if no force could be raised against the world ruler, 2) sectional insurrections such as our Civil War, or armed group uprisings like the Watts riots (war is not limited to actions between governments).

The "status quo" group points out that a balance of power is the only situation in which, historically, peace has existed. Social conflicts are, they claim, inevitable; war, ensues only when one of the parties in conflict feels able to attain its goals through an appeal to arms.

OBJECTIONS

The main objections to this point of view are that history has also rather conclusively shown that such a perilous balance of power cannot be permanently maintained, and that the future loss of such a balance would result in a nuclear exchange.

Objector

war, and it is to be exercised under all circumstances, according to its mere discretion . . .

"Is this, sir, consistant with the character of a free government? Is this civil liberty? Is this the real character of our Constitution? No, sir, indeed it is not . . .

DRAFT UNCONSTITUTIONAL

Webster's opposition to the draft is very strong and, although the draft has been opposed as unconstitutional as recent as 1944, it was a far cry from the firmness of his criticism, and even showed out-right acceptance. Today's opposition to the draft is similar to the principles of Webster. Can the government draft a man and send him to Viet Nam if he disagrees with his country's action in that country? Some say "No," and use Webster's argument as support. They say that there has been no attack on our country in regard to Viet Nam and that the country has no right to draft a man and send him to fight in Viet Nam

In regard to these protests Alaska's Senator Ernest Gruening has offered amendments to the bill authorizing additional military and economic programs for Viet Nam. The amendments would prohibit the assignment to Southeast Asia of any "person . . . serving on active duty by virtue of involuntary induction under the Universal Military Training and Service Act" unless he volunteers for such service or unless the Congress authorizes such assignment at a later date. Senator Gruening has again and again put forward the argument that only by specific act of Congress should draftees be sent to Viet Nam.

CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTOR

Court actions that deal with the selective service are now mainly directed at this problem: should a man be given the right to classification as a conscientious objector who, though he is not opposed to war in general, is opposed conscientiously to participate in any manner in the Vietnamese conflict.

Without a doubt one of the main issues in these cases is the legality of U.S. intervention in Viet Nam, and how much protection the Constitution and international law will give those who object to the United States policy in Viet Nam. At present they are giving little protection and the reason for this is the difference between the old objector, who opposed war in general, and the new objector, who is opposed only to Viet Nam. This new kind of objector is willing to go into the Peace Corp or help southern Negroes register to vote or serve their country in other constructive ways, but not fight in Viet Nam. They are not opposed to conscription as a means of filling the armed forces nor are they unpatriotic, they are merely opposed to Viet Nam. Still they are not recognized by the government or any church as conscientious objectors, or deserving of military deferment. Many people simply view these objectors as cowards or as subversives, and equate their opposition to sympathy with the Vietcong.

HONEST IDEALS

On the contrary, the majority of the objectors are honestly interested in helping our country and furthering the ideals of peace and freedom, and his disapproval of our action in Viet Nam is something that has been thought out and is based on his moral and legal principles.

Still the side of the government can be seen. If some men are given deferments because of their beliefs, then there is a possibility that others with less noble or less sound reasons will use this out as means of avoiding service. On the other hand, will a man who feels strongly enough about the war to be vocal in opposing it, be an asset to the military if he is unwilling to fight in a given situation?

Another point to note is that the arguments against Viet Nam are equally balanced by arguments in favor of it, namely, to stop the spread of communism. But how do we know that communism will be bad for Viet Nam? In reality only historians many years from now will know that answer. But how do you know it won't be bad?

EVERYONE'S WRONG

At this point it looks as if everyone is wrong, which isn't a bad idea; but I think it's just the opposite, everyone is right. Both the soldiers fighting in Viet Nam and the objectors here in the United States are advocating peace in one way or another, but one is a realist and the other is an idealist. One is fighting so that some day there will possibly be peace, the other wants peace now.

The Test

By Barry Lockwood

Prior to the Vietnam buildup the requirements for deferment from the draft used to be regular attendance at a college, as a full-time student with satisfactory grades. However, this June the requirements will change and deferment will depend, in addition, upon rank in class or the Selective Service College Qualification test.

The new rank in class requirement will be figured separately for the different colleges. A freshman will have to be in the upper half of his class in his particular college in order to go on to the next year without being classified 1-A.

A sophomore will have to be in the upper two-thirds of his class in his particular college, and a Junior will have to be in the upper three fourths. A senior, to go on to graduate school, must be in the upper quarter of his class.

DIVIDING LINES

Below are the quality points which marked the dividing lines in these classes last January.

	C&F	Arts	Eng.
Freshman	2.21	2.19	2.00
Sophomore	1.91	1.81	1.81
Junior	2.00	2.08	1.92
Senior	2.75	2.83	2.87

In other words, a freshman in the C&F college would have needed a 2.21 last January to retain his 2-S classification, and a sophomore in the same college would have needed a 1.91. Of course, these figures represent cumulative averages based on grades from last fall.

They will change a little when the grades are computed again this May. Students who rank in the lower fraction in their classes must obtain a passing score on the College Qualification test to avoid losing their deferred status.

APTITUDE TEST

The Selective Service College Qualification test is a general

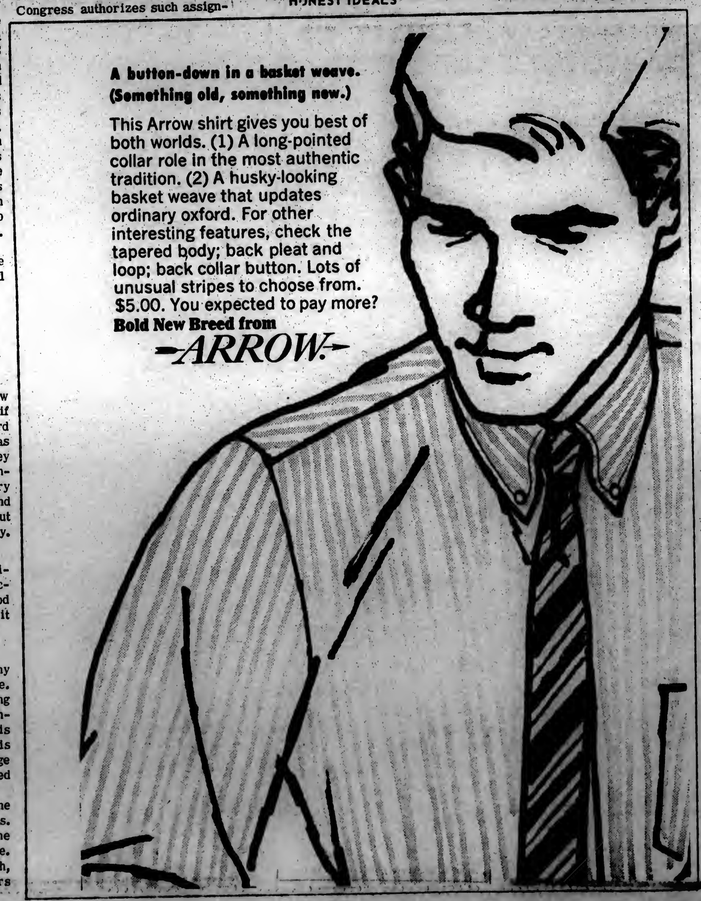
Burn, Burn, Burn

By Neil Sheehan

And so they gathered about the silent figure on the courthouse steps, passers-by, policemen, children, pigeons, and the cheering section. Most watched out of curiosity, but their interest heightened as the loner made three unsuccessful attempts to activate his cigarette lighter. "Has anybody got a match?" he mumbled, looking at the crowd as if he expected a hailstorm of matchbooks. Few offered the light he needed for fear of being accomplices to the deed. Subsequently he struck a borrowed match and proceeded to burn away a small part of his identity - his draft card. The supreme act. The rallying point of many. And what has he done? He has risked a fine (in four figures). He has risked his life (possible reoccurence of the recent incident in Boston). He also cannot get into bars in New York State. What a fool. He should have burned his classification card. But without that he could also run into some inconvenience. That settles it. It is unwise to burn either one's draft card or one's classification card.

NEW FUEL



Innovators in recent months have come up with a new fuel - the Social Security card. Think of how much better things would be if burning your Social Security card was "in." Almost everybody has one. They're easy to get. And they come in color which is a substantial improvement over the very drab draft card (red, white and blue). Oh the irony of it all! But it's still no good. It's too easy. Not enough class.

Well then, how about one's driver's license? Now there's a sacrifice - no car. But that's no good because it's too hard. Anyway it would never make headlines.

PROTESTOR PRACTICE

Obviously, there aren't many cards left of any real importance. But if things are bad, the budding protestor can practice on a Pennsylvania Turnpike Toll ticket, his delicatessen waiting line stub, his baseball cards, or his Wolf Badge card and many other wallet-sized cards.

But there is still hope for the student with pent-up frustrations. He has in his wallet the epitome of targets for his Ronson Butane. His matric card, of course. Oh, but then he can't eat downstairs ...

A Last Thought:

On Failure as Success

By Gene FitzMaurice

These are, or have been, years of error. This is how it should be. If we do not allow our youth to be fraught with error, we will find that we have no failings upon which to build, and that our creations of correctness are as dull to live in as to see.

In any college undertaking, it must be accepted from the start that the contributors have not created anything new or startling, except for themselves. And it is in that self-serving that such efforts are justified. But we must remember always that the gods now held up to us are false ones, deified by mystique and critic, and that we need not accept them.

For some reason, Fitzgerald has been paraded before us to accept as a model of college writing. This should not be so. In all of his works, only about 100 pages from "This Side of Paradise", two short stories (one of them not at all "Fitzgerald-like"), and "The Great Gatsby" deserve to be read. Yet he has been crowned by the cultists; this despite the fact that he produced barely ten pages of worth in each year of his life.

In four years on the VILLANOVAN, I can claim only one column as a Sophomore which is of any consequence; one as a junior that I have tried in vain as a senior to duplicate, coming near only once.

Of three contributions to The LYNX, one served only to permit me to test the thrill of college writing; one chronicled friends, some of whom took false comfort from it, and others from whom I now hear nothing; and one which enabled me to try out new forms and patterns to test images, and to gauge the pain of writing. It is only that one that I have kept, although it was ruined for me because an over-zealous proof reader took out one letter from one person's name to make it (to himself and most others) correct.

No one else would care, but it is my story and I must care and still let it bother me.

What does not bother me though is that I have done so little. I, none of us, can let it affect us, for this is the time to fail and become enriched in error.

It was Chesterton, I think, who said that anything worth trying is worth failing at; we must believe this. If something like the LYNX is worth creating, and it is, then its failings must be accepted as a bumper crop of successes, while its successes must not be hoarded. If they are, it will leave us little to seek.

The LYNX this time had more then the usual amount of poetry. This is troublesome for three parties: the poet, in the writing of it; the Editors, who may not know the poem's what or why; and the reviewer, who must puzzle over what to read into the poet's work.

Two short poems, "Meeting," by P. J. Vincent, and R. C. Evans, "The History Professor," show how diverse such works can become. Vincent catches in a few lines the emotions of most others' paragraphs, while Evans cannot decide between the surface sarcasm and the underlying reflections. This is also the fault in his "Thoughts From Beneath A Steel Helmet."

The "Larking Poems," submitted by Hilary Russel, serve mainly to show the faults of the Irish poet, never knowing why the land he evokes has driven him away, making its exports its artists.

In Brian McCarthy's "Number Six," the pleasures of nature's people must be sought, while David Brokars "Seaside Wandering" need not be read into, only enjoyed for the vitality the author can convey.

Stephen Carney's realization that love should not be allowed to become a transient thing, and Karen Rittenburg's that it must, are seen in only a few lines, approaching sufficiency.

The "Quo Vadis" of Robert Cosgriff sketches the inability to understand pure spiritual love of one whose love is mixed; it is an admonition against the pride of spiritual love and should be read again.

"Of Things Past," by Michael Donaghue, seeks to explore the washed through passages of love past, but fails to realize, in this enjoyable piece, that it is more painful to paint the heart not lived than the easily censored past. College love poets should be more concerned with the simpler task.

The editors' interviews and sketches added needed depth, and portend well for the magazine's future.

George Handran's interview with Sir John Gielgud is too fulsome in its praise, with reflections cast in improper times. But his appreciation of the actor and the actor's craft save it from all but its own nature, which is that of an essay.

Philip Freind's interview is from a transcription, and it would have been better presented with introductory dialogue and explanatory notes.

The interview with Louis Auchincloss was more honestly entitled a sketch. The biographical notes were drawn out until made to serve as an introduction to "The Rector of Justin," Auchincloss' justification as a novelist. The analysis of Henry James's influence on Auchincloss, always the first point, was handled well, but avoided the apparent mimicry of James in some of Auchincloss's earlier works. These, I believe, are just clubbier different. You're supposed to have seen and felt everything: to have loved, been angry, had good times, and times to worry. The only problem is that you can't concentrate on the moment; you've got to ask yourself, 'Is this a time to remember?'; 'Is it worth the effort to make a memory?'; and by the time you decide, the moment is gone.

"It isn't fair, Philip: to build us up to expect gifts of emotion and then to tear us down with the effort of finding the gifts.

"We're just like a child let loose in a sweet shop. He can sample everything he wants and come out happy; just as we are supposed to do. The only problem is, no one bothers to tell you that when the child is done, he has cavities in his teeth, and when we are finished, the sampling of college have flawed our souls.

"There ought to be a selective list of the things to be enjoyed in college, then we would know what to look for; then no one would have to lie in his first novel."

The LYNX appetite is not that selective. It favors constantly the old themes repeated; the old forms in new presentations, the self-esteem that is endemic to such publications. Where it succeeds, it is in the new forms offered in experimentation by the contributors, not in content. Where content is worth failing at, it is the product of a unique personal experience. Study Days?

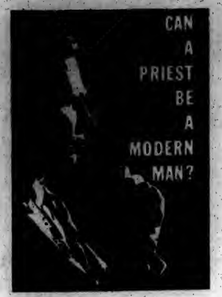
By Jeff Hasselberger



To the classes of '68 and '69:

So you have a week off from classes before exams? Just think, you have a whole week to search out the best surfing beaches at the shore, or to make the final arrangements for your summer ski trip to Chile. "But son, you have exams next week." "That's all taken care of, Mom, I know that stuff cold."

The so-called reading period has been tried, (with a good deal of success, I might add) at Princeton, Harvard and Brown. The only major administrative complaint was that the students did not use the extra time. Not everyone keeps up with his assigned readings, either but is that a good reason to stop assigning them?

In these days of "The Great Attack on the Administration" it might be a good idea to congratulate them on initiating a worthwhile program, whether everyone uses it or not.

So enjoy your week off; you may make the class of '70 yet.

LIVE IT UP, LEANDER...

. . . you're only young once!

Come to think of it, that's the whole problem! If you were young more than once in a lifetime, that time of life when you will no longer be young wouldn't be a problem now, would it?

We can't help you find eternal youth. We can help you find the best way to make the most of the "young-only-once" time of your life . . . with life insurance.

Life insurance is one investment you can make today that's guaranteed to take the strife out of life years from now. That might be worth more, from the very beginning, than you put into it. That could be worth as much, at any time, as you planned to put into it in a lifetime. And the sooner you start, the less it costs.

You're only young once, Leander. Make the most of it. Then you may live it up . . . with our blessings.

Views on Villanova's Future

By Matt Roche

Dr. Joseph George of the Villanova History Department addressed a meeting of Delta Epsilon Sigma, the Liberal Arts Honor Fraternity, on Sunday, April 17. The title of his lecture was "Some Views on the Future of Villanova."

He commenced by giving a synopsis of the founding of Villanova University by three of the five Augustinians who were stationed in America in 1842. The first course of studies involved Cicero, Vergil, and Greek under Father Moriarity. A seven-man board of trustees was established in 1848 and the first two bachelor of arts degrees were awarded in 1855. Quoting from the diary of Father Middleton, Dr. George related some of the quaint early practices of discipline, for instance bread and water or imprisonment for petty theft of a dozen of rotten eggs.

STUDENTS CHANGE

As times change, so, too, does custom. Dr. George commented, "We must be willing to accommodate to changing times." Students change also. The associate professor continued, "Students must be welcomed into the college as fellow-scholars, and the "high-school syndrome"' must be replaced with a more mature attitude, so that students will "perform more than passively their role as students."

The teacher said that some of his colleagues consider such evidence as "washroom obscenities and freshman-baiting inanities" as negative evidence against maturity and as favoring a continuation of the "high school syndrome."

PROPOSED IMPROVEMENTS

To point the way towards a future improvement of the university, Dr. George proposed:

1- The elimination of censorship from the VILLANOVAN. He said, "Is the student staff so immature that they cannot print what they wish? The purpose of a paper must be to instruct, to amuse and also to irritate. If this freedom were given to them, there might be an occasional excess, but even the NEW YORK TIMES periodically prints a retraction."

2- The establishment of a student court. Dr. George remarked, "Making the student body responsible for decisions is a way to make student first-class citizens of the academic community. It is also a way to eliminate a lot of trivial disciplinary work from the administration. Time-consuming jobs then could be done by the students themselves. Of course the right of appeal to the president would be an assumption of such a court.

BETTER DORMS

3- The improvement of the present dormitory system. "More spacious lounges and study areas, "he continued, "are needed as places for entertaining parents and friends."

4- Class attire change. Dr. George commented, "I still get a bourgeois enjoyment out of coming to a well-attired class, but the students should be coming to class well dressed because they want to be, not because they have to be." He suggested a self-imposed dress code.

5- The establishment of an on-campus paperback book shop. "Mr. Bauman and the people in the University Shop are doing a fine job," he said, "but there is a need for a place to house some of the thousands of paperbacks issued every year. A paperback shop would not pay for itself for several years, but meanwhile it would be a place for people to congregate, a place of intellectual stimulation and challenge where students may supplement their course readings."

OPEN STACKS

6- The Library. Dr. George proposed "open stacks where all the students may browse to their heart's content, where they're allowed to roam at will."

Dr. George said that the implementation of these proposals would attempt to refute the contention of some people that college students are "secondary teenagers." In a question period following the lecture, Dr. George expressed delight when informed that the new library addition will allow the students free access to the stacks. When asked his opinion of the student teacher evaluation, he replied, "I have no opinion. The students, the faculty and the administration all know who the good teachers are. What this survey will help to do is merely to underscore that fact."

One thing that can't be overlooked are the principles of the opposition (communism), and those are world wide domination; or better, world wide subjugation. They must be stopped and at the present Viet Nam looks like the place to do just that. Beyond this nothing can really be said concerning the legality of our position in Viet Nam.

But what about whether the conscientious objector should be drafted or not? I don't know, why don't you ask one . . .

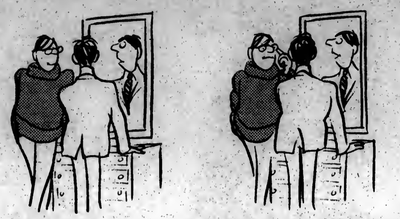
hopes will bear quick and successful results. The idea of a student referendum to have students vote on some of the major issues on this campus will also go into effect next year. Once again this year the SGA will open up its committee membership to the entire Student Body and it is hoped that many students will take advantage of this next year by signing up in the Student Government Office.

There is no doubt in my mind based on the accomplishments of just the last three weeks that next year could be one of the first years that the SGA will truly reflect the opinions and hopes of the entire Student Body. This is my goal and it is also the aim of the Student Congress.



Student Government can take the first significant steps toward meaningful student representation next year but only with the active support of all Villanovans. It is a challenge which we must both accept together; a trial in which we must judge ourselves.

mental aptitude test. An individual who scores 70 or better will be eligible for a student deferment for his four undergraduate years. If he scores an 80 or better he will be eligible for a 2-S deferment for his graduate study as well.

The test can only be taken once. It will be administered on three days: May 14, May 21, and June 3. Applications for this test, which were available at the selective service office in Corr Hall, should have been postmarked no later than Saturday, April 23.

NOT COMPULSORY

The Selective Service System recommends that all students take the test but it is not compulsory. If a student does badly on the test he can still maintain his deferment by keeping his average up. In other words, it cannot hurt. Deferment depends on either the test score or the registrant's rank in class. It is possible to qualify by either method.

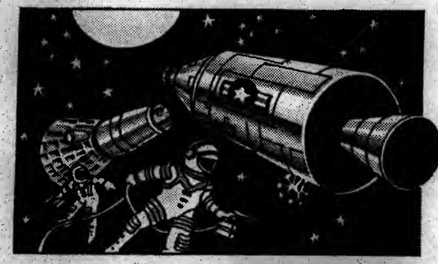
Graduate students who are currently enrolled and expect to return in September for additional study should also consider taking this test since their local boards can apply these same regulations to them. If a graduate student has any question about these regulations he should get in touch with his own local board.

If a student has a low average and scores below a 70 on the College Qualification test, he may be classified 1-A, but this simply means he is eligible and doesn't necessarily mean he will be inducted. The decision of who will be drafted is left to the local draft boards.

BOARD DECIDES

Also, in picking men from the 1-A category for induction the draft boards are required to go by age. If a student in the 1-A category is 23, he will be picked before another student in the same category who is 22.

More detailed information may be obtained at the selective service office in Corr Hall.



On Failure

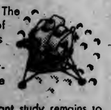
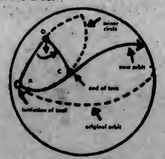
said of a novel is that it reads like fiction, and of a poem, that the poet was consciously concerned, from first draft, with constructing a poem.

The LYNX, its contributors, its readers, all of us, must accept its failures as its true successes, and its few successes as being almost accidental. After all, with no selective guide to the college experience, we can only guess, and in our guessing know failure, and succeed in that failure.



Here are 7 knotty problems facing the Air Force: can you help us solve one?

1. Repairs in space. If something goes wrong with a vehicle in orbit, how can it be fixed? Answers must be found, if large-scale space operations are to become a reality. For this and other assignments Air Force scientists and engineers will be called on to answer in the next few years, we need the best brains available.



2. Lunar landing. The exact composition of the lunar surface, as well as structural and propulsion characteristics of the space vehicle, enter into this problem. Important study remains to be done—and, as an Air Force officer, you could be the one to do it!

3. Life-support biology. The filling of metabolic needs over very extended periods of time in space is one of the most fascinating subjects that Air Force scientists are investigating. The results promise to have vital ramifications for our life on earth, as well as in outer space.

4. Space orientation. The orbital problems of a spacecraft, including its ability to maneuver over selected points on the earth, are of vital importance to the military utilization of space. There are plenty of assignments for young Air Force physicists in this area.

5. Synergetic plane changing. The ability of a spacecraft to change altitude can also be crucial to space operations. Where but in the Air Force could Sc.B.'s get the chance to work on such fascinating projects right at the start of their careers?

6. Space propulsion. As our space flights cover greater and greater distances, propulsion—more than anything else—will become the limiting factor. New fuels and new propulsion techniques must be found, if we are to keep on exploring the mysteries of space. And it may well be an Air Force scientist on his first assignment who makes the big breakthrough!

7. Pilot performance. Important tests must still be made to determine how the pilots of manned aerospacecraft will react to long periods away from the earth. Of course not every new Air Force officer becomes involved in research and development right away. But where the most exciting advances are taking place, young Air Force scientists, administrators, pilots, and engineers are on the scene.

Want to find out how you fit into the Air Force picture? Contact your nearest Air Force representative, or mail the coupon today.

Fairfield Ends Streak Ruggers Fall Short 13-3

By Don Donlan

Last Saturday afternoon the Villanova Rugby team lost its first "match" of the season to Fairfield University, 13-3. Playing without the services of four of their regulars; Pete Conserva, Bob Gallo, Vic Sarkissian, and Don Guerrieri, the team played very poorly against a good Fairfield team.

FAIRFIELD

With only a few minutes gone in the first half it was obvious that this was not the same team that had won its first seven games. Playing with inexperienced men in certain key positions the team was unable to contain the offensive attack of Fairfield which scored more points than the Cat defense had allowed in their first seven games.

Fairfield scored the only "try" in the first half on some fine inside running by their backfield.

In the second half the Villanova Ruggers fought gamely against a bigger, faster team but were only able to score three points on a twenty-five yard penalty kick by the team's leading scorer, John Wolff. Fairfield finding the weak points of the Cat defense was able to score two additional "trys" in the second half.

PENN

The previous Wednesday the team put on its first offensive show of the season in routing the University of Pennsylvania, 17-3. On the first play after the kickoff Villanova's flashy backfield star, Pete Conserva took a pass from Rich Crawford and raced forty yards for the team's first "try."

CONSERVA

Several minutes later Vinny Balcastro scored another "try" with a spectacular assist from "scrum-half," Joe Forns who took the ball from a "loose-scrum" and kicked the ball right into Balcastro's hands. Both conversions were missed making the score 6-0. Again it was Conserva who took a well executed "torpedo pass" from Mike Kaine and raced untouched fifty yards for his second score of the day. The Cat's were not finished yet; several minutes later "wing-forward" Andy Sears grabbed an errant Penn pass on the ten yard line and bulled his way into the end zone.

John Wolff made the conversion making the score 14-0. To the dismay of the team and fans alike, two more "trys" were nullified before the end of the first half, one by Sears the other by Don Donlan, by some questionable ficiating. "Mr. Official" was Penn's coach.

INJURIES

In the second half the Cat's were forced to play a strictly defensive game. Three of the team's players, Bob Gallo, Pete Conserva, and Don Guerrieri were forced to leave the game with injuries that will sideline them for the rest of the season; Conserva's being the most serious, a broken leg.

The Ruggers did score once in the second half when "Little Joe" Forns raced twenty yards through the whole Penn team for the "try." Penn finally scored with only several minutes remaining in the game making the final score 17-3.

CONGRATULATIONS ...

Congratulations Villanovans, you've done it again! By the disgraceful, but unfortunately typical, conduct on the part of the Juniors at last week's Junior Smoker, the Class of 1967 has lost for future classes the advantage of having an off-campus smoker with alcoholic beverages. Villanovans have again shown that they don't know how to handle themselves and the administration can once again say to the students, "I told you so."

It's a shame it happened not only because of what might or might not happen to future Junior classes, but also because of the hard work and planning which was put into the affair by Frank Gaidjunas and his assistants. Gaidjunas had the evening well-organized, with five head coaches present, good films and enough good food and drinks. Unfortunately some just don't know when they've had enough.

Thus, the results of this the first, and possibly the last off-campus Smoker will be felt not by the Class of 1967 but by future classes. We salute a job well-done.

Golf

fine performance by Villanova. Frank Majczan again registered the low score of 71 for Villanova. Jim Albertini turned in the lone victory for Villanova in a very hard fought duel. Jim was extended to the 19th hole to win in a sudden death playoff in what was the most exciting contest of the day.

Villanova stands a good chance of finishing with a winning record, with the final matches being played against Seton Hall, Navy, and La Salle. Although few realize it, Villanova plays one of the roughest schedules in the East.

continue their excellent hurling, this year's edition of Villanova baseball might have to be reckoned with on the national scene. Rampone, 4-0 last year as a sophomore, has turned into the real "workhorse" of the staff this season. Kramer has come into his own as a starting pitcher, giving coach Mahan two solid starters.

Crew Team Places 2nd In Hughes Cup Race: Oarsmen Lose First

By Lou Sonzogni

In America's answer to the famous Oxford-Cambridge Boat Race of England, the Hughes Cup Regatta, Villanova's varsity eight was finally defeated, but it took a mighty New York Athletic Club crew to do it. The bubble finally burst at Orchard Beach, New York, on Saturday afternoon when, after 27:25.1 at a gruelling pace across 4 1/4 miles of Long Island Sound, the Wild cat big eight continued its dominance over collegiate rivals.

The official finish was New York A.C., Villanova, Penn A.C., Fordham, and Iona, thus making Villanova 9-0 over the best schools in the East.

OLYMPIC COURSE

The Hughes Cup has been consistently won by Club Crews in past years, and Villanova had appeared to be a serious threat. The race is directly across the Sound for 3 1/2 miles, than turns into the Olympic rowing course for the last mile. Huge waves and commercial boat traffic hampered the oarsmen, but with a Herculean effort, the Wildcats had passed all of the other three crews by the half-way mark. The final gap to N.Y.A.C.'s boat was three lengths.

Bell Hopes to Bounce Back Team Has to Redeem Itself

By Jerry Bruderle

Alex Bell was sitting in his office last week talking about the miserable 1-8 season which he suffered through last year with the embarrassing losses, the abuse and the criticism that always follows a loser. "Yes", he finally said, "We have a lot to redeem ourselves for."

HIGH HOPES

Indeed they do. And that's what Coach Bell set out to do in Spring Practice which just finished last week with a full scrimmage. And after a month of head-knocking Bell has decided that things are looking up for next season. "The boys can have a good team", he said, "They have tremendous ability. It's up to them."

Unlike last year's scrimmage in which the first team defense couldn't even stop the second team offense, this year's intrasquad battle was evenly fought and closer than the 3-1 margin by which the "White" team won.

As a result Bell has hopes of playing two-platoon football, with a team of specialists for offense and defense. However, some players, like ends Paul Sodaski and Dallas Webb, captain John Fry and linebacker-guard Fred Levinsky will probably play both ways.

TWO PLATOONS

Bell is convinced that he had enough good players to go to two-platoons because a lot of players improved tremendously over last season. Paul Owens is a perfect example. "Paul Owens last year didn't even dress for one ball game, but this spring he was the best defensive end we had. He's bigger and stronger and he's going to play a lot of football for us next year." also Joe Colistra's injured shoulder is mended so he'll be available at guard and Richie Moore, the 6'7 270 pound Frosh, should fill a few holes at tackle. So the defensive line should be much stronger than last year's

The linebacking, with Levinsky, Lou Morda and Denis Ditze, should also be improved. Ditze was injured most of the spring, but Levinsky and Morda were both hitting in midseason form. "We expect a terrific year from Levinsky," said Bell, "and Morda too if he becomes more consistent."

OFFENSE

Offensively Bell hopes to get a good year out of halfbacks Chip Bender and John Kolmer, but both seem to be injury prone or accident prone. Kolmer missed the spring drill due to an injury but Bender played well both offensively and defensively. In any event frosh halfback Fran Boal, who had a good spring, will probably see a lot of action. Brendan Murray is also available at halfback although he is being used at fullback to back up Ditze.

At quarter Gerry Bellotti seems to have won the number one spot over Billy Andrejko, but both may have to take a back seat on defense to two freshmen, Nick Bekelja and Jack Sodaski (Paul's brother). Bekelja, who quarterbacked the frosh last fall until he was injured, was especially mentioned by Bell. "He showed me that he can hit," said Bell. "Nobody hits harder than he does and we know he's got it offensively." Sodaski, who filled in for Bekelja, is a "strong kid, and a good defensive ballplayer."

So the situation looks a lot better than it did last year. There are a lot of good underclassmen coming up and a lot of experienced veterans back who played unexpectedly well last year (like Levinsky, Ditze and pass-catching surprise John Schunke). This looks like it could be a much better year than 1965, right coach? "It better be," he replied. Let's hope so.

Intramural Track Today, Mulvey Named President

By Frank Miller

As the school year rapidly closes most campus organizations are looking forward to the future. This is only partly true for the Intramurals Dept. which still has a full schedule of events for the remainder of the academic year. The big track meet, which was originally scheduled for last Wednesday and was cancelled will be held this afternoon in the stadium. This is only one of many activities which is still being run by the Intramurals staff. In addition this week the softball and Volleyball leagues will finish action. The Handball and Tennis tournaments will be completed shortly also.

MULVEY

The Intramurals Dept., which is under the expert guidance of Mr. Ed Geisz and his able assistant Jim Moran, are also looking forward to next year along with their staff. Mike Mulvey has been elected to the post of President of the Intramurals Officials Association for 1966-67. Mike, who is a junior Liberal Arts major from Ballston Lake, N.Y., succeeds John Fenlon as the organization's kingpin. Mike has worked on the staff for three years, while being an officer for two years. Other officers elected were junior John Spano and Sophs Jim Doubek and Frank Helies.

MUFF DAY

Already plans for next year are being formulated. MUFF day, which is a traditional event sponsored by the department, has been scheduled for Sept. 19 on Mendle Field. Jim Galvin, Paul Sweeny, and Jeff Walker has been given the assignment of organizing the classes of '69 and '70 for this event.

The Intramurals staff will also help the Class of '67 with the annual Homecoming Festivities next year. The staff will help with the special activities connected with the football game which will be held Oct. 15 with Delaware. Jack McGarvey has been named Intramural chairman for this event.

portunity to commend the seniors on the squad for their numerous displays of skill and courage over the seasons. Co-captain Ray Hollander has been a real Gibralter on countless defensive maneuvers, and the stellar efforts of defenseman "Kong" Stein, on Saturday and in previous games brought high praise from his teammates and lacrosse fans alike.

BIG STICK

During a midweek win, 18-7, over Muhlenberg College on Wednesday, April 20, at Allentown, the Big V stickers wrote "one for the book" in a play that is as unusual in lacrosse as is the dropkick today in football. Defenseman Ed Caughlin, on a routine defensive play of clearing the ball out of the defensive zone, saw an opening that gave him the momentum to carry the ball in his stick the length of the field. With Mule sticks and bodies trying desperately to block his progress, Ed ran a broken field, dodged, twisted, and sidestepped his way directly to in front of Muhlenberg goalie, where he fired a shot at point blank range over the defender's head for a score. For a lacrosse defenseman, making the scorers' column is like Wilt Chamberlain scoring 30 straight fouls.

ROAD WORK

Wednesday, April 27, will find the Mainliners on the road again with a game against powerful Fairleigh-Dickinson University at its Madison, New Jersey campus. Then Saturday, April 30, the team will wrap up its '66 schedule with the Hoyas of Georgetown University at home on the field behind the stadium. The squad from Washington should provide some of the toughest opposition of the year. Face-off is set for 2:00.

Cats Take Third Straight NCAA Bid Still in Sight

By Barry Thomas

In the midst of a three game winning streak, the Villanova baseball team moves into the season's home stretch hoping for a sweep of all remaining contests and a bid to the District NCAA Tournament.

Combining good steady pitching with timely heavy hitting, the Cats rolled over St. Joseph's last Monday, 12-3, and came back on Wednesday to defeat Fordham, 5-2. With the Fordham win, Art Mahan's club uppered its seasonal log to a very respectable 7-3.

The big hitting expected of the Cats all season long was put on display against St. Joseph's and there were not too many cries of "The Hawk will never die" heard, as the Cats exploded 18 hits in a very easy triumph.

DION

Team captain Dion VonderLeith had probably the greatest day of his career, slamming two home runs and a triple in a five for six day at the plate.

Junior righthander Gene Rampone (4-2) went the distance against the Hawks, his third complete game of the year. Rampone breezed all the way, striking out ten batters and scattering nine hits.

Sophomore catcher Mike Shanley, a new addition to the starting lineup in recent games, made his presence felt with a home run against the Hawks. Sam Greenwood, the team's leading hitter last season as a sophomore, had a triple and a single to add to the attack.

REVENGE

This potent batting spree helped erase all memory of a 2-0 defeat inflicted on opening day last season by St. Joe's.

A sparkling four-hit pitching performance by senior Jim Kramer carried the Cats to their victory over Fordham's Rams. Kramer, who doesn't believe in giving up earned runs, raised his personal record to three wins against a single defeat.

The Fordham game saw senior Bill Bergold break out of a hitting slump which had carried through the team's first nine games. First baseman Bergold, who had managed to collect only one hit before the Fordham tilt, hit safely three times against the Rams. The addition to Bergold's slugging power should greatly enhance the Cat's NCAA chances.

Still left on the Cat's schedule are the likes of defending NCAA District champion Lafayette, and Big Five foes Temple and LaSalle.

NCAA

It may take impressive wins in each of the remaining games to have any chance for one of four District bids to the NCAA tourney. It will be remembered that last season the Cats won their last twelve games to finish with a 15-5 record, but were overlooked by the selection committee. Rider, Princeton, Lafayette and Pittsburgh were the four teams chosen.

With Lafayette being the District champion from last season, this Saturday's meeting with the Leopards in an away contest could hold special significance. A win over the defending champs could make the selection committee sit up and take notice.

ITHACA

The Cats play Ithaca at home Friday, and wind up the season with two games against LaSalle next week. A scheduled home game with Army last Friday was rained out.

A sweep of all remaining games would give the Cats the Big Five title also. With an earlier win over Penn by a 9-3 score, Villanova is 2-0 in City play.

If Rampone and Kramer can

Trackmen Win 5 at Iona; Hamilton and Patrick Excel

By Doug Nitch

Villanova's track team captured five events including the pole vault, triple jump, sprint medley, and the two-mile relay at the 12th Queens-Iona Relays at Downing Stadium in New York.

Ian Hamilton, the 20-year old sophomore from County Cork, Ireland and Dave Patrick, a 19-year old from Baltimore, excelled as the Wildcats won two major relay titles.

PATRICK

Patrick, who raced the fastest indoor 880 (1:47.8) in the nation this year, ran a 1:50.7 anchor 880 to give the Cats a first place in the sprint Medley. He took Maryland State's Carver King on the final turn and said, "I don't keep a book on these guys, but I ran against them enough indoors to know what they have left." Patrick's fast time came after Bill Heidelberger led off in a 49.2 440. Bill Grant and Ken Coniglio kept the Cats up near top with a pair of excellent 220 legs.

2 MILE RELAY

In the two-mile relay, Hamilton, running a 1:53.7 third leg built up the lead that Patrick initiated with an easy-going 1:53.9 anchor leg. Al McCafferey, running a 1:57.3 and Craig Nation, running a 1:57.1, ran one-two for Villanova's all-soph team, edging Fordham by seven yards in 7:42.0. Hamilton, who started his running career as a 10.4 sprinter in his sophomore year at Brothers College in Dublin, ran his fastest mile ever, 4:08.7, at the Iona Relays.

The Wildcats came in second to Georgetown in the four-mile relay pushing Georgetown to a 17:12.4 victory. Georgetown also took the distance medley in 10:10.3.

Third-place Maryland State captured the mile-relay in 3:14.6. Earl Horner of Villanova ran anchor and came in third. He dropped out of a 220 race a week ago with a "knot" in his leg. Horner did 0:49.5 without going all out. "I was afraid to drive off the leg," he said.

Fitzpatrick of the New Englanders anchored the 440 and 880 teams and ran a 440-leg for Central Connecticut's distance medley team, which came in second, and turned in a 0:49.2 leg to wrap up a conference mile relay.

JAVELIN THROW

Villanova's Jim Shillow of Quarryville, Pa. took the javelin event in a meet record of 226'1". The other Wildcats who came in first in field events were Vince Bizzarro and Charles Preas. They won the pole vault in 14'2" and the triple jump in 46' 1-3/4" respectively.

The successful Wildcats came in second at the end of the relays. Manhatten scored 49 points, while Villanova scored 45 points. Coach Jumbo Jim Elliott of Villanova is looking forward to the Penn Relays this weekend. Referring to his victorious team, he said, "I'll have to put them under glass this week to make sure nothing happens to them."

Lacrosse Club Wins Again: Caughlin Goes 100 Yards

By Chub Connor

The Villanova Lacrosse Club posted its fifth consecutive victory last Saturday on its home grounds behind the stadium when it swamped a determined but overpowered Dickinson College team, 12-6. The red-shirted stickmen from Jim Thorpe's old stomping grounds of Carlisle, Pa., were never close to threatening, and only brought the score within reasonable bounds when they scored three goals in the final period against the last of Gene Melcher's substitutes.

The Villanovans upheld the Wildcat tradition with inspired play to bring the season record to 5 wins, 2 losses. The triumph insured another winning season for the club, the second in a row, and in all probability, the second best season on record.

Jim Ryan's big stick led the scoring parade with 5 goals and 3 assists for a massive 8 points that could place him among the top collegiate scorers in the country. Rick Hook, consistently high in points, drove the ball past the Dickinson netkeepers 4 times, Ron Meyer accounted for 2 goals and 2 assists, and Ed Paul blistered 1 into the payoff cage. Ed "the playmaker" MacFadden fed 3 times to scorers, and Co-captain Rich Santoro contributed 1 assist. The high-powered offense was matched by sound defense in front of Big V goalies K.C. Tyler and Pat Renn who shared in 11 saves of otherwise sure scores.

Golfers Improving Steadily Now 4-3 After Slow Start

By Bob Whalen

After a shaky start the Villanova Golf Team has improved with tremendous strides and prospects look good for finishing with a winning season. Juniors Jack McNamara, Phil Danford, and Frank Majczan, the only returnees from last year's squad, form the nucleus around which the team operates. Seniors Bob Lampe and Bob Paradies have also provided valuable help in this late season surge.

PENN

The first match of the year against Penn was lost by a score of 5-2 with Frank Majczan and junior Mike Murphy posting the only victories. In this match both Majczan and soph Dave Cunningham fired 77's. The 'Cats evened their record the next day by defeating West Chester to the tune of 5-2. Majczan, playing in the No. 1 slot, again won with a fine score of 71. Following Frank with victories were Phil Danford with a 74 and Dave Cunningham with a 73. The next outing ended in defeat at the hands of Princeton 6-1. Junior Dennis Malenka with a 78 turned in the only victory for Villanova. However, soph Jim Albertini recorded a team low of 76 against this stiff competition.

It was at this point of the season that the team righted itself and played the type of golf it needed to be consistent winners.

ST. JOE

On April 14 they defeated Rutgers 5-2 with everyone turning in good scores in what can be termed a real team victory. The next day the 'Cats thoroughly trounced St. Joe's by the score of 7-0. In this contest, Phil Danford and Frank Majczan with 74's and Dave Dunningham with a 75 led the winners. With the record standing at 3-2, Georgetown invaded the home course of Aronimink. This contest was won by Villanova by the deceivingly close score of 4-3. Dave Cunningham and Jack McNamara with 76 and 74 respectively again paved the road to victory.

The next match against the very strong Penn State team proved that the Villanova inexperience was behind them and that the team had truly come of age. Although losing 6-1, the entire team shot in the 70's and battled the rugged Penn Staters right down to the line. It took two players shooting in the 60's for Penn State to offset the

During his association with Villanova Father Klekotka served in many administrative posts and in 1959 he was named President of the University. In the six years he was President, Villanova made great strides forward both physically and academically. Father Klekotka was also very active in civic affairs.

In July of 1965 he was appointed Prior of the Augustinian Community at Monsignor Bonner High School in Drexel Hill.

Father Kemme entered the Augustinian Academy at Staten Island, N.Y. in 1929, after attending Incarnation School in Philadelphia. He graduated from Villanova with the Bachelor of Arts Degree in 1938. He later did graduate work at Catholic University and won the Masters Degree in Mathematics.

Attendance For Summer Session Above That Of 1965; Reasons Cited

Frederick M. Burgess, assistant director of the Villanova summer session, announced yesterday that over-all enrollment figures for the first summer session are running above those of last year.

Burgess stated that this year's total enrollment totaled more than 1700 students. He noted that this year's figures in day school of 890 nearly doubled last year's 457.

Similar statistics for the evening session reveal that the two-month evening session is running slightly behind those of one year ago. There were 857 last year to 830 this year.

Early Graduation

The decision to conduct three summer sessions instead of two, as in past years, was occasioned by the University's commencement exercises in May rather than June.

Replacing the two summer sessions is a curriculum of three sessions, two conducted during the day for one month each and an evening session running concurrently throughout the summer.

The first day session, consisting of undergraduate courses, will end on July 8. This schedule has replaced last year's two-week-long initial session.

Registration July 8

Registration for the second session will begin on July 8 with classes beginning three days later. The second day session will contain graduate courses in addition to a large number of undergraduate offering, and will terminate August 12.

Throughout the summer 18 departments are sponsoring various undergraduate courses in the evening with exams ending August 12.

University College has also conducted a reading and study improvement course for college freshmen. Designed for students, men or women, the program is open to all those who have been accepted in the freshman class of an accredited college or university.

1,014 STUDENTS MERIT SECOND SEMESTER DEAN'S LIST

A list of Villanova University students attaining high academic averages during the second semester of the 1965-66 school year was released this week by the Rev. John M. Driscoll, OSA, Vice-President for Academic Affairs.

Known as the "Dean's List" it bears the names of students who have achieved a mark of 3.0 or more, as an overall record in their studies for the Spring semester. Twenty-five percent of Villanova's 4500 students merited this distinction.

A perfect record is a 4.0.

Fifty-four students maintained perfect averages during the semester. Their names are indicated with an asterisk. The following students were named to the "Dean's List":

Dave Patrick and Ian Hamilton finish one-two at the IC4A track meet held on May 28 at Randall's Island, New York.

Four Villanova Teams Have Winning Records This Spring

Villanova sports had another big reunion with victory in this year's Spring sports schedule, as Villanova teams came up frequently and impressively with victories. Led by Jumbo Elliott's trackmen, Wildcat teams posted winning marks in baseball, rugby, lacrosse, and golf. Even the Crew team, which is only in its second year of existence, turned in an outstanding season winning seven straight meets against both club and college competition.

But the surprising team this year has been the track team, which wasn't supposed to be much but which has blossomed into one of Villanova's finest squads. Led by miler Dave Patrick, the sophomore-studded team swept to two relay victories in the Penn Relays, and two more in the Quantico Relays. Then last week in the Los Angeles Coliseum the two-mile relay team composed of Alan McCafferty, Craig Nation, Irishman Ian Hamilton and Patrick challenged the world record against a tough field in the Coliseum Relays.

Villanova had not done better than 7:28.0 on the slower Eastern tracks while Texas (the favorite) and Southern California had both done under 7:20.0. Villanova had set the world record in Los Angeles two years ago with a 7:19.0 performance (broken last year by Oklahoma State).

This year's all-sophomore quartet turned in a 7:18.8 as each man turned in the best performance of his life but the Cats could only finish third as USC won in 7:17.4, a new world record. Texas was second in 7:18.4.

After the meet the fun began as the four Villanovans and Coach Elliott boarded a plane for Philadelphia around midnight L.A. time, and they arrived back at Villanova at 7:45 in the morning. Then, after a few hours sleep they were back on the track again for a dual meet with Quantico, which Villanova won 101-48.

Art Mahan's baseball team finished with an 8-5 record in a season abbreviated because of cold weather and a short semester. They finished the season on a wild note in the final two games against La Salle. On May 6 at La Salle the Cats dropped a close decision by the score of 22-10. One week later, however, on Villanova's field the Cats ended their season with a 13-3 romp over the same Explorers.

These two games with La Salle were the only games played by Villanova after April 30, the day final exams began. But considering the fact that Mahan had to do without his ace lefthander Jack Grasing (6-2 last year), the team did pretty well. Senior Dion Von der Lieth led the hitters with a .375 average including four homers and 14 rbi's. Junior righthander Gene Rampone took over most of the pitching duties and turned in a 5-3 record while Senior Jim Kramer was 3-1.

The golf team, after losing two of its first three, turned around and won five of its last seven to finish with a 6-4 mark. Led by captain John McNamara and Frank Majczan, Coach Jumbo Elliott's boys shut out St. Joseph's 7-0 and got tougher as the season progressed.

The Rugby team, coached by Professor Francis Coughlan of the History department, rolled off eight straight wins before losing to Fairfield. In the final loss against Fairfield, Villanova played without five first-stringers who were injured. Most sorely missed was halfback Peter Conserva who broke his leg in a game the week before. With tremendous spirit and enthusiasm, as well as talent, the Villanova team has established itself as one of the finest collegiate rugby squads in the East.

The Lacrosse team, coached by former Villanova Lacrosse star Gene Melchore, also turned in a fine year, finishing with a 6-2 mark after a slow start. Led by Rich Hook and Ed McFadden, the Cats finished with four straight wins over N.Y. Maritime, Lebanon Valley, Muhlenberg, and Dickenson.

Wildcat Booters Obtain Semi-Pro As Assistant Coach

Howard Graff, former semi-pro soccer star in Germany will be the assistant coach of Villanova's soccer team this season, it was announced today by the Rev. James T. Ryan, OSA, Dean of Student Activities.

Graff will assist Head Coach Casimir Erzegovich of Bryn Mawr, Penna., who was appointed earlier this season. The Wildcat booters enter their third year of intercollegiate competition and hopes are high for a winning season.

John Fry Named Football Captain

Coach Alex Bell announced today that captain of the 1966 Wildcat Eleven will be John Fry. John, a junior from Philadelphia, was the overwhelming choice of his teammates in the balloting for the captaincy.

A graduate of Father Judge High in Philadelphia, Fry is an honor student in the School of Engineering.

His fine speed, strong blocking and sure tackling enabled him to play both ways last season. John also won the Chuck Drizen Award for being the most dedicated player on the '65 squad.

Tuppeny Takes Penn Track Helm

Penn decided this spring that their track program suffered from anemia, so the Quakers went out and hired one of the more illustrious assistant coaches in the country, Jim Tuppeny. Long the assistant coach at Villanova, Tuppeny has produced some of the best field men in collegiate track history.

A La Salle graduate, Tuppeny came to Villanova after coaching Malvern to two state titles in his four year tenure. After arriving at Villanova, Tuppeny combined with head coach Jim Elliott to produce a decade of Eastern champions and put Villanova on the national track map.

During this era at Villanova, Tuppeny coached with ElHott the only NCAA track champion in history to come from east of the Mississippi. Specializing in coaching the field events, Tuppeny brought two of the greatest field men in collegiate track history to their peak. One was Phil Reavis, a diminuitive 5-8 high jumper, who went on to clean 6-11 on the championship team.

Tuppeny's other field superstar, Don Bragg, still holds the world record for a pole vault with an aluminum pole. Bragg arrived just before the era of the trampoline pole vaulter.

With these successes, it is small wonder that Penn thought of this man to bring their track fortunes back to the old era when Penn was a virtual Villanova in track.

Tuppeny himself was an outstanding trackman. Undefeated in his four years at La Salle in the pole vault (dual and triangular meers), Tuppeny laid the base for his rounded knowledge of the sport by competing in the broad jump, hurdles, discus, and high jump.

Due to Elliott's business commitments, Jumbo could not always attend practice and supervise the runners. Elliott had to lean on Tuppeny to do a phenominal amount of work, being the only coach frequently at practice, as well as having numerous field men to supervise.

But Tuppeny always handled the work load, and the two coaches beat schools year in, year out, who had as many as twice the coaches and twice the budget. This year's Maryland team, for instance, has a coach for almost every field event.

Tuppeny should have little trouble attracting students to Penn. The fine scholastic name and rich track heritage can now be combined with the fabulous new all-weather Tartan track installation that Penn is inserting this year. As Sports Illustrated said in an article this week, this same Tartan surface track was an instrument that helped the Tennessee track team come from obscurity to two consecutive Southeastern Conference Championships.

Jim Tuppeny

Tuppeny has just been elected as next year's chairman of IC44 activities. A distinguished honor, it is just another of the long list of chairmanships the man has held. Jim has been a previous IC4A director, as well as NCAA Indoor Championship co-ordinator, and Meet Director for the Middle Atlantic AAU.

Tuppeny has for years been a teacher at Sayre Junior High in West Philadelphia, while residing with his wife, and five daughters in Haverford Township.

Patrick, Horner, Bizzaro Star In NCAA Championships

Villanova miler Dave Patrick capped an outstanding Sophomore year by racing to victory in the mile in the 45th NCAA Track and Field Championships at Bloomington, Indiana, last weekend.

Patrick's time of 4:02.1 was his career best. His best previous time had been 4:05.5 earlier in the trials. Villanova's Earl Horner placed second in the 220 and Vince Bizzaro finished sixth in the Pole Vault as the Cats tallied 19 points to finish tenth in the team scoring. UCLA took the team title with 81 points while Brigham Young was second with 33.

Horner, the defending NCAA champ in the 220, ran second to Tom Jones of UCLA in 21.1. Jones did 20.9. San Jose's Tommie Smith, who was expected to prove himself after some unbelievable times on the Coast earlier this year, pulled a muscle in the 440 yard relay and did not run in the 220.

Bizzaro, who did 15-9 earlier this year, cleared 15-0 behind Colorado's Charles Rodgers who did 16-0 to capture the Pole Vault.

A week earlier Villanova again got fine performances from Patrick, Horner and Bizzaro, as well as from Ian Hamilton, but the strength of Maryland in the Field Events was too much as the Terrapins captured the IC4A Championships held at Randalls Island, N.Y.

Villanova captured three firsts to Maryland's two, but the Cats could get only 32 points to Maryland's 40 (27 in the field events). Again it was Patrick, Horner and Bizzaro who brought home the victories.

Patrick and Hamilton ran away from the field in the last quarter of the mile and ran 1-2 to give Villanova 9 big points. Patrick was clocked in 4:08.6 with Hamilton right on his shoulder in 4:09.3.

They tried to repeat that performance in the 880 but both Patrick and Hamilton were boxed in at the start. They came on strong in the final turn but they could not catch Rick Urbina of Georgetown or Herb Germann of Seton Hall. Patrick finished third in 1:51.8 and Hamilton was fourth in 1:52.0.

Horner- the defending IC4A champ in both the 220 and the 100, caught Maryland soph Jim Lee at the tape in the 220 in 21.2, but could get only fourth in the 100 behind Fordham's Sam Perry.

Bizzaro, a sophomore, cleared 15-6 in the Pole Vault to defeat Tom Gagner of Maryland who did 15-3. Villanova's only other points in the field events came on Joe O'Neill's fourth place finish in the Triple Jump.

Villanova also took fourth in the Mile Relay and Ken Coniglio was also fourth in the 120 Hurdles.

Murray Replaces Mugler As SID

Ken Mugler, Sports Information Director at Villanova for the past five years, has been appointed Director of Promotion and Special Events at the Atlantic City Race Course by track president Bob Levy.

Mugler, 29, will handle speaking engagements and do liaison work with all communications media.

Prior to his work at Villanova, Mugler was a sports writer at The Bulletin for two years, covering college basketball and football. He is a member of the Philadelphia Sports Writers Association and its Basketball Club.

Mugler and his wife, Marita, live at 187 W. Essex ave., Lansdowne, and have a son Joseph, one-year-old.

To replace Mugler, Villanova Athletic Director Art Mahan announced the appointment of Jim Murray as Mugler's successor.

Murray graduated from Villanova in 1960 and was sports editor of the school newspaper, The Villanovan.

Following graduation, Murray held front office positions with baseball teams in the International and Sally Leagues before moving to California to accept a job with a national advertising agency.

Murray, a bachelor, lives at 319 Westbrook Drive, Clifton Heights.

Rickover, N.Y. Philharmonic To Appear Before Frosh

A lecture by Vice Admiral Hyman G. Rickover, "father" of the nuclear submarine, and a concert by the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, under the baton of Leonard Bernstein, will highlight a ten-day orientation period for Villanova University freshmen beginning September 6.

The nearly 1200 incoming first year students will hear Admiral Rickover, one of the nation's outspoken critics of education, on Thursday, September 15 at 7:00 p.m. The New York Philharmonic will perform on Friday, September 16 at 8:15 p.m. Both activities will be presented in the Villanova Field House (see Page 2).

While the lecture and concert are intended primarily for Villanova students, the public will be admitted space permitting. Information regarding admission may be obtained by contacting the University's Office of Public information or the Student Activities Office.

Registration Computerized

With the introduction of computers last January, the Registration process has been accelerated. This year, Villanova's sophomores, juniors and seniors will all register on Saturday, September 10. Freshmen have been pre-registered and will receive class schedules on Friday, September 9.

In previous years a full week was set aside for the time consuming registration procedures. The use of the computers enables students to register in advance and eliminates long lines and waiting.

The first year students will make their initial contact with Villanova on September 6 with the start of the orientation program which will include campus tours, room assignments, meetings with Deans and Department Heads and contact with student leaders.

A tour of the City of Philadelphia and its historical sites has been arranged for the many members of Villanova's freshman class who are not from the Philadelphia area.

University College

Registration for University College (Part-time Division) will be held on September 6, 7, 8 from 7:00 to 9:00 p.m. Students enrolling in the School of Graduate Studies will register September 9, from 6:00 to 10:00 p.m., and on September 10, from 9:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m.

Villanova will officially begin its 124th year on September 12, with the start of classes.

The nearly 1200 incoming freshmen will swell the University's Full-time enrollment to over 4700 students, including the School of Law. Another 2400 will matriculate in University College and the School of Graduate Studies, bringing Villanova's 1966-67 over-all enrollment to more than 7000 students.

Out-Of-Town Frosh

Villanova's 1966 freshman class represents a growing trend to the out-of-town student. Nearly eighty percent of this year's class comes from outside the Philadelphia area. For many years, Villanova's student body was evenly divided between commuting and resident students.

That pattern has changed substantially and is reflected in this year's class. Villanova's student body has representatives from virtually every state in the union and more than thirty foreign countries. Nearly 5000 applications for admission were received this year.

Quaker Chemical Foundation Grants Villanova $25,000

An unrestricted grant of $25,000 covering a two-year period was made this week to Villanova University by the Quaker Chemical Foundation of Conshohocken, Pa.

Presentation of the check was made to Villanova's President, the Very Rev. Joseph A. Flaherty, OSA, by W. Ronald Benoliel and William Katzenstein, officers of the Quaker Chemical Corporation, a leader in specialty chemicals for the Steel, Metalworking and Textile industries.

While the grant is unrestricted, the funds will be used principally by Villanova's Chemical Engineering Department and the University's Chemistry Department. On hand for the presentation of the check were Dr. Robert White, Chairman of the Chemical Engineering Department, and Dr. Bernard Downey, Chemistry Department Chairman.

Quaker Chemical Corporation was founded in 1918 and organized as the Quaker Oil Products Corporation, for the manufacture of lubricants for the textile industry. In 1930 the company was reorganized as the Quaker Chemical Products Co. and since that time has become a world leader in the sale of industrial specialty chemical products.

'Democratization' Needed Says COMMONWEAL'S John Leo

by Sister Mary Francele, S.S.N.D.

Need for democratization within the Church was emphasized when John Leo, associate editor of COMMONWEAL, addressed an assembly of summer school students and faculty member in Vasey Hall on Tuesday evening, July 19.

Leo, who lectures frequently, also writes a weekly column entitled "Thinking It Over" for the NATIONAL CATHOLIC REPORTER and is an occasional TV script writer.

Sponsored by the Faculty Library Committee Lecture Series of Villanova University, his lecture dealt with problems in "The Open Church." Advocating the exercise of charismatic gifts of the Sprit, he stressed that it is the duty of the laity to participate in church government by voicing their studied opinions.

Church Bureaucracy

The bureaucracy of the church in the past has been a stumbling block, but it need not be in the present or future, according to Leo. Slow to act in matters of public and civic interest, as in the case of civil rights, the church has often merely certified what has already been decided by the civic community.

In explaining church law and how it is observed, he referred to two completely different mentalities in Italy and the United States. Leo also suggested that too much time is spent in the so-called "necessary" activities of planning the construction of buildings, fund raising, etc. "Parishes today are like service stations," he said.

Studies Made

Sociological studies made in various civic communities have revealed that religion is functionally irrelevent to many people.

Leonard Bernstein Conducts Nation's Oldest Orchestra

The New York Philharmonic, founded in April 1842, is America's oldest orchestra and one of the oldest in the world. Its history is richly inscribed with names from many generations of the greatest artists known to the Western world. Its continuing pioneering efforts, in the twentieth century with the help of radio, television, recordings and modern transportation, have deeply influenced the course of music life in the United States and, in the process, have made the Philharmonic the most widely heard orchestra in the country today.

Leonard Bernstein

The present music director, Leonard Bernstein, is the twenty-fifth in the orchestra's nearly century and a quarter musical history. In addition to the orchestra's previous conductors, including Gustav Mahler, Arturo Toscanini, Sir John Barbirolli, and Leopold Stokowski to mention but a few, contemporaries such as Otto Klemperor, Sir Thomas Beegham, Fritz Reiner, George Szell, Ernest Ansermet, Josef Krips and Charles Munch have appeared before the Philharmonic.

Celebrated Composers

Adding lustre to this list are many celebrated composers who have conducted or performed their own works with the orchestra. Even a partial list must include Antonin Dvorak, Anton Rubinstein, Victor Herbert, Richard Strauss, Gustav Mahler, Camille Saint-Saens, Maurice Ravel, Igor Sravinsky, Ottorino Respighi and Paul Hindemith. Tchaikovsky conducted at ceremonies celebrating the opening of Carnegie Hall in 1891.

The full, legal title of the New York Philharmonic is The Philharmonic - Symphony Society of New York, Inc. It derives from a merger in 1928 of the two principal symphonic organizations then giving regular seasons in New York, the New York Philharmonic Society, founded in 1842 and the New York Symphony Society founded in 1878. Prior to the merger the Philharmonic had absorped several other orchestras, including the National Symphony, the City Symphony, and the American Orchestral Society.

Beginning with a modest three concerts in its first season, the Philharmonic schedule gradually increased to a high of 18 in the early 1900's, only to jump to 54 during the 1909-1910 season when Gustav Mahler became music director and took the orchestra on its first tour. The entire Mahler era, 1909-1911, marked a major transition from old to new in Philharmonic annuals.

Landmarks

Important landmarks since then would have to include the Orchestra's first recording session in 1917, the Young People's Concerts in 1922, Stravinsky's debut in 1925, Toscanini leading the Orchestra for the first in 1926 and taking it on its first European tour in 1939, and the sensational debut of Leonard Berstein in 1943.

Others would include the inaugural telecast of the Philharmonic's Young People's Concerts in 1957, and the Orchestra's tours to Latin America in 1958; Europe Russia and the Near East in 1959, across the continental United States, to Canada, Hawaii and West Berlin in 1960, to the southern United States, Japan, Alaska and Canada in 1961, to England early in 1963 and, later that year, across the continental United States.

Since moving to Philharmonic Hall, the Orchestra has expanded its season to include a full complement of summer activities, and was the first orchestra to embark upon a full 52 week season with its players. The Philharmonic's "Promenades," begun in 1963, offer concertgoers lighter programs of music during the early weeks of the summer. The summer of 1965 was the occasion for two more events, the Orchestra's first summer festival, and a series of twelve free outdoor concerts in New York City Parks.

This latter series proved to be another Philharmonic landmark, for during this three-week period, over 450,000 persons heard the New York Philharmonic, more people than hear the Orchestra during its regular winter season.

U.S. Asks Schools to Utilize Employees During Summer

U.S. Commissioner of Education Harold Howe II said today that he has asked school officials throughout the Nation to make the fullest possible use of part-time employees and volunteers to meet the critical need for school personnel this summer and fall.

"There is a new look in education today," Howe said, "and it requires a new approach to meeting the perennial shortage of personnel. I have urged school officials to tap every possible source of helpers in their own communities."

Federal assistance to elementary and secondary schools--particularly the billion dollar program to upgrade education for poor children--has stimulated dynamic programs in almost every community, Howe pointed out.

Libraries Kept Open

School libraries are being restocked and kept open after school hours, evening study sessions are being conducted, nutrition and health programs are underway, individualized instruction and other techniques are helping slow students catch up. This year, at least three million children will go "back to school" for summer programs funded under Title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965.

Howe said that qualified teachers who are unable to accept full-time employment might be fitted into the new programs on a part-time basis, while many jobs in the schools might be performed by other than accredited teachers. Many schools, he said, are employing teacher aides to perform non-teaching classroom duties. Other schools are using volunteers to assist social workers, nurses, recreation directors, and other short-supply professionals.

The opportunity for service exists for highly specialized professionals too, Howe emphasized. "Musicians, artists, scientists, natural history experts--and perhaps people with interesting hobbies--could enrich school programs immensely by serving as tutors, guest speakers, or leaders of field trips," he said.

Personnel Shortage Noted (hf)

Howe said the shortage of fully accredited school personnel will continue to be a major problem for some years. The Teacher Corps, sponsored by the U.S. Office of Education, will help meet a most urgent need for teachers in slum areas, he said. Scholarship programs, in-service training, and other Federal programs are directed toward relieving the problem. Long-range solutions are under study.

"Unfortunately," he said, "today's school children can't wait for tomorrow's solution. We need to use the tremendous resources of talent and enthusiasm that exist in every community right now to make a giant step forward in education."

Howe urged persons throughout the country to make their services available by contacting their local school officials.

University Reports $572,000 In Grants, Gifts in 1965

Gifts and grants totaling over a half million dollars were received by Villanova University during the past year, it was reported by the Very Rev. Joseph A. Flaherty, OSA University President.

Villanova is now the largest Catholic college in the states of Pennsylvania and the largest private university receiving no part of its operating income in the form of state or federal aid.

The $572,000 was received from alumni, parents, advisory board members, corporations and foundations. This represents the largest sum ever received for general operations in a single year since Villanova undertook a long range fund raising program in 1954. It also represents a twenty-five per cent increase over last year.

In addition, Villanova's President announced the receipt of nearly one million dollars in the from of subscriptions and pledges, in response to a newly inaugurated library fund drive.

"President's Report"

Information concerning the financial progress and present status of the University is contained in the annual "President's Report" which will be mailed to parents, alumni and friends of the University, later this year.

An outstanding contribution to the University's multiple fund campaigns during the past year was the "Parents Program." For the third straight year, this phase of the drive topped its goal. Under Dr. William A. Tomasco, prominent Philadelphia surgeon who served as Chairman, parents of Villanova students contributed nearly $63,000. Their 1965-1966 goal was $60,000.

The uniqueness and the success of the "Parents Program" has twice won Villanova national honors in educational fund raising competition. 1100 parents of Villanova students participated in this year's campaign effort.

The financial contribution by Villanova's Alumni also reached a new high during the past year. A total of $120,000 was raised through an annual giving program conducted by the Alumni Office.

The overall fund drives were directed by the Rev. William E. Farrell, OSA, Vice-President for Development at Villanova. Father Farrell coordinates all phases of the five campaigns, which are conducted simultaneously each year.

Leib Voted President Of Alumni Association; O'Connor Vice-President

Mathew L. Leib, Sr., Hazelton, Pa., Banker, has been elected President of Villanova University's General Alumni Association, it was announced recently by George J. Pequignot, Executive Secretary of the national body. He will serve a one year term.

Leib succeeds Jacques E. Mauch, Philadelphia Insurance Executive, as head of the association which has nearly 20,000 members. Charles B. O'Conner of Norristown, Pa., was elected Vice-President for the coming year.

Balloting took place before and during the annual Alumni Reunion held on the Villanova campus May 20-22.

Leib is a 1930 graduate of Villanova and has been long active in Villanova Alumni affairs. He is President of the First Federal Savings and Loan Association in Hazelton, where he lives with his wife and three sons.

Villanova's new Alumni President is currently serving a term as Treasurer of Luzerne County and is a member of the Executive Committee of the United States Savings and Loan Association.

Alumni activities are co-ordinated from the Alumni House on Villanova's campus. Villanova has individual alumni clubs in every major city in the United States.

John Leo

There have been too many "pat" answers to many questions about religion, according to Leo.

During the question period following his lecture, Leo spent some time in explaining his views regarding so-called "doubtful" matters which he feels are the realm of the individual conscience. In answer to a question regarding laymen who wish to involve themselves in the parish he suggested getting the confidence of the pastor even if it means performing routine tasks at first.

These controversial topics led to other questions regarding church authority, priestly celibacy, birth control, and individual bishops speaking for their entire flock in matters other than moral issues.

WILL PROFESSOR LOGUE BECOME CONGRESSMAN LOGUE?

by T. Paul Bruderle

He doesn't look the part at all. He is, tall, of medium build, and somewhat gray for his forty-three years. With his horned-rim glasses, soft voice, well-chosen words, easy gestures and wry sense of humor, he gives the impression, an accurate one to be sure, of a man steeped in things academic.

But to see the man in the university atmosphere is not to know him. A serious and interested teacher? Yes, he is that. A first-rate lecturer? True. A witty conversationalist? No doubt. But these are gifts shared by many other professors, at Villanova and elsewhere. What distinguishes him from many of his fellows is that in an age when many in the academic community hold practical politics to be a sordid art, John Logue is a working politician and proud of it.

In fact, his pride is so great that he is seeking to be the first U. S. Congressman from the recently created Seventh District, which includes eastern Delaware County. And, because he is a Democrat, his race from now until November 8 is all up-hill.

Fresh from a 4 to 1 primary victory, Logue quickly challenged his Republican opponent, Lawrence G. Williams, president of the Springfield Township Commissioners, to a series of six debates on six subjects in six parts of the County on successive Monday nights.

Although he is a strong favorite in this most heavily Republican county, Williams dismissed Logue's challenge as "a cheap publicity stunt." A disappointed Logue says the invitation still stands. "This is a new district, electing a new Congressman," he says, "I think the people ought to have the opportunity to see and hear the men who represent them."

While some professors develop a tendency to lecture the Congress, President, and the public when they speak on current issues, Logue is quick to admit that his candidacy is not a panacea. His open-mindness is perhaps best displayed in the classroom where he encourages divergent opinion and acknowledges its worth, which causes the student to give further thought to the subject under discussion.

To those unfamiliar with the subject, or Logue, his class lectures, replete with anecdotes dry to the point of being arid, make political science a vital, living field. For those with a prior interest in politics and the political process, he becomes a sort of catylist for more intensive, channeled, partisan political activity.

No Hamlet

While tolerant of those who disagree with him, Logue is not a political Hamlet, unable to speak on any topic with conviction. as a candidate he has studied the problems facing Delaware County and has arrived at several conclusions. He indicts the long-dominant Republican organization, known to local readers as the "War-Board," as "a museum piece which should be crated and shipped to the Smithsonian Institute."

Continuing, he says "Delaware County has brought up the rear on open space, mass transit, highways, and higher education as the War Board persists in fighting off the future."

Logue says that his candidacy is an expression of concern for what he calls the "Quality of suburban life." "I always think of a quote by William Penn of the Philadelphia area -- 'Lovelier far than anything to be found in England.' I have been to eight of the country's 10 largest cities and I think the Philadelphia suburbs are by far the most beautiful. I don't want to see that beauty destroyed."

Although a novice in the field of elective office, much of Logue's civic leadership and experience has been directed toward open space. He is chairman of the Open Space Committee of the Citizens Council of Delaware County and is a member of the 11-county Pennsylvania - New Jersey - Delaware (Penjerdel) Open Space Committee.

His conservation activities received special recognition in 1965 when President Johnson invited him to the White House Conference on Natural Beauty. In April of this year he served as Arrangements Chairman for a Regional Seminar on Natural Beauty sponsored by Penjerdel and held at Villanova.

In September, at Governor Scranton's invitation, he will attend the Governor's Conference on Natural Beauty in Hershey.

John Logue and Villanova graduate Bob Dean ('66) discuss the former's campaign plans on the steps of The Capitol.

Foreign Policy

While focusing on local issues, Logue has not hesitated to speak out on foreign policy problems. His Democratic primary victory was scored over an opponent who condemned American policy in Vietnam. He has published a number of scholarly studies in the area of foreign policy. One of them, THE GREAT DEBATE ON CHARTER REFORM, was praised by President Kennedy and has a foreword by Thomas K. Finletter, former secretary of the Air Force.

Another study, SUBURBAN REPORT, which dealt with suburban problems and the role of civic groups in their eradication, was praised by William H. Whyte, Jr., author of THE EXPLODING METROPOLIS and organizer of the recent White House Conference on Natural Beauty. In addition to appearing before numerous civic, fraternal, and learned societies, Logue has been heard frequently on radio programs, including a 35-week stint on WCAU University Roundtable with Dr. Margaret Mary Kearney in 1963.

One thing Logue takes great pride in is his role in establishing the Villanova Political Union, a political debating society. Born in October of 1962, the VPU is one of the largest and most active organizations on campus. The Union's debates have found Villanova men -- and Rosemont women -- crossing adjectives with United States Senators, foreign diplomats and other prominent personages in public life.

Logue's concern for preserving the beauty of Philadelphia's suburbs runs deep in his background. A Philadelphian by birth and education, Logue returned to the area in 1958 (he lives in Swarthmore) after long sojourns elsewhere. He earned his B.A. degree alongwith an honorable mention in the Senior Oratorical Contest from Yale in 1946, following three years in the U.S. Army, much of it with the Tenth Mountain Division.

He has received the Master's degree from Yale and the University of Pennsylvania and is a doctoral candidate at the University of Chicago. In the summer of 1962 he was a page for CBS television at both national party conventions.

Prior to his return "to where my roots are" (Logue's late father was a LaSalle alumnus and his aunt President of Chestnut Hill College) he taught at Notre Dame and Fordham. His courses include American Foreign Policy and The Presidency.

Logue says he is giving his campaign "all I have" following President Kennedy's advice that an underdog candidate cannot begin too early or work too hard. "I think I can win," he said, "because I think a lot of Republicans are fed up with the County's leadership. My major concern is open space, and what could be more conservative?"

"Arlen Specter (Philadelphia District Attorney) and John Lindsay (both of whom are Yale classmates of Logue's) did the impossible as Republicans winning in the Democratic big cities, and I plan to do the reverse in the suburbs."

As he, his wife Marion, and their five children, look to the days between now and November 8 Logue thinks he has a chance of "pulling a Lindsay in Delaware County."

For John Logue, quiet intellectual, erudite lecturer, urbane speaker -- and active politician -- he just might do it.

Law School's Peter C. John Wins Nathan Burkan Award

Stanley Adams, President of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, announces that Peter C. John, Chicago, Illinois, is the winner of the First Prize of $250 in the 1966 Nathan Burkan Memorial Competition at the Villanova University School of Law, conducted under the supervision of Dean Harold Gill Reuschlein. Mr. John's paper is entitled "Literary Titles: Copyrightable or Trademarkable?"

Mr. John, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert C. John of Wynnewood, Pennsylvania, received a Bachelor of Arts degree from Cornell University. At the Villanova University School of Law, he was on the Law Review, participated as a Judge of the Moot Court, and was a member of the St. Thomas More Club.

Mr. John is associated at present with the Chicago law firm of Isham, Lincoln & Beale.

The Nathan Burkan Memorial Competition is sponsored annually by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers in memory of the Society's first General Counsel, who died in 1936. It is designed to stimulate interest in the field of copyright law.

First and second prizes of $250 and $100 are offered in each of the leading law schools throughout the nation. A panel of distinguished judges then considers all the prize-winning papers which are received from participating law schools, and selects the outstanding essays for National Awards of $1000, $500 and $250.

Computer Installed In Chem. Eng. Dept.

A Hitachi Analog Computer has been installed recently in the Chemical Engineering Department.

The Hitachi 505-60, a 60-amplifier desk top computer, was obtained by Villanova for student instruction in chemical process simulation and process control as well as for research.

West Eleven Incorporated of Los Angeles, the United States distributor for the Hitachi Analog Computer, directed the sale and installation. A substantial portion of the cost of the computer has been underwritten by the Hitachi corporation as a gift to the University.

Villanova has also received a grant of $11,500 from the National Science Foundation to further defray the costs of installation.

Coach Bell Optimistic About '66 Football Season

Just about one year ago I was preparing for the 1965 season and I was feeling pretty optimistic. (It's easy to feel optimistic in the summer, but optimism disappears as the opening game approaches.) I was optimistic then because I felt that our boys could do the job.

Well the 1965 season has gone over the football horizon, and I would like to forget it. A few lingering rays still hang on, and I am hoping this afterglow might be a determining factor in the season that lies ahead; I am hoping that it will prove an inspiration for the 1966 football team and Coaching staff to redeem themselves.

Alex Bell

I can speak for the entire group in saying that we are determined to repay our '66 opponents for the humiliations that we suffered last year. Every team we play this year had better be prepared for the "Wildcats," whose wounds have healed, and who are anxious to get back into the arena. "The song is ended, but the melody lingers on."

Spring practice usually gives a coach an idea as to his team's future potential. There are certain intangibles which are very important, and for which we are constantly on the lookout. It didn't take long to notice that this squad's attitude was right. Ordinarily in the spring, a team doesn't display the 'esprit de corps' that is so necessary in the fall. This squad impresses me as the closest-knit aggregation I've had during my tenure as head coach at Villanova.

My observations convince me that they are going to play as a unit and go all out for each other. There isn't a selfish boy on the squad. This is a team made up of many leaders, all with one objective in view.

We have about twenty-three letterman returning. Although we did lose many starters, those returning played a lot of football and gained much valuable experience. We expect to be stronger at every position, and will have more depth, also. Lack of depth is one thing that hurt us last year.

Every spring we receive some pleasant surprises. For example, two boys who did not play in one game in '65 will be regulars in '66. Joe Colistra, of La Salle, has blossomed into a fiery offensive guard, and Paul Owen looked like our best defensive end. Defensively, linebackers Fred Levinsky and Lou Morda were outstanding. Both can be the best linebackers in the East if they so desire. Our captain, John Fry, will be used strictly as an offensive tackle this season. He's the Alan Atkinson type--very consistent, and a real team player.

We think the end position will be our strongest spot, despite the fact that John Schunke and Mike Fox will not be back. Tom Flandera has excellent potential as an outstanding receiver. Paul Sodaski and Dallas Webb are other stalwarts at this spot. Of course the other ends will be heard from.

The backfield looks adequate -- lots of experience here. Look for Sodaski, along with Mike Bekelja and Joe Greco to play great defensive ball. Hardrunning John Kolmer should have his best year at left half. We moved Brendan Murray to fullback. He runs as hard as any back we've had in recent years.

Frank Boal, a diminutive halfback with a giant heart and fantastic determination - along with Kelly and Werkheiser, will certainly make their contributions. It's nice to have backs who can "go all the way" once they get by the line of scrimmage.

Of course there are other good prospects, but space doesn't permit me to mention all of them. I do, however, want to mention our quarterback, Gerry Bellotti. We honestly feel he can guide this team to some great victories. He's an outstanding competitor and an excellent leader. We have the utmost confidence in him. Billy Andrejko will certainly push him for the starting berth.

Our schedule is rugged, but we are looking forward to the season. We are not conceding a thing to anyone we play. They had better get ready for some angry "Wildcats." We promise to make some leather crack and sparks fly this fall.

So ..... once again I am optimistic. I hope my optimism is not just a "Midsummer Night's Dream." I don't think it is.

New Backfield Coach Appointed

Dan Laughlin, a three year quarterback from Dayton '62, was named the new Wildcat football backfield coach.

Coach Alex Bell was particularly pleased to get a coach of Dan's caliber. The twenty-six year old native of Pittsburgh started as a soph for the Flyers and helped upset Wichita (with Ted Dean) two years in a row.

After graduating from Dayton he started coaching at Pittsburgh Central Catholic and had tremendous success. His teams finished with records of 7-3, 10-0, and 6-3-1. The undefeated team of two years ago was picked as the top high school team in the state -- the first time in 16 years a Catholic high school had been singled out for this honor.

"We operated strictly from the 'Delaware' wing T and the kids adapted very well," he said when speaking of his high school coaching days. "Coach Bell uses a lot of different formations and after looking at the films of last year's Washington State, Delaware and Toledo games I see a lot of potential for this year's squad."

Coach Laughlin has moved his family -- wife Janet and two girls, Beth Ann and Kelly Lynn -- to a home in Newtown Square, and he is really looking forward to meeting the challange which Villanova presents.

Patrick, Melchionni, Fitzmaurice A Traveling Trio for U.S. and V.U.

Villanova has been well represented in the field of international competition this summer. Wildcat athletes in three sports have carried their country and school colors to much fame and distant lands.

In track and field soph sensation Dave Patrick started the summer by winning the NCAA mile in 4:02.1 to give the Wildcats a national champion. Dave then qualified for the United States team at the AAU meet in New York. He then ran second to Villanova grad Noel Carroll in London in the 880. Then off to the Russian meet in California. However, the rumor that "the Russians are coming, the Russians are coming" proved to be quite false in the track world. The Russians stayed home but the United States team met all comers in an international meet. Greatly disappointed, Dave did get to represent his country but he did not run well.

In basketball, Bill Melchionni was picked on the team which was going to travel in Russia and other stops in Europe. However, the door on the Iron Country was slammed shut just as it was on the track team.

The basketball team was already in Europe playing other European teams and it was in Germany when the sad news came. At last reports they were dribbling across North Africa looking for games.

In swimming, the State Department really set up a trip. Our man in the pool, Mike Fitzmaurice, was selected to represent the United States.

The first stop on Mike's Far Eastern tour was Tunisia. In Tunis they swam the national team and captured every event with Mike winning his specialty -- the 100 and 200 meter freestyle.

With his fellow athletes from UCLA, Ohio State, Michigan, Yale and Arizona they then journeyed to Algeria. In Algiers they swam in a unique pool which was filled with a combination of salt water and chlorine. This enabled everyone to swim their fastest times.

The swimmers took on the national team from Lebanon next. The meet was held in Beirut and a water-polo game was added to the list of usual events. The U.S. won all the swimming events, but lost the polo match 2-1, with Fitz scoring the only U.S. goal in his first polo match ever.

The highlight of the entire tour came for Mike when he was able to visit the Holy Land with a trip to Jerusalem and Bethlehem.

Dave Patrick, Villanova miler and half-miler, has come a long way since this rainy day at the Penn Relays. Patrick, the NCAA mile champ, was picked for the aborted U.S.-Russian Meet, and he also visited London to run against ex-Villanovan Noel Carroll. This photo shows the mud-splattered Patrick winning the 2-mile relay over Georgetown in a race which raised a controversy over whether Dave dropped the baton before he hit the tape. Here Patrick has already crossed the finish line and has already dropped the baton.
